"Sec. 278. Shall Receipt for Moneys and Pay to Banker. The clerk shall receive and receipt for all moneys paid in accordance with the provisions of those by-laws, and shall pay over all moneys by him so received to the banker as often as each regular meeting of his camp, taking the receipt of the banker therefor."

"Sec. 287. Clerk Declared to be Agent of Local Camp.—The clerk of a local camp is hereby made and declared to be the agent of such camp, and not the agent of the society, and no act or omission on his part shall have the effect of creating a liability on the part of this society, or of waiving any right or immunity belonging to it."

"Sec. 291. Shall Not Collect or Receive Assessments from a Suspended Beneficial Member.—The clerk shall not knowingly collect or receive either assessments or dues from a beneficial member who has become suspended for nonpayment thereof, if at the time tender was made the member was in impaired health. The receipt of assessments or dues contrary to the provisions of this section shall be unavailing in favor of the defaulting member, and such clerk shall forfeit his membership in the society for such violation."

[1] A person who takes out a policy in a mutual benefit society becomes a member of the society, and is bound by the rules and provisions of its charter and the by-laws lawfully made in pursuance thereof, and is conclusively presumed to have knowledge of them all. Knights of Columbus v. Burroughs, 107 Va. 671, 60 S. E. 40, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 246, and authorities cited.

This being so, the insured is charged with knowledge of the limitation upon the powers of the agents of such company found in its

by-laws. Knights of Columbus v. Burroughs, supra, and authorities there cited.

[2] Under the by-laws Bixler was entitled to be reinstated within 60 days from the date of his suspension by the payment to the clerk of the local camp of all fines, dues, and assessments for which he would have been liable had he remained in good standing, provided he was at the time of such payment in good health.

By section 56 of the by-laws it is provided that the receipt and retention of such arrearages "in case the suspended member is not in good health * * * shall not have the effect of reinstating such member or entitle him or his beneficiary to any rights under his benefit certificate"; and by section 291 the clerk of the local camp is expressly prohibited from knowingly collecting or receiving either assessments or dues from a member who has been suspended for non-payment thereof, "if at the time the tender was made the member was in impaired health," and declares that the receipt of such dues contrary to the provisions of the section "shall be unavailing in favor of the defaulting member, and such clerk shall forfeit his membership in the society for such violation."

Bixler being, as we have seen, conclusively presumed to have knowledge of these provisions, knew when he paid the arrearages in his then condition of health that he had no right to make such payment, and that the clerk of the local camp had no right to accept it, and that such payment could not have the effect of reinstating him as a member of the society.

It is further provided by the by-laws (sections 39 and 287) that the clerk of the local camp is not authorized or permitted to waive any of the provisions of the by-laws of the society which relate to the contract between the member and the society, and that no act or omission of such clerk shall have the effect of waiving any right or immunity belonging to the society.

In Knights of Columbus v. Burroughs, supra, the effect of by-laws limiting the power of a local council of a beneficial association was very carefully considered. In that case the member had failed to pay his assessments as required by its constitution and by-laws and had ipso facto forfeited his membership. The subordinate or local council undertook to make good his delinquencies without complying with the by-laws of the society. It was held in that case, upon careful consideration and the examination of many authorities, that the local council in its undertaking to make good the delinquencies of its members was acting without authority: that in so doing it was the agent of its members, and not of the society; and that the society, having received the money in ignorance of the facts, had not waived the forfeiture, and was not by its conduct estopped to set it up as a defense to the action.

In Modern Woodmen of America (the defendant in the case under consideration) v. Tevis, 117 Fed. 369, 54 C. C. A. 293, the powers and duties of the clerk of a local camp in receiving arrearages from a suspended member and the effect of his action in receiving such arrearages in violation of the by-laws upon the rights of the society or head camp were considered. In that case, which is quoted from in the opinion of the court in Knights of Columbus v. Burroughs, supra, it was held in passing upon the same by-laws as are involved in this case that the clerk of the local camp is the agent of the head camp to collect and remit the benefit assessments in accordance with the terms of the by-laws; that his authority is limited by the by-laws and the members and beneficiaries are charged with knowledge of those limitations, because they are a part of their contracts; and that the clerk of the local camp has no authority by contract, estoppel, or waiver to bind the society to its members or beneficiaries, either by extending the time of payment of a benefit assessment or by waiving default in its payment or by reinstating a suspended member without a warranty of good health, "in the absence of notice or knowledge of such acts and acquiescence therein by some of the principal officers of the head camp."

The conclusion reached in that case upon the validity and effect of the same by-laws that are involved in this case is in accord with the principles of our own decisions and with the decisions of courts of other states. See Knights of Columbus v. Burroughs, supra, and authorities cited. See, also, Lyon v. Supreme Assembly, etc., 153 Mass. 83, 26 N. E. 236; Kennedy v. Grand Fraternity, 36 Mont. 325, 92 Pac. 971, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 78.

Under these authorities, it is clear, we think, that upon the facts of this case the payment of his arrearages by Bixler and their reception by the clerk of the local camp did not have the effect of reinstating the insured as a member of the defendant company, and that the defendant or head camp, having received the said arrearages in ignorance of the facts, did not waive the forfeiture, and was not by its conduct estopped from setting it up as defense to this action.

The judgment complained of must be affirmed.

MOON et al. v. CHILDREN'S HOME SOCIETY OF VIRGINIA.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia.
Nov. 16, 1911.)INFANTS (§ 17*)—CUSTODY—GUARDIANSHIP—
"COLORED PERSON."

Acts 1901-02, c. 137, § 29, provides that when any minor child under 14, by reason of neglect, crime, or other vice of the parents, is growing up without education or salutary control, and in circumstances exposing it to a vicious life, the child may be committed to the care of the Children's Home Society. Held, that where minor daughters of a mother of gentle birth were not neglected, but were comfortably cared and provided for by their mother, and their stepfather, and it did not appear that from neglect or any vice of the mother or her husband the children were growing up without education or salutary control, and in circumstances exposing them to a vicious life, the mere fact that their mother married for her second husband one who had less than one-fourth negro blood in his veins, and was therefore not a "colored person," within Code 1904, §§ 2252, 2253, 3783, 3788, defining a colored person as one having one-fourth or more colored blood in his veins, and prohibiting such a person from intermarrying with a white woman, was insufficient to justify the commitment of the children to the custody of the society.

Error to Circuit Court, Albemarle County.

Madeline Grasty and Ruby Grasty, minor children of Lucy Moon, having been committed to the Children's Home Society of Virginia, she brings error. Reversed and rendered.

George E. Walker, for plaintiff in error.
S. S. P. Patteson, for defendant in error.

BUCHANAN, J. Madeline Grasty, aged 12 years, and Ruby Grasty, aged 10 years, were taken from the custody of their mother, Lucy Moon, one of the plaintiffs in error, and committed to the care, custody, and control of the Children's Home Society of Virginia, the defendant in error, by an order of the circuit court for Albemarle county, affirming the action of a justice of the peace in and for said county in a proceeding instituted under an act approved March 10, 1902, amending and re-enacting an act incorporating the defendant in error. Acts of Assembly 1901-02, c. 137, pp. 125-127.

Section 9 of that act is as follows: "Whenever any child under the age of fourteen years, by reason of orphanage or of neglect, crime, drunkenness, or other vice of the parents or other persons having custody of such child, is growing up without education or salutary control, and in circumstances exposing such child to a dissolute and vicious life, or is an inmate of any public poorhouse or almshouse in this state, any officer, agent, or member of said society may make complaint thereof to any justice of the peace or police justice, and it shall be the duty of such justice of the peace or police justice to issue his process, commanding that said child be brought before him as soon as practicable. The person having custody of such child shall also be summoned to appear at the time and place of hearing said complaint, and any witnesses he or she may desire shall also be summoned and heard in his or her behalf. If, upon such hearing, it appear that the complaint is well founded, and that the interests of such child demand that it should be relieved from such vicious or unsalutary surroundings, or should be removed from such poorhouse or almshouse, such child shall by order in writing be committed by such justice of the peace or police justice to such society until he or she shall attain the age of twenty-one years."

The question involved in the case is whether or not, upon the facts before the court, the act authorized it to deprive the mother of the custody of her children.

The evidence as certified by the court and the reason upon which it based its action are as follows:

"Be it remembered that on the trial of this cause the following facts were proven:

"That Lucy Moon, whose maiden name was Lucy May, and who was a granddaughter of George Christopher Gilmer, one of the most prominent citizens of this county, was prior to her marriage to John Moon the widow of one I. B. Grasty, by whom she had two children, the infant defendants, Madeline, being now 12 years of age, and Ruby, 10 years of age; that Mr. Grasty, the former husband of Lucy Moon, died leaving her in destitute circumstances; that she, with her two infant children, was offered a home with her brother, Lee May, who married one Bessie Moon, the sister of her present husband, John Moon; that she continued to live with her brother, and was given no assistance from her parents or husband's people; that, although both she and her husband were residents of this county, they went to Washington, D. C., and were married; that since her marriage to her present husband, John Moon, he has comfortably provided for her and her two children by her former husband; that these two infant defendants are not neglected as far as physical comforts are concerned, and no drunkenness or vice of their adults was proven. It was proven, however, that John Moon has negro blood in his veins; that his mother, Margaret Moon, of whom he is the illegitimate son, has according to her statement one-eighth of colored blood in her veins. The said Margaret Moon appearing upon the witness stand, it was plainly apparent to the court and to counsel and to spectators that she would pass anywhere as a mulatto woman. John Moon, Sr., the father of John, who married

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Lucy Moon, had a large family of children by the said Margaret, and left each of them a tract of land upon which they now reside; but on account of having colored blood they are recognized as colored people in the county, one of his children having married a colored man at Scottsville, Wash Lewis, though some of the others had intermarried with white people, all of the marriages, however, taking place out of this state, and white citizens visited their homes and took meals with them, but this was not a general custom.

"It was proven further that Madeline and Ruby Grasty were properly clothed and physically well taken care of; that they had been sent to a public school, but after their mother's marriage with John Moon they left the public school; that since her marriage with the said John Moon the mother applied for the admission of the children at the Miller Manual Labor School in Albemarle county, and in the statement filed with the application for their admission into the school, which is a part of the defense in this case and will be filed with the record, she stated that these children were the children of her husband, the said I. B. Grasty; that after the children had been at school some time she made repeated efforts to get them away from the school, and on being refused finally made an application for their withdrawal in writing, in which she certified that they were not the children of Grasty, but the children of the said John Moon, although they had been born, one during the lifetime of Grasty, and one but a short time after his death; that the children were thereupon surrendered to her by the school—children with colored blood in their veins not being allowed to enter the school and even with the suspicion of such blood their condition would be unendurable at the school; that these two infant children had not been cruelly treated and were controlled and looked after; that there were no dissolute characters permitted at the house of John Moon, nor was there any drinking or improper conduct there; that the said John Moon was not a man of means, but had a farm and comfortable home, and was able and willing to care for the two infant defendants; that the said children had never attended the public school since their return from the Miller school, but were taught by their mother or some of the Moon connection.

"It was also proven that the said Moons, because of their color, did not associate on terms of equality with the people in their neighborhood, but formed a coterie to themselves and had few associates outside; that several of the Moon children had married white people out of the state, but that they all then returned to go upon the farms which had been given them by John Moon, the elder, who was a white man.

"It was also proven that the said Lucy Moon alleged that the children were badly treated at the Miller school, and that their persons were neglected; but it was proven by the superintendent of the school that the children were carefully looked after, that there was a resident physician at the school, and that both their physical and moral well-being were cared for.

"After the above facts were proven, the court entered an order giving the custody of the infant defendants to the Children's Home Society of Virginia, stating that it did so because their mother had married a person with colored blood, who was only recognized as a colored man, and that the associations of these children, who were of pure blood and gentle ancestors would be with persons of mixed blood, and that they would be deterred from association with gentle people of white blood."

It is clear from the facts certified that the act of the General Assembly furnished no authority for the action of the court in depriving the mother of the custody and control of her children. The children were not neglected, but were comfortably cared and provided for by their mother and their stepfather. It does not appear that either from neglect or crime, or drunkenness, or other vice of the mother or her husband, the children were growing up without education or salutary control and in circumstances exposing them to a dissolute and vicious life. On the contrary, it appears that dissolute persons were not permitted at their home, and neither drinking nor improper conduct were allowed there. It further appears that, while the children had not gone to the public schools since their return from the Miller school, they were taught by their mother or some of the Moon connection.

The act of assembly furnishes no authority for depriving a mother of the care and custody of her children merely because she has married into a family lower in the social scale than that in which she was reared, even though her husband has negro blood in his veins, unless he has one-fourth or more of such blood and is therefore a "colored person," within the meaning of section 49 of the Code, and prohibited under our laws from intermarrying with a white woman. Code, §§ 2252, 2253, 3783, 3788. It is not pretended in this case that the stepfather was a colored person within the meaning of our statute, or that he and the mother of the children were guilty of any crime in intermarrying, or were not persons of good character.

The mother, the father of the children being dead, however poor and humble she may be, being of good moral character and able alone, or with the assistance of their stepfather (also of good moral character), to properly support and care for her children, and who is so supporting and caring for them, cannot be deprived of that privilege by the defendant in error under the provisions of its charter.

We are of opinion, therefore, to reverse the order of the circuit court, and enter such order as it ought to have entered, dismissing the proceeding commenced before the justice of the peace, and restoring the said children to the custody of their mother, the plaintiff in error.

Reversed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Page County.
Suit by the Luray Caverns Company, Incorporated, against D. L. Kauffman. From a decree of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. S. Parks and Leedy & Berry, for appellant. M. McCormick and Wm. F. Keyser, for appellee.

KEITH, P. The Luray Caverns Company filed its bill, stating that it is the owner in fee of very valuable property in Page county, Va., known as the Luray Caverns, a great natural curiosity, ranking as one of the wonders of the world, and visited annually by thousands of persons; that it has expended large sums of money in opening up the property, lighting it with electricity, laying walks, and constructing bridges over chasms, so as to make it safe for visitors; that experienced guides are kept to accompany visitors through the caverns, explain the formations, and point out their beauty; that as a source of revenue and a mode of advertising the property the company has had pictures taken of the many formations and painted by an artist from actual inspection, thus securing the coloring, lights, and shadows which can only be secured by actual inspection; that these paintings are sold as souvenir cards to tourists and the public generally, and thus scattered over the land, constituting a valuable advertisement of the property, which invites and induces visitors to come and see the natural objects for themselves; that one D. L. Kauffman has secured a considerable quantity of painted cards, purporting to be correct pictures of scenes within the caverns, which he keeps in stock and on exhibition, and sells to all who choose to purchase; that in thus acting Kauffman is trespassing upon the rights of the Luray Caverns Company and injuring its business and property, in this: That he has no right to make, or have made, or exhibit and sell, pictures of the property of the Luray Caverns Company for remuneration, and in addition said pictures are not correct, but are gross misrepresentations of the objects and formations in said caverns, and are not painted from actual sight and close inspection; and that by the sale of the pictures aforesaid the public are being deceived. The bill then states "that many years ago, before the caverns property came into the possession of its present owner, a man by the name of James, whose residence is unknown, visited the caverns and got from the then owner of the property the privilege to take carbon photographs of such of the formations in said caverns as he chose, and your orator is informed that he did take such photos and secured a copyright thereon from the government, and the said Kauffman claims to have purchased all the right of James thus secured: that the cards said Kauffman is selling are not photographs, but painted pictures, and, as before stated, are incorrect, and such misrepresentations of the property of your orator that they are doing, and will continue to do, incalculable injury to the business of your orator and grossly deceive the public. Your orator further says that said James had only the right to take carbon photographs of such formations, and said Kauffman could have no other or greater right than said James; that said James, having only the right to take carbon photos, would not himself have the right to take colored photos, nor have carbon photos painted, and he, said James, could not confer upon said Kauffman any right or privilege he had not himself acquired. Your orator further says that, though he is thus being wronged and damaged, he is without an adequate remedy at law; that the sale of each of these picture cards by said Kauffman is a separate wrong and constitutes a ground of action, and as such is a continuing wrong occurring daily, and perhaps many times each day; that it would be impossible for your orator to ascertain the number of sales made, to whom sold, the names or the number of persons to whom such cards were exhibited, and who were deceived thereby, and, therefore, to attempt to get at the amount of damage could not be done, even if it were allowable to go into the field of conjecture and speculation, and, in addition, your orator would be compelled to institute numberless suits, which would be an aggravation and annoyance, as well as contrary to the sound principles of the law;" that, being thus without remedy at law, the bill prays that the said Kauffman may be made a party defendant and required to answer the bill, but answer under oath is waived; and that he and his agents and employes may be enjoined and restrained from exhibiting or selling the painted picture cards hereinbefore described, and that further and general relief may be granted.

There was a demurrer to this bill, which was not passed upon by the court. The defendant answered, depositions were taken, and such proceedings were had as resulted in a decree dissolving the injunction and dismissing the bill; and from that decree the Luray Caverns Company has appealed.

It will be observed that the bill does not aver that Kauffman has ever been within the Luray Caverns, or that he has ever put his foot upon the property of the Luray Caverns Company; and that his trespass, if trespass there be, consists of the reproduction and coloring of certain photographs representing scenes and formations within the caverns. It appears from the bill that a man by the name of James, who is not made a party to the bill, visited the caverns and obtained from the then owner of the property the privilege of taking carbon photographs of such of the formations in the cavern as he saw fit. James took photographs and secured a copyright of them from the government, and from James Kauffman purchased the rights which James had acquired from the predecessor in title of the Luray Caverns Company.

[1] The contract between James and the owner of the Luray Caverns was a purely personal one between the parties to it. It in no sense affects the title to the Luray Caverns, and is not a covenant running with the property; nor does the Luray Caverns Company appear to be the assignee in any way or in any sense of the benefits of this contract. When James got from the then owner of the property the privilege to take carbon photographs, the carbon photographs were his property, subject, of course, to any limitations or conditions imposed upon him by the contract under which his rights were acquired. If there were any limitations or conditions restraining or limiting his use of the photographs made by him, they are not stated in the bill, and for the purposes of this litigation do not exist. But, even though there were limitations, conditions, and restrictions in the contract between the former owner of the caverns and James, it nowhere appears in what way the appellant, the Luray Caverns Company, could enforce such limitations, conditions, or restrictions. As we have said, it nowhere appears from the bill that the appellant is the assignee of the contract with James, and it certainly cannot maintain any right under that contract by force of the fact that it is the successor in title of the owner with whom James contracted.

[2] As was said in Miller v. Wills, 95 Va. 337, 28 S. E. 337: "Although a court of equity will not, as a general rule, interpose to prevent a mere trespass, yet if the act done or threatened would be destructive of the substance of the estate, or if repeated acts of wrong are done or threatened, or the injury is or would be irreparable—in fine, whenever the remedy at law is or would be inadequate—a court of equity will enjoin the perpetration of the wrong, and prevent the injury."

[3] In no sense is any trespass alleged in this bill. There is no invasion of the premises of appellant. There is no act done or threatened which would destroy, or in the least degree affect, the substance of the estate. The whole case made is that there is an invasion of and injury to the rights of appellant, because the appellee goes upon the market with colored photographs of the property of appellant, which he offers to sell in competition with pictures of the same objects offered for sale by the appellant. What the appellee offers for sale are copies of photographs of which his assignor, James, was the rightful owner by permission of the predecessor in title of the appellant. The bill fails to show that there were any limitations or conditions imposed upon James as to the use of these photographs which he was authorized to make, and fails to show in what way the appellant is the beneficiary of the purely personal contract between its predecessor in title and James, with all of whose rights Kauffman is now clothed.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion that there is no equity in the bill, that the demurrer should have been sustained, and that the decree of the circuit court should be affirmed.

Affirmed.

3. TAXATION (§ 788*)—TAX DEED—RECITALS.

Code 1904, § 666, declares that an applicant to purchase land, sold to the commonwealth for taxes and unredeemed, shall pay to the clerk to whom the application is addressed, 10 per cent. of the amount of the proposed purchase price, provided that the deposit, which shall be first for the purchase price and then for costs, shall in no case be less than $1. Section 661 provides that when a tax deed has been recorded the title shall vest in the grantee, subject to defeat only by proof that the taxes or levies for which the real estate was sold were not properly chargeable thereon, or had been paid, or that notice of the application to purchase had not been duly given, or that payment or redemption had been prevented by fraud or concealment of the purchaser. Held that, where a tax deed recited that at the time of the application to purchase the applicant paid to the clerk 10 per cent. of the amount of the proposed purchase price, it was not avoided on the theory that no sufficient deposit was made, because of proof that the full amount necessary to purchase the land was only $7.64; the statute requiring a minimum of $1.

Appeal from Corporation Court of Roanoke City.

Bill by M. L. Floyd against A. S. Crawford, to cancel a tax deed as a cloud on title. From a decree for complainant, defendant appeals. Reversed and rendered.

Hart & Hart, for appellant. H. C. Featherston and John G. Haythe, for appellee.

CARDWELL, J. The appellee, Mrs. M. L. Floyd, filed her original and amended bill in this cause against appellant, A. S. Crawford, seeking to have canceled as a cloud upon her title to a certain vacant lot of land, described as lot 9, sec. 8, of the Oak Ridge addition to the city of Roanoke, Va., a tax deed from S. S. Brooke, clerk of the corporation court of said city, to the appellant.

The trial court overruled appellant's demurrer to the original and amended bill, and, at a hearing of the cause upon the amended bill, the exhibits therewith filed, the answer of appellant to the bill, and appellee's general replication to said answer, made the decree appealed from, canceling and annulling said tax deed, giving in the decree the reasons for so doing as follows: "It further appearing from the recitals of the tax deed in question and the affidavit of the said Haythe that the defendant failed to deposit with his application to purchase the said land from the commonwealth the amount required by law to be deposited, and the court being of the opinion that by reason of said failure the said tax deed is void."

It appears that the lot of land in question was returned delinquent and sold to the commonwealth on December 6, 1897, for state taxes assessed thereon against the appellee as the owner of the lot for the year 1896, and the owner failing to redeem the lot an application to purchase the same, under section 666 of the Code, as amended, was filed by appellant on February 17, 1902. Appellee, being a nonresident of the state, notice of the application was published in a newspaper, and she still failing to redeem within the time prescribed by the statute, the deed here in question, conveying the lot to the applicant (appellant), was made by the clerk on June 18, 1903, which deed is exhibited with the amended bill in this cause.

In Wright v. Carson, 110 Va. 504, 66 S. E. 39, the court had under consideration a deed containing the identical recitals which are contained in the deed now before us, and in passing upon its sufficiency said: "It recites, step by step, in careful detail, every act which the law requires."

It was in the case just cited held, that the Legislature intended to make the deed conclusive evidence of its recitals, so far as it was able to do so. And in Minor on Tax Titles, 131, it is stated that the steps which are jurisdictional, and, therefore, essential, in the assessment of the taxes are: (1) The listing of the property for taxation; (2) the assessment or valuation thereof; (3) the levy of the taxes thereon; (4) the liability of the owner for the taxes; (5) the notice of tax sale, including a sufficient description of the land; and (6) the actual sale of the land publicly and without fraud.

[1, 2] Of course, the Legislature did not intend to make the deed conclusive evidence of the compliance with these essential requisites, but it would seem equally as clear that it did intend to dispense with all other steps required by the statute preliminary to the sale and to the execution of the tax deed in pursuance thereof, or to make such steps merely directory. There is no doubt as to the power of the Legislature to make the recitals in the deed from the clerk prima facie correct, and to be accepted as true, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary (Wright v. Carson, supra), and for the purposes of this case we may so construe the statute; for there is no pretense that any of the recitals in the deed of the essential prerequisites to the sale of the lot of land to the commonwealth are untrue. In other words, none of the alleged omissions from the recitals of the tax deed which the law requires are such as were not in the power of the Legislature to dispense with or make merely directory, and therefore not essential to the validity of the sale to the commonwealth.

[3] The attack upon the deed here is made, and it was set aside by the lower court, as we have seen, solely upon the ground that the initial deposit required of appellant by the statute, to be made when his application to purchase the lot from the commonwealth was filed, was not in fact made. It is very true that appellant contends that no notice of the tax sale and of appellant's application to purchase was given to her; but in her original bill in this cause it is alleged that she is a nonresident, and the deed to appellant recites that notice was given to her by order of publication in the Evening News, a paper published in Roanoke city, and in the brief of her counsel it is admitted that said recital in the tax deed is true; but it is insisted that as the initial deposit was not made the clerk had not the right to issue the notice, and that such notice amounts to no notice at all. This, in effect, is to say that the making of the initial deposit was an essential element in the whole transaction; that this omission is not cured by statute; and that it was not within the power of the Legislature, which required this deposit, to cure by the deed itself the failure to make the deposit.

Section 666 of the Code of 1904, as amended by an act of the Legislature (Acts 1899-1900, p. 852), does contain, along with many others, the provision that an applicant, to purchase land sold to the commonwealth and unredeemed, shall pay to the clerk (to whom the application is addressed) "ten per centum of the amount of the proposed purchase price of the said land; provided that this deposit, which shall be first for purchase price and then for costs, shall in no case be less than one dollar * * *;" but section 661 of the Code was left unamended, and that section provides that when a deed has been recorded the title shall stand vested in the grantee, subject to be defeated only by proof that the taxes or levies for which the real estate was sold were not properly chargeable thereon, or that the taxes and levies properly chargeable thereon have been paid; or that notice of the application to purchase has not been duly given; or that the payment or redemption of said real estate was prevented by fraud or concealment on the part of the purchaser.

As we have seen, there is no pretext that the deed here in question can be attacked on any of the grounds just stated, other than that the notice of the application to purchase was not given; and that the amount paid by the appellant when he obtained his deed was the exact amount which appellee would have been required to pay, had she redeemed the property, is not called in question, so that, as has been observed, the failure to deposit with the clerk the 10 per cent. of the amount of the proposed purchase price of the property, which deposit was in no event to be less in amount than $1, is the only reason assigned, or which could, under the facts appearing in the record, be assigned, why the tax deed attacked is void and should be annulled.

The tax deed recites that "at the time of the filing said application the said A. S. Crawford paid to the clerk 10 per cent. of the amount of the proposed purchase price of said real estate," and the affidavit of John G. Haythe, so much relied on by appellee, and referred to by the court below in its decree annulling the deed, does not show whether or not the deposit was made. This affidavit was only intended to supply the loss from the record of the original receipt given by the clerk to appellant for taxes, costs, etc., incident to the filing and perfecting of his application to purchase the lot of land. It appears from said affidavit that these receipts bore date October 21, 1902, and from this it is argued that, as all the tax receipts were of the said date—the date when the application matured—no deposit could have been made when the application to purchase was filed.

We confess our inability to appreciate the force of this argument. The law requires that the deposit be made at the time the application is filed, and that within five days after the application matures the taxes, etc., shall be paid. The tax deed recites, not only that the deposit was made when the application to purchase was filed, but that within five days after the application matured there was paid to the clerk all taxes, levies, interest, penalties, fees, and costs, and all city, town, and county levies and taxes remaining unpaid, together with all interest, penalties, costs, and charges, which amounted to the sum of $7.64 (being the full amount necessary to purchase the said real estate from the commonwealth).

It is very true that, as in the case of Bowe v. City of Richmond, 109 Va. 254, 64 S. E. 51, proof for the purpose of "defeating" a tax deed may be supplied from the deed itself, as well as from outside sources; but the contention of the appellee that, because of the recital in the deed that the amount of the final payment to the clerk was only $7.64, the deposit made by appellant when his application to purchase was filed could not have amounted to "the statutory minimum of one dollar," and must have been no more than 85 cents, is an unwarranted deduction, and even if such a deduction could be made that is not sufficient to overcome the recital in the deed that the required deposit was made when the application to purchase was filed, treating the recital as only prima facie proof that this requirement of the statute had been complied with. To annul a tax deed on such a ground would strongly tend towards frittering away the validity of such conveyances, and to render them of little value in the enforcement of the payment of taxes and levies due the commonwealth on real estate which are delinquent.

We are of opinion that no irregularity, either in the proceedings looking to the sale to the commonwealth, or in the application to purchase from the commonwealth, or in the deed itself, has been pointed out in this case, which is not cured by section 661 of the Code; therefore the decree of the corporation court, annulling and canceling the deed to appellant, is erroneous, and will be reversed, and this court will enter the decree that the corporation court should have entered, dismissing appellee's bill, with costs to appellant.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

JUDGMENT (§ 180*)—SUMMARY PROCEEDING—MOTION—ACTION ON CONTRACT.

A contract authorized plaintiffs, as executors of defendants' vendor under a contract for the sale of real estate, to resell the land, which defendants had previously agreed to purchase at the price of $9,500, and obligated defendants, if on such resale the property should bring less than such sum, to pay the difference, with interest and costs and expenses incurred in the resale. Held, that such contract was one by which, on the happening of certain things, defendants bound themselves to pay money, the amount of which, after the happening of the contingency provided for, was a mere matter of calculation, and hence plaintiffs were entitled to a judgment on motion, under Code 1904, § 3211, providing that any person, entitled to recover money by action on any contract, may, on motion before any court which would have jurisdiction in an action otherwise than under section 3215 of the Code, to obtain judgment for such money.

Error to Circuit Court, Botetourt County.

Proceedings by notice and motion by James Mundy's executors against J. L. Garland and others. On defendants' motion the proceeding was dismissed without prejudice, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed and remanded.

This is a proceeding by notice and motion under section 3211 of the Code of 1904. The notice and contract, which is made a part of the notice, are as follows:

Swartz, same having recently been purchased by James Mundy, together with all the real estate conveyed to said James Mundy by H. M. In other words, the said J. L. Garland and Mattie V. Garland hereby agree to make up any deficiency in said purchase price at said public sale so as to net the executors $9,500, with interest thereon from April 2, 1910,

"(2) The said J. L. "(3) The said executors shall likewise have the privilege of taking in said property at any time prior to day of said public sale and to release the said J. L. and Mattie V. Garland from this obligation to take and pay for said mill property, and all rights under this contract as to the said J. L. and Mattie V. Garland shall thereupon cease and terminate.

"(4) If at the said public sale of said mill property it shall sell for more than enough to pay the said sum of $9,500, with 6 per cent. interest thereon from April 2, 1910, and costs and expenses of said sale, the surplus thereof shall go to and become the

Upon motion of the defendants the proceeding was dismissed without prejudice; the circuit court being of opinion that "the plaintiffs ought not to be allowed to prosecute their alleged cause of action by motion." To that judgment this writ of error was awarded.

C. M. Lunsford and E. V. Barley, for plaintiffs in error. Benjamin Haden, for defendants in error.

BUCHANAN, J., having made the foregoing statement, delivered the opinion of the court.

The question involved in this case is whether or not a motion under section 3211 can be maintained upon the contract upon which it is based. That section provides that "any person entitled to recover money by action on any contract may, on motion before any court which would have jurisdiction in an action otherwise than under section 3215 of the Code, obtain judgment for such money. * * *

As was said by Judge Riely in delivering the opinion of the court in Long v. Pence, 98 Va. 584, 586, 587, 25 S. E. 593, 594: "The statute thus authorizes the proceeding by motion whenever a person is entitled to recover money in an action on 'any contract.' The only restriction imposed by the statute as to the nature of the contract upon which the recovery may be by motion is the right to recover money upon it by action. If the contract is such that the person making the motion is entitled to recover money upon it by action, he is entitled to proceed to do so by motion, whether it is based upon an express or an implied contract. The remedy extends to all cases in which a person is entitled to recover money by action on contract."

The agreement upon which this motion is based is clearly a contract upon which the plaintiffs could maintain an action to recover money. It authorizes the plaintiffs to resell the land which the defendants had theretofore agreed to purchase at the price of $9,500, and binds the defendants, if upon such resale it should bring less than $9,500, to make up the difference between the price obtained at such resale and the agreed price of $9,500, together with 6 per cent. interest thereon from April 2, 1910, and all costs and expenses incurred by the plaintiffs in making such resale. It was a contract by which, upon the happening of certain things, the defendants bound themselves to pay money, the amount of which, after the happening of the contingencies provided for, was a mere matter of calculation.

The notice avers the happening of the contingencies upon which the defendants agreed to pay and the amount of money due under the contract. Whether those averments are true or not is a question of proof. But clearly, as it seems to us, the contract upon which this motion is based is one upon which the plaintiffs had the right to proceed under section 3211 of the Code, as construed in Long v. Pence, supra, Morotock Ins. Co. v. Pankey, 91 Va. 259, 266, 21 S. E. 487, Union Central Life Ins. Co. v. Pollard, 94 Va. 146, 26 S. E. 421, 36 L. R. A. 271, 64 Am. St. Rep. 715, Grubbs v. Nat. Life, etc., Co., 94 Va. 589, 27 S. E. 464, and Willson v. Dawson, 96 Va. 687, 32 S. E. 461.

The judgment complained of must be reversed, and the cause remanded, to be further proceeded with in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

KINARD v. STATE. (No. 8,761.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

DISORDERLY HOUSE (§ 9*)—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—PRINCIPALS AND ACCESSORIES—"KEEP OR MAINTAIN A LEWD HOUSE."

If a person, being in possession of a house, makes an executory sale thereof to a lewd woman for the purpose that she may conduct it as a lewd house, and she thereupon occupies it and devotes it to that purpose, he stands in such an accessorial relationship to her act as to be indictable under the provisions of Penal Code 1910, § 382, which makes it a misdemeanor for any person to "keep or maintain a lewd house."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Disorderly House, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 9.*

Error from City Court of Fitzgerald; E. Wall, Judge.

G. B. A. Kinard was convicted of maintaining a lewd house, and brings error. Affirmed.

Elkins & Wall, D. E. Griffin, and C. B. Teal, for plaintiff in error. Alex. J. McDonald, Sol., for the State.

POWELL, J. Kinard was indicted under Penal Code 1910, § 382, which provides: "If any person shall maintain and keep a lewd house, or place for the practice of fornication or adultery, either by himself or others, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." In this state, where no difference between actual principals and those sustaining accessorial relations is made, any one who in any wise aids or abets or assists in keeping or maintaining a lewd house may be convicted as a principal under this section. Under the evidence in this case we would have no hesitancy in affirming the judgment on the ground that there was enough to justify the jury in finding that the defendant gave aid otherwise than by the act which we are about to discuss. However, the court charged the jury as follows: "I charge you in this case that if you find from the evidence the truth of this case to be that the defendant, Kinard, in any way let, by sale, or lease, or otherwise, any house in this county, within two years next preceding the date of the accusation, to any person for the purpose of maintaining and keeping a lewd house, and that person to whom he let the said house did actually maintain and keep a lewd house therein, then it would be your duty to convict the defendant." It appeared, from the evidence, that the lewd woman who actually ran the house did not get possession of it from the accused as an ordinary tenant, but that he gave her an executory contract of sale in the nature of a bond for title, whereby she paid $50 down and was to pay $8 per month until the full purchase price had been paid. There was sufficient evidence to justify the charge, so far as it submitted to the jury the question of whether the defendant made this contract for the purpose that the woman to whom he thus gave the possession of the house might use it as a lewd house.

But this charge and the exception to it bring squarely before us the question: Where one makes an executory sale of property to another for the purpose of the latter's keeping a lewd house therein, and the latter in fact keeps the lewd house there, does he commit such an act of aiding or abetting or maintaining as to be held accountable under the statute? It is readily conceded by the able counsel for the defendant that one who rents a house with intention that it shall be used for lewd purposes, or with a knowledge that it will be used for those purposes, may be indicted under this statute. They assert that there is a distinction between one who lets out property for this illegal purpose and one who makes a sale of it. We need not discuss what would be the effect of making an absolute sale, for here the defendant made merely an executory sale, by which he turned over to the lewd woman the possession of the property (together with certain equitable rights which need not now be mentioned), reserving the legal title in himself. There is a Kentucky case which gives color to the contention that the selling of a house for a bawdry is not illegal. Ross v. Commonwealth, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 417. In Bishop's New Criminal Law (8th Ed.) § 1093, this case is criticised, and Bishop gives it as his opinion that no distinction is to be made "between the sale in fee and a sale for a term of years. In both instances the transfer carries the entire present possession." A reading of the entire context surrounding the section just cited from Bishop's work shows that as to offenses of this nature the citizen owes to the public, as to property in his possession, not only the negative duty of refraining from actively aiding the nuisance, but also the affirmative duty of not relaxing his control, wherever he has it, in such a way as to facilitate some one else to do the forbidden thing. For example, in Scarborough v. State, 46 Ga. 26, it was held that, if a man's wife and daughters carried on the practice of fornication and adultery in his home and with his knowledge, he would be guilty of maintaining a lewd house, whether he consented to it or not, provided he did not actively dissent, and did not show that the practice went on notwithstanding that he exercised his powers as head of the family to prevent it.

A person having possession of a house which a lewd woman desires for the purpose of carrying on her practices therein is under the active duty of not renting it to her if he knows that purpose. The law says that he owes that much to society. As to contracts of tenancy this is well settled. But it must be kept in mind that it is not the civil contractual status of the parties that is the important thing in fixing the culpability. It is the landowner's conduct in giving over the possession of the house to the lewd woman, with knowledge of the purpose to which it is to be devoted, that makes him a partner in her crime. In Kessler v. State, 119 Ga. 301, 46 S. E. 408, where the lewd woman was a tenant of the accused, the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Cobb, in affirming the judgment of conviction, said: "One placing another in possession of a house for the purpose of being used for lewd purposes, or giving possession with knowledge that it is to be so used, directly aids him who is thus placed in possession in the unlawful enterprise by him therein carried on, and is liable to indictment as the keeper of a lewd house." Now, possession is just as effectively given under an executory contract of sale as it is under a contract of tenancy. In all such cases the question of legal title or of equitable title has no importance or bearing. It has been so held in the case of Scott v. State, 29 Ga. 263, where the crime charged was the maintaining of a gambling house. See, also, to the same effect, Stevenson v. State, 83 Ga. 575 (2), 10 S. E. 234, Bryan v. State, 120 Ga. 201 (4), 47 S. E. 574. The wrong which the accused does in such cases is not the parting with his title to some estate or interest in the property, of greater or less duration, but his transfer of the possession, knowing that, if he does transfer it, it will be used for immoral practices. As illustrative of how little cognizance the criminal law takes of civil relationships in determining culpability, we may put this supposititious case: Suppose that a man rushed up to a hardware dealer and said, "Give me a pistol; I want to kill my neighbor," and the shopkeeper said, "No; I will not give you a pistol for that purpose," and the would-be murderer said, "Lend me a pistol," and the dealer replied, "No; I will not lend you one, but I will sell you one, and you may do what you please with it." Would the law make any difference in the culpability of the shopkeeper who parted with the possession of the pistol to a man who he knew was about to commit murder, because the possession was transferred under a contract of sale rather than under a contract of lending or of gift?

It is to be noticed, further, that the instruction complained of did not make mere knowledge that the property might be used for lewd purposes the test of culpability. The instruction was that the defendant would be guilty if he sold or let the property "for the purpose" that a lewd house might be maintained. We cannot pronounce this charge erroneous.

There are other assignments of error, but none of them are meritorious or of sufficient importance to justify a reversal.

Judgment affirmed.

BILLS AND NOTES (§ 43*)—"SEALED INSTRUMENT"—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

A promissory note, in the body of which there is no recital indicating that it is to be a sealed instrument, does not, under the statute of this state, become a sealed instrument because there is placed after the maker's signature a scroll, or the letters "[L. S.]," or any device of similar import; nor because underneath the body of the note are written or printed the words, "Signed, sealed, and delivered in presence of," followed by the name of a subscribing witness.

years had elapsed since the notes became due, and it is conceded that, unless the notes are held to be instruments under seal, the demurrer is well taken. Under our statute (Civil Code 1910, § 4359), "no instrument shall be considered under seal unless so recited in the body of the instrument." It is well settled that merely to add the word "[Seal]," or the letters "[L. S.]," after the signature, does not make the instrument a sealed instrument. In this case there is no recital in the body of the note indicating any intention of creating a sealed instrument. The letters "[L. S.]" follow the signature, and on the corner opposite the signature, and below it, are the words, "Signed, sealed, and delivered in presence of," followed by the signature of an attesting officer.

The plaintiff contends that this recital in the attesting clause is a sufficient compliance with the statute, and relies on the case of Humphries v. Nix, 77 Ga. 98. In that case it was held that "where, at the end of a note, were the words, 'Signed and sealed,' followed by the signature of the maker and a scroll for a seal, with the letters '[L. S.]' written across it, this was equivalent to the words, 'Witness my hand and seal,' followed in the same way, and the paper was a sealed instrument." This case was considered and distinguished in Echols v. Phillips, 112 Ga. 700, 37 S. E. 977; it being there pointed out that in the Humphries Case an inspection of the record showed that the words "Signed and sealed" were in the body of the note, and that there was nothing to indicate that they were placed there for the attestation of a witness. In the case cited from 112 Ga. 700, 37 S. E. 977, it was held: "A promissory note, in the body of which there was no recital that it was under seal, was not a sealed instrument because there was, after the maker's signature, a scroll embracing the letters '[L. S.]'; nor because underneath the body of the note appeared the words, 'Signed, sealed, and delivered in presence of,' beneath which no name was signed, and which, from their position on the paper, were evidently designed to be signed by an attesting witness or witnesses, and not intended to constitute a portion of the contract embraced in the note."

The plaintiff in the present case tries to distinguish the case in the 112 Ga. 700, 37 S. E. 977, on the ground that in that case no witness had attested, while in this case there was an attesting witness. If any importance at all is to be attached to this circumstance, it only adds weight to the conclusion that the words, "Signed, sealed, and delivered," appearing in the note here sued on, were not intended to be a part of the body of the instrument, but were only intended to be a part of the attesting clause, and were in fact a part of it.

The court did not err in dismissing the suit on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations.

[1] The engineer and the fireman were the sole witnesses for the defendant. The engineer testified that he did not see the cow at all; that the front of the extension boiler was in the way; that the track curved to the left, and that his first information as to the cow was when the fireman told him it was on the track; that he then applied the brakes and attempted to reduce the speed of the train; that it was downgrade, and that he could not stop in time to prevent hitting the cow. The fireman said that he was on the lookout on the left side of the engine, when he saw the cow about 125 yards away; that he immediately notified the engineer, and that the engineer tried to stop, but could not. The fireman was not able satisfactorily to explain why he did not see the cow sooner, except by stating that he saw it soon after they came out of the mouth of a cut. There was evidence that, notwithstanding the curve and the cut, the point where the cow was standing would have been in sight from an approaching train 200 yards, and that the cow ran down the track from that point 130 yards, making a total of 330 yards from the point where the cow could have first been seen to the point where she was finally struck. The engineer said that in his opinion he could have stopped his train, running at the speed he was and on the grade he was, in a distance of 300 or 400 yards; and if he could have brought it to a dead standstill at this distance, it would seem that he could have slackened speed sufficiently to have prevented striking the cow, which was running at some speed ahead of the train, in a somewhat shorter distance. Hence the jury had the right to infer negligence in one or two respects—either that the fireman was not maintaining a diligent lookout, or that he did not notify the engineer promptly after seeing the cow. At any rate, there is enough conflict to warrant the verdict.

[2] 2. There was no error in the charge of the court to the effect that the jury might enhance the damages, in their discretion, by adding interest at 7 per cent. from the time of the killing to the time of the trial, expressing the aggregate amount of damages in their verdict, the total amount in no event to exceed the amount sued for. We understand this to be the law. Of course, in such cases the interest becomes a part of the damages, and it may be technically inaccurate to speak of adding the interest to the damages; but a jury would not be misled by this, nor reach a wrong conclusion on this account.

There is another exception to the failure of the court to give in charge principles of law stated in a request to charge, but upon examination we find that he did in substance give the principles stated in the request.

Error from City Court of Americus; J. A. Hixon, Judge.

Ambrose Fuller was convicted of violating the labor contract act, and brings error. Reversed.

Hollis Fort, for plaintiff in error. Zach Childers, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant was convicted of violating the labor contract act of 1903, (Penal Code 1910, §§ 715, 716). The court charged the jury in effect that if it was satisfactorily proved that the accused made the contract, procured money, or other thing of value thereon, and failed to perform the service contracted for, or make restitution without good and sufficient cause, the burden of proof would then be shifted to the defendant to prove his innocence. This charge is contrary to the decision in Mulkey v. State, 1 Ga. App. 521, 57 S. E. 1022. This statute (section 716) does say that the acts therein enumerated shall be deemed presumptive evidence of the intent referred to. Evidence may be presumptive evidence, without being sufficient to establish a fact beyond a reasonable doubt. We held in the Mulkey Case that this statute does not give to the enumerated acts any greater probative value than they previously had; that it merely authorized these facts to be admitted in evidence, to be weighed by the jury as circumstances from which they might or might not infer the guilt of the accused; that the presumption of innocence was still in the defendant's favor, and that the burden was still on the state to prove its case beyond a reasonable doubt; and that one of the elements still to be proved with this degree of certainty is the intent to defraud.

Counsel for the accused does not properly raise any question as to the constitutionality of this portion of the act, and therefore we are not called upon to pass thereon, otherwise than to recognize the same rule we have always recognized, to wit, that it is the duty of the court to give this statute that construction which will not render it repugnant to either the state or the federal Constitution. We held in the Mulkey Case (uniformly adhered to since) that the trial is not legally conducted if the judge gives the foregoing provision in charge, unless he also informs the jury as to the attendant limitations referred to above.

POWELL, J. The lightning rod company sued Linder for the purchase price of about 200 feet of lightning rod, which had been ordered under a written contract stating that it was not subject to countermand, except by mutual consent. The petition alleged delivery. The plea set up that, though the defendant had signed the contract, he had never accepted any of the lightning rods from the plaintiff, and had renounced the contract, for that, within a few hours after the contract was made, and before the plaintiff had been put to any expense or trouble whatever, or had undertaken to fill the order, he had canceled it, and had told the plaintiff that he would not take the rods, and had directed the plaintiff not to ship them. He denied that delivery had been made. On this state of facts, the case is controlled by Black v. Kaplan, 9 Ga. App. —, 72 S. E. 303, Rounsaville v. Leonard Co., 127 Ga. 735, 56 S. Appeal from Circuit Court, Rockingham County.

Action by Henry A. Armentrout and others against Johnston P. Armentrout and another, as executors of the will of Augustine Armentrout, and others. From a decree for defendants, complainants appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 111 Va. 348, 69 S. E. 333.

John E. Roller, for appellants. Charles D. Harrison, for appellees.

HARRISON, J. In June, 1906, Augustine Armentrout departed this life, having first made his last will and testament, dated February 14, 1901, which was duly recorded in Rockingham county in June, 1906. The testator, after the payment of his debts, gives his farm upon which he resides, his household furniture, and his other personal property to his wife, and at her death he gives the same to his sons Johnston P., James C., Robert A., and Martin L. Armentrout, and his daughter, Hattie G. Clatterbuck. The testator then provides as follows: "It is my wish that my sons Johnston P., James C., Robert A. and Martin L. and my daughter Hattie shall pay to Henry A. Armentrout $400, Jennie Baker $400, and E. L. Armentrout $400, less what he is due me at my death."

The bill in this case was filed by the three beneficiaries of these charges of $400 each, exhibiting therewith the will, and praying for a decree enforcing the payment of such charges, with interest from June 13, 1906, against the defendants, who were the owners of the estate in remainder after the expiration of the life estate of their mother. The only other allegation of the bill is that the executors (two of the sons who took the estate in remainder) were not required to give bond and complainants feared that their rights might therefore be impaired.

The defendants demurred to the bill, upon the ground, among others, that the sums which by the will were directed to be paid severally to the complainants by the demurrants were not due from them until the death of Margaret Armentrout, to whom the entire estate was given during her natural life; that the bill does not allege the death of the life tenant, and therefore fails to show a present right in the complainants to have payment of the several sums demanded by them. This ground of demurrer was sustained by the circuit court, and the bill dismissed. From that decree this appeal has been taken.

[1] It is clear that the three several sums of $400 each constitute charges upon the interests of those to whom the estate in remainder is to pass; but there is nothing in the will to justify the contention of the appellants that the testator intended that the whole estate should be charged with their payment, and that the widow and her children should only have the residue after satisfying these charges. The provision for the appellants is that the sums named shall be paid to them, and the charge is, not upon the shares of the widow and the appellees, but upon the shares of the appellees alone. It is very plain that the testator never intended that the life estate given to his wife should be diminished for the purpose of satisfying the sums claimed by the appellants.

The will gives the appellees the estate in remainder, after the expiration of the life estate of their mother, and nothing more; and it requires the appellees to pay the appellants $400 each, thus making these sums a charge upon the estate in remainder of the appellees, and upon no other estate.

Under the will the appellees do not come into possession of any part of the estate devised and bequeathed to them until the expiration of the precedent life estate, and then their interest is subject to the payment by them of $400 to each of the three appellants. Clearly the appellees have the right to elect whether they will or will not accept the provision for them, coupled with the requirement that they discharge the payments imposed upon them by the will. There is no allegation in the bill that the remaindermen have elected to accept the devise and bequest in their favor, and until the expiration of the life estate they cannot be required to make such election, because until that time arrives they cannot determine the value of the devises and bequests to them. The personal property, consisting evidently, from the will, in large part of household furniture and farming equipments, is liable to be consumed in its legitimate use by the life tenant, while the real estate is subject to fluctuation in value.

In Showalter v. Showalter, 107 Va. 713, 60 S. E. 48, this court quotes with approval 2 Minor's Inst. (4th Ed.) 1006, where it is said: "It is well established that no one shall be constrained to make an election until the interests to which the election relates are clearly defined and their relative values ascertained; and an election made before that is done will, for the most part, be disregarded, at least if it be made under mistaken impressions as to the facts." This language is again quoted with approval in Waggoner v. Waggoner, 111 Va. 325, 68 S. E. 990, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 644.

[2] It is not denied that the general rule with respect to legacies is, as contended by appellants, that they are payable at the end of one year from the death of the testator, with interest from that date, unless some other time is fixed by the will when interest is to begin. This general rule, however, is applied in cases where the legacies are made payable by the executor out of the estate of the decedent in his hands to be administered. Our attention has been called to no case where this rule has been applied to a case like that under consideration, where the charge is upon an interest to arise after the expiration of a life estate and to be paid by another legatee or devisee.

One of the cases relied on by the appellants is Shobe v. Carr, 3 Munf. 10. This is an authority to the contrary. In that case the court, under its construction of the will there involved, was of opinion that the widow was entitled to a life estate in one-third of the personalty of the decedent, with remainder in equal shares to the children, and that the real estate was devised, with right of immediate possession, to certain of the children, charged with payments for the benefit of others. Upon this state of facts Judge Roane, speaking for the court, says: The "court is of opinion that, under the will of Martin Shobe, the appellees were entitled to one-fifth part of two-thirds of the estate of the said Martin Shobe (exclusive of lands), with interest thereon from the end of one year from the death of the testator, and also to one-fifth part of the remaining one-third of the same (which was bequeathed to the wife of the said Martin Shobe) from and after the time of her death, with interest thereupon in like manner from the end of the year in which she shall have died."

This case shows that a legacy postponed in time of enjoyment as to the corpus does not bear interest, except from the time the right of enjoyment begins, which, so far as the question of interest is concerned, is in accordance with the contention of the appellees in the case at bar.

The appellants contend that it must be presumed that the testator intended to give all of his children an equal interest in his estate, and that this intention would be defeated unless the appellees were required to pay now the charges upon their estate in remainder, with interest thereon from the testator's death. Without pausing to question the presumption relied on, but admitting its existence only for the sake of the argument, it by no means follows that the intention thus attributed to the testator would be carried out by adopting the method proposed by the appellants. If the interests are equal, all ought to await the death of the life tenant. It would be a very unequal distribution of the estate to give three of the children their equal interests now, and require the other four to wait for theirs indefinitely, until the preceding life estate was ended.

We are of opinion that the reasonable interpretation of the testator's will is that the three several sums of $400 each given to the appellants constitute charges alone upon the interests of those to whom the estate in remainder is to pass; that these charges do not become payable until the expiration of the life estate and, therefore, do not bear interest except from that date, for the reason that otherwise the interests of the remaindermen might be sacrificed. It is reasonable to suppose that the testator intended that those upon whom he imposed the burden of the charges should have possession of the property charged as a means of discharging them.

[3] One of the grounds of demurrer filed by the defendants was that the executors of Augustine Armentrout were not proper parties to the bill, and counsel for appellants indulge in a lengthy discussion to show that they were proper parties, and insist that it was the duty of the circuit court to pass upon every ground of demurrer relied on.

As the ground of demurrer upon which the circuit court rested its decree went to the foundation of the complainants' case, there was no occasion for it to pass upon the other grounds relied on by the defendants.

[4] The only allegation of the bill, other than the assertion of the present right in complainants to enforce payment of the charges in their favor, is the bare statement that the executors were not required to give bond to account for the estate, and complainants feared their rights might be impaired. There is no allegation of any act or omission on the part of the executors which could justify the court in holding that it was necessary to exert its powers in order to preserve the estate. A glance at the bill is sufficient to show that its sole purpose was to assert the right of complainants to the present enforcement of their claims. Upon the third ground of demurrer, the circuit court properly decided that question adversely to the appellants, and its decree must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

Error to Circuit Court, Rockingham County.

Action by Flory & Garber against William C. Long. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant brings error. Reversed.

Sipe & Harris, for plaintiff in error. Ira S. Flory and Ed. C. Martz, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. This writ of error brings under review a judgment for $500, recovered by the defendants in error against the plaintiff in error as commissions for the sale of his farm. The case was submitted to the court without the intervention of a jury.

The material facts from the point of view of a demurrer to the evidence may be summarized as follows: In February, 1909, William C. Long, who was the defendant below, listed his farm with the plaintiffs, Flory & Garber, real estate brokers, for sale at the gross price of $18,800, of which sum, in the event of sale, Long was to receive $16,000, and the brokers a commission of $800. Thereupon the plaintiffs interested one Samuel Cline in the purchase of the farm, and at his request for a reduction in price it was fixed at $16,000—$15,500 to Long and $500 to the brokers. These latter terms were never modified, and the right of the plaintiffs to demand commissions was predicated upon the consummation by them of a sale at the price named. In point of fact, they never effected a sale at any price, and Cline explicitly testified that at no time would he have agreed to pay $16,000 for the farm.

It is not pretended that the plaintiffs possessed the exclusive right to sell, and in September, 1909, Long sold the farm to Rodeffer for $15,500. Rodeffer afterwards sold to Cline in circumstances which tended to show that he had purchased the farm for him in the first instance, though Cline denied the existence of any previous understanding or contractual relations between them on the subject. However that may have been, Long had no reason to suspect that Cline was interested in the purchase, if, indeed, such was the fact, until after the contract of sale had been reduced to writing and signed by the parties.

[1, 2] There is really no conflict of evidence on the controlling features of the agreement between the plaintiffs and the defendant. The former were not to have a commission for a sale at any price, but the price was fixed at $16,000; and unless and until a sale was effected at that sum (or, at least, until a purchaser had been procured who was ready and able to pay the price named), no claim to commissions could arise. Long would, therefore, have been within his rights if he had sold his farm directly to Cline for $15,500, unless, of course, in so doing he had thwarted a sale to him by the plaintiffs for $16,000. And there is absolutely no evidence of such interference.

The governing principle in this class of cases is clearly and succinctly stated in the syllabus by the court to Parker v. National Mut. Bldg. & L. Ass'n, 55 W. Va. 134, 46 S. E. 811, as follows: "Under a special contract between an owner of real estate and an agent for the sale thereof, on commission, at a price agreed upon, the agent cannot recover his commission without proving that he has actually made a sale at the price stipulated, unless it appear that his principal has wrongfully prevented the making of a sale at such price, which would have been made, but for his interference, or has waived the strict performance of the contract."

In that case the court, after stating that the plaintiff's contract for commissions was upon condition that he should sell the property, or procure a purchaser, at a price in excess of $3,000, observes: "It may have been a hard contract, and the plaintiff may have entered into it under a misapprehension of the law; but that cannot relieve him from the terms of his contract. In order to recover, he is bound to show compliance with it. This he has utterly failed to do, so far as the evidence shows; for he does not pretend to show that he procured a purchaser for the property, or made a sale of it, at a price which under his contract would have entitled him to commission."

This principle is sustained by the general course of decision on the subject. McFarland v. Lillard, 2 Ind. App. 160, 28 N. E. 229, 50 Am. St. Rep. 234; Gellat v. Ridge, 117 Mo. 553, 23 S. W. 882, 38 Am. St. Rep. 683; Kost v. Reilly, 62 Conn. 57, 24 Atl. 519; Peet v. Sherwood, 47 Minn. 347, 50 N. W. 241, 929; Fraser v. Wyckoff, 63 N. Y. 445; Charlton v. Wood, 11 Helsk. (Tenn.) 19.

The learned judge of the circuit court rests the plaintiffs' right to recover upon the theory of prevention of performance by the defendant, but the evidence does not support that conclusion.

It follows, from what has been said, that the judgment must be reversed, and judgment will be entered for the defendant.

TRIMBLE v. COVINGTON GROCERY CO.

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 241*)—REMEDIES OF PARTIES.

A creditor sued his debtor and served an attachment on R. to whom the debtor had conveyed a stock of goods, taking notes in part payment, and thereafter filed a bill in chancery alleging a sale of the stock by R. to T. without the giving of the notice to creditors as required by Code 1904, § 2460, and the attachment was brought into the chancery suit before any judgment was entered at law, and a decree was entered for the debt. Held irregular, as the proper mode would have been to have taken judgment in the action of assumpsit and reported the perfected lien in the chancery suit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Dec. Dig. § 241.*]

2. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 54*)—SALE OF STOCK IN BULK.

Code 1904, § 2460, provides that a creditor, before obtaining a judgment or decree for his claim, may, whether it be due or not, institute any suit which he might institute after obtaining judgment to avoid a gift, assignment, transfer, etc., void as in fraud of creditors; and section 2460a makes a sale of a stock of goods in bulk prima facie fraudulent as to creditors unless notice is given to creditors of the contemplated sale. Held, that where plaintiff sued his debtor and served an attachment on R. to whom the debtor had sold a stock of goods, taking notes in payment, and thereafter, but before judgment for plaintiff was rendered in the action, R. conveyed the stock to T. without giving the statutory notice, R. was not a debtor of plaintiff within the statute.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Alleghany County.

Suit by the Covington Grocery Company against R. M. Trimble and others. From a decree in favor of complainant, defendant Trimble appeals. Reversed.

Geo. A. Revercomb and R. C. Stokes, for appellant. C. B. Cushing, for appellee.

KEITH, P. Whitaker was engaged in the mercantile business in Covington, Va., and became indebted to various persons, including the Covington Grocery Company. While so indebted he sold his stock of goods and fixtures in bulk to R. L. Rose. Rose took possession of the goods and conducted a mercantile business in the same building, purchasing from time to time other goods and adding to the stock purchased by him from Whitaker. Rose upon purchasing the goods paid to Whitaker $300 in cash and executed two promissory notes, one for $300 payable November 17, 1907, and the second for $359.62 payable on December 1, 1907. Whitaker deposited the cash in the Covington National Bank to his own credit and placed the notes with the bank for collection. Rose conducted the business for a short time, and then sold the entire stock of goods and fixtures purchased from Whitaker, together with such as he had purchased from time to time, in bulk to R. M. Trimble; this sale taking place on November 20, 1907. Trimble took possession under his purchase, and conducted the business in the same store building, adding small purchases from time to time. He became indebted to various creditors whom he was unable to pay, and on the 26th day of December, 1907, executed a deed of assignment conveying his stock of goods, fixtures, and open accounts to Stokes and Revercomb, trustees, to be converted into money and the proceeds divided among all his creditors.

The Covington Grocery Company, learning of the sale of Whitaker to Rose, instituted an action of assumpsit against Whitaker in the circuit court of Alleghany county, setting up an account of $964.62, and, Whitaker being a nonresident, an attachment issued out of the circuit court designating the Covington National Bank as being indebted to or having in its possession effects of the said defendant, Whitaker, and R. L. Rose as being also indebted to Whitaker. This attachment was sued out on the 9th of November, 1907, and a copy thereof was served on the Covington National Bank; and as appears from the record, as we shall hereafter endeavor to show, this attachment was also served upon Rose on the 11th day of November, 1907. On the 20th day of November, 1907, Rose sold the stock of merchandise in bulk to Trimble, as above stated.

At the December term, 1907, of the circuit court of Alleghany county, which convened on December 15th, in the attachment suit of the Covington Grocery Company against Whitaker, and the Covington National Bank and Rose, as garnishees, an order was entered which recites that the Covington National Bank has in its hands of the effects of H. E. Whitaker the sum of $300 in cash, and that it also holds for collection two negotiable notes due to Whitaker from Rose, and it further appearing from the statement of Rose on oath that he is indebted to Whitaker in the sum of $659.62 with interest on $300 part thereof from November 17, 1907, and on $359.62 the remainder thereof from December 1, 1907, until paid, as evidenced by the negotiable notes mentioned, and that the entire fund in the hands of the bank, including the two negotiable notes, is the purchase price of a stock of goods purchased by him of H. E. Whitaker, it is ordered that the Covington National Bank pay to the clerk of the court the sum of $300 and turn over to the said clerk of the court the two notes of R. L. Rose above described, and upon so doing said Covington National Bank shall be discharged from any further liability in these cases, and the said R. L. Rose is ordered to pay the clerk of this court the sum of $659.62 with interest on $300 part thereof from November 17, 1907, till paid, and on $359.62 the remainder thereof from December 1, 1907, till paid, and, upon the payment of said amount with interest as aforesaid, the said clerk shall turn over to said R. L. Rose the two above-described notes duly canceled, and the said R. L. Rose shall be discharged from any further liability in these cases.

On December 14, 1907, the Covington Grocery Company filed its bill in chancery in the circuit court of Alleghany county, in which it sets forth that, in the sale from Rose to Trimble referred to in the foregoing statement of facts, he failed to take from Rose the proper affidavit and statements required by section 2460a of the Code of 1904; that neither party to the sale gave the required notice of said sale to any creditor of Rose; and that complainants received no such notice as the law contemplates, nor any notice whatever of the fact that such sale was contemplated until it had been fully completed. The complainants charge that owing to the failure of the parties to take the proper inventories and the proper affidavits, to give the proper notices required by law, the sale by law is deemed to be a fraudulent one, and that it is void as to complainants, and that whatever goods were passed from Rose to Trimble are still liable for complainants' claims against Rose; and that they are also informed and believe that any goods belonging to Rose, who has conveyed away most, if not all, of his goods in fraud of his creditors, are liable to be attached for any debts owed by him; and that, since said Trimble is deemed by the law to be a party to said fraud, any goods purchased from Rose by Trimble in said fraudulent transaction are liable to be so attached. Rose and Trimble were made parties defendant, answer under oath was waived, and the bill concludes with a prayer for the sale of the goods, the payment of complainants' debt, and for general relief.

The defendants answered the bill, evidence was taken, and the matter was referred to a commissioner, who reported in favor of the complainants. The report was confirmed, and the court entered a decree directing the fund under its control and the proceeds of the sale of the stock of goods purchased by Trimble from Rose to be turned over to the Covington Grocery Company, and from that decree Trimble has appealed.

[1] It appears that the attachment at law of the Grocery Company against Whitaker was brought into the chancery suit before any judgment was rendered, when it stood merely upon an inchoate lien created by the levy of the attachment, and the circuit court proceeded to enter a decree for the debt. As what was done in this respect is not material to our conclusion, we mention it only to point out the irregularity of the procedure, lest it should pass into precedent. The proper mode would have been to have taken judgment in the action of assumpsit and reported the perfected lien in the chancery suit.

[2] The crucial question in this case is: At what moment did R. L. Rose become a creditor of the Grocery Company? There were no contractual relations between the Grocery Company and Rose. The Grocery Company was a creditor of Whitaker; Whitaker sold to Rose; the Grocery Company sued Whitaker, and, he being a nonresident, Rose was named as a debtor of Whitaker, and the attachment was served upon him. We say that it was served upon him, though counsel for appellant stoutly deny it. The service is charged in the bill.

The cause was referred, as we have said, to a commissioner, and that commissioner reports that the attachment was served upon Rose on November 11, 1907. To that finding of fact no exception was taken, and upon that statement of fact unexcepted to the court rendered its decree. At the same term an order was entered directing the money and property attached to be brought into court, but it was not until the decree of February 1, 1910, that there was complete adjudication of the rights and liabilities of the parties to this controversy.

The sale was made by Rose to Trimble on the 20th day of November, 1907. It is not averred that that sale was fraudulent otherwise than by failure to comply with the terms of section 2460a of the Code. The whole case was proceeded with upon the theory that it turned upon that statute—upon the compliance or noncompliance with its terms.

That section creates no new right of action. It is by virtue of section 2460 that a creditor, before obtaining judgment or decree for his claim, may institute a suit to avoid a gift, conveyance, assignment, or transfer of or charge upon the estate of his debtor. The effect of section 2460a is to provide that, the cause of action existing, certain consequences should be attributed to the doing or the omission to do. In the case of a sale in bulk of an entire stock of merchandise, which is enjoined or forbidden by its terms, the suit must be brought by the creditor of the seller—a creditor existing at the date of the sale which is the subject of investigation.

In 1 Shinn on Attachments, § 313, it is said of a foreign attachment that it creates "only an inchoate or qualified lien, which may become perfected by being merged into the judgment thereafter obtained in the suit, and it may be defeated by a dissolution of the attachment. The attaching creditor acquires no property, neither general nor special, in either realty or personalty by his attachment. The title remains in the debtor, not only until the attachment lien is merged into a judgment condemning the property, but until a sale is made thereof. The only right the plaintiff acquires under his attachment levy is to use such measures as may be necessary to preserve his security until he can reduce his demand to a judgment. He cannot interfere with the claims of third persons. He has no right of possession and will have no right of action against one who takes the attached chattels from the possession of the attaching officer. While the attachment proceedings are pending, the officer controls the property and the plaintiff controls only the lien."

In Waples on Attachments (Ed. 1885) p. 580 et seq., it is said: "By the law of relation, an attachment judgment retroacts to the time the property was first attached; to the time it was first subjected to garnishment; so that no incumbrances put upon it by its owner since that time can have higher rank than the attaching creditor's lien. Such retroaction makes the lien perfect from its first inception as though created by the contract of the parties; as though it were a mortgage lien voluntarily put upon the property by the defendant himself. On the contrary, in case of final judgment for the defendant, there never has been any lien whatever; his subsequently created incumbrances, mortgages, or voluntarily bestowed liens of any sort are perfectly good, and the plaintiff's claim has never been more than an ordinary one. * * * From the moment of service the lien is perfect—provided judgment recognizing the lien shall follow. From that moment the lien is nothing—provided no such judgment shall follow. The garnishee cannot know the future contingency. He is bound to hold the money, or goods, or indebtedness, subject to the order of court. * * * The plaintiff cannot enforce the lien till matured by judgment."

The inchoate lien upon the property attached, when final judgment is rendered upon it, relates back to the date of levy of the attachment; but it cannot by relation render a transaction unlawful which was not unlawful at the time it took place. The levy having been made on November 11th, and the sale having been made on November 20th, the subsequent course of procedure in the attachment suit which culminated in the final decree in 1910 cannot render fraudulent the sale from Rose to Trimble, if that sale were free from fraud at the time it was made. On the 20th of November, 1907, Rose was not the debtor of the Covington Grocery Company, unless that relation was established by operation of law as a result of the service of the process of attachment upon Rose on November 11th. By that levy the Grocery Company acquired a lien, but nothing more.

In Manhattan Fire Ins. Co. v. Well, 28 Grat. 389, 26 Am. Rep. 364, a condition of a policy of insurance on a building was: "If the building insured stands upon leased ground, it must be so represented to the company, and so expressed in the written part of the policy; otherwise the policy shall be void." The assured had given a deed of trust upon the building to secure a debt, and it was held that this condition did not refer to the legal title, but to the interest of the assured in the property, and that the fact that he had given a deed of trust to secure a debt upon the property does not make the cestui que trust a joint owner.

The lien of the attaching creditor is likened to "a mortgage lien voluntarily put upon the property by the defendant himself." Waples on Attachments, p. 581.

It will not be contended that the beneficiary in a deed of trust which conveys choses in action to a trustee is such a creditor as before the execution of the trust would be entitled to sue under section 2460 to set aside a fraudulent conveyance made by the obligor in the choses of action covered by the deed, and yet the beneficiary under the deed has an interest identical in character with that of the attaching creditor. Section 2460a, assuming that it is constitutional, may be regarded as remedial, and should be so construed as to advance the remedy, but the relation of debtor and creditor cannot be held to flow from the inchoate lien of an attachment such as appears in this case in order to accomplish that result.

We are of opinion that under the facts disclosed in this record Rose was not, on the 20th of November, 1907, a debtor to the Covington Grocery Company within the meaning and intentment of sections 2460 and 2460a; that there was no obligation upon the part of Rose or of Trimble to comply with section 2460a; and that for the reasons stated the decree of the circuit court was erroneous and must be reversed; and this cause will be remanded to the circuit court to be further proceeded with in accordance with this opinion.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Frederick County.

Suit by Atkinson, administrator, and others, against Solenberger and others. From the decree, complainants appeal. Reversed in part.

R. T. Barton and Carrol G. Walter, for appellants. Ward & Larrick and Quarles & Pilson, for appellees.

BUCHANAN, J. One of the objects of the proceedings in this cause was to set aside a deed executed February 14, 1894, by John W. Solenberger to his son Noah W., as trustee for Barbara, the latter's wife, and to subject the lands conveyed to the payment of a debt evidenced by a judgment against Noah W., upon the ground that the lands conveyed were in fact purchased and paid for by the husband and the deed executed to the wife, without consideration passing from her, and was so made for the purpose of defrauding the husband's creditors, and that she had notice of such intent when the conveyance was made. Another object of the proceedings was to subject other lands than those conveyed by the deed of February 14, 1894, and the value of services rendered by the said husband for his wife Barbara.

This cause was heard with the cause of Joseph W. Solenberger, Adm'r, v. Noah W., his Wife and Others, and a decree entered refusing to set aside the conveyances attacked, charging Barbara, the wife, with the value of her husband's services, and crediting her thereon with the amount which the court deemed necessary for the reasonable support of the husband and family during that period. From that decree this appeal was taken.

[1] The first error assigned is to the action of the court in refusing to set aside the deed of February 14, 1894. This suit was instituted in December, 1903, nearly nine years after the conveyance of February 14, 1894, was recorded. The beneficiary in the deed claims in her answer that her husband was indebted to her, and that the consideration of $3,000 for which he executed his bonds to his father, the grantor, was for the debt which he owed. It is conceded in the brief of the appellees that there is "nothing in the record apart from the averment of the answers and the recital in the deed that the consideration of $3,000 was paid by said trustee, i. e., out of her separate estate; but it does appear that her trustee had used her money to an amount greater than the consideration named."

The evidence relied on to show that the trustee (husband) had used his wife's money is the depositions of the husband and the wife, taken in the cause of Joseph W. Solenberger v. Noah W. Solenberger, in the year 1904, two years before that case and this were ordered to be proceeded with and heard together. These appellants were not parties to that suit, and are not affected by the evidence taken in it. The effect of hearing the cases together was not to make the two one cause.

"The parties," as correctly stated in 8 Cyc. 608, "In one suit do not become parties to the other, and their rights still depend or turn on the pleadings, proof, and proceedings in the respective causes. The issues remain precisely as they were, and are to be determined exactly as if the cases had been heard separately. In short, the consolidation (in equity) merely operates to carry on together two separate suits supposed to involve identical issues, and is intended to expedite the hearing and diminish the expense." See, also, Daniel's Ch. Pr. note 3, p. 797 (5th Am. Ed.); Judge (now Justice) Lurton's opinion in Toledo, etc., Ry. v. Continental T. Co., 95 Fed. 497, 506, 36 C. C. A. 155.

[2] Having failed to establish by clear and satisfactory evidence, or even to show at all, that any such indebtedness existed from the husband to the wife, the conveyance to her is without consideration and merely voluntary as to her. But, as this suit was not instituted until more than five years after the recordation of the deed, the right to have it set aside, merely because it was made to the wife without consideration deemed valuable, would be barred by the statute of limitations. Code, § 2929.

But the appellants not only allege that the conveyance as to the grantee was voluntary, but that the lands were purchased and paid for by the husband and the conveyance made to his wife for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding his creditors, and that she had notice of such intent. If this allegation of actual fraud be sustained by the evidence, section 2929 has no application to the case. Flook v. Armentrout, 100 Va. 638, 42 S. E. 686; Snoddy v. Haskins, 12 Grat. 363.

It appears from the answer of the wife to the bill of Joseph W. Solenberger, a copy of which is filed with the bill in this case, that at the time the conveyance was made she knew that her husband was insolvent, as did his father, the grantor, and that the husband could not hold property because of his financial condition; that the grantor urged her to purchase the land, and said that he would accept time bonds of her husband for $3,000 in consideration and satisfaction of the purchase price of the land. There is no claim made in the answer that her husband was indebted to her, or that she was furnishing any part of the consideration, directly or indirectly. The answer further states that her husband had paid at that time $900 on account of the purchase price, evidenced by the bonds. It thus appears that the wife knew that her husband was insolvent at the time the conveyance was made to her and that he and not she was to pay the purchase price of the lands conveyed. Both the husband and the wife knew when the conveyance was made that he was providing for her at the expense of his creditors—that he was doing what he had no right to do.

This is not a case where money or property is received from an insolvent donor by one who has no reason to suspect such insolvency and without any purpose to defraud the creditors of the donor. In such a case, the transaction being merely voluntary, it is as to the donee constructively fraudulent and must be attacked within the five years; but where the donee has knowledge of the fact that the donor is insolvent and the natural and necessary effect of the transaction is to hinder, delay, or defraud the donor's creditors, it is actually fraudulent, not only as to the donor but also as to the donee.

[3] It is settled law in this state that in a contest between the existing creditors of an insolvent husband and his wife, touching an alleged purchase from her husband or from another with means furnished by him, the transaction is prima facie presumed to be actually fraudulent, and the burden is on the wife to show by clear and satisfactory evidence that the consideration was in good faith paid by her out of her own separate estate, and not by her husband. See Richardson v. Pierce, 105 Va. 628, 54 S. E. 480, and cases cited; 2 Min. Real Prop. § 1181, and cases cited in note 8.

The contention of the wife, that the transaction of February 14, 1894, was in fact a gift and not a sale, is in conflict with the averments of her pleadings in this cause, for in them she claims that she furnished the consideration for the conveyance. It is in conflict with her answer in the case of Solenberger's Adm'r v. Solenberger, filed as an exhibit in this cause. In that answer her claim is that the consideration was to be furnished and was in fact furnished by her husband. There is no evidence that the transaction was intended to be a gift, except that the grantor accepted the bonds of his insolvent son without reserving a lien upon the land conveyed.

Upon the whole case, we are of opinion that the conveyance of February 14, 1894, was, as to the wife, not only voluntary, but actually fraudulent; that the appellants have not been guilty of such delay in asserting their rights as to bar them from the relief sought; and that the trial court erred in not setting aside the said conveyance as fraudulent and void.

[4] Another error assigned is that "the appellees were not entitled to have an exemption or an allowance, for the support of the family, set off against the amount ascertained to be due for services" rendered by the husband.

The commissioner, to whom was referred the question, found that the husband had rendered valuable services to the wife in the management of her property, for which a fair compensation would be $600 per annum during the five years preceding the institution of this suit. The commissioner also found that all the means for the support of the husband and the family had been furnished by the wife during the said five years. This support the commissioner estimated as worth $500 per annum, and credited the same upon the amount he ascertained as the value of the husband's services. Upon a hearing of the cause, the court sustained an exception to the commissioner's report, filed by the husband and wife, as to the amount allowed by the commissioner as a proper sum to be credited on the value of the husband's services for the support of his family, and increased that amount from $500 to $600 per annum.

The objection made to the action of the court is not, as we understand it, to the amount allowed by the court for the support of the family, but to any allowance whatever.

The allowance is objected to on two grounds: (1) That the husband as the general manager or trustee of his wife's property was not a laboring man, within the meaning of section 3652 of the Code, which exempts from distress, levy, or garnishment the wages of a laboring man, being a householder, not exceeding $50 per month. (2) That an insolvent debtor, whose creditors are subjecting to the payment of their claims the value of his services, is not entitled to an allowance for the support of himself and family when it appears that the means for such support have not been furnished by him.

Where a husband renders services for his wife, whether under an express or implied agreement, his creditors have the right to subject the value of such services to the payment of their debts, less the amount necessary for the reasonable support of the husband and his family. See Catlett v. Alsop, Mosby & Co., 99 Va. 680, 687, 40 S. E. 34; Penn v. Whitehead, 17 Grat. 503, 525, 94 Am. Dec. 478; Id., 12 Grat. 74, 80.

The fact that during the period the husband is rendering services for the wife she supports the family is no reason why, when his creditors are seeking to charge her with the value of his services, she should not be permitted to set off what she has advanced for the reasonable necessary support of the husband and his family during the period she is charged with the value of his services. If the husband himself, under like circumstances, were to sue his wife to recover the value of his services, it is clear that he could only recover from her the value of his earnings or wages in excess of a reasonable support for himself and family. The creditors are entitled to no more. See Catlett v. Alsop, Mosby & Co., supra; Penn v. Whitehead, supra.

It is unnecessary to consider the question whether or not the husband, in this case, is a "laboring man," within the meaning of section 3652 of the Code, since independent of that section, where creditors are in a court of equity seeking to subject to the payment of their debts the earnings or wages of an insolvent husband in the employment of his wife, they can only subject so much thereof as is in excess of a reasonable support for himself and family. See authorities cited above.

For the error of the trial court in refusing to set aside as fraudulent and void the conveyance of February 14, 1894, the decree appealed from, to that extent, must be reversed and set aside, and in other respects affirmed; and the cause remanded to the circuit court for further proceedings to be had not in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion.

Reversed in part.

CARDWELL, J., absent.

On Rehearing.

WHITTLE, J. Upon a former hearing this court reversed the decree of the circuit court in so far as it refused to set aside the deed of February 14, 1894, from John W. Solenberger to Noah W. Solenberger, trustee for his wife, Barbara, on the ground of actual fraud, being of opinion that the land in controversy was purchased and paid for by the husband, who procured the title to be conveyed to himself, as trustee for his wife, for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding his creditors.

There is no occasion to depart from the conclusion reached by the court on that issue upon the evidence then before us. Since the last hearing the appellees have supplemented the former record by bringing up proceedings on an amended and supplemented bill in the principal case, and on an original bill filed by Joseph W. Solenberger against appellees. The trial court sustained demurrers to these several bills, save only with respect to the allegation common to both that Noah W. Solenberger had rendered services for his wife in the management of her property, compensation for which was liable to payment of his debts. The cases were then ordered to be heard together, and a specific reference was made to a commissioner in chancery touching the question of compensation for alleged services of the husband. The decree also contained the usual provision that the commissioner should report any other matter deemed pertinent by himself or required by any party in interest, and should certify the evidence to the court.

[5] Upon this reference, Noah W. Solenberger and wife gave their depositions tending to sustain the bona fides of the deed of February 14, 1894. Their evidence was plainly irrelevant to the question referred to the commissioner, and was objected to on that ground. Indeed, the evidence related to a subject expressly eliminated by the court (in sustaining the demurrer) from the pleadings upon which the reference was ordered.

It is a fundamental rule of practice that the evidence must be directed and confined to the questions upon which the master is ordered to report. Ware v. Starkey, 80 Va. 191, 198; 2 Bar. Chy. Pr. 635; 2 Daniel's Chy. Pl. & Pr. 1296.

A party can neither be expected nor required to present evidence to a tribunal upon an issue which it has no jurisdiction to pass upon. And, conversely, such party is not to be prejudiced by the transgression on the part of his adversary of a rule of practice, upon the observance of which depends the due and orderly administration of justice. Therefore, for the reason that the controversy concerning the validity of the deed was not within the pleadings or issues referred to the commissioner, depositions on that subject were inadmissible.

[6] The general direction found in the decree, that the commissioner shall report any other matter deemed pertinent by himself or required by any party in interest, does not warrant departure from the rule of practice adverted to, but it is merely intended to include matters which are germane and incidental to the questions specifically referred.

[7] The depositions in question were excepted to and were inadmissible for the further reason that Noah W. Solenberger and his wife were incompetent witnesses under the statute (Va. Code, 1904, § 3346a), which declares that "neither husband nor wife shall be competent to testify for or against each other in any proceeding by a creditor to avoid or impeach any conveyance, gift, or sale from the one to the other on the ground of fraud or want of consideration."

The cross-error assigned by appellees involves the contention that moneys expended by the wife for the support of the family stand on the same footing as moneys paid by the wife to the husband without promise on his part to repay the same. But the contrary principle is well settled—that money so expended by the wife is a proper set-off to the demand of the husband against her for services. The creditor of the husband can occupy no higher ground in such case than his debtor. Penn v. Whitehead, 17 Grat. 503, 94 Am. Dec. 478; Catlett v. Alsop, Mosby & Co., 99 Va. 680, 40 S. E. 34.

For these considerations, we shall adhere to the decision reached on the former hearing.

Reversed.

1. EXPLOSIVES (§ 12*)—INJURIES FROM BLASTING.

Where a contractor, engaged in building a spur track for a state institution, obstructs the main track of a railroad by blowing rock thereon in the prosecution of his own work, and his foreman is engaged in removing it, an assistant trainmaster of the railroad company, charged with the proper movement of trains, who is on the ground in the discharge of his duty is not a mere sightseer, as to whom the contractor is liable only for willful or wanton injury, but is entitled to have ordinary care exercised to insure his safety.

In an action against a contractor for injuries to an assistant trainmaster of a railroad, whose main track was blocked by rock blown thereon in the course of construction of a spur track for a state institution by such contractor, evidence held sufficient to charge the contractor with knowledge of the official character of the authority of a person and the object of his visit, so as to raise a liability for a failure to exercise ordinary care for his safety.

Where a contractor uses high explosives, it is presumed, in an action for an accident resulting from a delayed blast, that he knew the danger attending its use.

4. EXPLOSIVES (§ 12*)—INJURY TO THIRD PERSONS—NEGLIGENCE.

Where a contractor who is blasting an obstruction off a railroad track, placed thereon in the prosecution of his own work, has set a number of blasts, an assurance to an employé of the railroad company, present to see that the obstruction is quickly removed, that there is no danger, before all the blasts have exploded, is negligence, and amounts to a failure to exercise the ordinary care which such person is entitled to have exercised for his safety.

Error to Circuit Court, Amherst County.

Action by John T. Goodykoontz against A. M. Valz. From a judgment for plaintiff on a demurrer of evidence, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

J. M. Perry and Randolph Harrison, for plaintiff in error. Lee & Kemp, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. The judgment under review was rendered for the defendant in error (the plaintiff below) on a demurrer to the evidence by the defendant.

The following are the essential facts of the case as thus submitted: The defendant, Valz, was a railroad contractor in the employment of the Western State Hospital, engaged in grading a spur track from the Norfolk & Western Railway, at a point about one mile east of Lynchburg, to the power house of the Virginia State Epileptic Colony, in Amherst county. At the time of the accident, the defendant, in the course of his work, had caused a large quantity of rock to be blown down on the track of the railway company, which entirely obstructed the passage of trains. A freight train from the east had been stopped 150 yards from the mass of debris (which one of the witnesses testified was "as high as a house"), and still further east a passenger train was held up at a stop known as James River. The plaintiff was assistant trainmaster of the railway company, and, as such, was charged with the duties, among others, of giving special attention to the prompt movement of traffic, to investigate the detention of trains, and to clear the track of obstructions. He came from James River to the obstructed point on one of the company's light engines, which was drawn up in rear of the delayed freight train, and went forward to the engine of that train, where he engaged the conductor in conversation concerning the obstruction. Samuel Harvey was the defendant's foreman in charge of the work of clearing the track where the accident happened. In order to remove the rocks from the track, it was necessary to break them up by means of "doble" blasts, which were being placed and exploded under his direction. After the plaintiff had talked with the conductor for a short while, the two men started in the direction of the slide, when they were notified that blasts were about to be set off. Thereupon, along with Valz's men and a section foreman and his gang, they retired to a place of safety, where they remained until after four blasts had exploded, when Harvey called out: "All over, boys; come on back"—and set out with his men to resume work. The plaintiff, in company with the freight conductor and a civil engineer, followed Harvey, and, addressing him by name, inquired at what time they could clear the track. About that time the plaintiff also directed Harvey's attention to smoke arising from behind a nearby rock, and said, "Mr. Harvey, what is that smoking?" to which remark Harvey replied that it was "nothing," "just some powder or a chunk burning up;" that there was "no danger." The plaintiff repeated the inquiry about the smoke, and asked if it was perfectly safe, and was assured by Harvey that it was safe, and that there was no danger. Thus assured, he continued to follow Harvey, who had passed the danger point, when a delayed blast, from which the smoke was issuing, went off, and a fragment of rock struck the plaintiff on the side of his head, crushing in the skull and leaving a hole large enough to admit the passage of a large duck egg or goose egg, and inflicting upon him injuries of a serious and permanent character.

We are of opinion that the foregoing facts and just inferences which a jury would have been warranted in drawing from the evidence make out a clear case for the recovery of damages.

[1, 2] We cannot yield to the suggestion of counsel that at the time of receiving the injury complained of the plaintiff was a mere sightseer on the scene, drawn thither by idle curiosity, and to whom the defendant owed no higher duty than to refrain from inflicting wanton or willful injury upon him. In the light of the evidence, such conclusion would be to the last degree unwarrantable. The plaintiff was stricken down at his post of duty, while on the premises of the railway company, and in discharge of an important function to his master and the public, to relieve a condition brought about by the defendant himself. Moreover, it is a just, if not an irresistible, inference from the evidence, which the jury might well have drawn, and which the court must draw on the demurrer to the evidence, that the official character of the plaintiff and the object of his visit were known to the defendant.

The light engine which brought him on the ground was run up in the daytime, and stopped in rear of the freight train, and within 150 yards of where the foreman, Harvey, was at work. Besides, it appears that the plaintiff was personally acquainted with Harvey, and addressed him by name, and while in company with the conductor of the freight train and the civil engineer talked with him about the progress of the work and safety of the premises. It would, indeed, be a pernicious doctrine to establish that, in these circumstances, the only consideration to which the plaintiff was entitled at the hands of a contractor (who, in the prosecution of his own work, had obstructed the main track of an important railway company) was that he should not be wantonly or willfully injured.

There can be no question but that the defendant owed the plaintiff the duty to exercise ordinary care for his safety; and that the defendant failed to discharge that duty is equally plain. The measure of duty owing from the defendant to the plaintiff was unquestionably as great as that from master to servant. Norfolk & Portsmouth Traction Co. v. Daily's Adm'r, 111 Va. 665, 69 S. E. 963; Lane Bros. Co. v. Barnard's Adm'r, 111 Va. 680, 69 S. E. 969, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1209; Walton, Witten & Graham v. Miller, 109 Va. 210, 63 S. E. 458, 132 Am. St. Rep. 908.

Even in case of an employé, the master would be liable, where he assured the servant, who was ignorant of the danger, that a place was safe, and who went to work therein, acting upon such assurance. Lane Bros. v. Bauserman, 103 Va. 152, 48 S. E. 857, 106 Am. St. Rep. 872; Low Moor Co. v. La Bianca, 106 Va. 83, 55 S. E. 532; Lane Bros. v. Seakford, 106 Va. 93, 98, 55 S. E. 556; Va. Iron, etc., Co. v. Munsey, 110 Va. 156, 162, 163, 65 S. E. 478.

[3, 4] The defendant's foreman, in this instance, was using a high explosive—dynamite—in making these "dobie" blasts, and he must be held to have known the danger attending its use. He also knew that five blasts had been set, to be exploded at intervals; and he knew, or ought to have known, that only four had been exploded. Hence it was negligence on his part to have called in his employé to work, and to have assured the plaintiff of the safety of the place, and iterated that assurance after his attention had been specifically directed to smoke arising from a point at which the blast had been placed.

These are the controlling considerations in this case, and render further discussion of it unnecessary.

The judgment of the circuit court is plainly right, and must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hancock County.

Action by Abbie Campbell against Mary O'Neill and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant John A. Campbell appeals. Affirmed.

Alfred Caldwell, John R. Donehoo, John A. Campbell, and Henry M. Russell, for appellant. Oliver S. Marshall and John Marshall, for appellee.

MILLER, J. This is an appeal by defendant from two decrees of the circuit court against him in favor of plaintiff, the first, pronounced November 18, 1904, adjudicating the principles of the cause, and referring the same to a commissioner to state an account between them in accordance therewith; the second, pronounced November —, 1908, overruling defendant's exception to the commissioner's report, confirming it, and adjudging that plaintiff recover of defendant the sum of two thousand one hundred and forty-nine dollars and fifty cents, the aggregate of principal, as found by said commissioner, arising from sales of real estate by defendant, money collected by him on a policy of life insurance on the life of plaintiff's father, with interest from March 1, 1906, together with her costs incurred in the prosecution of her suit.

Plaintiff, an infant, by her next friend, sued defendant in his own right, and as guardian de son tort, for an accounting of her share of the moneys received by him from sales of lands in the State of Iowa, one hundred and sixty acres whereof, residue of a tract of five hundred and twenty acres, originally purchased at a tax sale by her father, M. B. Campbell, in 1862, it is alleged belonged to her father, and of which in 1886 he died seized and possessed; and another portion whereof, it is alleged, was in 1866 conveyed by her father to his mother and the mother of defendant, plaintiff's grandmother, and of which in 1869 she died seized and possessed, intestate, leaving surviving her Alexander Campbell, her husband, and the said M. B. Campbell, John A. Campbell, and Mary Brandon, her two sons and daughter, who inherited said land and possession of which, on the death of said Alexander, occurring in 1884 came to them jointly, the share of her father therein, on his death, intestate, in 1886, descending to plaintiff and her three sisters, named as co-defendants in the bill; the other portion of said five hundred and twenty acres, as the bill alleges, having been conveyed by said M. B. Campbell in his life time to said John A. Campbell.

It is further alleged in the bill that after said land had been so acquired, and conveyed, and after the death of plaintiff's father, the defendant John A. Campbell, assuming to own all of said land, leased the same, collected the rents thereof, and proceeded to sell and dispose thereof, and had, at the time of the bringing of this suit, disposed of all of said land to various persons, named in the bill, for an aggregate sum, in which the share of plaintiff and her sisters, as heirs of their father, in the principal amounted to eight thousand three hundred and forty-one dollars.

The allegation of the bill, respecting said insurance money is, that after the death of plaintiff's father, defendant assumed the guardianship of herself and her sisters, then all infants, collected said life insurance money, amounting to two thousand two hundred dollars, and representing himself to be their guardian, had collected and held all the moneys belonging to them, but had never rendered any account thereof, as such, as required by law, and a full accounting whereof is sought by the bill.

The defendant in his answer, not denying the material facts charged, alleges, in reply, respecting said lands, that he, and not M. B. Campbell, was the purchaser of said land, at said tax sale, but that he, being then under age, took title thereto in the name of his brother; but that afterwards, the validity of said tax title being questioned, he, in 1869, obtained an assignment of a mortgage on said land, executed by one Leroy R. Tuttle, prior to said tax sale, and by means of which, and the release thereof to the said Tuttle, he obtained from said Tuttle and his wife a deed for said land investing in him the absolute ownership of said land, of which he alleges said M. B. Campbell had full knowledge and notice in his life time, and consented thereto. He disclaims all knowledge, until the filing of the bill in this cause, of the deeds of conveyance from M. B. Campbell to himself and Eleanor Campbell of portions of said land, and alleges that no deed was ever delivered to him for the part so conveyed to him.

While asserting absolute title in himself, by virtue of the Tuttle deed, defendant admits in his answer, declaratory of and defining the trust in relation thereto: First, that at the time of the tax sale and purchase of said land in 1862, it was agreed and understood between him and said M. B. Campbell, that the persons who should be interested therein, and for whom the same should be held as joint tenants, were M. B. Campbell, in the proportion of an undivided two-sevenths; John A. Campbell, in the proportion of an undivided three-sevenths therein, and that the remaining undivided two-sevenths interest therein should be held for their mother and sister, referring to the said Eleanor Campbell, and the said Mary Brandon, their sister, the interest of the latter being subject to some contingencies, not definitely stated. Second, that from the time he became the owner of said lands, and until the death of said M. B. Campbell, he recognized the fact that the latter was entitled to the proceeds of the sale of an undivided two-sevenths of said land, when sold, less prior costs and charges incident to perfecting the title: Provided, first, "that the contingent liability as to the mortgage indebtedness, assigned to this defendant as aforesaid should be satisfied, if feasible and demanded;" second, "that the said M. B. Campbell would pay off and discharge the two hundred dollars alleged to have been procured by defendant for him," as his proportion of the expenses incurred in perfecting said title, which was the consideration for his interest in said land.

The answer further avers that neither M. B. Campbell in his life time, nor his heirs since his death, ever paid the money so procured for him by defendant, and that the defendant had since discharged the same, and that he and they had therefore forfeited any and all rights, under the terms of the trust, to participate in the proceeds of the sale of said land, or in the rents and profits thereof.

The answer admits receipt by the defendant of the $2,000.00, collected on said insurance policy, and that he had received the same from the administrator of M. B. Campbell, supposing that he had been regularly appointed guardian for the said infants, but finding that he had not been so appointed, he denies liability to plaintiff, averring that his liability, if any, is to the administrator, from whom he received the same, and not to plaintiff. But in his answer, and also in his testimony, defendant admits that he took charge of the persons and property of said infants, cared for them as guardian, made disbursements to them out of the rents and profits of the land and the proceeds of the sale thereof, and from the money collected on the insurance policy, for their maintenance and education, various sums, amounting in the aggregate to more than their interests therein, and particularly more than the interest of the plaintiff therein would have amounted to, had her father, said M. B. Campbell, complied with the conditions of said trust, as declared by defendant, and that she is now actually indebted to him, and not he to her, if a proper accounting be had.

These latter allegations are of course defendant's interpretation of the law applicable to the facts. It becomes our duty, however, to apply the law to those facts, harsh though it sometimes is, and as it seems to be in this particular case. We accept with entire confidence the professions of good faith, and fair dealings by the defendant with these infant children of his brother, known as he is to all of us, to be a man of high character and standing; but the duty we have to perform, in reviewing the judgment or decree of the court below is, to apply the law to the facts, being as liberal therein as the facts will justify.

The record shows that the three sisters of the plaintiff have long since reached their majority, and that some settlement has been effected between the defendant and them, of the matters relating to this controversy. The plaintiff, who began this suit by her next friend, has since reached her majority, and the suit was ordered, and did proceed, to final decree in her name individually.

As expressive of our own conclusion as to the facts we quote, substantially, from the opinion of the learned judge of the court below, as follows: "The parties to this controversy became interested in the Iowa lands through Alexander Campbell, the father of Milton B. and John A. Campbell. Alexander Campbell traded his store in Fairview to A. R. McCown, for a note made by Owen Bros. of Omaha, Nebraska, endorsed by A. R. Tuttle and C. B. Smith, for over $3,200.00. The note not being paid, Alexander Campbell was compelled to make an assignment to Alex. Morrow, and this note passed to his assignee. Owens then conveyed to Tuttle the five hundred and sixty acres in question in this suit, and Tuttle made a new note to take up the first one. This second note was for over thirty-eight hundred dollars, and was secured by mortgage on the land conveyed to him by Owens. It will be seen from these transactions that Alexander Campbell furnished the real consideration for these lands, and that the payments which were subsequently made by M. B. and J. A. Campbell were but incidental matters, necessary to secure and save the estate of Alexander this large sum which had been put into these lands. To me it is clear, beyond question, that what was done by M. B. Campbell, in taking the tax titles in his own name, was done to protect the investment already made, and that in holding these tax titles he held as trustee, and that what was done by J. A. Campbell, in securing the Tuttle deed to himself, was as trustee for the same interests. This conduct of the business, through the agency of these trustees, was made necessary by the insolvency and indebtedness of the father. Therefore when the tax titles were bought in it was done in the name of M. B. Campbell, and when the Tuttle title was acquired, it was done in the name of J. A. Campbell. It is obvious that in neither case was there any intention of securing the property for the exclusive use of the person to whom the title was conveyed. The defendant, J. A. Campbell, had Morrow, the assignee, transfer to him the note and mortgage, given to the assignee, by Tuttle; and this was done without any consideration passing from J. A. Campbell to the assignee; and the satisfaction of this mortgage was the sole consideration for the deed from Tuttle to J. A. Campbell. To say that J. A. Campbell accomplished this transfer with the purpose and intention of holding these lands as his own, and of asserting the title thus acquired, adversely to the claims of others interested, is to charge him with perpetrating a fraud on those others, and with a serious breach of trust, and a total disregard of the moral obligation arising out of the transaction. Yet this is the necessary effect if we allow the contention that this land was acquired and held by adverse title. This, however, was not the case. The Tuttle title was acquired by J. A. Campbell, as was the tax title by M. B. Campbell, pursuant to a trust arrangement, by which M. B. Campbell was to have two-sevenths of the land, Eleanor, the wife of Alexander, the two-sevenths, and J. A. Campbell, the three-sevenths. This is a conceded fact in the case, and as a fact it disposes of the claim of adverse possession and of rights of property resulting therefrom."

On the question of the non-compliance by M. B. Campbell with the condition of the trust, declared by the defendant, we think that the judge below, in his opinion, properly concluded, that there is no real force in this contention, for the reason stated, that M. B. Campbell did furnish the money, by borrowing it from his aunt; besides, it is a disputed fact whether that money was not in fact paid out of the estate of M. B. Campbell, after his death, by the payment by his administrator of a three hundred dollar note. Whether this be the fact or not, the payment by the defendant in the manner claimed, was voluntary on his part, and cannot lawfully be set up by him to defeat the interest of his brother in the property. Moreover, the subsequent acts of the defendant, in recognizing the rights of his brother in this land, and in the proceeds of the sale thereof, in distributing and paying to his heirs portions of the money realized from rents and profits, and from sales thereof, are rather inconsistent with the position now taken that M. B. Campbell had forfeited his interest in the property, by not complying with the said condition.

The decree below, predicated on these facts, and adjudicating the principles of the cause was, that the lands described in the bill and answer, were acquired and held by defendant John A. Campbell, in trust, in the proportion of two-sevenths thereof to M. B. Campbell and his heirs, two-sevenths to the use of Eleanor Campbell and her heirs, and three-sevenths to the use of the said John A. Campbell, and that the plaintiff Abbie Campbell, as one of the four heirs of Milton B. Campbell, and one of the heirs of the said Eleanor Campbell, was entitled to an accounting with the defendant of the said trust, and also of the money which went into his hands as a part of the insurance on the life of her father.

With respect to the claim of defendant, that the interest of Eleanor Campbell in the trust property was a contingent one, and that it was agreed between the parties that her two-sevenths interest, in case of her death, was to go to Mrs. Brandon, the court below says, that the only evidence in support of this contention is that of the defendant and Brandon, her husband, which is incompetent. Does not the fact also that M. B. Campbell in his life time deeded a portion of the land to Eleanor Campbell absolutely, without such condition, and while he held title to the land, not only for himself, but for the defendant and Eleanor Campbell, amount to a denial of any such agreement? It is not claimed that Eleanor Campbell was a party to the alleged agreement, that her interest was to go to her daughter, Mrs. Brandon. Possibly that would have been an equitable disposition of the property. So far as the record shows she died intestate, and we cannot say that the decree below, respecting her alleged interest, is erroneous.

[1] The decrees below are attacked on numerous grounds. We will notice only such of them as seem to us meritorious and as presenting questions fairly arising upon the record. First, in logical order, it is said that the trust alleged in the bill is not the same as that acknowledged and declared in the answer; and that the trust so declared by the defendant, being an express trust, is by the laws of Iowa, the statute of frauds, wholly void and unenforceable. Our reply to this proposition is that the trust alleged in the bill, while differing in details, and in the manner of statement, from that acknowledged and declared in the answer, is nevertheless substantially the same. We do not regard the fact that after the land was acquired by tax title, and the title thereto invested in M. B. Campbell; and the fact that he subsequently made deeds to the defendant and to Eleanor Campbell, as alleged, and that the parts so conveyed may have been held in severalty, and the further fact that defendant subsequently acquired from Tuttle a deed for the whole land, to be made to him, and which was to be subject to the same trust, render the defendant any the less liable as trustee, to account to the plaintiff for her interest therein, for we must assume that in the attempted partition of said land by the deeds from M. B. Campbell to his mother Eleanor, and to his brother John A. Campbell, the purpose was to divide the land, according to quality and quantity, in the same proportions in which it was held by him for himself and them.

[2] We believe it to be true, as argued, that under the statute of frauds of the State of Iowa, an express trust cannot be created by parol, but must be in writing. The Supreme Court of that State, however, in McCormick & Co., v. Griffin, 116 Iowa, 397, 90 N. W. 84, holds, that a trust required by the statute to be in writing is not void, but merely unenforceable, and that a conveyance by the trustee in discharge of the trust, is based on a sufficient consideration even as against strangers. In the case at bar we have the defendant in his answer filed declaring the trust, substantially as sought to be enforced against him by the bill. In Perry on Trusts (6th Ed.) § 84, that eminent writer says, applicable we think to this case, that: "In all cases, however, the defendant may answer, and if in his answer he confess the trust without insisting upon the statute of frauds, he will be held to have waived the benefit of the statute, and his answer may be used as a written declaration and proof of the trust, on the ground that the plaintiff is not called upon to introduce evidence, and the trust appears upon the written answer before the court." And this court held in McCandless v. Warner, 26 W. Va. 754, that a writing to prove a trust under our law need not be made at the time the trust is created, but may be made at any time thereafter, and that it is not necessary that it be addressed to the cestui que trust, or to any other person. We think if the case here depended upon such declaration that the answer of defendant satisfies the requirements of the statute, even of the State of Iowa.

[3, 4] A second point we will notice is, that defendant after he acquired the deed from Tuttle, took possession of the land by tenants, sold the same as his own, and in every way treated it as his individual property, and that laches or the statute of limitations bars recovery by the plaintiff. We have seen how the court below disposed of this question in part. In another part of his opinion, the judge below says, on the same question, that the Tuttle title was not a constructive, but an express trust, and that the statute of limitations can have no application thereto. We have recently held, in Roush v. Griffith, 65 W. Va. 752, 65 S. E. 168, points seven and eight of the syllabus, that the question, what constitutes laches barring an express trust? depends for the most part upon the circumstances of the particular case; that a ward is not barred in equity, by delaying suit to recover her estate from her guardian for a period of fourteen years after attaining her majority, unless evidence has been lost, or the trust has been disavowed, or upon some equitable principles it would be inequitable to enforce such trust. And in Sommers v. Bennett, 69 S. E. 694, on the authority of numerous prior decisions, it is said, that until an actual disseisin of a co-tenant has been effected by some notorious act of ouster brought home to his knowledge by another co-tenant, and in the case of a beneficiary under a trust, until the duties of the trustee are ended, or the trust is disavowed by the trustee, such co-tenant or cestui que trust cannot lose his or their rights of entry on the land, by delay in asserting the same and demanding possession. In the case here there is no evidence of any disavowal of the trust in the life time of M. B. Campbell, and there has been no such disavowal to his heirs and beneficiaries, since his death. Quite the contrary we think; besides, no such disavowal could bar an infant of his right of action, at least until after he has reached his majority.

[5] A third point is, that the defendant was unlawfully deprived of credits for disbursements to plaintiff, beyond her share of the rents and profits of the land, interest on the purchase money, and on her share of the insurance money, with which defendant had been charged. The commissioner's report shows an account between plaintiff and defendant of her share of these items, made up with annual rests, and as of the first day of March of each year, beginning March 1, 1886, and ending March 1, 1906, with accompanying schedules explanatory thereof, and by which defendant is charged, each year, with these items of income, and credited with disbursements, proven by his evidence to have been made to, or for and on account of plaintiff, and showing payments in excess of rents and interest received and available therefor, a balance in his favor of four hundred and fifty-five dollars and seventy-two cents, which the commissioner refused to allow him out of her share of the principal sums collected by him, and charged against him in said account, and which the court below by confirming said report, and giving decree against defendant, also disallowed him. Was the defendant entitled to be so credited, or reimbursed out of the principal sums with which he was charged in said account? He asserts his right to such credit on the ground that said disbursements were for necessities furnished plaintiff, relying chiefly, on Myers v. Myers, 47 W. Va. 488, 35 S. E. 868. It is conceded by counsel that that case was a hard one. We think, however, that it affirms correct legal principles. It affirms, as do some of the authorities cited therein, that for necessities furnished by a guardian to his ward, the guardian has the same right of enforcement and reimbursement therefor as any other persons, furnishing such necessities. Can the claim of defendant to be reimbursed be supported upon the ground of necessities furnished? Food, lodging, clothing, medical attendance and education are regarded as necessities. And the authorities hold that wide discretion is given a guardian in such expenditures, depending upon the estate, and station in life of his ward. [6] But they say that education is confined to a common school education, and does not include a college education. Woerner Am. Law of Guardianship, 12. By reference to the account, and to the testimony of the defendant in this case, we observe that many of the items cover disbursement for tuition and expenses, outside of board, while attending school or Oberlin College, Ohio, and apparently amounting to more than the amount of the excess of his disbursements. Besides sections 8 and 9, chapter 82, Code 1906, expressly disallow to a guardian in settlement, credit for disbursements for any purposes, beyond the income of the ward's estate, unless the same be previously authorized by a court, as provided thereby. Some early Virginia cases are cited by counsel to the contrary; but they are decisions occurring before the present statute was enacted in that State or in this. See Rinker v. Streit, 33 Grat. Anno. (Va.) 663, and notes. Notwithstanding this statute, however, a court of equity may, upon the principles of the Virginia cases cited, and Myers v. Myers, supra, where it has the entire matter before it for settlement, reimburse a guardian out of the principal of the ward's personal estate, for disbursements which the law regards for necessities. The general rule, however, is, that where expenditures of this kind have been made without a previous order of the court, some good excuse must be furnished to the court why application was not made to the court for the authority before doing so. Bond v. Lockwood, 33 Ill. 212, 224-225.

[7] The fourth and last point which will be noticed is, that the defendant, not being the legally appointed guardian, cannot be required to account to the plaintiff, in strict accordance with the rules and principles governing a regularly appointed guardian. In this we think the authorities, without exception, are against him. He says he thought he was guardian. He received the money belonging to these infants, believing that he had been duly appointed guardian. But if he did not so believe, still, having acted in that capacity, he is bound to account in a court of equity in the same way, as if duly appointed and qualified. Although a commissioner of accounts, and our county court of probate would not have jurisdiction over him as over a regularly appointed, and qualified guardian, to compel an accounting, nevertheless a court of equity has that power. Woerner Am. Law of Guardianship, § 94, says: "So one who acts as guardian without authority, or under an appointment void for want of jurisdiction in the court having granted it, becomes liable as a trustee in invitum, and may be made to account in a court of equity, or, under some circumstances, in an action of account at law for money had and received. And where such court has obtained jurisdiction in a proceeding to set aside, on the ground of fraud, a decree made on final settlement between a guardian and his ward, it may retain jurisdiction of the whole case, not only for the purpose of setting aside the fraudulent settlement and decree, but also of determining the amount due the plaintiff upon an honest accounting. So it is held, that where an administrator is also the guardian of infant distributees of the estate, chancery alone has jurisdiction to settle his accounts, though a settlement made by the Probate Court in such case is not absolutely void." That de facto guardians may thus be required to account is the doctrine of many cases, including Evans v. Pearce, 15 Grat. (Va.) 513, 78 Am. Dec. 635; Peale's Adm'r v. Thurmond, 77 Va. 753, and Martin's Adm'r v. Fielder, 82 Va. 455, 4 S. E. 602. And we find this doctrine recognized and applied in some of the cases cited and relied upon by the appellant. Houseal v. Gibbes, Bailey, Eq. (S. C.) 482, 23 Am. Dec. 186; Van Epps v. Van Deusen, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 64, 25 Am. Dec. 516; Bailey v. Bailey, 67 Vt. 494, 32 Atl. 470, 48 Am. St. Rep. 830. And citing many decisions, it is said, in 21 Cyc. 152, that "Any person acting as guardian whether as a natural or statutory guardian (even though his appointment be void), or as special guardian to sell realty, or as a mere volunteer, may be required to account, and on the removal of a guardian it is a matter of course to require him to account and to pay over the balance if any which shall be found in his hands upon such accounting. It is the duty of every guardian whose trust as such is revoked to account honestly to the late ward or to his successor in the trust if there be one. If the guardian dies before the settlement of his account his representatives may be required to account. If the guardian has appointed an agent to manage the estate, he may be required to file and settle an account of his agency."

It seems wholly unnecessary to say more in support of the decrees appealed from, and our plain duty is to affirm them.

CECIL et al. v. CLARK et al.

HALL et al. v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 31, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 133*)—ACCEPTANCE OF SERVICES—LIABILITY FOR COMPENSATION.

Parties to a suit, accepting the services of an attorney, with knowledge thereof, as the services are performed from time to time, and in the absence of any agreement for gratuitous service, and circumstances from which gratuitous service would be implied in law, are liable therefor.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Attorney and Client, Cent. Dig. § 321; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

2. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 133*)—EMPLOYMENT BY AGENT—LIABILITY FOR COMPENSATION.

Acquiescence of persons, jointly interested in a fund in litigation, in the employment of an attorney by one of their number for the protection of their common interest amounts to a representation of agency in the person making such contract, which will justify the attorney in making a subsequent contract of employment with the same person for protection of the same fund in litigation, other than that in respect to which he was first employed; the parties having knowledge of the rendition of his service in such subsequent litigation as it is performed, and not disavowing or denying agency of their associate to make such employment.

3. RECEIVERS (§ 196*)—RIGHT TO COMMISSION.

An attorney, jointly interested with his clients in the fund recovered in a suit, and having such fund in his hands as special receiver by appointment of the court, may be allowed a commission thereon as receiver, in the absence of an agreement to handle the fund as such receiver without compensation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Receivers, Dec. Dig. § 196.*]

4. RECEIVERS (§ 101*)—FUNDS IN HANDS—LIABILITY FOR INTEREST.

Failure of a special receiver to obey an order directing him to loan funds in his hands, in the absence of any good reason shown for such failure, justifies a charge against him, in his settlement, of an amount equal to the interest he would have received, if he had obeyed the order of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Receivers, Cent. Dig. § 189; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

5. RECEIVERS (§ 199*)—SETTLEMENT OF ACCOUNTS—UNDISPUTED CLAIM OF RECEIVER—ALLOWANCE.

It is not error to allow a special receiver a claim, presented after the report of the commissioner, settling his accounts, has been acted upon by the court, but before entry of the decree; the validity of the claim being undisputed, or proved beyond question, and a satisfactory excuse given for not having presented it before the commissioner's report was made up.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1054*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF IMPROPER TESTIMONY.

Admission of improper testimony by a commissioner in chancery, returned with his report, is not cause for reversal of a decree, if the appellate court finds sufficient admissible evidence to sustain the finding of the commissioner and the trial court, as to the item to which the inadmissible evidence relates.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 4185, 4186; Dec. Dig. § 1054.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Summers County.

Bills by W. P. Cecil and others, and by J. R. Hall and others, against E. W. Clark and others. From an allowance of certain attorney's fees, W. H. H. Allen and others appeal. Reversed in part, modified in part, and affirmed.

R. F. Dunlap, for appellants. Price, Smith, Spilman & Clay, for appellee Geo. E. Price, Sp. Receiver.

POFFENBARGER, J. On the settlement of the accounts of Geo. E. Price, special receiver of the circuit court of Summers county, in the chancery cause of Cecil et al. v. Clark et al. (the decision of an appeal in which is reported in 44 W. Va. 659, 30 S. E. 216, where the general nature of the case can be ascertained), respecting a certain fund accumulated in his hands to the credit of divers persons, adjudicated in said cause to be the owners of a share or portion of the Henley Chapman land, known in some of the proceedings in said cause as the A. A. Chapman interest, questions arose concerning an attorney's fee, interest on a part of the fund, and commissions and other allowances to the receiver, resulting in this appeal.

The attorney's fee of $1,000, paid to the late Wesley Mollohan by the receiver, without an order of the court authorizing him to do so, was allowed to him as a proper credit in his settlement, both by the commissioner to whom the court referred the matter for inquiry, finding, and report, and the court itself, overruling an exception to the commissioner's report. Though Mr. Mollohan rendered the service for which he charged and collected the fee, the allowance thereof to the receiver is resisted by the appellants on the theory or ground of nonemployment by them. Admittedly recipients of the benefit of the services in common with others, they deny liability for the fee. This service was rendered, not in the cause above named, but in a contest in the federal courts between the heirs of A. A. Chapman and the appellants and others similarly situated, who purchased the A. A. Chapman interest in the Henley Chapman lands involved in the main cause, at a judicial sale thereof under a decree of the United States Circuit Court, in a creditor's suit against A. A. Chapman or his heirs.

That purchase was made while the other and principal cause was pending. One W. H. H. Allen was induced by some of the A. A. Chapman heirs to become the purchaser at the price of $2,850. At or about the same time, an agreement was entered into, by which Allen bound himself to pay the firm of Price, Flournoy & Couch 25 per cent. of what should be realized from the purchase, after refunding to Allen his purchase money, in consideration of their conducting "all legal proceedings and litigation in the matter of said purchase and title to said lands, and especially the Flat Top Coal Company suit" then "pending as to said lands, and to render their services through the different courts until there" should be "a final decree as to said title." Then there was an agreement by which Allen was to divide the remaining three-fourths equally with Wm. A. and Geo. B. Wade.

There was a decree in the main suit in favor of the Chapman heirs. Allen, purchaser of an interest therein as aforesaid, filed his petition in that suit, and had that interest decreed to him. The appeal of the trustees of the Flat Top Coal Land Association, disposed of in 44 W. Va. 659, 30 S. E. 216, endangered all these interests, as this court at first reversed the decree, and so denied the Chapman heirs any interest in the land. In view of this peril, Mr. Mollohan was employed on a contingent fee of $3,000, of which $1,000 was to be paid by Allen and his associates, to assist in obtaining a rehearing. The rehearing was granted, and the decree affirmed. But there was further trouble. Part of the heirs of A. A. Chapman then filed a bill of review in the United States Circuit Court, to reverse and annul the decree of sale under which Allen had purchased, and also a petition in the circuit court of Summers county, denying the validity of that purchase. Mr. Mollohan went right on into the successful defense of the bill of review and petition of the Chapman heirs against Allen, separate and distinct matters from that in which he was first employed. The disputed fee is for this service. As to the other $1,000, paid in the spring of 1903, there was no controversy.

This allowance is opposed by Allen and the two Wades, who deny all knowledge of intent or purpose upon the part of Mr. Mollohan to make any charge for this service against their interest in the fund. Their contention is that the firm of Price, Flournoy & Couch, which later became Price, Flournoy & Smith, if anybody, employed Mr. Mollohan, and ought to pay him out of their share of the fund. In support of this position, they invoke the terms of the original contract, binding said firm to conduct all legal proceedings and litigation concerning the title, and render their services in respect thereto through the different courts to a final decree. Opposed to this is the testimony of Mr. Mollohan to an express verbal agreement with Wade for a contingent fee out of the common fund of not less than $1,000 for his services in the Chapman heirs suit in the federal court. Those heirs, it will be remembered, attacked that sale in two ways and by two proceedings at the same time—by a bill of review in the federal court, and a petition in the state circuit court. Mr. Mollohan says Wade conferred with him as to the place and best method of defense, and was advised that the safer course was to make it to the bill of review in the federal court. This conversation, as well as the service to which it related, was subsequent to the rendition of service by Mr. Mollohan under his first contract. Mr. Wade makes no specific denial of this conversation, but says in a general way he never had any knowledge of the character of the arrangement made with Mr. Mollohan by Price and Flournoy, and was never asked to give his consent to the payment of a second fee until December, 1904. A copy of what purports to be a letter written by Mr. Flournoy to Wade, November 23, 1903, giving such notice, was put in evidence, but the latter denies receipt of it. A memorandum prepared by Mr. Flournoy, and relating to the distribution of the fund or a portion of it, indicates his understanding that such charge was to be made. Mr. Flournoy being dead, this memorandum was put in evidence as bearing upon the question. A letter from W. C. Clephane, attorney for Allen, is relied upon as evidence of notice to the latter of purpose to make the charge. That letter acknowledges receipt of one from Mr. Flournoy, requesting a copy of an agreement between Allen and the Wades, and then adds: "Mr. Allen thoroughly understands the agreement with regard to the retention of Mr. Mollohan, and acquiesces in it." This letter bears date January 19, 1903. Shortly after that date (some time in March, 1903), a distribution of some of the funds realized from the litigation was made, and Mr. Mollohan had not then been paid his first fee. According to the testimony of Wade and Price, that fee was paid in the spring of 1903; Wade saying "in the spring of 1903," and Price "early in 1903." Evidently this correspondence took place in view of the distribution of funds about to be made, and, as Mr. Mollohan's first fee had not then been paid, his retention, referred to, was probably the first one. Hence we do not regard this letter as one clearly importing agreement to the second employment of Mr. Mollohan.

We think Mr. Wade's denial is too general to be considered a response to, or anticipation of, the testimony of Mr. Mollohan. He does not deny having met Mr. Mollohan and consulted him at Hinton. Nor does he deny knowledge of Mr. Mollohan's services in the federal court suit. Correspondence in evidence shows that W. A. Wade, interested as a party, kept close track of the litigation, and had knowledge of what was done. It also shows that Walter C. Clephane, attorney for Mr. Allen, kept himself advised of the proceedings. Mr. Wade, according to the testimony of Mr. Mollohan and Mr. Price, was at Hinton and other places while Mr. Mollohan was engaged in the defense of the suits of the Chapman heirs against Allen and his associates, and this is undenied.

[1] We have no doubt that these parties had knowledge of Mr. Mollohan's services for them in these collateral and subsequent proceedings, constituting a serious menace to the claimants of the A. A. Chapman interests in the land, and willingly accepted the benefit thereof. From the decree of the federal circuit court against them, they appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals at Richmond. It would be too much to assume that Allen and the Wades, interested in a fund of several thousand dollars, were oblivious to the proceedings in that suit, or did not know who was conducting them. They had no agreement or assurance from Mr. Mollohan that his services were gratis, or performed without expectation of reward out of their share of the fund at stake. Their acceptance of his services, under such circumstances, without such an agreement or understanding, or notice of their unwillingness to pay him, bound them in law to compensate him. Against this legal view, they invoke and rely upon the terms of the agreement between themselves and the firm of Price, Flournoy & Couch, and also the terms of the first employment of Mr. Mollohan, which they argue covered his services in these collateral proceedings, as well as in the main case. We do not regard the contract with Price, Flournoy & Couch as imposing upon them any obligation beyond the rendition of their own services in the litigation. Nowhere does it say they shall bear the expenses of that litigation. Their fee was not contingent, otherwise than that it should be paid out of such fund as might be recovered, and not by Allen and the Wades personally. They agreed to conduct the proceedings and litigation, but not to employ additional counsel at their own expense, in case of necessity therefor. Not a word in the agreement imports any such obligation. Moreover, when it became necessary to employ additional counsel on the occasion of a crisis in the progress of the litigation, the owners of the four parts of the A. A. Chapman interests employed Mr. Mollohan, at their joint expense contingently, not at the expense of Price, Flournoy & Couch. His contingent fee was to come out of the whole fund, not out of the part going to the law firm. This amounts to a practical construction of the contract, consistent with the view here expressed, and inconsistent with the contention of the appellants. At the time of Allen's purchase, which antedated this first employment of Mr. Mollohan, somebody gave a warning of defects in the title. The appellants say this was done by the Chapman heirs; wherefore it must have been understood that Mr. Mollohan's employment covered the litigation commenced by them. It suffices to say it does not appear that Mr. Mollohan knew anything of that, since it occurred long before he was employed. Mr. Price swears that warning was given by the Flat Top Coal Land Association, and not by the Chapman heirs.

[2] Mr. Wade admits that, in the employment of Mr. Mollohan on the first occasion, he represented himself, his brother, George

Wade, and Mr. Allen. The acquiescence of his two associates in this employment by him was a representation by them of his agency for them in matters of that kind. Hence Mr. Mollohan had the right to rely upon his assurance, for and on behalf of himself and his associates, of an additional contingent fee of $1,000. Thus they come into contact with the law of estoppel. Upon such of the testimony as is clearly admissible, and the facts and circumstances, considered in the light of legal principles, our conclusion is that the allowance of this fee was proper. Payment of it without an order was technically wrong, but not destructive of the right.

[3] The commissioner disallowed the receiver's claim of commissions on funds in his hands. Sustaining an exception to this finding, the circuit court allowed him 3 per cent. on $12,227.18, the aggregate of the first four collections made, which were distinguishable in some respects from the funds subsequently received, and 5 per cent. upon the royalties received later, amounting to $233.12. He was also allowed a commission of 5 per cent. on interest collected on funds loaned out by him in obedience to the decrees of the court, amounting to $2,029.76. The aggregate of these amounts is $701.42. There went into Mr. Price's hands large sums of money belonging to other heirs of Henley Chapman. This was distributed to the parties entitled soon after it came into the hands of the receiver. In his testimony, Mr. Price says he took no commission on the funds going to the Chapman heirs, other than those representing the A. A. Chapman interest or share, and, by way of explanation, that these funds occasioned him no trouble, and imposed upon him but slight responsibility, as they were paid out very soon after the receipt thereof, and had been paid into a bank to his credit. On this point, his testimony is as follows: "By some tacit, if not expressed, understanding, no commission was allowed me in the distribution of the funds received under the decrees of January 27, 1899, and October 26, 1900, set forth in my first report, which was confirmed by the court, and which was filed September 9, 1902. These funds were really never handled by me in any way, except that they were paid into bank, immediately checked out, and the distribution of them was comparatively simple, as Judge Strothers at that time received the checks for nearly all of the parties in interest, and disbursed them himself; but it will be noticed that the A. A. Chapman interest in these funds was left in my hands, because of the pending litigation with reference to it, and I was required to loan it out, and I did so." This is relied upon as evidence of an agreement, contemporaneous with his appointment, to serve as receiver without compensation. It does not sustain that view. Manifestly it was subsequent, and imports only a concession or relinquishment of compensation, founded upon facts and circumstances showing lack of responsibility, care, and trouble, relating to that portion of the fund. We find no evidence of a prior agreement for gratuitous service as receiver. Mr. Price had an interest in the fund through his firm, and sustained a friendly relation toward the appellants as their counsel and cotenant in the land involved in the litigation, and realized large returns from it, circumstances which might have induced him to serve without compensation, had they been urged upon him in that connection, but no such agreement is shown. His allowances come out of the gross fund, so that his associates are not thereby charged a commission for handling his own share. In other words, he bears this burden pro rata with them. In these circumstances, we see no denial of discretionary power in the trial court to allow him commissions, nor any abuse of discretion in the rate of commission allowed. The commissioner based his disallowance of commissions partly upon the untenable view of obligation imposed by the contract of employment to collect and pay over as attorney the money recovered. Exigencies of the case made necessary a receivership, not at all included in the employment as attorney, and probably not contemplated. The fund would have gone into the hands of the general receiver of the court, or some other person as special receiver, had not Mr. Price been appointed.

The amount of the allowance is challenged, upon the theory of a double charge upon about $3,000 of the royalties. Certain statements in Price's deposition constitute the basis of this. He said that in the distribution of royalties, covering the period of 1902 and 1903, commissions had been allowed him on the royalties received and disbursed; that these commissions were taken from the whole fund; that in some instances he had charged these commissions again in the statement accompanying his last report; that this mistake should be corrected; and that no commissions had been allowed him on any of the items from the fourth quarter of 1903 to the second quarter of 1905, prior to the date of his deposition. In another part of his testimony, he says the amounts charged from July, 1900, to and including the third quarter of 1903, are the amounts received after the commission had been taken out. For some reason undisclosed, the court, in reforming the commissioner's report, took no notice of this admission, treated the net charges as gross charges, and allowed commission thereon. Of course this is an erroneous allowance, and amounts to $181.20.

[4] Though ordered by the court to loan out the funds in his hands to the credit of the owners of the A. A. Chapman interest, the receiver retained, unloaned for a period of about two years, the sum of $3,854.98, part of the amount. The commissioner charged him with 5 per cent. interest on this sum for that time, amounting to $385.50. On an exception to this charge, the court struck it out and modified the report to that extent. The receiver makes no satisfactory explanation of his failure to loan said sum. Having admitted such failure, he says, "At that time, there was difficulty in loaning funds on call, and I did the best I could with it, and have accounted for whatever interest was received." Having in his hands in 1903 about $13,470, which had been loaned, and was bearing interest, he disbursed the sum of $5,388.30 under an order of the court, part of which might have been paid with the idle money above mentioned. Instead of doing that, he collected enough of the money he had loaned to make that disbursement. He does not say the borrower would not have retained the money then collected, so as to enable him to use the idle money; nor does he show any special effort to loan the latter. On the whole, we think his explanation is insufficient, and does not sustain the action of the court in striking out this charge for interest. Under such circumstances, a receiver is liable for interest. Roller v. Paul, 106 Va. 214, 55 S. E. 558; Hooper v. Winston, 24 Ill. 353; Rosenthal v. McGraw, 138 Fed. 721, 71 C. C. A. 277; High, Rec. § 804; Beach, Rec. (2d Ed.) § 757.

[5] After the court had heard and passed upon these and other contentions raised upon the commissioner's report by exceptions, but before the entry of the decree complained of, the receiver discovered an item of $116.82, a payment by check to W. A. Wade, attorney for himself, George B. Wade and Allen, which is not in any way disputed, and which he had neglected by oversight to present to the commissioner. The allowance of this was resisted upon the technical ground that it had been presented too late. It was a credit to which, but for this technical objection, the receiver was admittedly entitled. The court still had the cause within its jurisdiction, with power to do substantial justice between the parties. Upon sufficient cause shown, it could have set aside its decree, had it been actually entered, and recommitted the cause to its commissioner. We have no doubt about the propriety of the allowance of this item.

[6] Refusal of the court to pass upon certain exceptions to testimony, relating to the Mollohan attorney's fee, brought to its attention after the hearing and decision, but before entry of the decree, is assigned as error. Assuming the inadmissibility of some of this testimony, without actually deciding it, we may say the mere admission of it constitutes no cause for reversal of the decree, since the court, unlike a jury, may exclude from consideration such evidence found in the record in arriving at its findings, without formally noting such exclusion. In view of this, the appellate court goes no further than to see whether the competent evidence sustains the finding of the trial court. Part of the evidence excepted to may have been inadmissible, but, as we think the allowance of the attorney's fee is sustained by admissible and competent evidence, such as Mr. Mollohan's conversation with W. A. Wade, and the facts and circumstances adverted to in the disposition of the assignment of error, based upon the allowance of that claim, we consider it unnecessary to pass upon the admissibility of the balance of the evidence, or the action of the court in refusing to consider the exceptions.

For the reasons stated, the decree complained of is reversed and set aside, in so far as it sustained the receiver's first exception to the report of the commissioner, and modified, in so far as it sustains the special receiver's second exception to that report, by deducting, from the allowance of commissions to him, the sum of $181.20. The report of the commissioner, as reformed and confirmed by said decree, will also be corrected by charging said receiver with an additional sum of $385.50, on account of interest which he should have acquired by loaning out said sum of $3,854.98, and by deducting from the commissions allowed the said sum of $181.20, allowing him commission on said sum of $385.50, amounting to $19.28, increasing the total fund in his hands by the sum of $547.42, and charging him interest at 6 per cent. on $410.56, three-fourths of the sum so added, belonging to Allen and the Wades, from February 14, 1905, until December 14, 1906, amounting to $45.16, which two sums, together with $88.90 decreed by the court to Allen and the Wades, make a total of $544.62, and, as so modified and corrected, the commissioner's report will be confirmed, and a decree entered, requiring the receiver to pay to W. H. H. Allen, W. A. Wade, and Geo. B. Wade, or their attorney, said sum of $544.62, with interest thereon from December 14, 1906, together with costs in this court and costs in the court below, as provided in the decree appealed from.

DUNCAN v. DUNCAN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 31, 1911.)

DIVORCE (§§ 129, 133*)—DESERTION—ADULTERY—EVIDENCE.

On a bill by a husband seeking a divorce a mensa et thoro on the ground of desertion, and an answer and cross-bill by defendant, admitting desertion, but charging adultery in justification thereof, and as a ground also for a divorce a vinculo matrimonii prayed for, the facts proven show desertion by the wife, but not adultery by the husband, entitling him to the relief prayed for, and precluding her from a divorce from the bonds of matrimony.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. §§ 129, 133.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Ohio County. Bill by Charles H. Duncan against Sarah Duncan. Bill and cross-bill dismissed, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

J. J. Coniff, for appellant. Handlan & Reymann, for appellee.

MILLER, J. In a suit for divorce a mensa et thoro, brought by plaintiff, the husband, against defendant, the wife, on the ground of desertion, and on her answer and cross-bill seeking a divorce a vinculo matrimonii, for alleged adultery of plaintiff, the opinion and decree below was that plaintiff had not clearly proven his allegations, and should take nothing, and that his bill be dismissed, and that the allegations of defendant's answer and cross-bill had not been clearly proven, and that she should take nothing thereby, and that her said cross-bill be also dismissed.

Plaintiff has appealed, and defendant has assigned cross-error in this court. The record is voluminous, and includes the depositions of numerous witnesses. There is no conflict in the evidence as to the fact of desertion by defendant. Not only is it distinctly charged in the bill, and admitted in the answer, but it is fully proven by numerous witnesses, including the father and mother of defendant, with whom she and plaintiff resided from the date of their marriage in November, 1896, until August, 1906, when she deserted him, with the declared purpose never to again return as his wife. She first went to Clarksburg, where her brother resided, the plaintiff following her on the same train as far as Grafton, in an effort to induce her to return. This she declined to do. Plaintiff sent his mother-in-law to Clarksburg, there, to try and induce her daughter to return, and before she died, pending this suit, she testified on behalf of plaintiff, that with pleadings and tears she had endeavored, without avail, to get her daughter to go back home to her husband. Defendant did, however, that same evening, follow her mother back to Wheeling, going directly to the home of her aunt, Mrs. Taylor, and the following evening, in company with a Mrs. Brannen, left for Reno, Nevada. Learning of her departure, plaintiff, at his own expense, sent his sister-in-law, the wife of defendant's brother, who resided at Clarksburg, out to Reno, to again try to induce his wife to return to him. This effort also resulted in failure. Later, in November following, plaintiff wrote defendant, at Reno, urging her to return, proposing any fair terms, and inquiring on what terms she would be willing to come back to him. To this letter she replied, December 6, 1906, in a very characteristic way, that she would return on the following conditions, namely, that he would furnish and maintain for her a home in town; that she should have the privilege of going and coming, when, where, and with whomsoever she pleased, with right to entertain whomsoever she desired, and that her actions were not to be criticised, or questioned either by him or by any one else; that her rulings regarding Dorothy, the little daughter, should be supreme; that the relationship of husband and wife should not exist, except in name only; that she should have her own room, and that there should be no trespassing therein, unless invited, and that she should be clothed and furnished with spending money consistent with her station in life; and after chiding him for alleged disrespect, she adds: "For Dorothy's sake, I am willing to make what I consider a sacrifice and return under conditions above named, provided you forward me five hundred dollars, ($500.00) with which to pay indebtedness and expenses to Wheeling."

Plaintiff did not accept this proposition. In January, 1907, however, defendant returned to Wheeling. Plaintiff first learned of her return by telephone message from his father-in-law, Mr. John Mendel, received at his place of business, saying that Mrs. Duncan had returned, and had gone to the school house, and taken Dorothy from school. On going out on the street he met Mrs. Duncan with the little girl, in company with a Miss Beall, coming down the street. He crossed the street and greeted her, took hold of the little girl's hand, and accompanied both to the house of Mrs. Taylor, the aunt, where he remained until evening. He says that after sending the child out of the room, he again tried to persuade Mrs. Duncan to return to his home, and again inquired of her as to the conditions on which she would be willing to go back and live with him. Her answer was, that he had her only terms in the letter she had written him from Reno. He told her that he could not accept those terms. After leaving her he procured his mother-in-law to go and see defendant, and to try to induce her to return, but she did not succeed. Mrs. Duncan remained obdurate. Later he sent his father-in-law, and the chief of police after the little girl, who got and took her to his home. Afterwards he brought this suit.

We think these and other facts proven, clearly establish desertion. If not, it would be difficult to make out a case of that kind.

But the rights of the parties then must be determined on the truth or falsity of defendant's charges of adultery, as showing good cause for desertion; and as grounds for the affirmative relief she seeks against plaintiff. She charges: First, that some time prior to August 26, 1906, and particularly about three months prior thereto, she received information of the misconduct and misdoings of plaintiff, but of which she had never heard the full particulars and details, until on August 24, 1906, when in her presence, he was accused thereof by Ida Brannen; that some three or four years prior to that time she had received information from her mother that disease, which he could not have contracted, except by adulterous conduct, her mother, as she alleges, then giving her, what seemed to be conclusive proof thereof, but of which she was not then satisfied; that some three months prior to August 26, 1906, she had learned that said charges were true, and that he was then not only suffering from that disease himself, but had communicated it to her, and from which she had suffered for a long time without knowing the cause, and had required the treatment of a physician; second, on information received prior and subsequent to said date, she charges that plaintiff, after his marriage, had been guilty of adultery with Florence Dilworth, and other women unknown to defendant, and that during the same period he had frequented houses of prostitution, and had conducted himself in grossly immoral and indecent manner on many occasions.

These are all the specific charges made by defendant in her answer; but without amendment of her pleadings she undertook to prove by Stella Fendt, a common prostitute, that in 1903, plaintiff had on several occasions been guilty of adultery with her while she was employed in plaintiff's laundry; and by Sue Ingham, another prostitute, and proprietress of a house of ill fame, she proved that since the institution of this suit plaintiff, on two different occasions, had been guilty of adultery with her. Her evidence was objected to, because relating to alleged transactions occurring subsequent to the suit. However, she fixes the time after she had been confined in a hospital with typhoid fever, and had returned home. She was almost positive that the first time was in April, 1908; later she swears it was in April. The next time she fixes about a month later, in May. The Fendt girl, who had been employed in another laundry before she was employed by plaintiff, says, that the first instance with her was at night, in plaintiff's laundry; the next time at an assignation house in Wheeling, to which plaintiff took her.

An effort was also made to convict plaintiff of improper relations with other female employees. This was a signal failure, for want of proof. The Fendt girl swore that plaintiff had had such relations with nearly all of his female help. The only one specifically mentioned was a young woman whose father had died, and whom plaintiff was seen taking to an undertaking establishment one day in his buggy. No proof was offered connecting him with any improper conduct with Miss Dilworth, as charged in defendant's answer.

Defendant is flatly contradicted by her mother, as to the alleged information obtained from her. She denies that she ever gave her any such information, or that it in fact existed. Both father and mother attest the good character and habits of plaintiff, and his kindness and devotion to his family and to them. The Fendt woman is flatly contradicted not only by plaintiff himself, but by many corroborating facts and circumstances; also by the evidence of another female employee who swears that she worked with Miss Fendt, and that when the latter worked at night she worked with her, and went away with her; and the foreman and the time-book kept by him, showing extra time made by these two women, corroborate these witnesses. A young lady bookkeeper employed by plaintiff gives strong, direct and corroborating evidence contradictory of the story of the Fendt girl. An affidavit made by Miss Fendt at the instance of defendant's counsel, before her evidence was taken, is in conflict with her testimony on the witness stand, in some important particulars. Plaintiff swears that after his foreman had discharged Miss Fendt, she appealed to him to get her reinstated, and that when he declined, she told him, with an oath, that she would get even with him. She does not deny this. This fact is relied on to show motive on the part of this woman to swear falsely.

Respecting the Ingham woman, her testimony stands wholly unsupported. Plaintiff had some trouble with her about a laundry bill. He flatly contradicts her, and she is also contradicted by the driver of plaintiff's laundry wagon, who swears that he accompanied plaintiff on each visit to her house, to see her about the bill, and that at no time was plaintiff out of his plain sight while in the witness' house. Both swear that plaintiff requested the driver to follow him into the house, and not to allow him to get out of his sight, that because of the trouble he was then having with his wife, he feared he might be, as he has been, charged with improper conduct with this woman. Another fact stipulated by counsel, tending strongly to contradict this woman, and shown by the hospital records is, that she went into the hospital March 23, 1908, and did not leave until May 2nd, so that plaintiff could not have had his first intercourse with her, as she swears, in April of that year.

The strongest evidence in support of the defendant's cross-bill, is that of Dr. Plant. His testimony was objected to, on the ground of his professional relationship to plaintiff. He seems to have given his testimony willingly, regardless of the objection. Plaintiff swears he discharged him from service, and afterwards had some trouble with him in connection with one Johnson, at his laundry. Dr. Plant's testimony in substance is, that in the fall of 1903, correcting himself he said, in the summer of 1903, he was called to see the plaintiff, and found him suffering from a catarrhal condition of the sexual organ, which he pronounced gonorrhœa, and that upon a microscopic test, he found the germ gonococcus in this discharge; that he also found evidences that the plaintiff had been previously treated for the same disease. He also swears that two or three weeks after this he was called to see Mrs. Duncan, professionally, and that he also found her suffering with an inflammatory condition of the uterus, ovaries and fallopian tubes, and the presence of gonococcus in her vaginal discharges; that he informed plaintiff of these facts, and that upon his advice arrangements were made to take her to the hospital, for an operation. Plaintiff, while admitting that Dr. Plant was called by him, and afterwards by his wife in this professional way, yet he swears that he stoutly protested at the time against the diagnosis of Dr. Plant. He says that he had never in any way subjected himself to the dangers of such disease, and that he had not communicated it to his wife. He admits that, urged by Dr. Plant to do so, he had gone with him to the hospital and looked at a room, which would be satisfactory in case an operation was found necessary, but that on that occasion he had distinctly told the doctor he would not permit his wife to go to the hospital for such operation, without the consultation and advice of one or more other physicians, that an operation was in fact necessary. He then or soon afterwards demanded of Dr. Plant his bill for services rendered, and called Dr. Frank L. Hupp, a reputable physician, who made an examination of plaintiff's wife, and who pronounced the discharge not gonorrhœa, but leucorrhœa, with which he testified most women suffer, more or less, after childbirth, and with which plaintiff testifies his wife had suffered ever since the birth of her child, Dorothy. On the advice of Dr. Hupp Mrs. Duncan got out of bed, went about her duties, took treatment from him, and while Dr. Plant gives it as his opinion that she is still afflicted with gonorrhœa, Mrs. Duncan herself does not pretend to be seriously afflicted in any way. She continued thereafter to reside with her husband, until she broke off her marital relations, as alleged, in August or September, 1906. And it must not be forgotten, that the defendant charges in her cross-bill, that her mother, some three years previous, had given her information which amounted to conclusive proof, that plaintiff was then suffering with a venereal disease. After getting this information she continued to live and to cohabit with him as his wife, without complaint, so far as the record shows.

Respecting the opinion of Dr. Plant, as to the nature of his malady, plaintiff further swears, that a day or two after Dr. Plant had expressed his opinion, he called Dr. N. D. Jobes, who, after an examination, gave it as his opinion that the plaintiff did not have gonorrhœa, but that his trouble was the temporary result of injuries received shortly prior to that time, from the falling of a box upon his back, evidenced by severe bruises, which he found there, and which yielded readily to external treatment, prescribed by Dr. Jobes; that within a week's time the trouble was gone, and that he has not from that day forward suffered from that or any like malady. Dr. Jobes, as a witness for the plaintiff, fully corroborates him. He did not make a microscopic examination, as Dr. Plant professes to have done, but states it as his opinion, after an examination of the discharge, and from the manner in which it yielded to treatment, that the plaintiff was not afflicted as Dr. Plant had advised.

There is much evidence of other witnesses, pertaining to the conduct of plaintiff and defendant, and reflecting their relationship to each other, and more or less pertinent, but which it is impossible to detail in a judicial opinion, and we are satisfied, as was the court below, that the defendant's charges against her husband are not sustained, and that her cross-bill was properly dismissed.

Another circumstance, not heretofore mentioned, has impressed us, that is, that the immediate cause of defendant's breaking off matrimonial relations, with plaintiff, and deserting him, does not seem to have been his alleged infidelity, of which she says she had obtained information by her mother months before, amounting to conclusive proof. The immediate occasion of her going away was the objection her husband, and her father and mother all interposed, the night before she left, to her going off with young unmarried men, in company with Mrs. Brannen, to a fishing club, in an out of the way place, and returning with them late at night. After Mrs. Brannen had left, to use the defendant's own language, "Mr. Duncan and I went upstairs, and he was still scolding quite a good deal, and I told him that things now were all over between us; that I never intended to live with him again as his wife, and would leave the next morning." In this conversation, she does say that Mrs. Brannen accused the plaintiff of being untrue to her, to which he replied that she was "talking about things she didn't know anything about," but that as he did not more specifically deny Mrs. Brannen's accusations, she interpreted what he did say to be an admission of its truth. This Mrs. Brannen, who is a cousin of defendant, and the woman with whom she traveled to Reno a few days afterward, was not examined as a witness on either side. The evidence convinces us that this woman was the disturbing element in this family. It was from her home, in Reno, that defendant made her declaration of independence, in her letter to her husband of December 6, 1906.

We are very reluctant to disturb the decree of the court below in a divorce proceeding, and particularly so, coming as this one does from the hands of so able and painstaking judges, as those of the circuit court of Ohio County; but we have a duty to perform as well as they. The plaintiff sought relief on the ground of desertion. Desertion is admitted and fully proven. It was incumbent upon the defendant, if she would defeat the plaintiff, or sustain her grounds of cross relief, to prove her charges of infidelity. This the decree below says she did not successfully do. On the evidence, we are of the same opinion. If then the plaintiff has proved his case, and the defendant has failed in the proof of her allegations against him, we do not see how we can withhold from him the relief prayed for. We must look at this case as we do at all other civil causes. We must determine the rights of the parties in the same way, based on the pleadings and proofs, giving them their full legal force and effect. We do not see how we can justly deny plaintiff relief.

No legal propositions have been argued or presented for decision. The case involves no new legal principles. Our conclusion is to reverse the decree below, in so far as it denies plaintiff relief and dismisses his bill; and to enter such decree here as we think the circuit court should have entered, adjudging the plaintiff entitled to the relief prayed for, and that plaintiff and defendant be divorced a mensa et thoro, as prayed for in his bill.

PERRY et al. v. McDONALD et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 31, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. QUIETING TITLE (§ 1*)—WHEN SUIT IS MAINTAINABLE.

The holder of the true superior title to land which is in his actual possession may maintain a suit in equity to remove from his title the cloud of a claim by another under an inferior title.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Quieting Title, Cent. Dig. §§ 1, 2; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

2. QUIETING TITLE (§ 12*)—JURISDICTION—POSSESSION.

That the possession relied on by a plaintiff in a suit to remove cloud was taken in the night time, or for the purpose of bringing suit, when no prior exclusive possession was disturbed or tortious act committed, will not deprive equity of jurisdiction.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Summers County.

Bill by Mary A. Perry and others against George R. McDonald and others. Decree for plaintiffs, and defendant McDonald appeals. Affirmed.

Chasfin & Bland and Vinson & Thompson, for appellant. Ragland & Greene and Campbell, Brown & Davis, for appellees.

ROBINSON, J. In this suit for the removal of cloud from title to land, the bill sets up a superior title in plaintiffs as against an inferior one in defendant and alleges that plaintiffs are in actual possession. On the hearing of the cause, from the pleadings and proofs, the court granted plaintiffs the relief sought. The decree in their behalf is, by defendant's appeal, challenged as erroneous.

There is no merit in the assignment that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the bill. Defendant argues that the bill does not aver that the title of the party whose superior deed is relied on by plaintiffs is now vested in them. This point is not well taken. The bill sufficiently shows that plaintiffs are the heirs of the grantee in this deed, and that the title is now in them by descent.

[1] Defendant further contends that no such suit as this one can be maintained. That a party in actual possession of land may, by a suit in equity, remove a cloud from his title is too well settled to be discussed here. "One in actual possession of land under superior title may go into a court of equity to remove the cloud over his title arising from a claim under color of title thereto by another under an inferior adverse title." Whitehouse v. Jones, 60 W. Va. 680, 55 S. E. 730, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49.

[2] The mere fact that plaintiffs went into possession of the land in the night time cannot defeat their right to rely upon that possession as a basis of this suit. The act was not unlawful or tortious. Defendant has not shown that he was in absolute possession at that time. The only possession on his part prior to the entry of plaintiffs was by occasional acts of taking a little coal and cutting timber therefrom, throughout a great number of years. He exercised no exclusive possession. The land was open. It had not been taken in by the enclosure of defendant or by actual, exclusive and continuous occupancy on his part. Entry thereon could be made without ousting him; for he was not in complete possession himself. Under such circumstances it cannot be said that the entry of plaintiffs was forcible, tortious, fraudulent, or unlawful. It is true that the possession which gives jurisdiction in suits to quiet title must be such as was acquired in a legal way, and that possession wrongfully obtained by force or fraud will not suffice. 32 Cyc. 1341. The facts presented in the case before us, however, plainly do not show a violation of that principle. They do not show a wresting of the possession from defendant. An exclusive prior possession was not disturbed, and tortious acts were not committed. It is immaterial that possession may have been taken for the purpose of instituting suit. Kraus v. Congdon, 161 Fed. 18, 88 C. C. A. 182; Apperson v. Allen, 42 Mo. App. 537.

Plaintiffs proved that they were in actual possession of the land and that they were the legal owners thereof by a title superior to that under which defendant claimed. The decree asserting their title and annulling defendant's deed is a rightful one, and, therefore, will be affirmed.

FRENCH v. BENNETT, Judge, et al.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 31, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MANDAMUS (§ 81*)—TO COURTS—REFUSAL TO TAKE JURISDICTION.

If an inferior court refuse to take and exercise jurisdiction of a case, when by law it has jurisdiction, mandamus will be awarded to compel it to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mandamus, Cent. Dig. §§ 74, 75; Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

2. ELECTIONS (§ 275*)—CONTEST—JURISDICTION—COUNTY COURTS.

The county court of Fayette county has jurisdiction of a contest for the office of judge of the criminal court of that county, and the circuit court of that county has jurisdiction of an appeal therein.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Elections, Dec. Dig. § 275.*]

Petition by Edmund R. French for writ of mandamus against W. R. Bennett, Judge, and others. Writ awarded.

W. E. R. Byrne and C. R. Summerfield, for petitioner. Dillon & Nuckolls, for respondents.

BRANNON, J. At the general election in November, 1910, John T. Simms was the Republican candidate for judge of the criminal court of Fayette county, and Edmund R. French was the Democratic and Independent Republican candidate. On the face of the returns French was elected, and on a recount of the ballots Simms was declared elected. French then instituted a contest in the county court, which sustained a demurrer and a motion to quash the petition and notice filed by French, and dismissed them on the ground that the office of judge of said criminal court was a state office and the county court had no jurisdiction. French appealed to the circuit court. The circuit court sustained a demurrer to the petition and notice of contest, stating in its order that its action was upon the ground that the office of judge of the criminal court of Fayette county is a state and not a county office. Thus it held that the court had no jurisdiction, and refused to proceed further and hear the merits of the contest. French has applied to this court for a writ of mandamus to require the circuit court to entertain jurisdiction of said appeal and proceed to hear and determine it.

[1] The first question is whether mandamus is the proper remedy. For Simms a volume of authority and argument is presented for the claim that a writ of error is the proper remedy, and that mandamus does not lie. It has over and over been held that mandamus does lie where the inferior court refuses to take jurisdiction where by law it ought to do so. Roberts v. Paul, 50 W. Va. 528, 40 S. E. 470. True, a writ of error would lie in the case, but that does not exclude mandamus in a case where the inferior court refuses wholly to entertain the case on the claim of want of jurisdiction. National Bank v. Burdette, 71 S. E. 399; King v. Mason, 60 W. Va. 607, 56 S. E. 377. In order to shut out mandamus, the other remedy must be adequate under the circumstances of the particular case, as these cases hold. If we drive French to a writ of error we would have the delay of going through this court, and pending his writ of error the whole or material part of the term of four years would expire, and if he reversed the case he would have to go back to the circuit court and try the merits. If the term should run out pending his writ of error, it would be dismissed as a moot case, or the term may run out during the trial of appeal in the circuit court; whereas, mandamus compels the immediate trial of the appeal. But I repeat that mandamus lies when an inferior court ought to take jurisdiction, but refuses to do so. In such case mandamus speedily starts in motion the obstructed wheels of justice.

[2] Great length of argument by counsel and many authorities bear on the question whether the office of judge of the criminal court is a state or county office. As our Code, in chapter 6, § 3 (section 161), gives the county court jurisdiction for trial of contests for only county and district offices, and section 15 (section 173) provides a special tribunal for contests as to state offices, it is confidently insisted by counsel for Simms that the county court has no jurisdiction for this contest—indeed, that no court has, because it is a state office. We do not deem it material to decide this question. We are satisfied that the county court has jurisdiction to try this contest, and, as it has jurisdiction, the circuit court has jurisdiction of the appeal. The Constitution, in article 4, making general provisions as to elections, in section 11 (Code 1906, p. lix) says: "The Legislature shall prescribe the manner of conducting and making return of election, and of determining contested election." Therefore, it matters not whether an office has the character of a state or county office, a contest for it is regulated by statute, and if we can find a statute giving the county court power to try the contest we have in hand, it plainly has jurisdiction. This power is given by chapter 86, Acts of 1891, creating the criminal court of Fayette county. It provides for the election of a judge. It says: "Poll books for said election shall be prepared by the clerk of the said county court, and by him delivered to the commissioners, or some one of them, appointed to superintend the election on that day; and said election shall be superintended, conducted and returned, and the result thereof ascertained, in all respects as is provided for by law in regard to the election of county officers, and all the provisions of the law in regard to general elections shall, so far as applicable, govern and apply to elections held under the provisions of this chapter; and the result of said election shall be ascertained by the commissioners of the county court of said county, in the same manner as required in elections for county officers held under the general law; and within five days after it is ascertained, the result thereof shall be certified to the Governor, and he shall issue a commission to the person elected." Here we have it broadly provided that the result of such an election shall be ascertained, in all respects, as is provided for by law in regard to the election of county officers, and all the provisions of the law in regard to general elections shall govern and apply to elections under that act. I hold that ascertaining the result of an election includes a contest, since the general law of elections provides, not only for making out precinct returns and ascertaining the result from them and by counting the ballots, but for contests also. I hold that, when there is a contest, the result, the final result, is not ascertained until such contest ends. Its result tests the title of the office. Judgment therein declares the final result. In such case there is no result until the end of the contest. Look at the broad language above quoted from the statute. It says that the election shall be conducted and returned, and the result ascertained, in all respects, as provided by law in regard to the election of county officers, and all the provisions of law in regard to general elections shall apply to an election under this act.

As stated above, the Code provides that the county court shall try contests for county offices. Can we suppose for a moment that when the Legislature passed the act creating the criminal court, and made such broad provisions, saying that an election under it shall be conducted, returned, and the result ascertained in all respects as provided by law for county offices, and not only that, but all the provisions of law in regard to general election should apply, the Legislature did not know that the general law touching elections provided for the trial of contests, and did not intend to apply the law touching contests triable by the county court in such cases? Can we suppose for a moment that it intended to stop with the count of the precinct returns or counting of ballots, and leave contested election unprovided for? This is a remedial statute, and we must not give it a construction which will leave a contestant without a court for the trial of his case; for if section 3 of chapter 6 of the Code, giving jurisdiction to the county court to try contests for county officers does not apply, then there is no tribunal for the trial of this contest, because the provisions of section 15 setting up a special tribunal for the trial of certain contests is limited to Treasurer, Auditor, State Superintendent of Free Schools, Attorney General, Judge of the Supreme Court and judge of a circuit court in its very letter. This would be a casus omissus, and courts in the construction of statutes never—almost never—allow a construction leading to this result. We cannot do so in this case in defiance of the language of the statute from which we have quoted. True, section 1 of chapter 6 does not mention the judge of the criminal court, but it provides contests for "any county or district office"; but the act establishing the criminal court of Fayette county says that the result of an election for its judge shall be ascertained as provided as to the county officers by general law. Thus it incorporates section 3, c. 6, into the act, makes it a part of the act, for the purpose of the act.

To give this act any other construction would be highly detrimental to public interest and administration. If we do not so construe this act, where is there any law for a contest as to an election for judge of the criminal court? To deny such construction would run counter to well-established rules of construction of statutes. In State v. Snyder, 64 W. Va. 660, 63 S. E. 386, we laid down the following principles: "A statute should be so read and applied as to make it accord with the spirit, purposes, and objects of the general system of law of which it is intended to form a part; it being presumed that the legislators who drafted and passed it were familiar with all existing law applicable to the subject-matter, whether constitutional, statutory, or common, and intended the statute to harmonize completely with the same and aid in the effectuation of the general purpose and design thereof, if its terms are consistent therewith." In Hassen v. City of Chester, 67 W. Va. 278, 67 S. E. 731, we find the following rule of construction: "That which is plainly within the spirit, meaning, and purpose of a remedial statute, though not therein expressed in terms, is as much a part of it as if it were so expressed." "Of two permissible constructions of a statute, one working manifest injustice and the other equity and fairness, the latter is to be adopted, upon the presumption that the Legislature did not intend the result flowing from the former."

It is even contended that the comprehensive provisions of the act under consideration are applicable only to the first election under the act. This position is wholly untenable on first view. The first section of the act establishes the court in permanence. The second section provides that on the third Tuesday in May, 1891, and on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1894, and every four years thereafter a judge shall be elected. Is it not preposterous to say that all the provisions of that act ceased after the first election, notwithstanding that it provides for an election every four years? Is a part of the act enduring, and the other not? An election every four years, and no means of conducting it, returning it, and ascertaining its result? Notice in the quotations given above the language is that the general election law shall apply to "elections under the act"—using the plural, "elections." Here is a permanent act, without limit of duration. The only ground for this contention must be that section 4 provides a notice for the first election. That was designed only for the first election. That clause has no other office.

We award the mandamus.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 162*)—PARTICIPATION OF GRANTEE.

To maintain a suit to set aside a deed of trust as one made with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, it must be shown that the trustee or the beneficiary participated in the unlawful intent.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Monroe County.

Bill by F. G. Lobban and others against Ralph H. Ely and others. Decree for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Rowan & Meadows, for appellants. T. N. Read, for appellees.

ROBINSON, J. This suit is one attacking a deed of trust as being in fraud of creditors. There is a decree dismissing plaintiffs' bill. That decree is warranted by the record. We shall affirm it.

To maintain a suit of this character a plaintiff must show by a preponderance of evidence that the trustee or the beneficiary in the deed of trust participated in intent on the part of the grantor to hinder, delay, or defraud his creditors. "In this state the trustee in a deed of trust or assignment made to secure creditors is regarded as a purchaser for value, and in order to make void the deed, notice of the grantor's fraudulent intent must in some way be brought home to him or to the creditor." Douglass Merchandise Co. v. Laird, 37 W. Va. 687, 17 S. E. 188. See, also, Baer Sons Grocer Co. v. Williams, 43 W. Va. 323, 27 S. E. 345; Merchants' Bank v. Ballou, 98 Va. 112, 32

S. E. 481, 44 L. R. A. 306, 81 Am. St. Rep. 715; 6 Enc. Dig. Va. & W. Va. Rep. 624. In this case it is not established that the trustee or the beneficiary participated in any such intent. It is not established that Crawford, the beneficiary, or Guinn, the trustee, intended to injure any creditor of Ely, the grantor, when the deed of trust was executed to secure a loan of $700 in cash made by Crawford to Ely at the time. The slight inferences that Crawford so intended, arising from the mere circumstances presented, are not sufficient to establish the fact that he meant to hinder, delay, or defraud anybody, especially in view of his sworn testimony in the case. By no means can we say that the chancellor erred in pronouncing the decree. Even were the evidence more conflicting than it is, we could not reverse. "When the evidence relating to fraud is conflicting and tends to support the decree of the circuit court, such decree will not be disturbed unless plainly wrong." Sibley v. Stacey, 53 W. Va. 293, 44 S. E. 420.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Oct. 31, 1911.)

1. SALES (§ 440*)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—EVIDENCE.

On an issue arising upon a claim of recoupment for breach of an express warranty in a contract of sale of a piece of machinery which had been in use in the kind of work for which it was designed and constructed, at the time of the purchase thereof, testimony tending to show its efficiency while so used is admissible.

2. EVIDENCE (§ 513*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—CAPACITY OF ENGINE.

Opinions of expert witnesses as to the capacity of an engine are admissible on the trial of an issue as to whether the article fulfills a warranty of capacity in the contract of purchase.

3. SALES (§ 440*)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—EVIDENCE.

On an issue as to whether a steam boiler complied with a guaranty of material and workmanship in a contract of sale, the testimony of witnesses concerning the method of getting out and testing materials for such boilers, employed in the manufacturing plant in which the machine in question was made, at a date a few years subsequent to that of the manufacture of the machine in question, is admissible.

4. SALES (§ 440*)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—EVIDENCE.

On a trial involving such issues as are stated above, arising out of a contract of sale of a secondhand machine, testimony showing the difference between the price paid for the machine and the price of a new one of its class is admissible, as one of the circumstances under which the contract was made.

5. SALES (§ 440*)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—EVIDENCE.

Upon the trial of such issues it is also competent to show that the purchaser, after acceptance of the machine, hired it out, representing it to be first class in all respects, and received for its use compensation in an amount indicating conviction of its fitness for the use contemplated in the purchase thereof.

6. SALES (§ 439*)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Upon the trial of an issue, arising on a claim for recoupment for a breach of warranty in the sale of property, the purchaser carries the burden of proof, under the general rule requiring the party alleging a fact to prove it.

7. SALES (§ 439*)—BREACH OF WARRANTY—NOTICE OF DEFECT—PRESUMPTIONS.

Upon the trial of such an issue, the court may properly instruct the jury that, if they find the purchaser accepted and used the article in question and gave no notice of any defect therein, there is a presumption against the validity of his claim, unless they further find a satisfactory excuse for failure to give such notice.

Error to Circuit Court. Mercer County.

Action by the Kelley-Springfield Road Roller Company against W. H. Coffman. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Ritz & Ritz, for plaintiff in error. D. E. French, for defendant in error.

POFFENBARGER, J. Upon an alleged breach of warranty, the plaintiff in error endeavored to scale down by recoupment the claim asserted against him in an action by motion in the circuit court; but the jury found against him, and he attributes the result to rulings of the court, admitting evidence, and giving instructions, which he insists were erroneous.

The demand was for a balance due on the contract price of a secondhand steam road roller, guaranteed "to be made of the best material and workmanship throughout and to do first-class work, if properly operated, and to be durable with proper care." Breach of this warranty was charged as matter of defense, with an averment of damage equal to the unpaid portion of the contract price, $1,287.74. Defectiveness of the engine, part and parcel of the roller, considered in its entirety, constitutes the alleged breach. The notice says it was not of sufficient capacity to propel the roller so as to make it do first-class work, and that the boiler was not of good material, but was of inferior material and workmanship.

[1] Six of the assignments of error are based upon the admission of evidence over the objection of the defendant. As has been stated, the roller was a secondhand one. At the date of the purchase thereof, it was in use by the United States government at Huntington, a fact known to the purchaser. As tending to prove its fitness for the use for which it was constructed and sold, the court permitted two witnesses to testify that no complaint or charge of defectiveness was made by the government engineers who had so used it. This evidence, it is said, falls within the rule res inter alios acta, but it is not wholly foreign to the subject-matter of the contract. It relates to the machine and its condition and capacity at the time of the purchase thereof. We are unable to agree that it does not afford a reasonable presumption or inference as to the matter in dispute. It tends to show good condition of the machine when received by the defendant, as he got it just after the time it is thus shown to have been in good condition, and even at the time of purchase, for he bought it while in use by the government. The vital question in the case was the condition and capacity of the roller, and this evidence bears directly upon it. That other persons were interested in that subject at the time to which the evidence relates does not preclude the interest of the defendant in the same question at the time of the making of the contract. The condition of the machine at that time and immediately before was its condition at the time of the purchase. This is not an instance of wholly foreign and disconnected evidence.

[2] The admission of the opinions of two witnesses as to the capacity of the engine is a subject of further complaint. One of these was the president of the plaintiff company, a man of large experience in the manufacture of road rollers and thoroughly informed as to the character of the one in question. The other was a practical machinist and engineer of 25 or 30 years experience in his vocation. He had run the engine in question, to test its capacity and fitness for use. Both of these witnesses, therefore, were experts, and testified concerning a matter about which the opinion of an ordinary jurymen is obviously not as likely to be correct as that of an expert, though based upon full and complete facts material to the question. Under such circumstances opinion evidence is admissible. Delmar Oil Co. v. Bartlett, 62 W. Va. 700, 59 S. E. 634; Slack v. Harris, 200 Ill. 96, 65 N. E. 669; Montgomery v. Gilmer et al., 33 Ala. 116, 70 Am. Dec. 562; Brownfield v. Railway Co., 107 Iowa, 254, 77 N. W. 1038; Fremblay v. Construction Co., 169 Mass. 284, 17 N. E. 1010; Davidson v. Railway Co., 34 Minn. 51, 24 N. W. 324; Read v. Barker, 30 N. J. Law, 378.

[3] Testimony of a witness respecting the method of manufacture of steam rollers by the plaintiff company was objected to, and its admission is assigned as error. This objection is based largely upon the relation in time between the manufacture of the machine and the witness' observation of the method described and the manufacture of the machine in question; the latter being some six or seven years subsequent, and the witness having had no connection with the company when the machine was made. He says it was made either by the O. S. Kelley Company, whose plant the Kelley-Springfield Company bought out, six or seven years prior to the date of his testimony, or by said last-mentioned company; the latter he thinks. This testimony related particularly to the method of getting out and testing the materials for boilers. As the plaintiff either made this boiler or owned the plant in which it had been made, the testimony related to the method of manufacture by which presumptively the machine in question was produced. The difference in the dates was not unreasonably long. It is hardly probable a large manufacturing plant would greatly change its methods within that time. Presumptively its methods at the date of this testimony were substantially the same as those of previous years within a reasonable limit. It was proper, therefore, to let the testimony go to the jury for what it was worth in their opinion.

[4] The same witness was permitted to testify over objection that the cost of a new roller of the class of the one sold at the price of $1,800, including a harrow, would be not less than $2,900. This was a circumstance in view of which the contract was made, tending to show the defendant did not expect to get, nor the seller to furnish, a machine as good as a new one. In controversies involving the interpretation of a contract and its application to the subject-matter, the situation and purposes of the parties and the surrounding circumstances are nearly always admissible as evidence. Hence the court did not err in the admission of this testimony.

[5] After the delivery of the machine, the defendant himself used and tested it in his own work and then hired it out to a construction company for use in the building of about two miles of macadam road, in consideration of $500. A witness testified to this fact, the use of the machine in that work and the particulars in which it appeared to be defective, the explanation and cause of its bad work, namely, inefficiency of the engineer in charge of it, the representation of the defendant that it was a first-class piece of machinery and a fine roller, and the payment of $500 for its use. We do not regard the evidence of the payment as wholly foreign, irrelevant, or immaterial. It is a circumstance bearing upon the opinion of the parties to that contract as to the real character of the machine. Moreover, it is in the nature of an admission on the part of the de-defendant that the machine was such as it had been guaranteed to be.

Two instructions, relating to the burden of proof on the issue made, and putting it upon the defendant, were objected to. The court did not err in giving these instructions. The defense was an affirmative one. It admitted the contract and agreed to pay the amount of money claimed, but charged a breach of the plaintiff's agreement, as the basis of a claim for deduction. Therefore the agreement or contract upon which the plaintiff based its action was not really in issue.

[6] The real issue was whether the defendant should have an abatement from the purchase price, and, to obtain this, he was bound to prove the fact alleged by him as the basis thereof. This conclusion accords with the general rule, putting the burden of proof as to any fact upon the party alleging it. Underwood v. Wolf, 131 Ill. 425, 23 N. E. 598, 19 Am. St. Rep. 40; Manufacturing Co. v. Wood, 84 Mich. 452, 48 N. W. 28; Coal Co. v. Bradley, 2 Wash. 600, 27 Pac. 454, 26 Am. St. Rep. 890.

give it. The instruction said only that the fact, if proven and not excused, raised a presumption, but did not say how much weight it should have. This is allowable. Brickwood, Sack. Ins. § 194. The presumption stated accords with the following legal principle and consideration underlying it: "Of course, there is danger of fraud and false claims, even where there is an express warranty, when notice is not early given of the defect. It leads the buyer into temptation. Hence juries should listen to such claims (never presented when their falsity could have been ascertained) with great caution. The proof thereof should be more clear than if the buyer had acted with the frankness of an honest man, willing to allow his claims to be tested. This is so declared by courts, while the rule is maintained as to an express warranty as above stated." Day v. Pool, 52 N. Y. 416, 421, 11 Am. Rep. 719. See, also, Coal Co. v. Bradley, 2 Wash. 600, 27 Pac. 454, 26 Am. St. Rep. 890. Instructions, fairly submitting presumptions are of frequent occurrence in our practice in both civil and criminal cases.

Though two installments for purchase money of $600 each and the interest thereon were due at the date of the trial, the jury rendered a verdict for only one of them, accompanied by this recital: "There was the sum of $600 not due from the defendant to the plaintiff of the purchase price of the roller referred to in the evidence." Rendition of judgment for the amount of the verdict is assigned as error in the petition for the writ of error, but it is not noticed in the brief. The verdict is certain as to the amount for which judgment was rendered. In a verdict and judgment for less than the amount due from defendant, there is no error of which he can complain. If the verdict in any way affected the rights of the parties as to the other installment, a matter as to which we now express no opinion, it was not prejudicial to him.

Finding no error in the judgment, we affirm it.

Affirmed.

CRESAP et al. v. BROWN et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Oct. 31, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PARTITION (§ 32*)—WHO MAY BRING.

When one person holds the legal title to land for the joint benefit of himself and others, all having equal rights in equity, any one of them may compel partition thereof at any time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Cent. Dig. §§ 83-86; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

2. EQUITY (§ 148*)—BILL—MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

A bill for partition of the land by one of the equitable owners against his cotenants, including the one who holds the legal title, is not multifarious because it prays for the cancellation of an alleged fraudulent conveyance of the growing timber on the land, made by the holder of the legal title, and also for an accounting by him of proceeds of other sales.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Equity, Cent. Dig. §§ 341-367; Dec. Dig. § 148.*]

3. TRUSTS (§ 192*)—HOLDER OF LEGAL TITLE—RIGHTS OF COTENANTS.

Such holder of the legal title has no right to dispose of the joint property without the consent of his cotenants. The rights of all are equal in equity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 192.*]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 239*)—PURCHASERS FOR VALUE.

A purchaser for value from such holder of the legal title, without knowledge of the latent equities of others, will be protected.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 583-593; Dec. Dig. § 239.*]

5. LIS PENDENS (§ 24*)—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

The pendency of a suit, brought to settle the estate of an equitable joint owner of land, against his co-owner, who holds the legal title, and others, but which does not seek to get in the legal title, or to have the rights of such equitable owner in the land adjudicated, will not defeat the rights of a subsequent bona fide purchaser from the holder of the legal title. The purchase, in such case, will not operate to defeat any proper decree which the court may make in the suit, and therefore the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Lis Pendens, Dec. Dig. § 24.*]

6. PARTITION (§ 86*)—DECREE—SALE OF LAND.

In a suit for partition and for accounting of proceeds of land, it is error to decree all the proceeds to the cotenant who holds them, and to compensate the others by an abatement pro tanto from his allotment of land. Each cotenant should have his share in both land and proceeds.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County.

Bill by Gustavus J. Cresap and others against Nannie I. Brown and others. Decree for defendants, and complainants appeal. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

W. G. Bennett and Dent & Dent, for appellants. S. V. Woods and C. W. Maxwell, for appellees.

WILLIAMS, P. Judge John Brannon, Judge Samuel Woods, and C. J. P. Cresap were the equal owners of a number of tracts of undeveloped coal and timber lands situate in Barbour, Upshur, and Randolph counties, aggregating several thousand acres. The legal title was held by Judge Woods. The interest of Brannon and Cresap was a latent equity, but was never denied by Judge Woods in his lifetime, nor by his devisees since his death. The joint interest of all, and the trusteeship of Woods, appear from two declarations in writing signed by him, one held by Woods, and another by Brannon. They are the same in substance, though differing a little in verbiage. The copy vouched by Woods' devisees bears date June 24, 1882, and after reciting how and from whom the lands were acquired, reads as follows, viz.: "For this land so purchased, John Brannon, C. J. P. Cresap and myself were to pay equal portions of the purchase money, and of all taxes and levies charged and chargeable thereon, and of all costs and expenses attending the care of the title thereof, and of all costs and expenses of every kind and character attending the surveying, dividing, selling, conveying and contracting the same, and every part thereof; and the proceeds of rents, profits and incomes thereof, shall be for the joint and equal benefit of each of us, share and share alike; and the following accounts are intended to show the details of all the matters arising out of the ownership of said lands." The accounts referred to in this paper do not appear in the record.

A number of small parcels of these lands were sold and conveyed to various persons by Woods in his lifetime, and some were sold by him which were not paid for, and not conveyed until after his death, when conveyances were made by his devisees. All three of the original owners are now deceased; Judge Woods, the last survivor, having died in 1897. All of them made wills, disposing of their respective interests in the aforesaid real estate.

Samuel V. Woods and J. Hop Woods were appointed administrators with the will annexed of their father, Judge Samuel Woods, deceased. Exercising the right which they claim their father had in, and exercised over, said lands in his lifetime, and having power of attorney from their codevisees, the administrators sold the standing timber on the lands to J. B. Moore and Henry Kepple for the cash consideration of $10.50 an acre, and conveyed the same to them by deed, dated December 18, 1902. The deed was recorded in the clerk's office of Randolph county on January 27, 1903. The deed also granted the right to manufacture the timber upon the land, and to remove it therefrom.

Gustavus J. Cresap, Rachel R. Cresap, and Mary B. Cresap, three of the devisees of C. J. P. Cresap, deceased, brought this suit against the executor and devisees of Judge John Brannon, deceased, the administrators with the will annexed, and the devisees, of Judge Samuel Woods, deceased, and Nannie I. Brown, one of the devisees of C. J. P. Cresap, deceased. J. B. Moore and Henry Kepple and J. B. Calkins, now composing the firm of J. B. Moore & Co., were also made defendants.

The suit has a fourfold object: (1) To partition the remaining portion of said lands, consisting now of about 3,500 or 3,600 acres; (2) an accounting against the estate of Samuel Woods, deceased, for the proceeds derived from sales of portions of said land; (3) to cancel the deed made to Moore and Kepple for the timber; and (4) to enjoin the cutting of timber.

The devisees of Judge Brannon answered and united in the prayer of plaintiffs' bill; so that the suit is really a controversy between the devisees of Brannon and Cresap, respectively, on the one side, and the devisees of Samuel Woods on the other, with the right of Moore and Kepple, who claim to be complete purchasers from the Woods devisees, without notice of the equities of the Brannon and Cresap devisees, to be determined as an incidental matter. Two amended and supplemental bills were filed, and demurrers were interposed to each of them on the ground of multifariousness.

A final decree was pronounced on the 20th day of November, 1908, decreeing that J. Hop Woods and Samuel V. Woods, acting for themselves and as agents and attorneys in fact for their codevisees, had a legal right to sell and convey the timber to Moore and Kepple, and confirming the deed made to them. The court had previously awarded an injunction, restraining any operations on the land by Moore and Kepple, but had subsequently so modified the order as to permit Moore and Kepple to proceed with the construction of a railroad which they had commenced to build upon the land, for the purpose of removing the timber. The final decree dissolved the injunction wholly, and directed a partition to be made of the land, and permitted Woods' devisees to retain the whole of the proceeds from the timber sale, but directed the commissioners appointed to partition the land to abate from the allotment to be made to Woods' devisees so much land as would equal in value the share of the money that would otherwise have gone to the Brannon and Cresap devisees. From this decree, the plaintiffs and the devisees of Judge John Brannon, deceased, have appealed.

[1.3] It is admitted by Woods' devisees in their answer that the Brannon and Cresap devisees, respectively, are equal owners of the land with themselves, but they claim the unqualified right to make sale of it whenever they may think proper. The only evidence of the trust which existed between Woods, Brannon, and Cresap is the written declaration which we have quoted above. That writing does not show that Judge Woods had any greater interest in, or control over, the land than either one of his co-owners had. So far as it can be determined by the written declaration, Woods was the trustee, holding the legal title for the benefit of all, with no prescribed duties to be performed by him. The fact that Judge Woods did make sales of the lands, and did make conveyances therefor, without his joint owners uniting with him in such conveyances, does not prove that he had the absolute right to do so without the consent and acquiescence of his co-owners. Such sales and conveyances may have been made by virtue of an express agreement between them, relating only to those sales. But, even if there was no express agreement for the sale of those lands, the subsequent acquiescence in such sales, by Cresap and Brannon, would not prove Woods' right to hold the land indefinitely, and against the wish of his co-owners. They all had equal rights, and any one of the three parties at any time could have demanded a conveyance from Judge Woods for his undivided one-third, or could have compelled a partition. There is no evidence that Judge Woods had the unqualified right to sell. But, assuming that he may have had such right, it was not such right as he could pass by will to his devisees, but only a personal trust, in the nature of a power of attorney, which would end with his death. But Judge Woods simply held the legal title as a matter of convenience, and for the mutual benefit of all three owners; he was a dry trustee, with no duties to be performed which could not have been performed by either of the other joint owners, and with no extra compensation provided for such services as he might render for their joint benefit. The fact that the legal title was in him could therefore give him no greater right in, or power over, the land in equity than the others had. They had equal rights to the possession, and any one could compel partition.

Moore and Kepple claim to be innocent purchasers, without notice of appellants' equities. They paid cash for the timber, received a deed for it from Woods' devisees, and placed it on record, January 27, 1903. The declaration of trust, made by Judge Woods in 1882, was not recorded until February 7 and 9, 1903, on the 7th in Upshur county, and on the 9th in Randolph county. This writing was therefore not constructive notice to them. But it is alleged they had actual knowledge of appellants' equities. This allegation is denied, and we do not think the proof sustains it. There is some testimony that a map was used by Woods and Cobb, and shown to J. B. Moore while negotiations for the sale of the timber were pending upon which were the words "Woods, Brannon and Cresap Lands." Other witnesses deny that the map contained more than the words "Woods Lands." But, even if taken as true that the map did have upon it the words "Woods, Brannon and Cresap Lands," that alone would not be sufficient notice to the purchasers that persons, other than Woods' devisees, were interested in it. The words might well have been intended as simply descriptive of the land, and might have been so understood. The map itself is not before us.

It is insisted that Cobb knew of the joint ownership, and that he was Moore and Kepple's agent in the purchase of the land. This is denied by both Cobb and J. B. Moore, who was the only member of the firm of Moore, Kepple & Co. who was in West Virginia and made an examination of the land, before the purchase was completed. Cobb was examined as a witness in behalf of plaintiffs themselves, and, being asked what he had to do with the purchase of the timber by Moore and Kepple, replied, "I assisted Mr. Woods in selling this timber to Moore and Kepple." J. B. Moore was asked what services Captain Cobb rendered to him in the purchase of the timber, and his reply was: "Capt. [Cobb] brought the land to us, or brought us to the land, rather. He had it for sale from Mr. Woods, and we bought it through him." This evidence tends to prove that Cobb was the agent of Woods, rather than the agent of J. B. Moore. Cobb not being the agent of Moore, his knowledge is not chargeable to Moore.

It is asserted that the recitals in the deed from the Smith heirs to Samuel Woods, made in 1874, would put a prudent man upon inquiry, which, if pursued, would have disclosed appellants' interest in the land. True C. J. P. Cresap and wife joined the Smith heirs in the execution of that deed, as grantors, but it is very clear that they did so for the express purpose of conveying the equity which Cresap then had in the land, and which he had acquired from the Smith heirs by virtue of the contract of sale which he had taken from them. The deed recites that Cresap had sold the lands to Woods, and had, by writing indorsed upon his agreement with the Smith heirs, "transferred the benefit of the said contract to the said Woods, who consented to accept the said lands upon the terms specified in said agreement and to pay for the same at the time and in the manner therein prescribed." That assignment was on the 21st of August, 1874, and the deed itself bears date the 27th of September, 1874. There was nothing in the language of the deed to indicate that Cresap retained any interest whatsoever in the land. The deed itself shows quite the contrary.

[5] Some time after the death of C. J. P. Cresap, who was the first of the three joint owners to die, his wife, who was made executrix, brought a suit in the circuit court of Randolph county for the purpose of settling her testator's estate. There were numerous defendants to that suit, among them John Brannon and Samuel Woods, and it is insisted, by counsel for appellants, that Moore and Kepple took title to the timber with knowledge of the pendency of that suit, in which appellants' interests were disclosed. No notice of lis pendens was recorded in the clerk's office of the county court, as provided by section 13, c. 139, Code 1906, even granting that the suit was a proper one for such notice, and the suit itself was not of such a nature that its pendency alone could operate to affect Moore and Kepple's rights. The common-law doctrine of lis pendens does not involve the principle of constructive notice, but rests upon public policy, and grows out of necessity. It is the application of a rule intended to prevent the defeating of the judgment, or decree, of the court, respecting the rights of some party to the suit whose interest in land is therein litigated, and whose right is determined by the decree of the court, by the purchase of the land from a party to the suit, by a stranger, even though he has no actual knowledge of the pendency of such suit. The right to be protected must be directly involved, and must be such a right as the decree of the court intends to determine and protect. The doctrine has no respect for the rights of bona fide purchasers; in fact, it denies them any rights, and operates very harshly upon them; hence the law proceeds upon the principle of strictissimi juris in applying the doctrine, when the effect is to defeat the rights of such purchasers. 25 Cyc. 1452; White v. Perry, 14 W. Va. 66, and cases cited in opinion by Judge Green, on page 76.

The suit by Cresap's executrix was not brought for the purpose of obtaining legal title from Woods to Cresap's interest in the lands. There was no controversy over the title; the respective rights of Woods, Cresap, and Brannon were not the subject of that litigation. True the bill alleged that Cresap's estate had a third interest in the Smith lands, and that Woods held the legal title, but it prayed for no relief whatever with respect to those lands. It only prayed for an accounting, by Woods, for Cresap's share of the proceeds derived from previous sales. Woods answered, admitting that he held a number of unpaid obligations against purchasers of portions of the land, and averred that proceeds from sales, which had been collected, had either been paid to Cresap in his lifetime, or to his executrix since his death. So far as it appears, the decrees in the Cresap Case left the title and the interest of the respective parties in the joint lands just as they were before the suit was brought. It cannot therefore be said that the purchase of the timber by Moore and Kepple would have the effect to defeat, in any manner, the operation of the decrees which the court has made, or any which it may yet properly make upon the state of the pleadings in the Cresap suit, provided it is still pending. And, unless the purchase of the real estate, pending litigation, operates to defeat the decree of the court with respect to such real estate, the doctrine of lis pendens can have no application to bona fide purchaser, pending the litigation. The suit by Cresap's executrix did not directly affect the title to the land in question, and, moreover, was not intended to do so; and therefore the doctrine of lis pendens cannot operate to defeat the rights of Moore and Kepple, who appear to be bona fide purchasers. Davis v. Christian, 15 Grat. (Va.) 11; 25 Cyc. 1454, and numerous cases cited in footnote 54.

rious because it asks for an accounting against the Woods estate, and for the cancellation of the Moore and Kepple deed. Such relief is properly incidental to, and not inconsistent with, the suit for partition. Of course, a partition suit cannot be made a substitute for ejectment. But Moore and Kepple are privies in estate with one branch of the cotenants, and if they had had notice of appellants' equities their deed could have been properly set aside, as an incident to the partitioning of the land, under section 1, c. 79, Code 1906. Humphrey v. Foster, 13 Grat. (Va.) 653; Rust v. Rust, 17 W. Va. 901; Hudson v. Putney, 14 W. Va. 561; Oecil v. Clark, 44 W. Va. 659, 30 S. E. 216; Code of West Virginia 1906, c. 79, § 1. The demurrers to the amended bills were therefore properly overruled.

[4] Moore and Kepple's title was properly held to be good, but the reason assigned by the circuit court for so holding is erroneous. The court held that the heirs of Samuel Woods, deceased, had a right, under the trust agreement between him and his joint owners, to make sale, and that he passed such right to his devisees. But, as we have hereinbefore said, he had no such absolute right, but was bound to respect the wishes of those jointly interested with him, and whatever right to sell he may have had was a formal one, which terminated at his death. The true reason for holding Moore and Kepple's title to the timber good is that they were complete purchasers for value, without notice of appellants' equities.

[5] It appears that the price received for the timber was a fair and reasonable one at the time the sale was made, and that the Woods devisees acted in good faith in making it, believing they had the legal right to do so. The fact, however, that Moore and Kepple obtained good title to the land is no reason why the court should have allowed the Woods devisees to retain all that purchase money. The decree permits them to retain the entire proceeds of the sale, and compensates the other joint owners by abating from the allotment of Woods' share in the land an amount equal in value to the share of the others in the funds. This was clearly wrong. Woods' devisees admit the rights of the Brannon and Cresap devisees to participate in said fund, and in their answer, express their willingness to pay to them their respective shares, as soon as the amounts thereof can be properly ascertained. The decree should have directed an accounting for all the proceeds, whether derived from the sale of lands or timber, in which the three estates were jointly interested, and should have directed a partition of the remaining lands to be made among the three sets of devisees, in three equal parts, having respect to value, instead of in the manner provided. In respect to these matters, the decree will be reversed, and in all other respects it will be affirmed, and the cause will be remanded to the circuit court of Randolph county for further proceedings in the manner herein indicated.

SMITH et al. v. MITCHELL.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
June 16, 1911. On Rehearing, Nov.
25, 1911.)

1. STATUTES (§ 15*)—ENACTMENT—READING OF BILLS.

A bill was introduced in the House of Delegates as House Bill No. 161, and the bill was introduced in the Senate as Senate Bill No. 99. The House bill was read duly and passed by the House and reported to the Senate. The Senate bill was read twice on different days, and on second reading the Senate substituted for it the House bill under the name of House Bill No. 161, and under that name it was read on another day and passed by the Senate. The bills were identical in title and matter. The bill passed by the Senate has been read in it three times as required by the Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. §§ 12, 13; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 15*)—ENACTMENT—POWER TO RECONSIDER.

After a bill has been passed by the House of Delegates and reported to the Senate, and it has passed the Senate and been by its order sent to the House with report of its passage by the Senate, and the House refuses to return it to the Senate, the Senate cannot reconsider the vote passing the bill, as it has no possession or control over the bill, and its vote to reconsider will not impair the validity of the act.

Poffenbarger, J., dissenting.

Petition by Homer Smith and others for mandamus to R. E. Mitchell, clerk of the County Court of Mason County. Denied.

Brown, Jackson & Knight, Mollohan, McClintic & Mathews, John L. Whitten, and Somerville & Somerville, for petitioners. Wm. M. O. Dawson, T. C. Townsend, and Rankin Wiley, for respondent.

BRANNON, J. Until the enactment of chapter 85 of the Acts of the Legislature of 1911, the council of the town of Point Pleasant had sole and exclusive power to grant license to sell spirituous liquors, without regard to the county court of Mason county; but that act took away this council power by the provision that "No license to sell at wholesale or retail spirituous liquors, wine, porter, ale, beer or drinks of like nature shall be granted by the council of said town. Such license shall only be granted by the county court in the manner prescribed by law." Upon the claim that this act is void, Homer Smith obtained from the town council a permit to obtain such a license, and, armed with this council order, he applied to R.

E. Mitchell, clerk of the county court, for a certificate of such license; but Mitchell refused to recognize the order of the council, and refused to issue the certificate requested. Thereupon Smith applied to the Supreme Court for writ of mandamus to compel Mitchell to issue to him the certificate to obtain such license.

In the argument before this court of this much contested case two grounds were urged for the contention that the act of 1911 is null and void, leaving still in force the former statute giving the council sole power to grant such license. One ground is that the bill was not read in the Senate on three days, as the Constitution requires; and the second ground is that the bill never finally passed the Senate so as to become a law.

[1] As to the claim that the bill was not read in the Senate on three days, the facts are: That a bill called "Senate Bill No. 99" was introduced into the Senate, and an exactly similar bill called "House Bill No. 161" was introduced into the House of Delegates. That House Bill 161 was regularly read and passed by the House, and reported to the Senate as passed by the House, is not questioned. Senate Bill 99 was read twice in the Senate. On its second reading the Senate substituted the House bill for the Senate bill, and under the name of House Bill No. 161 it was ordered to be read a third time, and on February 18th was read a third time and passed with its title. As stated, the title of the two bills were the same, the bodies the same, literally. For the purpose of the requirements that a bill shall be read three times, we may say that these bills are one, because they have the same title and the same enacting language. The purpose of this provision of the Constitution is to inform legislators and people of legislation proposed by a bill, and to prevent hasty legislation. The two readings of the Senate bill and the third reading of the substituted House bill did this, just as effectually as if the House bill had not been substituted for the Senate bill, and the Senate bill had been retained and read a third time and passed. Shall we give this provision so rigid a construction as to go beyond its purpose and defeat legislation? There is nothing so special in a constitutional provision as to justify this.

Will it be suggested that this was another bill, a substitute, not Senate Bill 99, and that this substitute should have been read three times? I would answer that we can hardly call it a substitute because it is identical in matter with Senate Bill 99. But, suppose even that the bills were not so identical, still the substitute bill, if so germane to the original bill as to be a proper substitute, would not have to go back and be read three times. A substitute is an amendment. "When a bill has been read and referred to a committee who have reported a substitute, having the same general principles, it is not necessary to the valid enactment of the substitute that it should be considered an original bill and read three times on the three different days." 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. 540. When a bill is amended, it does not call for re-reading. People v. Thompson (Cal.) 7 Pac. 142; 36 Cyc. 952; State v. Dillon, 42 Fla. 96, 28 South. 781; Cleland v. Anderson, 66 Neb. 261, 92 N. W. 306, 96 N. W. 212, 98 N. W. 1075, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 136.

Capito v. Topping, 65 W. Va. 588, 64 S. E. 845, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1060, written by Judge Poffenbarger, is pointed authority for this. A bill having same title as act No. 40 of 1894 was introduced in the Senate as S. B. No. 23, read by its title, placed on the calendar for second reading, subsequently taken up upon second reading, read by title, and referred to a committee. The committee reported its action on Senate Bill No. 23, giving the exact title of the same. The committee reported the bill favorably by substitute. The bill was read by its title. Substitute adopted in lieu of original bill, and became S. B. No. 90. Bill as reported read by title. Subsequently S. B. No. 90 reported by the committee was put on its third reading, and read in full, then passed. Held, that the contention that S. B. No. 90 should have been considered an original bill, and read in the Senate three times on different days, once in full, was not well founded. Board v. Fowler, 50 La. Ann. 1358, 24 South. 809.

Take the case of Miller & Gibson v. State, 3 Ohio St. 475. "A bill after being read twice in the Senate was committed to a select committee, who reported it back with an amendment, to wit, 'Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a new bill.' The bill as amended passed the Senate and House and became a law. The claim was made that the 'new bill' had but two readings in the Senate." The court said: "When it appears by the journals that a bill was amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting a 'new bill,' so called, it cannot be presumed that the matter inserted was upon a different subject from that stricken out, especially when the matter inserted is consistent with the title borne by the bill before amendment." The court relied upon a presumption that the substituted bill was the same with the original, and, being so, no three readings were required of the amended bill. In the present case the sameness of the Senate and House bills is apparent. The court further said in Miller & Gibson v. State, supra: "But for argument's sake, let it be admitted that the bill as amended was read but once in the Senate; is the act for that reason void? That, counting two readings before the amendment, and the final reading, the bill was read three times, is conceded, for these readings are shown by the journal, and it is also conceded that in general three readings of an amendment are not necessary. But, inasmuch as the amendment in this case is styled in the journal a 'New Bill,' it is said that three readings were necessary. Why necessary? The amendment was none the less an amendment because of the name given it. It is not unusual in parliamentary proceedings to amend a bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting a 'New Bill.' When the subject or proposition of the bill is thereby wholly changed, it would seem to be proper to read the amended bill three times, and on different dates; but, when there is no such vital alteration, three readings are not required." That case is strong to show that such sameness dispenses with reading over again; strong to show that two readings of the Senate bill and one of the bill after substitution of the House bill make up three readings.

Nelson v. Haywood, 91 Tenn. 596, 20 S. W. 1, is of same effect. "A bill having been passed regularly by both houses was referred, upon a difference between the two houses as to certain proposed amendments, to a joint committee of conference. The committee reported as follows: 'Your committee of conference, to whom was referred S. B. No. 10, with House amendments, beg leave to report the accompanying bill in lieu of said bill and amendment, in which is embraced substantially all the provisions of both houses. Your committee deem it prudent to propose a bill in lieu, as the original bill has been much disfigured by amendment, interlineations, and erasures. Your committee asks that the bill offered be accepted and passed.' This redrafted bill of the committee of conference contained fewer sections and annulled some of the proposed amendments; the committee substituting compromise provisions therefor. The committee's report was concurred in by both the houses and the bill signed. The bill was not passed after its redrafting by the committee." "Held: The act was constitutionally passed and is a valid law. The committee did not report a new bill. They had authority to make such changes as would reconcile differences between the two houses. It was not necessary that this bill be passed upon three readings after the committee reported."

I believe it is not, and cannot be, claimed that the bill after passage by the Senate had to go back for concurrence of the House in the substitute, for the reason that the substituted House bill was not variant from, but identical in title and enacting matter with, House Bill 161. "An immaterial amendment need not in any way affect the substance. Where a reference to 'Thompson & Steger's Code' was stricken out, and the 'Revised Code of Tennessee' inserted in its place, both being the same book, it was held that there was not any substantial amendment requiring concurrence." Note 30, 36

(Tenn.) 608. In our case there was no difference between the two bills save in name and number. Name and number are no part of the real bill, merely designating for convenience, and cease on passage, and do not appear in the published act. Judge POFFENBARGER lays down the rule that no bill can become a law in less than five days. 36 Cyc. 950, says: "A substantial compliance with a constitutional requirement as to the reading of bills is sufficient. * * * The requirement that bills be read on different days in each house will not prevent the reading of a bill in one house on the day that it was passed by the other." A note there found says that, "when duplicate bills are introduced in both houses, the substitution and final passage of the House bill for the Senate bill on its order of third reading does not render the substitute bill obnoxious to the constitutional requisite that bills shall be passed on three different days in the Senate," citing Archibald v. Clark, 112 Tenn. 532, 82 S. W. 310. It is conceded that it may be read in one house the same day of its passage by the other. So held in Arkansas. 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 540, citing Chicot v. Davies, 40 Ark. 200. Does the requirement of three readings on different days in each house necessarily mean three days in one house, and three other days in the other house? May it not intend only that each house must have three daily readings, but the readings may be on the same days in each house, in case of a duplicate bill? When both houses have enacted the same words literally, why may we not say that both branches have agreed to the same words? The object is to let the members have notice of the measure by three daily readings. This is accomplished by three readings in each house, though on same days. The houses are distinct for this purpose. All that is required is the assent by the two bodies to the same thing. It has been constant practice in our Legislature to so proceed with duplicate bills. But we do not have to so say in this case.

Judge POFFENBARGER seems to say that our decision would allow a House bill to be read three days in the House, then go to the Senate, and there a substitute be adopted, and it then passed without three daily readings. By no means do we say so. In our case the duplicate bill was read three times in each house. The very same bill was so read. The bill for this purpose is not the mere piece of paper, but it is its contents that must be read. The contents are what is meant by the word "bill" in this provision of the Constitution. The duplicate was, under facts above stated, read three times on different days in each house. That is the case which we decided. Thus we come to the conclusion that the three readings required by the Constitution were had.

[2] Next, as to the second ground given for the invalidity of the act; that is, the claim that the bill never became a law for want of final passage by the Senate. As stated above, the Senate passed the bill February 18th, and ordered its passage by the Senate to be reported to the House, and it was so reported. On February 20th the Senate adopted a motion to reconsider the votes by which it had ordered House Bill 161 to be read a third time and passed. The Senate passed an order requesting the House to return the bill to the Senate; but the House, in response to this request, on February 21st, refused to return the bill to the Senate, giving as its reasons that the bill had become a law, and passed beyond its jurisdiction. In response the Senate adopted a resolution insisting that its vote of reconsideration had the effect to undo its vote passing the bill, and insisting that the bill had not become a law, and insisting that it be returned to the Senate. The House did not order it returned to the Senate. On February 24th the Senate appointed a committee to call on the Governor and Secretary of State and request the return of House Bill 161 to the Senate, and to call on the House of Delegates and its Speaker and request such return. The committee reported that the Governor informed it that the bill had been delivered to him at 4:30 o'clock p. m. on February 20th, and that he had approved the bill and delivered it to the Secretary of State at 5:10 o'clock p. m., and, having so disposed of the bill, he had no further control over it. The committee further reported that it had demanded the bill of the Secretary of State, who replied in writing that he had surrendered it to the keeper of the rolls, and had no further custody or control over it. The committee further reported to the Senate that it had waited upon the keeper of the rolls, M. M. Neely, clerk of the House (who is ex officio keeper of the rolls), and informed him of the Senate's request for return to it of the bill, and he produced the bill, stating that he had that moment received it from the Secretary of the State, and stated that he would ask leave of the Speaker to return it to the Senate. The question whether it should be returned was again submitted to the House, and the House referred it to the judiciary committee, and it reported that it could not advise the House whether the bill had become a law, and that, whether a law or not, its validity could not be affected by retention of the engrossed bill. The House laid the report on the table. The House never ordered the bill returned. On February 20th the Speaker of the House wrote the Governor that the Senate had requested him to return engrossed House Bill No. 161 to the Senate; the Senate having reconsidered its action in passing it. The Governor on same date replied that the bill had been received by him at 4:30 p. m. on that date (February 20th) and approved by him at 5:10 p. m., and delivered to the Secretary of State.

So, the bill never returned to the Senate. After the Senate passed it, February 18th, it was on that date, by order of the Senate, reported to the House as passed by the Senate, and went to the joint committee of the two houses on enrolled bills, charged with duty to compare bills passed with their enrollment, correct errors, and present to the Speaker of the House and President of Senate, and then present them to the Governor for his action.

It seems that the bill was in the hands of this committee on the 18th after its passage by the Senate was reported to the House. Thus, it seems that this bill was passed by the Senate on February 18th, reported same date back to the House, went to joint committee same date for performance of its functions, was reconsidered by the Senate at 4 o'clock p. m. February 20th, presented to the Governor at 4:30 p. m. same day, approved and delivered to the Secretary of State at 5:10 p. m. same day, and on February 24th went to the keeper of the rolls. The question is: What is the effect of the action of the Senate reconsidering its passing House Bill No. 161? For Smith it is with confidence pressed upon us that such vote nullified the vote of the Senate passing the bill, and thus the bill wants passage by the Senate, and the bill never became an act, so as to be law. We do not question that a bill must be passed by both houses of the Legislature; but we say that this bill was so passed. This is so unless the vote of the Senate to reconsider did away with the Senate's passage of the bill. To sustain the view that such vote to reconsider works that result, we are cited to a provision of the Constitution, art. 6, § 24 (Code 1906, p. lix) that "each house shall determine the rules of its proceedings," and that under it there is a Senate rule saying that "it shall be in order for any member voting with the prevailing side to move a reconsideration of the same within two succeeding business days." That such motion may be made inside two days, under any circumstances. This rule has for its purpose a limitation of time upon reconsideration. It must be applied in practice conformably to general principles of parliamentary law governing reconsideration. A fundamental principle of that law is that, to enable a legislative body to reconsider a vote passing a bill, it must have control and possession of it. If it has performed its office upon the bill, and it has gone from its physical possession and control, it cannot reconsider. It has lost jurisdiction. The case is no longer in court. Neither a legislative body nor a court can act upon a matter not before it. This is fundamental. When the reconsideration in question in this case was voted, the bill had passed the House and Senate, had been sent back out of the Senate by its order to the House, and was in the files of the House, which refused to return it to the Senate, or in the hands of the committee on enrolled bills, without power of return. The Senate had completed its function and ousted itself of jurisdiction. What is authority as to this? "This right to reconsider remains so long as the bill remains in the custody of the body proposing to reconsider, unless they have some special rule restraining the right to reconsider. The matter is still in fieri while pending before and without control of either house. And it is not an infrequent occurrence for one house, which has finally passed a bill and sent it to the other house, to request its return, which being done, the vote on its final passage is reconsidered. There must be a time when the right to reconsider terminates. And the same rule applies in the one case as in the other, and that is when the bill or law has passed from the custody or control of the department or body seeking to reconsider." People v. Hatch, 19 Ill. 283. In Wolf v. McCaull, 76 Va. 876, a joint resolution recalled a bill then before the Governor, but not acted on by him. The court held this recall void, the return of the bill by the Governor void because without authority, and the act had by operation of law become a law without approval. I have cited this case as authority for the proposition that to render reconsideration effective the bill must be yet in the possession of the body; the court saying: "When does the power of control over a bill passed by both houses close and determine? There must be a time in parliamentary proceedings when the controlling power of the legislative body must come to an end. If the General Assembly had the power to recall the bill, it must have been for the purpose of reconsideration, because no motion to reconsider it is in order unless the paper is before the body in which the motion to reconsider is made. Jefferson's Manual, 93." In Allegany County v. Warfield, 100 Md. 516, 60 Atl. 599, 108 Am. St. Rep. 446, conceding power of Governor to erase his approval, yet it is made dependent on the fact that the bill is yet in his custody. Jefferson's Manual of Parliamentary Law says: "After a bill, resolution, message, report, amendment, or motion upon which a vote was taken shall have gone out of the possession of the Senate," no motion to reconsider can be made. Section 42. I cite People v. McCullough, 210 Ill. 488, 71 N. E. 602, and State v. Whisner, 35 Kan. 271, 10 Pac. 852, for the proposition that, after the Governor has delivered the bill to the Secretary of State, he has lost power of recall. Why? The cases say he has no physical possession or control of the document. This is the test in such cases; so it is in our case. The cases are in principle subject to the same test.

For the proposition that to justify reconsideration by a legislative body it must still have possession of the bill, a brief cites Croker's Procedure, 80, 182; Hunneeman v. Grafton, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 454; Reed v. Acton, 117 Mass. 384; Bigelow v. Hillman, 37 Me. 52; Estey v. Starr, 56 Vt. 690; Marsh v. Scituate, 153 Mass. 34, 26 N. E. 412, 10 L. R. A. 202; Brown v. Winterport, 79 Me. 305, 9 Atl. 844.

Great force is attributed in behalf of Smith to the case of State v. Bank, 79 Conn. 141, 64 Atl. 5. The case is widely different from our case, in that respect on which our decision as to this point rests, namely, the continued possession and control of the bill.

A bill passed both houses, but a motion to reconsider was made, pending and not disposed of, and, by mistake, without authority it was delivered by the clerk to the Secretary of State. The court as its reason said in words that: "While the bill was in the possession of the House and on the desk of the Speaker, the House had entertained a motion to reconsider." In our case the bill had left the Senate by its order; the Senate thus declaring that it had finished consideration of it.

Very clear it is that when a bill has passed both branches of the Legislature, and been approved by the Governor and filed with the Secretary of State, the bill cannot be later reconsidered or recalled by either or both branches, simply because the Constitution says that when so approved it is law. And further, after a bill has passed both branches and gone to the Governor for his action, it cannot be reconsidered or recalled by the Legislature, for the reason that it has ended its function and lost control and possession, the legislative department has acted on it, and it has gone to another department of the government, the executive, for its action. Wolfe v. McCaull, 76 Va. 876; 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. 548. The New York case of People v. Devlin, 83 N. Y. 260, 88 Am. Dec. 377, while the syllabus gives power to recall by the joint action of both branches, the opinion wholly denies the power. Under the last-mentioned principles, the reconsideration being abortive, the bill became an act, and no right to recall it by the Senate existed, and the bill became law.

Precedents or instances there are of the federal Senate and House where one body has, on request by another, returned bills or resolutions, just as there have been instances where Governors have returned bills presented to them, and the power silently conceded, as stated in 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. 548; but such concession would not make law. We have not before us what such bodies may do. We have the dry question of law whether, after the Senate had done with the bill, its vote to reconsider will nullify the passage of the bill; the House not consenting and refusing to return the bill, the Senate never repossessing itself of the bill. We thus do not have the question whether the Senate could have affected the bill, had the House returned it. It had passed both houses. Could one alone nullify its past act of passage demanded by the Constitution, which passed act had taken legal effect by force of the Constitution? The well-considered case of People v. Devlin, 33 N. Y. 269, 88 Am. Dec. 377, and others cited in 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. L. 148, say one branch cannot recall from the Governor. Why can one branch, against the will of the other, recall from that other? It it does, it has no effect. We are not dealing with the question of courtesy between the houses, or what the House should have done. We know what it did do. It refused return of the bill.

As to "Recall" from the Governor. The House never joined in it, nor authorized the Speaker to do so. Where the Speaker's authority to do so? The Senate alone made a recall on February 4th. The bill had then been enrolled, signed by the Speaker and President of the Senate, approved by the Governor, filed with the Secretary of State. After all this, after all these proceedings, this court is asked to ignore it all and overthrow the act. We think this court would be going far, straining its legitimate powers, to do so.

Holding the act valid, we refuse the mandamus.

Above I have given the reasons moving the court in its decision of this case. Some time after writing those reasons, I became impressed, speaking for myself, with what was somewhat suggested in oral argument, and with a line of thought furnishing an additional argument or reason supporting that decision. An attorney for Mitchell made the point that the vote of the Senate passing the bill was never actually recalled. He said that, when the reconsideration was voted, the next question before the Senate was, "Shall the bill pass"; but that that question was never put, that vote never taken, and thus the original vote passing the bill stood. If so, that settles that the act is valid. At any rate, be that as it may, we have the fact that the Senate did once vote the passage of the bill; the fact that it did not by actual vote reject the bill after its vote to reconsider; the fact that the bill had before been reported back to the House as passed; the fact that it went to the joint committee and was enrolled and signed by the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House; the fact that it went to the Governor, and was by him approved, and, after the executive had finished its part in the enactment, was finally filed in the office of the Secretary of State; the fact that it went to the keeper of the rolls, the clerk of the House; and now, after passing through this curriculum or course of enactment, the court is asked, in a collateral proceeding, to overthrow the act. Without asserting that the failure to vote a rejection of the bill left the original vote of passage still good, we do say that a court after such procedure cannot hold the act null and void. And further, if this is doubtful, then the rule, that before a court can hold an act invalid, the question must be clear, is alone enough to deny the mandamus.

If there had been no vote of the Senate passing the bill, the case would be different. While some cases say that a court cannot inquire whether a bill was passed by both legislative houses when approved by the Governor, the preponderance of law is that the judiciary may look to the journals to see whether the Constitution has been in this respect complied with; but that is not our case, for the journal of the Senate shows compliance with this requirement, everything regular, the only question being as to the effect of the vote to reconsider. We are asked to enter into details of procedure in the Legislature, to inquire into regularity or irregularity, and pronounce that the vote to reconsider, without further reconsideration, nullifies the Senate's former action, passing the bill; to pronounce that the action of the lawmaking powers, legislative and executive, is irregular not only, but goes to the extent of nullifying the act. A court cannot usurp this function. It is a well-known principle that, if a court has jurisdiction, mere irregularity or error in the course of procedure does not make its action wholly void. Shall we say that this irregularity avoids this act; that the Legislature having sole jurisdiction has erred, and thus rendered the act void? If a court cannot do this in judicial actions, much less can it review the various steps of a Legislature.

Mandamus refused.

POFFENBARGER, J. (dissenting). Deeming this decision and the opinion upon which it stands palpably unsound, and wholly unsustained by any real authority, I dissent, and would grant peremptory writs of mandamus in all of the nine cases, commanding the clerk of the county court to issue the certificates of license.

The question for this court is not one of license or no license. It is merely one of constitutional law, and nothing here involved calls for deviation from the plain letter of the Constitution or the settled construction thereof. The doctrine of the opinion has never been adopted by the Legislature of this state or any other, so far as I am able to see. On the question of reconsideration the two houses utterly disagreed; the Senate demanding the right always previously exercised by each house, with the acquiescence of the other, and the House denying it. That the action of the Senate, in the case of the bill here involved, was in accordance with settled practice, is not denied by anybody. It cannot be. That practice makes legislative law, which this court has no right to ignore, nor to allow one of the two bodies to abolish without the concurrence of the other. Moreover, that practice and law seem to be uniform in all American legislative bodies, including the Congress of the United States. Those who will take the time to read this necessarily long opinion will find that nothing stands to the contrary of this conclusion, not even dicta, much less decision or reputable text.

I make no apology for the length of this opinion. Proper settlement, in a few words, of questions of the number, magnitude, and intricacy of those involved here, is impossible, and an attempt to do so amounts to a dismissal without adequate consideration or effort.

In discussing the first question, whether the bill on which the case turns, published as an act of the Legislature, had the three constitutional readings in the Senate, we must not lose sight of the purpose of the clauses of the Constitution, prescribing an exclusive mode of passing laws, nor the elements of that method. The Legislature consists of two separate and distinct, but co-ordinate, houses, each having its own membership, its own organization, its own records and journal, its own officers, its own exclusive place of deliberation and action, in which its authority is practically unlimited, and its own complete and exclusive jurisdiction within its sphere. They necessarily act separately in passing bills and resolutions. The jurisdiction of one necessarily excludes the other. They therefore cannot act upon the same thing at the same time. To become a law, a bill must pass both houses. Nobody can gainsay this. It cannot pass either house otherwise than in the constitutionally prescribed manner. It must be "fully and distinctly read, on three different days," or, "in case of urgency," this rule must be dispensed with "by a vote of four-fifths of the members present, taken by yeas and nays," and entered upon the journal as to any bill passed in a different way, and the rule cannot be so dispensed with for more than one bill at a time. This is indisputable. The purpose of these provisions is best shown by their inevitable results. First, the journals of the two houses, not one, must show the passage of any given act, or it is no act. It can stand on no other foundation. Full and complete journal entries of one house do not suffice. Passage by one is not enough. Neither the Legislature nor the courts can give an act any other foundation or provide it any other substructure. The journals are made by the organic law, the sole and exclusive evidence of the existence of a statute, when the question of its enactment is carried to a final test. While some courts deny these journals the status of evidence, to be considered on such a question, this court has solemnly and repeatedly declared, not only that they are, but also that they are the best, controlling, and conclusive. In other words, some courts say they cannot go back of the signatures of the presiding officers of the two houses and the enrollment and impeach an alleged or apparent statute by showing lack of passage by either house; but that is not law in this state. Here, failure of the journal of either house to show passage of the alleged act is fatal. Passage by each house must affirmatively appear on its own journal and not otherwise. "Just as good" plans or schemes are inhibited. Substitution of equivalents is positively forbidden. Shilly-shallying, surprise, ambuscade, and uncertainty are completely, wisely, and justly fenced out. As these requirements are simple and apparently arbitrary, and the necessity or justification thereof is neither self-evident nor always perceptible by the masses of the people, occasional complaint of the restriction they impose is reasonably to be expected from interested and overzealous people, when their hopes, purposes, and expectations fail by reason of noncompliance therewith.

The reason for the other clause of the Constitution, prescribing the mode of passage through each house, is likewise discernible in the result of its operation. The two houses are separate but co-ordinate bodies, as I have stated. The constitutional plan is to pass bills through these two houses successively. They do not act at the same time upon the same matter, and cannot in the nature of things. The jurisdiction of one excludes that of the other, for the time being, just as occupancy of space by one body excludes therefrom all others. The Constitution, therefore, plainly requires successive passage of bills through them. A bill originating in the House must have its three days there and then its three days in the Senate. This aggregate of six days for passage through the two houses may be cut to five by giving the House bill its first reading in the Senate on the day of its final passage by the House; but five days necessarily constitute the minimum period. This period of time and this order of action by the two houses are contemplated and imperatively required, unless the constitutional rule is set aside by a vote of four-fifths of the members present in one or the other of the two houses, and, when it is so set aside, the fact must appear by a yeas and nays vote entered upon the journal. One of two things must appear from the journals in the case of every statute. Five days must have been consumed in consideration thereof on the floors of the two houses, acting successively, or the requirement must have been dispensed with in a prescribed manner. Thus, in all ordinary cases, five days at least are required for the passage of a bill through both houses and as many more as result from omission to bring it up in either house for consideration by reason of neglect, choice, or impossibility due to the pendency of other business. The obvious purpose of this is to compel devotion of a prescribed period of time and order of action to every bill that becomes a law, as a means of preventing hasty and inconsiderate action in the high and important function of making laws, affecting in every instance somebody's interests and in some way. Might a shorter period or a different course of action be as efficacious or sufficiently so? That is not a question for this or any other court, or the Legislature, or either house thereof. It was for the sole and exclusive determination of the people of this state in adopting the Constitution, and we have their decision. To hold compliance with this provision unnecessary, or to allow the Legislature to ignore or evade it, when the inhibitive power of the courts is properly invoked, is worse than judicial legislation, a thing wholly indefensible and unjustifiable. It amounts to judicial amendment of the Constitution itself, an assumption of power having no shadow or pretext of justification in law, reason, or morals.

The method of the alleged passage of House Bill 161, if sustained, reduces the minimum period for passage of a bill by both houses from five to three days, without a suspension of the constitutional rule in the constitutional way by either house. It may originate in one, have its three readings there on separate days and, on the day of its passage there, be transmitted to the other, there substituted for a similar or like bill, on second reading, and passed. This amounts to a plain, palpable, and radical violation of the constitutional plan. The public is thus denied two-fifths of the time allowed by the Constitution for aiding or resisting the enactment of laws. As I have said, somebody's interests are always affected in some way by every piece of proposed legislation. Those who are so affected have a perfect right to resist it by lawful methods. The Constitution guarantees to citizens the right of petition, and the clause thereof now under consideration was inserted to protect that right, as well as to prevent hasty action by either of the two houses of the Legislature. The new method breaks up and confuses both proponents and opponents in and out of the Legislature, dividing their time, attention, and efforts and cutting off two-fifths of the period of delay reserved by the Constitution for deliberation. To say this works no practical injury is not a logical or just answer to this obviously material abridgment or denial of a constitutional right, nor a reasonable exoneration from the charge of judicial amendment of the Constitution. The people made the Constitution and reserved to themselves the sole power of amendment thereof. To its provisions they made the legislative, the executive, and the courts subordinate, withheld from all of them the power of amendment, and allowed to the courts only the right and power of interpretation by the application of legal rules and principles. Though a man may be palpably guilty of deliberate murder by poison so that a jury could do him no possible good, the trial court could not deny him a jury for that reason. A plaintiff in ejectment would be allowed to recover a mere worthless hole in the ground a thousand feet deep, or an utterly valueless rock pinnacle, though it were apparent the recovery could do him no sort of good. Legal principles forbid such a reply. Even though it be conceded that three days are as good as five for the constitutional purpose, the courts cannot alter the rule. The senators opposed to the bill in question were entitled to two days more of time to make their efforts successful, and the Constitution required both friends and foes of the measure to let that time elapse before passing it. Had that been done, it might never have even ostensibly passed the Senate—certainly would not have done so, for, on the second day after its alleged passage, the sentiment of that body had so far changed as to carry a motion to reconsider the vote of alleged passage, and to have formally rejected the bill, if the House had returned it as it should have done. So the new method, if sustained, has passed a bill which could not have passed under the constitutional plan.

That House Bill No. 161 and Senate Bill No. 99 were identical in language and provision is a matter of no significance or import whatever. They were nevertheless separate, distinct, and strange bills. One was a House bill and the other a Senate bill. Until the date of the transmission of the House bill to the Senate, these two bills could by no possibility have been in the same house, notwithstanding the identity of their subject-matter and terms. They were as purely distinct as two bills in equity, identical in subject-matter and terms, filed in courts of different states. Identity of bill does not, cannot, result from identity of matter. That is a legal impossibility. The name and identity of a bill are determined by reference to the house in which it originates and in no other way. The House bill could not constitutionally pass the Senate otherwise than as a House bill. It was passed, if at all, under that name, number, and description. The Senate bill was laid aside—name, number, and all. As a House bill, the Constitution required three readings thereof on separate days in the Senate. The two previous readings of the Senate bill constituted no compliance with this requirement. Those readings were not readings of the House bill. The House bill was not then in the Senate and had not reached a legislative stage, authorizing it to be sent there. It was neither actually, legally, nor potentially in the Senate at that time. The utmost that can be said is that, while the House was deliberating on its bill No. 161, the Senate partially considered another bill, having the same purpose. That was not action on the same bill. Obviously House Bill No. 161 had only one constitutional reading in the Senate, erroneously described as its third reading. Thus technicality, logic, and constitutional purpose all agree that the new method is unsound.

The possible suggestion of lack of express terms in the Constitution, inhibiting circumvention of its plain purpose, as opposing this view, is met by the stubborn fact that it fixes the period of deliberation, manifesting indubitable intent and purpose. What is within the intent of a statute or contract is a part of it and cannot be judicially eliminated. The same rule applies in the interpretation of Constitutions. That which is clearly within the intent of the people in adopting a Constitution can be neither legislated nor adjudicated out of it. Express terms are not necessary. "It is not always necessary, in order to render a statute invalid, that it should contravene some express provision of the Constitution; if the act is inhibited by the general scope and purpose of the instrument, it is as much invalid as though prohibited by the express letter of some of its provisions." 8 Cyc. 729. The soundness of this proposition is apparent, for the reason that the rule of liberal construction applies to Constitutions. The rule of strict construction is applied only to penal statutes and contracts. When the purpose of a constitutional provision, not penal in character, is ascertained, it must be enforced, just as in the case of statutes and contracts. A Legislature can no more defeat a constitutional purpose by shifts, devices, and subterfuges than it can nullify plain words by such makeshifts. "The established rules of construction applicable to statutes also apply to the construction of Constitutions." 8 Cyc. 729. The majority opinion narrows the purpose of this clause, saying it is only "to inform legislators and people of legislation proposed by a bill, and prevent hasty legislation." I say it does more than that. It gives legislators and people five days' time for effort, for and against the proposed legislation. Why give information without time to make the information subserve some purpose? We are not asked to give the provision a construction "so rigid as to go beyond its purpose, and defeat legislation." I am unable to perceive the harmony of these two quotations from the same opinion. If this five-day period was given to "prevent hasty legislation," the public and legislators are entitled to the whole thereof, not barely more than half of it. The provision contemplates more than mere notice. Each of the three readings required is for a purpose well defined in parliamentary law. If notice were the only purpose, that could be given more effectively in other ways, as by publication. The vital question here is whether there has been legislation, not whether legislation is to stand or fall.

An exhaustive search has disclosed but a single precedent for the position taken by my Brethren on this branch of the case, and that is a poorly considered decision in Archibald v. Clark, 112 Tenn. 532, 82 S. W. 310. The opinion in that case, on a question of such importance, consists of a few printed lines, in which no reference whatever is made to the purpose of the constitutional clause, the wide scope of its operation, or its wholesome effect as a safeguard against reckless legislation. The court contents itself with the simple observation that the legislative practice in that state justifies the construction it gives that clause. In so doing, it wholly ignores the legal principle inhibiting variation of plain terms in any instrument, even a simple contract, by conduct or contemporaneous or practical construction, and also the almost universally accepted doctrine that constitutional provisions are mandatory, and the obvious necessity of so regarding them, since to hold them merely directory is to authorize the Legislature to ignore them at will. This precedent is not binding authority upon this court nor in harmony with the principles applied here and throughout the country generally in the interpretation of Constitutions. The constitutional clause in question is mandatory. Price v. Moundsville, 43 W. Va. 523, 27 S. E. 218, 64 Am. St. Rep. 878; 26 A. & E. Enc. L. 539. "The great majority of all constitutional provisions are mandatory, and it is only such provisions as, from the language used, in connection with the objects in view, may be said to be addressed to the discretion of some person or department, that courts have held to be directory; and these provisions in most cases have been those addressed to the legislative department with reference to the mode of procedure in the enactment of laws as above stated. But provisions of this kind will be treated as mandatory if the language used justifies it, even though the proceedings to which they refer are but formal." 8 Cyc. 762. By every legitimate test, the provision of our Constitution, concerning the reading of bills, is mandatory. The effectuation of its obvious and high purpose demands the construction. It is mandatory in form, saying "no bill shall become a law until it has been fully and distinctly read, on three different days in each house," unless, etc. Then the requirement can be dispensed with in only one way. This is positive, direct, and emphatic language, leaving no room for evasion in any form. The doctrine of this court on this subject is expressed in Capito v. Topping, 65 W. Va. 587, 64 S. E. 845, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1089, as follows: "Being organic in character, constitutional provisions stand on a higher plane than statutes, and, as a rule, are mandatory, prescribing exact or exclusive times and methods of doing acts permitted or required." The following language of the opinion in that case applies well here: "It (the provision there under consideration) is alternative and emphatic, saying, if a certain thing is not done, another shall happen. Unlike many other provisions, it does not stop with the prescription of the affirmative act, leaving the consequence of failure to inference. It declares the sequence." That is the real meaning of the language of this clause. If a bill is read on three different days in each house and passed, it becomes a law; but, if this be omitted, it cannot do so, unless such readings are dispensed with in the prescribed manner. I here apply this doctrine or principle of construction, not in refutation of any express declaration in the Tennessee case, or the majority opinion in this case, to the effect that the clause is directory, but rather to demonstrate that the decision cannot be justified or sustained upon that ground, as well as to show the high and sacred character of constitutional provisions and the spirit in which they are dealt with by courts.

As already stated, the lone Tennessee case professedly stands upon the doctrine of practical, contemporaneous, or legislative construction. That doctrine cannot be justly invoked here for two reasons. The uniform legislative construction in this state has been the other way. Substituted bills, originating in the house other than the one making the substitution, have always been treated as separate or new bills in the substituting house and given their three readings on different days after substitution, until the session at which the bill in question here is alleged to have been passed. If the doctrine applies, this clause has been so construed as to make the action on this bill ineffective to pass it, for almost a half a century. In the second place, the language and purpose of the clause is clear, plain, and free from ambiguity, wherefore the principle is wholly inapplicable. May v. Topping, 65 W. Va. 656, 664, 64 S. E. 848.

The majority opinion raises a vital question as to the character of the action of the Senate in substituting the House bill, without pausing to settle it by the application of any legal principle, namely, whether, by that action, the House bill became an amendment to the Senate bill or a new or original bill in the Senate. Identity of terms in the body of the two bills is suggested as a ground of incompatibility with the theory of substitution. The opinion says, "We can hardly call it a substitute because it is identical in matter with Senate Bill? Then an hypothesis is stated and an assumption made. Supposing it to be a substitute, the opinion says "A substitute is an amendment," and then follows the legal proposition that a bill need not go back for repeated readings after an amendment. If identity of matter precludes the legal view of substitution, it certainly precludes the legal theory of amendment. An amendment necessarily implies a change or alteration as to matter. Manifestly identity of matter is more inconsistent with the idea of amendment than that of substitution. Substitution does not necessarily involve an alteration as to matter, but amendment does. For mere convenience of expression, the action taken by the Senate may be, and such action often is called either or both, but, in substance and effect, it was neither. In law, fact, and logic, the Senate laid aside its own bill and proceeded to consider the House bill. If there was an amendment or substitution, it was not one, made in the form or under the conditions, attendant upon those considered in the opinions cited by Judge BRANNON. Every one of them was an amendment or substitute, made in the regular course of constitutional procedure. Not one of them was the substitution by one house of a bill passed by the other. In each and all the amended bill had its three readings in both houses, not three in one and only one in the other, as in this case. Such were the character and attendant circumstances of the substitute, to which the text incorrectly quoted from 28 A. & E. Enc. L. 540, applies. Such were the amendments and substitutes in People v. Thompson (Cal.) 7 Pac. 142; State v. Dillon, 42 Fla. 96, 28 South. 781, and Cleland v. Anderson, 66 Neb. 261, 92 N. W. 306, 96 N. W. 212, 98 N. W. 1075, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 136, and the text in 38 Cyc. 952.

Judge BRANNON says in his opinion the amended bill in Board v. Fowler, 50 La. Ann. 1358, 24 South. 809, had its three readings in the Senate, where it was amended by substituting a new draft of it made by a committee. Does he mean to say the other house had not previously, or did not subsequently, give the same bill its three readings? Of course he does not. He speaks only of what occurred in the Senate, assuming the procedure in the House to have been regular and unquestioned. Such was the character of the amendment or substitute involved in Miller & Gibson v. State, 3 Ohio St. 475. Judge BRANNON correctly says so. As the bill had had its three readings, the court said it was immaterial that its terms and provisions were altered in the course of the readings. Parliamentary readings are provided for the very purpose of perfecting bills by alteration. In that case, the court said the name given the substitute, "New Bill," was an immaterial matter. It was none the less an amendment. This language from the opinion makes the position of the court clear: "When the subject or proposition of the bill is thereby wholly changed, it would seem to be proper to read the amended bill three times and on different days; but, when there is no such vital alteration, three readings are not required." This says only that three readings after amendment are not required. It does not say three readings or any readings of the bill may be dispensed with. Nelson v. Haywood, 91 Tenn. 596, 20 S. W. 1, involved nothing more than the validity of the adoption of a conference agreement by both Houses, settling differences between them, arising upon a bill regularly and successively passed by each, after its three constitutional readings in each. The only other authorities cited by Judge BRANNON, as applicable to this branch of the case, are note 30, 36 Cyc. 956, and Gaines v. Horrigan, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 608, dealing with the necessity of concurrence in an amendment. That has nothing to do with a case of the kind of substitution we have here. The doctrine is there applied to a bill that had had its three readings in the House of its origin and then three additional readings in the other.

Whether such of these decisions as dispose of substitute bills are sound may be very well doubted. A substitute is not a simple or ordinary amendment. What we have here is in reality neither a substitute nor an amendment, I repeat; but, if it were, it would be more than a mere amendment. In congressional procedure it is called an "amendment in the nature of a substitute," and treated as an original bill. "Under the practice of the House for many years, where a substitute is reported by a committee for a bill, the substitute alone is considered; the original bill being without objection laid on the table. If there be objection, then the original bill is sent to the proper calendar, and the proposed substitute treated as an 'amendment in the nature of a substitute.' The substitute is read a first and second time, is numbered, and becomes to all intents and purposes an original bill. This has been found much more convenient than the old practice when bills were not printed as now. Formerly it was the practice to treat a substitute as an 'amendment in the nature of a substitute,' viz., by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the matter proposed or recommended by the committee in lieu of that referred." Con. Man. Dig. Rules & Pr. 2d Session 50th Cong. pp. 491, 492. The details of the old practice are not so fully indicated as those of the new; but, as the new is simpler and involves additional readings as in the case of an original bill, the old must have involved that and something more. As general parliamentary law requires a substitute to be treated as an original bill, we may well say the framers of the state Constitution contemplated such treatment. In using the word "bill" they meant a bill in the parliamentary sense, and, as a substitute, wholly wiping out original matter, not merely altering it, is in parliamentary law the equivalent of an original bill, it cannot reasonably be assumed they did not intend a substitute to be so treated. Parliamentary law as defined and administered in the national Congress is generally observed and applied in the state Legislatures. Our own Legislature adopts the rules of the national House of Representatives. So do other Legislatures, possibly all of them. The national Congress is confessedly the highest and best authority on the subject. Following it, I should say, notwithstanding the three or four state decisions, treating a substitute as an ordinary amendment, without even noting the radical difference between them, that a substitute is in all substantial respects an original bill, calling for the procedure on such a bill, and therefore a "bill" within the meaning of this constitutional clause.

While this conclusion as to the character of a substitute bill is, in my opinion, sound, it is not essential to the correctness of my view as to constitutional procedure on a bill passed by one house and substituted for another bill in the other house; but it harmonizes with the manifest intent and purpose of the constitutional provision and aids the effort to reach the true interpretation thereof. It expresses its reasons, intent, and spirit, constituting its substance. A bill passed by one house and substituted in the other is more than an amendment, more than a substitute, whatever the correct procedure as to amended and substituted bills may be. If an amendment or a substitute or both, it is in addition thereto a bill of the other house, falling under the constitutional rule requiring successive passage by the substituting house in accordance with a constitutional formula, to give the constitutional period of deliberation. Whatever we may say of the decisions relied upon in the majority opinion, not one of them shortens that period or violates the constitutional reservation of time. Therefore, conceding them to be sound, for the sake of argument, they constitute no basis for the position this court has taken. This very core or heart of the question is not noticed by the majority opinion.

This decision permits the Legislature to clip off 40 per cent. of the constitutional period of legislative deliberation, not for anti-saloon legislation only, but for all sorts of legislation, affecting life, liberty, industry, society, property, taxation, religion, and every other subject within the pale of legislative authority. This clause cannot be construed in one way for one class of legislative bills or acts and in a different way for other classes. Its interpretation for one is its interpretation for all. The people, in adopting the Constitution, put in this clause as a safeguard against hasty and inconsiderate legislation of all kinds, and so prescribed an arbitrary rule, deeming it to be necessary. This decision opens the door wide to the accomplishment of legislation by strategy, confusion in division of forces between the two houses, surprise, and accident. It displaces a single, plain, orderly, consistent and uniform method with a double, confused, indirect, and uncertain one. If this does not amount to deviation, injury, and abridgment of constitutional right, I am unable to comprehend an infraction of a constitutional guaranty.

For these reasons, I am firmly of the opinion that the bill never constitutionally passed the Senate, nor became a law, nor reached a stage authorizing enrollment, or signature by the presiding officers of the two houses or the Governor, or publication as an act of the Legislature.

But, for the purpose of argument, conceding it to have had three readings in the Senate, as well as in the House, reconsideration by the Senate of the vote by which it had passed, within the time allowed therefor by Senate Rule 52, rendered it a bill unpassed by the Senate, and as ineffectual as if it never had been passed. The contrary of this conclusion is asserted chiefly on the ground or claim that the Senate had lost jurisdiction to reconsider by communicating its passage to the House and permitting it to be enrolled and signed by the Speaker and the President of the Senate. The contention is based upon what I am constrained to say, with due deference, is a misapprehension of the meaning of observations in Jefferson's Manual and certain decisions and some dicta, but no actual decision of any court. Jefferson's Manual was prepared by Thomas Jefferson between the year 1796, when he was elected Vice President and was soon to enter upon his duties as presiding officer of the United States Senate, and the expiration of his term, March 4, 1801. Those were embryotic days of American parliamentary law. It had not been settled or perfected in any sense. The Manual was a mere text-book, founded largely upon English parliamentary law, in which reconsideration was unknown, as the Manual itself says. Section 43. It is not to be expected that everything he then wrote on the subject of reconsideration has been accepted, and, in fact, it has not. To a limited extent only, his Manual was adopted by the House of Representatives September 15, 1837, and not earlier. Its principles and rules were adopted in all cases in which they were applicable and "not inconsistent with the standing rules and orders of the House and the joint rules of the Senate and House." That work recognizes the right of reconsideration under general American parliamentary law in the absence of a special rule on the subject. Whenever the general doctrine of the Manual conflicts with the special rule, the rule prevails. That is expressly provided by the resolution of adoption. Jefferson's view of the general law, not a rule such as is involved here, was stated as follows: "The rule permitting a reconsideration of a question affixing to it no limitation of time or circumstance, it may be asked whether there is no limitation? If, after a vote, the paper on which it is passed have been parted with, there can be no reconsideration; as if a vote has been for the passage of a bill, and the bill has been sent to the other house." It was no more than mere speculation, conjecture, or opinion as to limitations then undefined. He cited no precedent and does not assert that a vote of passage cannot be reconsidered after the bill has been sent to the other house. He merely instances that as an example under his supposition or personal view. When, in the course of their legislative experience, it became necessary for the two houses of the Congress to settle and determine this question, both settled it in a manner contrary to Mr. Jefferson's view, by providing for reconsideration of any and all questions carried or lost, and have interpreted and applied these rules so as to include votes by which bills have been passed, after the bills have gone out of the possession of the houses. The House rule says: "When a motion has been made and carried or lost, it shall be in order for any member of the majority, on the same or succeeding day, to move for the reconsideration thereof," etc. The Senate rule says: "When a question has been decided by the Senate, any senator voting with the prevailing side may, on the same day or on either of the next two days of actual session thereafter, move a reconsideration," etc. Neither of these rules says in express terms the right of reconsideration thereunder shall extend to a vote by which a bill has passed, when the bill has gone out of the House, but both houses decide that the right extends to that class of votes and under those circumstances. See Con. Man. Dig. Rules & Pr. House Rep. 54 Congress, p. —.

Both houses of the national Congress, the best expositors of parliamentary law in America, have decided that there is no such implied limitation upon a rule making every question the subject of reconsideration, as this court here asserts, upon mere supposed dicta of courts, not deciding any such question, and acting in cases not involving it or a legislative decision thereof, and the observation of Mr. Jefferson in his discussion of general law and not the interpretation of any express rule on the subject. The second section of Senate Rule 13, assuming the general terms of the first section above quoted to be broad enough to include such a reconsideration as was had in this case, says: "When a bill, resolution, report, amendment, order or message, upon which a vote has been taken, shall have gone out of the possession of the Senate, and been communicated to the House of Representatives, the motion to reconsider shall be accompanied by a motion to request the House to return the same, which last motion shall be acted upon immediately, and without debate, and, if determined in the negative, shall be a final disposition of the motion to reconsider." This is a mere limitation upon the right to reconsider a vote of passage, after communication of the fact to the House, arising under the first section of the rule, already quoted, saying any question decided may be reconsidered. Its purpose is to dispose of two questions by one vote in order to save time. Nor does it submit the question of recall to the House. On the contrary, it assumes duty and obligation upon the part of the House to return the bill, should the motion to reconsider prevail. The pleasure of the House is not considered. The House rule has no such additional provision. It reconsiders and then recalls the passed bill from the Senate. The digest of the Fifty-Fourth Congress expressly says this is the practice under the House rule in just such cases as this. It also says the House may reconsider without having the papers pertaining to the subject-matter of the vote to be reconsidered before it. The text of the digest I refer to says, in such case, the bill is recalled after the adoption of the motion to reconsider the vote by which it was passed, and then the form of the resolution of recall is given. This is plain, ordinary English, insusceptible of variation in meaning. These are the precedents of which the majority opinion says: "Precedents or instances there are of the federal Senate and House, where one body has, on request by another, returned bills or resolutions." They go beyond that, saying that, under rules such as the one here involved, as interpreted by the greatest bodies of parliamentarians in America, a motion to reconsider the vote by which a bill has been finally passed is in order and may be acted upon and adopted and made effective after the bill has gone physically out of the House or Senate, as the case may be, and before its return. They completely cut the foundation from under the majority opinion, and utterly destroy the basis of the decision. No case can be found actually deciding that a motion to reconsider a vote of passage after the bill has left the House is too late. No court says so. Legislative, parliamentary law and practice say it is not too late. I agree that the question is one of law, but we must use applicable law, actual law, not inapplicable decisions, not mere speculation aside from cases in hand. Parliamentary law must be in or entirely out on this question. If Jefferson's Manual is to come in, the legislative practice under it must be considered also. It is only in for what it is worth, and, as it has been interpreted and applied by reputable parliamentary bodies, it does not override an express inconsistent rule. The precedents say the action of the Senate, in reconsidering its vote of passage, destroyed that vote, and the bill thereby became an unpassed bill, even though it was not then in the custody of the Senate, and that there is no such implied limitation upon the rule, governing reconsideration, as is here asserted; wherefore the refusal of the House to return the bill was wholly immaterial.

It might, in violation of duty, refuse to do so, but could not thereby tie the hands of the Senate or destroy its constitutional powers. Such refusal could only prevent further action on the bill by the Senate. The Senate rule, authorized by the Constitution, reserved power in the Senate to undo its vote of passage, no matter where the bill was, even though it were in the hands of the Governor. So says the Congress of the United States. The Senate, therefore, had passed the bill, subject to its reserved right to rescind its action, and did rescind it. If the House did not choose to return it and allow its friends in the Senate to attempt to pass it again, so much the worse for the bill and its friends. It could not arbitrarily and of its own strength make it law by its mere claim or declaration of opinion. I do not say the Senate could have compelled the House to return the bill; but the refusal of the latter to do so could not abrogate nor render ineffectual the Senate rule, reserving power to nullify the vote of passage. The bill, after that annulment, had not passed. That being its condition, it was no law. I agree that a law once fully and finally passed, and gone beyond the period reserved for reconsideration, cannot be recalled or annulled by one house and probably not by both, otherwise than by a new act of repeal; but that is not this case. This bill had never reached that stage. The only pretext for the contention that it had is the assumption of an implied limitation upon the rule, reserving right of reconsideration, and I have shown there is no such limitation. There being none, the reconsideration killed the bill before it got out of the power of the Senate. It, therefore, never so far passed the Senate as to become a law, for the approval of the Governor or any other purpose. In common parlance, there was "a string" to the Senate's vote of passage, attached and retained by that body under authority conferred by the Constitution of the state, saying, "Each house shall determine the rules of its proceedings." Senate Rule 52 says "any question" may be reconsidered. Could any language be broader. In parliamentary law and practice almost everything is called a question. The term "question" is broader than "motion," "resolution," or almost any other that could have been used. The presiding officer brings on a vote of final passage of a bill by the explanatory announcement, "The question is on the passage of the bill," and then puts the question by saying, "Shall the bill pass?" Does not this fall technically, lexically, substantially, rationally, and conclusively within the terms of a rule reserving to itself power to reconsider the vote on "any question"?

That power to reconsider under this rule extends to a vote passing a bill is not denied by my Associates. They only deny applicability or availability of the rule, because the bill was not physically in the Senate at the time. The rule makes no such exception. On the contrary, the terms preclude it, saying a motion to reconsider any question may be made at any time within two business days thereafter. The two-day limitation is the only one. Its presence impliedly says there shall be no other. The Senate, having formulated and adopted the rule, gave its attention to the subject of limitations upon the power of reconsideration, and inserted one only. Presumptively, therefore, it intended no other. If it had intended such a one as is here claimed, the rule would have been made to read, "A motion to reconsider any question within two business days thereafter shall be in order or may be made, provided the bill on which the vote to be reconsidered was taken has not passed out of the custody of the Senate." The reading of a rule, having no such limitation, as if it had, must arise from some sort of necessity. What legal principle justifies it? Does the Constitution require it? No, there is no pretense of any constitutional term, clause, provision, or purpose requiring such a limitation or forbidding the scope of the rule, as plainly indicated by its terms. Is there a rule of public policy requiring it? None at all. Nobody has suggested, or is able to show, anything of the kind? Has any parliamentary body, except the House of Delegates in this one instance and contrary to its own practice for half a century, ever construed such a rule as being subject to such an implied limitation? Not at all. There is no reference to any such thing or anything else, calling for it. Now I respectfully submit that an implication must stand upon some reasonable basis, something other than the mere ipse dixit of a court. It is not the province of the courts to make law for a Legislature, nullify its rules or otherwise restrain what are so plainly its powers and rights that no reasonable ground for denial thereof can be stated. To justify either a limitation or an enlargement, by implication, the probability of intent to make it must be so strong that the contrary thereof cannot be reasonably supposed.

The interpretation of the constitutional clause, commanding "each house" to "determine the rules of its proceedings," and the rules adopted, pursuant to that mandate, must be evolved from consideration of the constitutional purpose, and the reasonableness and necessity of the rules, if any, as a means of securing mature and careful consideration of, and action upon, proposed laws, correction of errors and inadvertencies, and consequent protection of public and private interests and rights. The Constitution by this provision as to rules and others makes each house sovereign in its own sphere. No power on earth can compel it to yield its assent to any proposed law. It may pass or reject any bill at its own pleasure. No provision says its assent may not be given conditionally or subject to the power of recall.

Its absolute unrestrained, unlimited, and uncontrollable power to give or withhold its assent necessarily includes the power to give a conditional or qualified assent. The whole includes every part, the greater, the lesser. This is a proposition universally recognized in the sciences, in logic, and in law. The rule, reserving right to reconsider any question within two business days after the decision thereof, logically and necessarily qualifies the assent of the Senate to any bill, resolution, or other measure it passes. It passes subject to this power, not of recall, but rescission or annulment of its vote of passage. That done, the Senate stands ready to further consider the measure and recalls it for that purpose. If the House, favoring the measure, refuses to return it, its action affects it and its measure only. It does not thereby hurt the Senate or restrain its powers. That body can redraft and pass a new bill on the same subject in the same or different form. This interpretation of the rule reserves to the Senate its sovereign power over a matter completely and necessarily within its province. The effect of this decision is to enable either house, notwithstanding express reservation of such power to correct errors of any kind by the other, to prevent the exercise thereof. Prevention of the enforcement of such a rule by refusal to return the bill is tantamount to denial of the right and power of such other house. What can it avail either house to possess a power the other can prevent the exercise of? Such a power is no power. This decision, interpreting the action of the House in refusing to return the bill as a nullification of the effect of the Senate's vote of reconsideration, makes the power of the Senate to adopt and enforce that rule no power at all in the very teeth of the Constitution and despite its plain and emphatic terms.

And it does this unnecessarily. The retention of the bill by the House can be sustained without denial or abridgment of the Senate's powers, as I have shown. It defeated further consideration of the bill, without annulling the action of the Senate. Is not a vote passing a bill a proceeding of the Senate? Is not the rule for reconsideration a rule for, or relating to, votes; votes being proceedings? Are not the terms of the rule broad enough to include all of the Senate's votes? Does not the Constitution say, "Each house shall determine the rules of its proceedings"? Can that be read as authorizing the House to say what the rules of the Senate shall be, or the Senate to say what the rules of the House shall be, or how either shall construe its rules? Does not this decision plainly allow the House to determine for itself and its purposes the meaning and effect of the Senate's rule? The House had no part in the making of the rule. Under the Constitution it could not have. That instrument does not confer power upon both houses to make the rules for each. It confers that power upon each for itself and not for the other. It says each house shall determine (make and construe) the rules of its proceedings. The language is a command to the Senate to make its own rules and to the House not to interfere in that action, and vice versa. Under the same authority, the House adopted a rule for itself on the same subject, and each of them, for more than four decades, interpreted, acted upon, and applied its own rule, just as the Senate did in the case of this bill, and each recognized such interpretation by the other as sound and binding upon it. To hold both houses to this settled construction of the reconsideration rule is the mere application of indisputably established principles. Assuming the rule to be joint and ambiguous as to the right to reconsider, under the circumstances here stated, though it is neither, the conduct of the two houses for so long a time settles the question in favor of the conclusion of the Senate. If two parties make a contract uncertain in its terms and provisions, and then, by their conduct, agree upon its meaning, their conduct, as matter of law, determines its construction. This case is much clearer and stronger. We have no element of contract or agreement here. The Senate, being sole maker of this rule, has the sole right to expound it. Its interpretation thereof has been uniform from the beginning.

Is there any reason or necessity for a rule, reserving such power of review and correction? Denial thereof is the assertion of the infallibility of men, their inability to err in judgment, immunity from involuntary action as the result of deception and fraud, and impossibility of oversight of clerical errors. It is to assert of legislators a higher degree of sagacity, mentality, alacrity, industry, and ability of every sort, than the members of this or any other court of last resort in this country is deemed to possess. All of them have acknowledged power to reserve right to rehear cases, after decision, and annul final decisions, when such action is necessary to the proper application of the law and effectuation of the legal rights of parties. Wise and perfect as judges are supposed to be, it is a principle of universal law that any court, trial or appellate, may alter its decision at any time before the adjournment of the term at which it was rendered. It is the practice of this court to suspend all of its final orders, judgments, and decrees, rendered close to an adjournment, for the allowance of the filing of petitions for rehearing, after the adjournment. Nobody has the hardihood to question the necessity, wisdom, or justice of these reservations of power to correct errors in final dispositions of cases. These are all single cases, most of them affecting only two individuals. The action of the Senate or House, in passing a bill often affects all the citizens of the state and always a large number. It does not merely decide a case; it makes a law for the state. It is an infinitely broader and graver transaction than the mere decision of a controversy between two citizens. In so far as precedents make law, it is of the same character; but erroneous precedents may be set aside by the courts. Erroneous statutes cannot be. In this analogy, emphasized by the difference in character between the two functions or processes, absolute and undeniable necessity for reservation of corrective power is found. I do not read the majority opinion as plainly asserting the contrary. It merely ignores the subject, and, in effect, denies the proposition.

The theory of the opinion, though not stated, seems to be that a branch of the Legislature cannot or should not, for some reason, reserve this power of correction by a general rule, holding all final votes for a very limited time, two days in this instance, but must decide, once for all, instant and at its peril, on the passage of a bill, whether it desires, or probably will desire, to reconsider the vote, and pass a special resolution or adopt a special motion, forbidding the ministerial officers from taking the bill out of the House. This is simply an assumption of power on the part of the judiciary to make rules for the Legislature, or tell that body how it must make them, which amounts to the same thing, in the face of a constitutional provision saying, "Each house shall determine the rules of its proceedings." In conferring that jurisdiction upon the legislative houses, the Constitution denied it to the courts. Which of two plans for accomplishing a legislative purpose is the better is not a question for any court. Having unlimited discretionary power over the subject, the Senate or House may make its own choice, and the court should be more willing to respect its action in so doing than that of petty ministerial or judicial officers. The binding force of which is here acknowledged daily. Moreover, I do not see how a court could complain of the adoption, by a legislative body, of the corrective plan or method, employed for the purpose by the court itself, if it had supervisory power over such body. All court decisions are subject to correction until the end of the term. The courts do not take upon themselves the inconvenience and labor of specifying, as they go along, what particular decisions are so far beyond suspicion of error, as to be safely allowed to become final and irreviewable, and what are not and so ought to be held open, and thus expose themselves to liability to do irremediable injury to litigants. This court has never done so. Its practice is exactly the contrary. Its general rule is to hold all; the rare exception to let one go beyond recall without allowing time for a petition to rehear. Legislative experience has settled the relative merits of these two plans; but, if it had not, the court has no jurisdiction of the subject-matter.

Carrying the inquiry as to reason and necessity further, I note the radical difference between legislative action and other kinds. Entry into a contract is wholly voluntary and free from compulsion in any form. So is the action of every court. The Governor, in approving or disapproving a bill, has the matter wholly in his own hands. In none of these instances are there rules by which the actor can be hurried or forced into a hasty decision. Nobody can act for him in any manner, form, or degree. He takes his own time and registers his own deliberate conclusion. He is not surrounded on every hand by other pending measures, backed by energy, industry, and skill, eager to push them forward at every opportunity. The situation of the legislator is different. His time is not his own. It is everybody's. He must watch a hundred things at one time. He is surrounded with dangers on every hand and burdened with things innumerable to be done within very little time. He is in constant war, and as often on the defensive as the offensive. Under the quorum and majority rules, his measures may be defeated or those of his opponents advanced or passed in his mere momentary absence. A bare majority of a bare majority, a small minority of the whole body, may, in the temporary absence of members, necessary and unavoidable, rush a ruinous measure through one house, send it out to the other, and make the action irrevocable against the will of a large majority of the whole body, under the doctrine declared by this decision. Thus it opens the door to a species of legislative trickery and fraud, abhorrent and degrading on its very face, and possible of achievement despite the utmost diligence and faithfulness on the part of members. In view of such differences in character, circumstances, and possibilities, the reasons for holding the deliberate contracts of parties and actions of Governors and courts binding and irrevocable, after stated periods, fixed by common or organic law, do not apply to legislative bodies. It cannot truthfully be said the conditions and circumstances are the same. Hence the reasoning cannot be the same, nor can the cases be assimilated.

No case decides the question we have here in accordance with the majority opinion. It never has been done. It has been held that a Governor, after passing on a bill and placing it out of his possession, cannot withdraw or annul his action; but that is not this case. For that holding, there are the reasons I have given, inherent in the difference in situation and circumstances, and an additional, conclusive one; the emphatic language of the Constitution saying the bill shall be a law as soon as he has signed it. It does not say a bill shall be deemed to have passed a house as soon as a vote of passage shall have been taken therein. The Constitution leaves it to the House to say when and how its action shall become final, by authorizing it to determine the rules of its proceedings. As to the Governor, there is no such provision. The rule declared by my Associates would irrevocably bind the house first passing a bill and sending it to the other, notwithstanding its continued pendency in the Legislature, as mere proposed legislation, not law. This doctrine converts the Legislature into a holsting jack or capstan, with its ratchet, cogwheel, and pawl, falling successively into the cogs, and making every act irrevocable, whether the result of error, trickery, fraud, or what not. Why? No reason has been, or can be, given for it, and no authority, while all reason and all authority are against it. For finality and irrevocability of the click of the pawl in the jack or capstan, there is imperative reason. For the use of the equivalent of such an instrument in legislation, there is no reason. It can effect nothing but unintentional wrong, injury, and public humiliation and shame, as it would in the administration of the law by the courts. What sustains or applies it here, in the opinion of a majority of this court? No decision, no precedent, nothing but a mere fiction, suggested by a few judges, without investigation, and arising from misapprehension of the true import of their words. As the law of mechanics permits the introduction or use of no instrument or appliance, not reasonably necessary or useful, so the civil law allows no fiction and adopts no arbitrary rule, except for the effectuation of just, reasonable, and useful purposes. Against the adoption of this injurious fiction, I set up here the legal principle, just stated, and cite the authority for it. Hussman v. Durham, 165 U. S. 144, 17 Sup. Ct. 253, 41 L. Ed. 664; Gibson v. Chouteau, 13 Wall. 92, 20 L. Ed. 534; State v. Lumber Co., 64 W. Va. 673, 697, 63 S. E. 372.

Failure of analogy, so much relied upon, to sustain the position of the majority here, is almost as obvious as that of reason and authority. Final judgment and adjournment of the court ends the jurisdiction. Presentation of a passed bill to the Governor may be the beginning of another, like the granting of an appeal. But the situation of this bill at the time of the reconsideration was by no means like that of the judgment or the presented bill. Transmission out of the House is not a final act, and does not convert a mere legislative proposition into law. The jurisdiction of the Legislature has not ceased. The session still continues, like a term of court, until adjournment. Legislative jurisdiction continues until that of the Governor begins. Could he force either house, or either house force the other, to present a bill to him, though it had passed both? By what process? Legislative jurisdiction not having ended, which house had it? Necessarily both, for the Legislature is composed of both. After passage the bill was the bill of both. The passed bill in the hands of that committee, an agency of the Senate as much as that of the House, was in the control of the Senate as much as of the House. Alleged transmission back to the House was no transmission. It amounted only to notification of Senate action. Before that bill got out of the hands of the joint committee into those of the Governor, a motion to reconsider was made and adopted. This effectually tied the hands of that committee. There was then a proceeding, relating to the bill, begun and completed in the Senate, before legislative jurisdiction ended, or gubernatorial jurisdiction commenced, as in State v. Savings Bank, 79 Conn. 141, 64 Atl. 5. That committee had only ministerial powers. It was not a department of government, independent, co-ordinate, or subordinate. It was composed of members of the two houses, necessarily cognizant of every action of each, pertaining to any matter intrusted to them, and subject to the power of both. It could act only by authority of both; it being a joint committee. In case of disagreement between its two principals, as in this case, it necessarily stood powerless to act. Otherwise one house would be authorized, by the mere creation of a joint committee, to overrule and control the other, a result utterly repugnant to, and inconsistent with, the basic and fundamental theory of the relation of the two houses. Thus utterly failing as a prop or stay to the position of my Associates, the doctrine of analogy, on the other hand, emphatically condemns it. This court and others, after rendition of final judgment, in hundreds and thousands of cases, suspend the orders and so hold the judgments open for inspection and correction of error after adjournment of the term. This judicial practice has its counterpart and equivalent in the legislative reconsideration rule, but not general parliamentary law possibly. So say the dicta of the courts in Wolfe v. McCaull, 76 Va. 876, and People v. Devlin, 33 N. Y. 269, 88 Am. Dec. 377, and this notwithstanding the bill has not only passed both houses, but gone into the hands of the Governor.

Having thus fully discussed this subdivision of this branch of the case, from the practical, philosophical, and legal points of view, and stated what impresses me as a necessary and inevitable conclusion, arising therefrom, I now undertake to make good the charge of virtual nullity and inapplicability of the authorities, relied upon in the majority opinion. This language of the opinion, professing to be a quotation from Jefferson's Manual: "After a bill, resolution, message, report, amendment, or motion upon which a vote was taken shall have gone out of the possession of the Senate"—is no part of that treatise. It is in a book containing the Manual, but it is no part of the Manual. That volume contains the Constitution of the United States; the Manual, a digest of decisions and the rules and practice of the House and some of the Senate rules and other things. The quoted language is taken from the second section of Senate Rule 13. Nor is it followed in that rule by the remainder of Judge BRANNON'S quoting sentence, or by anything of like or similar import, namely, "no motion to reconsider can be made." On the contrary, the remainder of that section of that rule necessarily implies that such a motion can be made. I here requote it: "And been communicated to the House of Representatives, the motion to reconsider shall be accompanied by a motion to request the House to return the same; which last motion shall be acted upon immediately, and without debate, and if determined in the negative, shall be a final disposition of the motion to reconsider." Plainly this is a limitation upon the power to reconsider, under such circumstances, reserved by the first section, not a denial thereof. That section gives power to reconsider any "question decided by the Senate"; but the second says, if the vote proposed to be reconsidered is one by which a bill has been passed, and the bill has gone to the House, the motion to reconsider shall be indirectly acted upon immediately. Disposition thereof does not await the convenience of senators or the Senate. The motion can be made at any time within the two days. The time is not cut down, nor need the motion be acted upon immediately further than to ascertain whether the Senate is willing to recall the bill. Nor does it say action on the motion must await the actual return of the bill. The plain object of this limitation is to prevent the bill from remaining out of the Senate, during the pendency of a motion made to reconsider its passage, which may be a period of weeks or months, that and nothing more. The rule of the House has no such provision, nor has rule 52 of the Senate of this state. They reserve the power generally, as does section 1 of the United States Senate Rule 13. The limitation in that rule is no part of general parliamentary law, and no part of the rule involved here, and, if it were, its terms permit immediate action on the motion to reconsider, after the adoption of the motion to request the return of the bill, and before it has been actually returned.

The text relied upon in 26 A. & E. Enc. L. p. 548, deals with an attempt on the part of the Legislature to recall a bill from the Governor, when the vote by which it passed has not been reconsidered by either house; its passage by both houses having been regular and complete in all respects, and the power to reconsider being absolutely gone by expiration of time. The cases cited in support of it are People v. Devlin, 33 N. Y. 269, 88 Am. Dec. 377, Wolfe v. McCaull, 76 Va. 876, People v. Hatch, 19 Ill. 288, and two Texas cases which I do not have at hand now. In People v. Devlin, the opinion of the court says: "All the constitutional requisites to pass the bill had been performed by the two houses of the Legislature; to make it a law required but the signature of the Governor, which it subsequently received. * * * All that further appears by the journals of the two houses in relation to this bill raise this question: After the passage of a bill in the legal and constitutional form by both houses of the Legislature, and the same has been transmitted by them to the Governor in the manner provided by the Constitution, have the two houses exhausted their power over it? Or can they, or can either of the said houses without the consent of the other, recall the bill by resolution, and re-vest themselves with power to further act upon it? * * * By rule 51 of the Assembly (Red Book of 1863, page 493) it is provided that 'no motion for reconsideration of any vote shall be in order unless on the same day or the following legislative day to that on which the decision proposed to be reconsidered took place.' No evidence is produced of a compliance with this positive law of the Assembly after the final passage of the bill before mentioned, and after receiving it back from the Governor." How could the court have decided the effect of the adoption of a motion to reconsider in a case in which it says there was no such motion? The language of the opinion and syllabus in that case must be read in the light of the facts and limited to the case in hand. It declined to say what its opinion or decision would have been, if either house had reconsidered the vote by which it had passed the bill, and the journal, showing it, could be regarded as evidence. Is that this case? Do we have any doubt that the journals of our Legislature are evidence? There were three distinguishing facts in that case: (1) Neither house had reconsidered its vote of passage; (2) the time for reconsideration had expired; and (3) the bill had been approved by the Governor. Wolfe v. McCaull was substantially the same kind of a case. The material facts are concisely stated in the syllabus, as follows: "The Legislature passed a bill, and presented it to the Governor under Constitution, art. 4, § 8; but, before he acted, it was recalled by a joint resolution. He returned it without approval or disapproval." No motion to reconsider was adopted. On the contrary, motions to reconsider the votes of passage had been made and voted down in each house. See the statement of this fact in the opinion, 76 Va. on page 884, near the bottom, and page 889, near the bottom. In People v. Hatch, both houses of the Legislature had regularly, completely, and formally passed a bill and presented it to the Governor. He approved it by mistake, and his approval thereof was announced to the House. Within 30 minutes thereafter, he sent a message to the House, stating the accident. On the same day he returned the bill with his veto message. These are all the facts. There was no recall or attempted recall from the Governor, nor any motion to reconsider either made, adopted, or lost. The only question was whether the Governor could cancel or withdraw his accidental and unintended approval of the bill. No power, privilege, right, rule, or action of either house was at all involved or drawn in question. Judge BRANNON'S quotation from that opinion is not predicated on the case the court was deciding at all. It is applied to a hypothetical or supposed case. Just before the part quoted by him, the court said: "Take, for instance, a bill which has been returned to the House of Representatives by the Governor, with his objections, and has passed that house, notwithstanding the Governor's objections, and sent to the Senate, where, in like manner, it has passed, with all the forms of legislation. It has now received all the sanction which the Constitution requires to make it a law, and yet no one acquainted with the constant practice of legislative bodies will deny that it is perfectly competent for the Senate to reconsider the final vote, and then take from it that concluding act which has finally completed it; and" (here follows Judge BRANNON'S quotation). Every word of it is undeniably obiter dictum, if even that. The court had no such question before it for decision and did not profess to have. Moreover, what was there said on this subject was not germane to anything then before the court for decision or discussion. It was said by way of illustration only.

In State v. Savings Bank, 79 Conn. 141, 64 Atl. 5, another case relied upon for the court's proposition, the bill was in the House when the motion to reconsider was made. That decision is not one in a case in which the bill was not in the House, reconsidering its vote of passage. No such question was decided there or even discussed. Nowhere does the opinion say physical possession of the bill was necessary. Allegany County v. Warfield, 100 Md. 516, 60 Atl. 599, 108 Am. St. Rep. 446, People v. McCullough, 210 Ill. 488, 71 N. E. 602, and State v. Whisner, 35 Kan. 271, 10 Pac. 852, are all cases involving retraction of approval by the Governor and nothing else, and have no application whatever. The other batch of cases which Judge BRANNON says are cited in a brief to sustain his proposition involves no such question as we have here and decide nothing pertaining to it.

The court, in People v. Hatch, was speaking of general parliamentary law and practice, not altered or affected by a rule, such as the Senate here acted under. The quotation itself shows this by the use of the phrase "unless they have some special rule restraining the right to reconsider." Can the authority of either of our houses to have a special rule, enlarging the ordinary parliamentary law, under the constitutional provision so often referred to in this opinion, be denied? Would not an enlarging special rule alter the general law as surely as a restraining one? Where are the terms forbidding enlargement? I challenge reference to them. This distinction is recognized in Wolfe v. McCaull. There the rules are stated as well as the general law and the distinction noted. Had Judge BRANNON gone one sentence further with his quotation from the opinion in that case, he would have had part of it in his opinion by adoption. Immediately after his quotation this is found: "But in Virginia the rules of both houses of the General Assembly fix the time and mode by which a bill passes may be reconsidered." Note the disjunctive "but," marking the distinction. The opinion then proceeds as follows: "By the Constitution each house is allowed to adopt its own rules. House Rule 70 provides that, 'when a question has been decided, it may be reconsidered on the motion of any member who voted with the prevailing side, provided the motion be made on the same day or the next two days of actual session.' Rule 61 of the Senate is to the same effect. See, also, Jefferson's Manual, p. 92, which is adopted by both houses as their guide. According to these rules, and the general practice, a motion to reconsider the same vote cannot be made twice, and, if made at all, must be made upon the day of the vote or upon one of the two ensuing days. In the case before us, a motion to reconsider was made in each house within the proper time and lost. See House Journal, 308, and Senate Journal, 261-267. After this was done, and after it was sent to the Governor, the Legislature had no further control over the bill." Certainly not, because there had been no adoption of a motion to reconsider, a second motion therefor could not be made and the two days had expired. The opinion in the case, however, carries on its face the proposition that, under the rules, but not general parliamentary law, the reserved power of reconsideration was valid and effective for two days, even though the bill had gone into the hands of the Governor. So does People v. Devlin, herein analyzed.

Rules adopted under that provision are laws of which everybody having relations with either the Senate or the House, including the executive and the other house, must take notice. They must also respect them, just as they do the powers and rights of other tribunals and officers. While these parliamentary laws are limited as to their sphere, they are sovereign and irrevocable within it. Otherwise a legislative body could not perform its constitutional functions. This would be impossible if one house could ignore the rules or laws of the other and the Governor those of both. For the same reason, each house is the sole interpreter of its own rules. They must be respected as it construes, applies, and enforces them, no matter whether its construction is correct or not. On this subject we have direct authority in State v. Savings Bank, 79 Conn. 141, 64 Atl. 5, in which the court both states and applies this proposition in the following clear-cut, convincing language: "Courts are not warranted in setting aside, as void, action of a legislative body in respect to a matter clearly within its power, merely because that body may have violated or departed from its own rules of procedure. Such rules are the servants of the legislative body and are subject to its own independent authority." Syl. "There being no claim of a violation of any constitutional restriction, we cannot pass upon the regularity of these proceedings. The power of the House, directly after the passage of a bill, and on the day of its passage, to suspend the operation of that vote, to reconsider the vote, and to take different action, cannot be questioned. The Constitution declares that each house shall determine the rules of its own proceedings and shall have all powers necessary for a branch of a free and independent state. Rules of proceedings are the servants of the House and subject to its authority. This authority may be abused; but, when the House has acted in a matter clearly within its power, it would be an unwarranted invasion of the independence of the legislative department for the court to set aside such action as void, because it may think that the House misconstrued or departed from its own rules of procedure." Opinion. The action of the Connecticut House of Representatives, which the court refused to set aside in that case upon these considerations and legal principles, was the killing of a bill it had passed by reconsideration of its vote of passage, just the kind of action this court is setting aside. Here the Senate, not only construing its own rule, but construing it as it always had been construed, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the House, and as the House had always construed its own similar rule, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the Senate, both having been always in perfect accord and agreement upon that question, rescinded the vote by which it had passed the bill. It acted within its admitted province, and under a rule, susceptible of the construction it gave it, whether that construction was technically right or wrong, and the Connecticut court, the only one that has spoken directly upon the subject, absolutely the only case directly in point that has been found, says such action cannot be disturbed by a court, no matter whether the construction was right or wrong. Legislative action is not judicial, nor subject to review like that of inferior courts. Of course more arbitrary legislative action in a matter beyond its authority would be void, and its action in an arbitrary and groundless manner, within its province might be, but such was not the character of the action of the Senate involved here.

Another suggestion of possible ground for the position taken by my Associates is that, assuming the motion to have been made and acted upon within the time and under the circumstances allowing it, the passage of the bill was not annulled or rescinded by the adoption thereof. No authority is offered for this. On the question of the effect of the adoption of a motion to reconsider a vote passing a bill, we have direct authority in State v. Savings Bank, 79 Conn. 141, 84 Atl. 5, in which the court held that the House rendered a bill it had passed an unpassed one by reconsidering the vote by which it had passed, and then indefinitely postponing consideration of the bill. It was not put on its passage and rejected after such reconsideration. Indefinite postponement had nothing to do with the question of passage, either prior or subsequent. The bill was killed after passage. Now what could have done that other than the adoption of the motion to reconsider? The obiter dictum in People v. Hatch, 19 Ill. 283, from which Judge BRANNON has quoted, says reconsideration alone rescinds or nullifies the vote reconsidered. We read: "And yet no one acquainted with the constant practice of legislative bodies will deny that it is perfectly competent for the Senate to reconsider the final vote and thus take away from it that concluding act which had finally completed it." Every text-book on parliamentary law that deals with this question says the same thing.

Finally, we have the conclusion of the majority opinion in these words: "Without asserting that the failure to vote a rejection of the bill left the original vote of passage still good, we do say that a court after such procedure cannot hold the act null and void." The "procedure" consists of the facts stated at the beginning of the opinion. For this conclusion no authority at all is given, and no legal principle is invoked, unless it be the one embraced in the sentence immediately following it, which says: "And further, if this is doubtful, then the rule that before a court can hold an act invalid the question must be clear is alone enough to deny the mandamus." The next sentence admits that, "if there had been no vote of the Senate passing the bill, the case would be different." Now, according to the only decision, directly in point on this question, the dicta of others and legislative practice in this state and the national Congress, this bill is in the same state and condition as if it never had passed the Senate. In State v. Savings Bank, 79 Conn. 141, 145, 84 Atl. 5, 7, the court actually decided, as the vital and basic question in the case, that "a bill retained by one house of the General Assembly to await its decision upon a motion to reconsider its action in passing it is not then in a situation to be presented to the Governor for his approval, nor can it be said to have 'passed both houses' within the meaning of that expression in article 4, § 12, of the Constitution of this state." In its opinion the court said it was immaterial that the bill had been transmitted to the Governor, apparently in regular order, but in fact by inadvertence. There was no express order of retention to await action on the motion to reconsider. The agreement upon the facts in the case says: "As shown by the journal of the House on June 15th, the rule requiring the clerk of the House to hold bills and resolutions one day for reconsideration was suspended for the remainder of the session." Notwithstanding this, the court upheld the ruling of the House that a mere motion to reconsider, although tabled, amounted to a retention of the bill, notwithstanding the officers, including the Governor, interpreting the effect of the action of the House otherwise, had put the bill through all the usual subsequent procedure as if it had finally and irrevocably passed. The motion to reconsider having been tabled, they regarded that as final, and acted accordingly. The House decided the question otherwise, under its claim of authority to do so, and the court sustained its action, saying it mattered not whether, in acting as it did, that body correctly interpreted its rules, orders, or proceedings or not. That is what the Senate has done here, upon a slightly and immaterially different state of facts. State v. Savings Bank emphatically decides that reconsideration of a vote of passage renders the bill an unpassed one. Whether the Senate reconsideration here was too late is a different question, which I have discussed fully, showing conclusively that the motion was not too late. The status of the bill was, therefore, the same as if it never had passed the Senate. For this reason, the acts of presiding officers and clerks, or even of the Governor, if he had acted, before reconsideration, were futile and unavailing. They could not cure the fatal defect or omission of lack of passage by the Senate. Passage by both houses is confessedly indispensable. No bill can become a law without it. Nothing can be substituted for it. It is no answer to this to say the journal shows passage of the bill on a certain date. It just as clearly and emphatically shows rescission or nullification of that action. There is no ground of doubt here. Reason and authority completely exclude it. Nothing would be easier of accomplishment than the creation of doubt in any case, if a mere adverse assertion or claim constituted a basis therefor.

On a further examination of the authorities, in passing upon the petition for rehearing, I find in Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives, vol. 5, §§ 5666, 5667, and 5668, ample justification of my position, respecting the jurisdiction and power of the Senate, under its rule, to reconsider the vote by which it passed the bill in question, after that paper had left the Senate. In 1840, R. M. T. Hunter, Speaker, entertained a motion to reconsider, under such circumstances, overruling a point of order made against it, and, on an appeal, was sustained by the House. He based his decision upon the terms of the House rule, providing that, "when a motion has been once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, it shall be in order for any member of the majority to move for a reconsideration thereof on the same or the succeeding day." In 1844, a like ruling under like circumstances was made by Speaker John W. Jones, and sustained by the House on an appeal. In 1846 Speaker John W. Davis (of Indiana) entertained a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House had agreed to resolutions, calling upon the President for certain accounts, made after the resolution had been delivered to the President, overruling a point of order, and, on an appeal to the House, his ruling was sustained. The principle was applied under conditions still less favorable to it in a ruling made in 1854 by Speaker pro tem. Geo. W. Jones. The House having agreed to a Senate amendment to a House bill, a motion was made to reconsider the vote by which the House had so agreed. A point of order was based upon the fact that the House had notified the Senate of the agreement in consequence of which the bill had passed beyond the control of the House. The Speaker overruled it, and, on an appeal, his ruling was sustained by the House. In 1840, a motion to reconsider the vote of passage by the House of a Senate bill, which had been sent back to the Senate and gone into the hands of the committee on enrolled bills, was both entertained and voted upon. Hinds, vol. 5, § 5705. That bill was in the hands of the committee on enrolled bills when the motion was made and voted on just as this bill was when the Senate entertained and acted upon its motion to reconsider. Here we have four specific instances of deliberate decision by the House of Representatives itself, not merely the Speaker, construing and applying a rule, in all substantial respects like that of the Senate of this state, as authorizing a motion to reconsider, under the circumstances attending the action of the state Senate now under consideration, and asserting reservation of jurisdiction and power of a legislative body, operating under such a rule, to rescind a vote of passage after the bill has left the body. Is it supposable the House would entertain such a motion without power to make it effective? Would it entertain the motion to be acted upon only in case the Senate should return the bill?

In these instances, the Senate was not consulted, though the absence of the bill and its possession by the Senate were urged in support of the point of order. In a note applicable here, Hinds says, "Where a bill thus reconsidered has been sent to the Senate or to the President, it is customary to send a request for its return." He does not say it is necessary, and the terms he uses import affirmative action upon the motion before the request is made, and this accords with the application of logic and principle. No court will entertain a case it cannot decide. So it would be idle and ridiculous for a legislative body to entertain a motion it could not make effective. Moreover, every precedent found denies authority in a co-ordinate branch of a Legislature to refuse a request for the return of a bill, if precedents and practice mean anything, for no instance of the refusal of such a request can be found. There is no parliamentary precedent for the position that a legislative body cannot vote upon a motion to reconsider without having actual custody of the bill or other paper. If it be conceded that ordinarily such bodies do not do so, the fact does not argue inability to do so. What either house of Congress would do in a case of refusal by the other to honor its request for the return of a bill has never been decided, so far as we know. Its power to entertain the motion without custody of the bill settles the question of jurisdiction, from which power to make it effective by a vote on it necessarily follows.

Cushing's Law & Practice of Legislative Bodies, at section 1274, says the motion may be made, discussed, and decided in the affirmative, without the custody of the bill. We quote: "The first step, therefore, after a vote to reconsider, is to send to the other branch or to the executive, for the paper in reference to which the vote to reconsider passes, or otherwise to bring it before the House. Possession of the paper may also be obtained before the motion to reconsider is made." Here he distinctly says or assumes that the motion may be made and voted upon in the absence of the paper or bill.

Gilfry's Precedents, Decisions on Points of Order in the U. S. Senate, p. 411, mentions a case of refusal of the Senate to entertain a motion to reconsider a vote, recorded April 12, 1830, consenting to the appointment of an officer by the President, because the resolution confirming the appointment had been communicated to the President. At that time, the Senate had no such rule as the House had when the rulings above referred to were made, nor any such rule as our state Senate has. Its practice was in accordance with the ruling in the case mentioned by Gilfry; but it later adopted a rule abolishing the absurd and inconvenient practice. Says Hinds, vol. 5, § 5671; "On January 16, 1877, the Senate, while revising its rules, agreed to a rule providing that, when a motion to reconsider a bill that had been sent to the House should be made, it should be accompanied by a motion requesting the House to return the bill to the Senate. This was intended to obviate the difficulty experienced by the fact that the Senate usage did not permit a motion to reconsider after the bill had passed from out the possession of the body."

Gilfry, at page 493, puts a stronger case than any I have mentioned, showing how a motion to reconsider may be made in the United States Senate after expiration of the time allowed for reconsideration, prescribed by its rule. To accomplish it, a senator, after having moved a recall of a bill passed by the Senate and sent to the House, in conformity with the Senate rule, asks unanimous consent to move to reconsider the vote by which it passes, and no objection being made the motion is entertained. Here is jurisdiction after expiration of the time allowed by the rule.

Having shown jurisdiction of the House of Representatives, operating under a rule like that of the state Senate, to entertain a motion to reconsider a vote of passage after the bill has gone to the Senate, I turn to the question of its effect, when made. Hinds says (section 5704): "When a vote whereby an amendment has been agreed to is reconsidered, the amendment becomes simply a pending amendment. A bill is not considered, in the practice of the House, passed or an amendment agreed to if a motion to reconsider is pending; the effect of the motion to reconsider being to suspend the original proposition. As to the result, when the Congress expires leaving unacted on a motion to reconsider the vote whereby a resolution of the House is passed: If a bill, before the disposal of a motion to reconsider the vote on its passage, should be enrolled, signed, and approved by the President, its validity as a law probably could not be questioned." In this section, Speaker Thomas B. Reed is quoted as follows: "Under our parliamentary system neither a bill nor an amendment is passed or adopted until the motion to reconsider is disposed of. The Speaker is not allowed to sign a bill during the pendency of a motion to reconsider. Consequently it still remains an inchoate affair. So that, if the motion to reconsider had not been disposed of at all, the amendment would probably still not be adopted. But it is not necessary to decide that to dispose of this matter, because there was a motion to reconsider and a motion that that motion to reconsider be laid on the table, which latter motion was defeated. Thereupon the Speaker put to the House the question of reconsideration, and it was carried, and the amendment became simply a pending amendment." Cushing, at section 1265, says: "And, if this motion prevails, the effect of the vote in question is abrogated, and the matter stands before the assembly in precisely the same state and condition, and upon the same question, as if the vote, which has been ordered to be reconsidered, had never been passed." At section 1278, he says: "When a motion to reconsider prevails, it has a twofold effect: First, it entirely abrogates the vote passed on the question, which is thereby ordered to be reconsidered; and, secondly, it again brings forward that question, to be discussed and decided in the same manner it was originally, for the consideration and determination of the assembly." It is true Mr. Cushing, at section 1274, says:

"If decided in the affirmative, it will be wholly ineffectual and inoperative until the paper in question is in possession of the House." But he cites no precedent or authority for that observation, nor does he clearly indicate what he means. Of course, further action on the bill cannot be had until it is again in possession of the House; but that does not argue lack of authority in the House to annul its vote of passage, and there is no precedent which says actual reconsideration in the absence of the bill does not do so. Mr. Cushing admits that the vote may be taken in the absence of the bill. This admits jurisdiction. Why should the house do an idle and futile thing? He says the vote has a double effect, one of which is abrogation of the vote reconsidered. By what process of logic can it be established that, because of some circumstance, the other consequence cannot follow, this one must fail? I repeat there is no decision or precedent for the observation of Mr. Cushing, if his language means what my Associates say it does; but that is not his meaning. What he means is that, after the adoption of a motion to reconsider, what follows is action on the bill or resolution, wherefore it must then come back into the assembly, if it has not previously done so.

In the view that a motion to reconsider suspends the vote to which it relates, and the adoption thereof rescinds or abrogates that vote, Roberts, Hinds, Cushing, and all authorities agree. Besides, it is the effect universally given to it in legislative bodies. As against these and authorities cited in the portion of this opinion prepared in advance of consideration of the petition for rehearing, I am not disposed to adopt the views of an inferior New York court (Ashton v. Rochester, 60 Hun, 372, 14 N. Y. Supp. 855), citing no authority for its contrary holding, and in this I am further confirmed by the opinion of the New York Court of Appeals (Ashton v. Rochester, 133 N. Y. 192, 30 N. E. 965, 31 N. E. 334, 28 Am. St. Rep. 619), in a case involving the same reconsideration that was passed upon in 60 Hun, 14 N. Y. Supp. The Court of Appeals said: "The vote on the resolution was reconsidered, and consequently the effect which it would otherwise have was lost."

Finally, it is not for this or any other court to say what the true parliamentary rule is, or whether the Senate properly construed its rule. Those were questions for the Senate itself, as I have already shown. The are not constitutional questions, and the courts have no right to interfere with legislative decisions of purely legislative questions.

Entertaining the views expressed here, I thought a rehearing should be granted and voted for it. I also voted for a modification of the judgments so as to allow costs in only one of the nine cases, for the reason that only one of them was really litigated; the others having been submitted, without argument or full pleadings, under an agreement that the decision upon the merits in the one argued should govern and control in the others. The one return filed was agreed and ordered to be considered and treated as filed in all the cases or as the return in all. If a consolidation could not have been ordered by the court without the consent of the parties, it could have been done and was done upon their consent and agreement. It was a consolidation by consent of parties, with the same result as if it had been an involuntary one by order of the court. Rosenthal v. Ives, 2 Idaho (Hasb.) 265, 12 Pac. 904; Rodgers & Smith v. Dibrell, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 69; Howard v. Gregory, 79 Ga. 617, 4 S. E. 881; Burt v. Wigglesworth, 117 Mass. 302.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BRANNON, J. After a full discussion of a petition for rehearing this court refused it. I make this note to add some authority which I have met with to-day, as to the position taken in the above opinion that, the Senate having returned the bill to the House as passed, it had lost possession of the bill and could not reconsider. Cushing on the Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, § 1274, says that, "though a motion for reconsideration may be made and discussed in the absence of a paper to which it relates, yet, if decided in the affirmative, it will be wholly ineffectual and inoperative until the paper is in the possession of the House. The first step, therefore, after vote to reconsider, is to send to the other branch for the paper in reference to which the vote to reconsider passes, or otherwise to bring it before the House." For myself I do not see why the paper is not necessary on the motion to reconsider. Why? Because the members want to see it, so as to vote intelligently on that motion. Why necessary to have the bill present when reconsideration takes place? In order that the members may read it before voting. Precedents in Congress show that such was the understanding. The House requested the Senate to return a bill; "there being a motion pending to reconsider the vote by which the House passed the same." The Senate complied with the request. In the Senate the question was whether a motion to reconsider was in order inasmuch as the resolution announcing the decision of the Senate on the nomination of Isic Hill had been communicated to the President, and it was unanimously determined that the motion was not in order. The Senate recalled a bill from the House before reconsidering it. Decisions on points of order in the United States Senate by Gilfry, 161, 411, 493: The Senator: I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate (stating the number and title of the bill). In Senate Mr. Ingalls rose to a question of order and stated that a bill which passed the Senate on Thursday last had not been sent to the House, but had been retained by the Secretary for two days, at the request of a senator who desired to enter a motion to reconsider the vote on its passage; and asked the ruling of the chair upon the question whether under the rule it was competent for the Secretary to retain a bill, after its passage by the Senate, at the request of a senator for the purpose of a motion for reconsideration within the two days allowed for that purpose. The President stated that such had been the uniform usage of the Senate, inasmuch as the rule gives the right within two days after passage; but it submits to the Senate whether the practice hereafter shall be in conformity with usage or strictly conform with the rule. The Senate assented. Senator Ingalls was an able parliamentarian. He understood that it was necessary to have the bill in the possession of the Senate for reconsideration, and the whole Senate assented. Thus we have the ruling of that distinguished body. Why keep the bill in the hands of the Senate, if it was not necessary to act on a motion to reconsider? Same book, page 414. The same book, page 161, says: "There are many reasons that make it necessary for one House to request of the other the return of the bill. The following are sample cases"—giving reconsideration as an instance. The Senate may have said in the Hill Case that it could vote to reconsider in the absence of the bill, but did not say that it could finally act on it. In the original argument an attorney contended that the vote of the Senate was only one to reconsider; that the next question in order was, "Shall the bill pass"; that as no such question was put, and no vote taken upon it, the original vote of passage was not disturbed. It would seem upon some authorities that, when a vote to reconsider is carried, it is a withdrawal of the vote of passage, leaving the bill stand as if the body had never voted for its passage. It is not necessary to say how this is; but I find the case of Ashton v. City of Rochester, 60 Hun, 372, 14 N. Y. Supp. 855, holding that, without such a vote on the question of the passage of the bill, the original passage stands. The opinion also holds that a motion to reconsider "may be entertained if the House has control of the bill," thus sustaining the proposition that it cannot do so in the absence of the bill.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Braxton County.

Bill in equity by Henry Waggy against the Jane Lew Lumber Company, in which Ross F. Stout and others intervene. From the decrees, the interveners appeal. Affirmed.

Harvey F. Smith, for appellants. Haymond & Fox, for appellee.

ROBINSON, J. Waggy, a stockholder and creditor of the Jane Lew Lumber Company, a corporation, by this bill in equity prayed for the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the affairs of the company and to administer its assets. The bill showed that the company, by misfortune and mismanagement, had become so helplessly insolvent that the certainty of depreciation and loss by reason of seizures and sales at the suits of creditors then pending, and other suits that were sure to follow, could only be prevented by the interposition of a receiver. The court appointed a receiver as prayed for, and he took charge. The company, though duly notified, entered no resistance to the appointment. Nor has it since appeared in the case. The bill has been taken for confessed. The company has completely admitted its helpless condition and has acquiesced in the handling of its affairs by a receiver for the benefit of its creditors. Evidently it has gladly accepted, at the initiative of a stockholder and creditor, that which it soon would have been compelled to bring about by its own act—a virtual assignment.

Ross F. Stout Lumber Company, a creditor of the insolvent concern, obtained a judgment on its claim after the appointment of the receiver. Prior to the date of its judgment, it had filed the simple contract claim on which that judgment was rendered, before the commissioner to whom the receivership cause had been referred for the purpose of ascertaining and reporting the debts. After obtaining the judgment, this creditor intervened by petition, asking that it be made a party to the cause and allowed to demur to the bill. No formal order admitting the petitioner as a party was ever entered, but the petition and the demurrer which it tendered were ordered filed and the demurrer was set down for argument. At a later date the demurrer was overruled. When the report of the commissioner was filed, this creditor, Ross F. Stout Lumber Company, excepted thereto because its judgment was not reported as a lien but as a mere simple contract debt. The court overruled the exception, confirmed the report of the commissioner, and decreed that the receiver make sale of the property of the insolvent concern for the payment of the debts as ascertained and stated in the commissioner's report. From the order overruling the demurrer and the decree fixing the debt as an unpreferred one, Ross F. Stout Lumber Company has prosecuted the appeal now under consideration.

Questions have been raised and argued relative to the propriety of admitting the petitioning creditor as a formal party to the suit and entertaining its attack by demurrer on the proceedings which support the receivership. Plaintiff submits that it was improper to admit the creditor as a formal party and to entertain the demurrer, particularly after the creditor had apparently acquiesced in the proceedings by filing the claim as an unpreferred one before the commissioner. However, we need not pass on these questions. Assuming that the demurrer was rightly entertained, we observe that it was properly overruled. The bill is entirely sufficient. So even if the demurrer were not in place, it could avail no more than if consideration thereof had been denied.

[1] The bill is a proper one under Code 1906, c. 53, § 58, which reads: "When a corporation expires, or is dissolved or before its expiration or dissolution, upon sufficient cause being shown thereof, such court as is mentioned in the preceding section, may on application of a creditor or stockholder, appoint one or more persons to be receivers to take charge of and administer its assets; and whether such receiver be appointed or not, may make such orders and decrees and award such injunctions in the case as justice and equity may require." This is a remedial statute and should not be strictly construed. Broad equity powers are granted by it in the matter of receiverships for corporations. It is in derogation of the equity principles ordinarily applied to the appointment of receivers. It permits a complete sequestration of the property of a corporation by a receivership, even before expiration or dissolution. It authorizes this sequestration to be brought about by a mere stockholder or creditor, if he shows good cause therefor. By its very terms, it wipes out the usual principle that a common creditor cannot ask a receivership. It virtually says that any stockholder or creditor of a corporation may have an administration of the assets of that corporation, by the instrumentality of a receiver, whenever the full protection of his rights demands the same. It in fact allows a winding up of the affairs of a corporation by a receivership at the suit of a stockholder or creditor. Thus it allows that which is tantamount to a dissolution. It vests in the court much discretion; for the court is authorized to make such orders as equity and justice may require. Still the court must exercise sound discretion and by no means recklessly apply its power. The chancellor must proceed with caution, and only grant a receivership under this statute in a case plainly demanding that course. Good cause, judged from the rights of the parties and all the attendant facts and circumstances, must appear. The case must be one in which a receiver is equitably and justly called for; not one in which a receiver may safely be avoided. But where the fact is clearly shown, as it is in this case, that the situation of the corporation is such that impending loss to the plaintiff and other stockholders and creditors can only be averted by the appointment of a receiver, the court should not hesitate to appoint one.

[2] The statute gives plaintiff a remedy by receivership for the vindication of his rights as a stockholder and creditor, if he shows sufficient cause for invoking that remedy. That cause of course necessarily relates to a protection of his rights. He has shown that his rights will suffer by depreciation and loss of the assets of the hopelessly insolvent corporation, arising from forced sales and large costs in the multiplicity of suits by creditors, and that only by a receivership can such depreciation and loss be prevented. He has thus shown sufficient cause why a receiver should be appointed. The statute contemplates the very case presented by plaintiff's bill. When a corporation has reached such a state of insolvency that it can continue business no longer and there is absolute necessity that its assets be administered by a receiver in order that impending loss to stockholders and creditors be prevented, surely good cause appears why that course should be pursued. In this case facts are alleged which must convince any mind that, by reason of the insolvent condition of the corporation, loss was certain to accrue to plaintiff unless there was an administration of the property by a receivership. These facts are denied by no one. They stand admitted. They justify the receivership. [3] We do not hold that mere insolvency is ground for the appointment of a receiver; for it is not. We do hold, however, that necessity to prevent certain depreciation and loss of the property and assets of the corporation, which depreciation and loss are sure to follow because of insolvency, is sufficient ground. Kanawha Coal Co. v. Ballard & Welch Coal Co., 43 W. Va. 721, 29 S. E. 514. The following quotation aptly applies to this case: "While insolvency alone is not sufficient cause for the appointment of a receiver, where the proof of insolvency is clear and satisfactory and it appears there is no reasonable prospect that the corporation, if let alone, will be brought back to a condition of solvency, and the nature of the corporation, the character of the managers, the wishes of the creditors, and the general condition of corporate affairs are such as to warrant the enforcement and protection of the court for all interested and concerned, a receiver will be appointed." Alderson on Receivers, § 352.

This case is not of the character of those in which a plaintiff must show that he unsuccessfully sought redress by application to the corporation before bringing suit for a receiver. It is not a case based on misapplication of assets or mismanagement of affairs. It is one based wholly on the certainty of loss but for the interposition of a receiver. It is based on that which the corporation could not remedy even if it were asked to do so—hopeless insolvency and impending loss therefrom.

[4] The exception of Ross F. Stout Lumber Company to the report of the commissioner was properly overruled. The judgment did not become a lien on the real estate of the corporation or take priority over other claims. That judgment was taken after the property of the corporation had practically been converted into a trust estate for creditors. It could not, therefore, become a preferred lien. The character of the receivership forbade that it take priority. The appointment of a receiver for the complete administration of the assets of the corporation, under the circumstances of this case, was indeed tantamount to a dissolution. It was too late for liens to attach. There are cases in which the pendency of a receivership does not prevent a judgment from attaching as a lien, but those cases do not involve a complete administration as this one does. See the general principles stated, and the cases cited, in 34 Cyc. 199, 221.

The decrees appealed from will be affirmed.

Appeal from Circuit Court, McDowell County.

Suit by George P. Hall and others, partners as George P. Hall & Co., against the Williamson Grocery Company and another. From a decree for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. Powell Royall, for appellants. M. O. Litz, for appellees.

ROBINSON, J. Sadie Price and husband executed a deed of trust, covering a town lot, to secure Williamson Grocery Company in a sum not to exceed eight hundred dollars for any and all future sales and deliveries of goods which should be made to her by the company within the period of two years. Some months later, the Prices conveyed a portion of this lot to Graves in consideration of seven hundred dollars cash. This amount was paid to the Grocery Company on an indebtedness of several hundred dollars that had arisen to it from Sadie Price for goods sold and delivered. In consideration of this payment, the Grocery Company released the deed of trust so far only as it affected the portion of the lot sold to Graves. At about this time the Prices executed another deed of trust on the remaining portion of the lot to secure Geo. P. Hall & Company, plaintiffs in this suit, the payment of a bond for $251.51. When the deed of trust to secure plaintiffs was made and recorded, the prior deed of trust to secure the Grocery Company, covering the identical property, had long been of record and as to that property was wholly unreleased.

When the Grocery Company sought to enforce its deed of trust, claiming an indebtedness in default thereunder, and the trustee had advertised a sale, plaintiffs brought this suit against the Grocery Company and the trustee. The bill alleges in substance that the seven hundred dollars received by the Grocery Company from Graves settled all indebtedness due under the deed of trust at the time that sum was received; that the indebtedness secured was then fully satisfied and the lien should have been released; that the Grocery Company had actual knowledge of plaintiffs' deed of trust at the time the same was executed; and that plaintiffs' deed of trust constituted a first lien on the property, in priority to any lien of the Grocery Company. Plaintiffs prayed that an enforcement of the deed of trust in behalf of the Grocery Company be enjoined, and that their debt be decreed to be a lien on the property taking priority over any indebtedness claimed by the Grocery Company.

A temporary injunction was awarded, the answer of the Grocery Company denying the material allegations of the bill was filed, depositions were taken, and the case was heard on its merits. The chancellor denied the relief which plaintiffs sought. The decree appealed from dissolved the injunction and dismissed the bill.

If, at the time the subsequent deed of trust was made to secure plaintiffs' debt, there was nothing due the Grocery Company from Sadie Price for goods sold and delivered under the first deed of trust, and the Grocery Company had actual notice of the subsequent lien, then claims for future advances made by the Grocery Company after that notice could not take priority of lien over the sum secured in plaintiffs' deed of trust. Under those circumstances plaintiffs would have the right to enjoin a trustee's sale which had for its object the payment of the Grocery Company claims in preference to theirs.

[1-3] The evidence, however, does not sustain the case urged by plaintiffs. The chancellor was justified in holding that the Graves payment did not wholly pay off the first deed of trust at the time the payment was made; that a considerable sum still remained under the security of the deed of trust; that many other advances were made thereafter by the Grocery Company on the faith of its deed of trust and within the terms thereof; and that the Grocery Company did not have notice of plaintiffs' subsequent lien before making the future advances which it now claims as secured by the prior deed of trust in its favor. The mere recordation of the subsequent deed of trust was not notice to the holder of the prior one. Actual notice was necessary; yet actual notice that the subsequent deed of trust was duly and finally executed is not brought home to the holder of the prior lien. Plaintiffs did attempt to prove actual notice; but the evidence they offered in this particular does not prove the fact. That evidence goes no further than to show that the husband of Sadie Price told a travelling salesman of the Grocery Company that a subsequent deed of trust to plaintiffs was contemplated. Price says he told the salesman, on January 23rd, either that the deed of trust to plaintiffs was given or that it would be given. The deed of trust referred to was not executed until February 6th. So on the former day he could not have told the salesman that the deed of trust was given, for it was not then given. He must have stated the true one of the two facts the one or the other of which he says he may have stated; that is, merely that a deed of trust would be given to plaintiffs in the future. Even if the salesman was an agent of the Grocery Company of such character that notice to him was notice to it, a question we need not decide, the simple statement that a deed of trust in favor of plaintiffs would be given in the future was not actual notice of the due and final execution of the lien. The Grocery Company had a right to rely on its prior and unreleased deed of trust and to make advances on the faith of security thereunder, until a subsequent lien was indeed placed on the property, though it knew of an intention on the part of its debtor to execute a subsequent lien. Craig v. Tappin, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 78. The burden rested on plaintiffs to stop advances under the prior deed of trust by notice to the holder thereof that a lien in their favor had attached to the property. In any view, evidence that a thing is intended is not evidence that the thing exists.

Quite applicable and controlling in this case is the following quotation from a standard authority: "When a mortgage to secure future advances reasonably states the purpose for which it is given, its record is a constructive notice to subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers; they are thereby put upon an inquiry to ascertain what advances or liabilities have been made or incurred. The record of a subsequent mortgage or conveyance, or the docketing of a subsequent judgment, is not a constructive notice of its existence to such prior mortgagee. The prior mortgage, therefore, duly recorded, has a preference over subsequent recorded mortgages or conveyances, or subsequent docketed judgments, not only for advances previously made, but also for advances made after their recording or docketing without notice thereof. As the record of the second encumbrance does not operate as a constructive notice, it requires an actual notice to cut off the lien of the prior mortgage; and the subsequent encumbrancer may, by giving actual notice, at any time prevent further advances from being made to his own prejudice." 3 Pomeroy's Equity Jur. (3d Ed.) § 1199.

Another eminent author discusses the same subject: "A prior mortgagee is affected only by actual notice of a subsequent mortgage, and not by constructive notice from the recording of the second mortgage, and for all advances made by such mortgagee before receiving such notice of a subsequent incumbrance his mortgage is a valid security. Such, it is conceived, is the rule supported by reason and the weight of authority. * * * Whether the mortgage intended to secure future advances discloses the nature of the transaction or not, there is no good reason why it should not remain a valid security for all advances that may be made until the mortgagee receives actual notice of subsequent claims upon the property. The burden of ascertaining the amount of an existing incumbrance should rest upon him who takes a conveyance on the property subject to the mortgage. He has notice by the record of the existence of a mortgage for the full amount of the intended advances; and if he wishes to stop the advances where they are at the time of recording his subsequent deed, it is only reasonable to require him to give actual notice of his claim upon the property; otherwise he should not be heard to complain that the prior incumbrance amounts at any future time to the full sum for which it appeared of record to be an incumbrance." Jones on Mortgages (6th Ed.) § 372.

Plaintiffs, when they obtained their lien, failed to protect themselves against the rights of the Grocery Company under its deed of trust, though they were bound to take notice thereof by the record. They took their subsequent lien subject to all rights that had accrued and could thereafter lawfully accrue under the prior deed of trust. The Grocery Company has shown that an indebtedness was secured by its deed of trust at the time plaintiffs took a subsequent lien on the property. It has also shown that advances since that time have become secured to it by the force of its deed of trust, unaffected by the lien of plaintiffs. Thus the fact appears that the aggregate of the indebtedness existing when plaintiffs took their lien and the advances made since that time without notice, the fixed sum of which is shown in the record, constitute a first lien on the property. Since the Grocery Company is entitled to a first lien on the property, for a definite sum, the decree permitting it to proceed with the enforcement of that lien is clearly right. Plaintiffs have no right to stay a sale by the holder of the legal title on the facts appearing in this case. They have nothing by their deed of trust but the mere equity of redemption. They show no proper cause for equitable interference with the trustee's sale. The decree will be affirmed.

Error to Circuit Court, Randolph County.

Action by M. L. Daniels and others against the Randolph County Court. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

H. G. Kump, for plaintiff in error. Samuel T. Spears, for defendants in error.

MILLER, J. Plaintiffs recovered against defendant, on the verdict of a jury, a judgment for $304.50, damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by Mrs. Daniels, while traveling with her husband over a public road. The correctness of that judgment is brought in question by the present writ of error.

[1] The demurrer to the declaration, in two counts, we think was properly overruled. The action of the court thereon is assigned as error here, but does not seem to be seriously relied upon. The negligence of the defendant, alleged to have resulted in the injuries sustained by the wife, is that it permitted the public road, known as the Files Creek road, at a place where it crosses Files Creek in said county, to become and remain out of repair; that at a short time prior to the date of her injuries very high waters in said Files Creek had washed, excavated and dug away a large portion of said road, where the same crossed said creek, producing a steep and perpendicular descent into said creek, rendering the road impassable, and exceedingly dangerous to persons using the same, particularly in the night time; that some time thereafter, and before Mrs. Daniels sustained her alleged injuries, the surveyor of said road pretended to change the location thereof where it crossed said creek, and to abandon that portion of the old road where it crossed said creek, and where the washout occurred, but had left the old road washed, excavated and dug out as aforesaid, open to the use of the public, and had neglected to erect any guard, fence or barrier, so as to give warning and notice that such pretended change had been made, as it is alleged it was his duty to do, whereby and by reason whereof, it is alleged, said plaintiffs, together with their two children, then lawfully on said road and in the exercise of due care, in the night time, suddenly and without any warning or notice of any kind, that said public road was so out of repair, were precipitated over said descent and into said creek, whereby and by reason whereof the plaintiff Carrie Daniels sustained the injuries of which the plaintiffs complain.

The facts are few, and there is little, if any, material conflict in the evidence. The accident occurred on the night of August 31, 1907, about nine o'clock. The evidence is that the night was very dark. The plaintiffs were on their way from Beverly to the home of the father of M. L. Daniels, who lived on Files Creek, within some three hundred yards of the place of the accident. Plaintiffs lived at Elkins, and, so far as the record shows, they knew nothing of the condition of the road at this crossing. They had heard of high waters occurring about July 17th, and that the roads had been washed out in places, but did not know of the condition of this road, or that any portion of it had been abandoned and a new location made. The old road, the abandoned part, ran south from Beverly, in the direction in which plaintiffs were traveling, around the foot of a hill to the point where it crossed the creek. This new road was made by simply laying down the fence enclosing an adjoining meadow, removing some rocks in the way, and by making fills in one or two places. After it was opened, the evidence shows the public generally used the new way, the old one being abandoned because impassable, where it crossed the creek.

Defendant denies negligence, but the principal defense is contributory negligence on the part of plaintiffs.

The evidence of the road surveyor, and of one or two other witnesses, tends to show that some rubbish washed in the road by the flood, and some brush and a pole put up across the abandoned way served as a barrier to travel on the abandoned way; but other witnesses, including the road surveyor of an adjoining section, who did the work of opening the new way, say there was no barrier or pole erected across the old way. The evidence makes it quite certain that on the night of the accident there was no pole there and no barrier or warning sufficient to obstruct the passage of the plaintiffs over the abandoned road. The evidence is that it was old and worn, and easily seen, while the new way could not be seen in the darkness, by persons traveling in vehicles.

The authorities seem to be quite uniform in holding that where an old and dangerous road or way is abandoned for a new one established, public authorities in charge of the work must put up barriers or warnings to protect travelers, acting upon the belief, justified by appearances, that the old way is still open, and that it is negligence not to do so. 2 Elliott on Roads & Streets (3d Ed.) section 801; Bills v. Town of Kaukauna, 94 Wis. 310, 68 N. W. 992, and cases cited; 37 Cyc. 291, and notes; 28 Cyc. 1403-1405, and cases cited in notes.

[2] But were plaintiffs guilty of contributory negligence, barring recovery? Contributory negligence, when it depends on facts and testimony, is a question for the jury. Snoddy v. Huntington, 37 W. Va. 111, 16 S. El. 442. Our decisions say, however, that where the facts and evidence show as matter of law, that plaintiff was guilty of contributing to his injuries the court should, on motion of defendant, exclude all the evidence from the jury. Slaughter v. Huntington, 64 W. Va. 240, 241, 61 S. El. 155, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 459, and cases cited. The rule is also well settled in this and other states that a traveler on a public highway can not close his eyes to open and patent defects and dangers. If plaintiffs had been traveling in the day time, with the new way and the dangers of the old plainly in sight, as the evidence shows they were, the authorities say they could not recover. Travelers on a highway must use their senses, and are not permitted to shut their eyes to open and obvious defects and dangers in the way. For injuries thus sustained, due to negligence on their part, damages for injuries sustained can not be recovered. Hysell v. Central City, 68 W. Va. 769, 70 S. El. 767, and cases cited.

What is the rule, however, where persons are using a public road in the night time? It is well stated, with copious citations, in 28 Cyc. 1431, as follows: "A person traveling on a street or public way in the night time is required to exercise such ordinary care and caution as a reasonably prudent man would exercise under the circumstances, and in view of the darkness; and ordinary care in the night time may call for greater caution than in the day time. In exercising ordinary care a traveler at night, in the absence of knowledge to the contrary, has the right to act on the assumption that the street or way is in a reasonably safe condition for travel by night as well as by day, and is not bound to anticipate that he will encounter excavations, without having some notice thereof by lights, or without other precautions taken for his protection. A failure to use prudence commensurate with obvious conditions constitutes negligence."

[3] Tested by this rule can we say as matter of law that plaintiffs were guilty of negligence precluding recovery? Unless we can do so, the question then being one of mixed law and fact for jury determination, on proper instruction by the court, we should not disturb the verdict and judgment of the court below. As particularly pertinent to the case at bar, it was decided in Wisconsin, in Bills v. Kaukauna, supra, that, "Where a highway containing a plain and well-beaten track is discontinued, it is the duty of the town to give such notice or warning or erect such barriers as will prevent its use by travelers by night as well as by day; and in the absence of such notice travelers have a right to presume that such a highway has not been discontinued or obstructed."

[4] To reverse the judgment below, defendant relies on the admissions of plaintiffs that on the night of the accident in question they knew that floods had prevailed in Flee Creek and in other creeks, some two weeks previous, and that the roads had been washed in some places; and that before reaching the place of the accident, Mrs. Daniels had suggested to her husband that he had better walk ahead and see if there were any wash-outs, and to which he replied, that the roads had been used, that wagons had gone over it, and that it was all right. He proved, however, that he had no reason to believe this road, if damaged by the floods, had not been repaired in the mean time, or that it was unsafe. Mrs. Daniels' testimony is as follows: "Q. Now, Mrs. Daniels, it was dark when you left Beverly, or about so? A. Yes; it was getting dark I remember. Q. And you told your husband you thought it was dangerous to go, or he had better not go? A. I don't remember about that. Q. You said something before you got well started on the road? A. While we were on the road I mentioned to him perhaps there was some danger. I don't remember whether it was after we were going up that road, or not. Q. And he still thought it was merely a woman's weakness, and that you were afraid? A. He didn't pay any attention to me I know. Q. Now then you got up to the ford of Files Creek there? A. Yes. Q. This left hand prong that comes down by the Beverly Road. Do you remember now whether you told him again that he had better get out and see if it was safe? A. No, I didn't say anything to him. He made the remark to me that there was the fence. He says it is all right. Here is the fence that goes along the road. Q. Then you were looking out for difficulties when you saw that? A. When we saw that we just drove on. Q. But you must have been looking for difficulties when he said, 'All right, there is the fence.' A. That is what he said. Q. But you were looking out for difficulties. A. I was uneasy, I admit, but I don't think he was. Q. He was very willing to take the risk. Now, Mrs. Daniels, how far was that below the ford that he remarked, 'There is the fence?' A. I don't remember. He says, 'There is the fence that goes around, and it is all right.' I don't know whether the fence is still there or not."

We do not think this evidence sufficient to show negligence on the part of the plaintiffs or either of them. True they had heard of high waters in the creeks, and Mrs. Daniels appears to have had some apprehensions that the road might be dangerous; but her husband, familiar with the road, and knowing that some two weeks had elapsed, after the high waters had subsided, and who appears to have been driving cautiously, had the right to assume, as the authorities hold, that if the road had been damaged, it had, in the mean time, been made reasonably safe for travel by night as well as in the day time; or if rendered dangerous, and any part of it had been abandoned for a new location, that some sign or warning would be given to protect travelers upon the road.

For the reasons given we are of opinion to affirm the judgment.

2. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 190*)—COMPENSATION OF ATTORNEY—PROTECTION AGAINST COLLUSIVE SETTLEMENT.

An attorney who has brought a suit, pursuant to an agreement that he is to have a certain per centum of the judgment that shall be recovered, as his fee for services, has an inchoate right in the chose in action, and may avoid a collusive settlement, made between the defendant and his client, for the purpose of defeating his fee.

3. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 190*)—COMPENSATION OF ATTORNEY—PROTECTION AGAINST COLLUSIVE SETTLEMENT—NATURE OF REMEDY.

An attorney's remedy in such case is not in equity by injunction, but he can apply to the court in which the action is pending, and ask to have the case proceed to final judgment in the name of his client, for his own benefit.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County.

Action by Harrison Burkhart against C. H. Scott and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Scott appeals. Decree reversed, and original bill and cross-bill dismissed, without prejudice to rights of parties to pursue remedies at law.

W. B. Maxwell, for appellant. James Coberly, for appellee Wamsley.

WILLIAMS, P. Harrison Burkhart, a resident of Pennsylvania, employed J. L. Wamsley to bring an action of assumpsit against C. H. Scott, in the circuit court of Randolph county, W. Va., and agreed to give him one-half of the amount recovered as an attorney's fee. Wamsley brought the suit, and on the 28th of January, 1904, the jury rendered a verdict against Scott for $315. Scott thereupon moved to set aside the verdict, and for a new trial. That motion is apparently still pending. Scott then went to Pennsylvania, and on the 13th of January, 1905, effected a compromise of the suit with Burkhart, and took from him a writing, whereby Burkhart agreed that the action should be dismissed at his cost. Shortly thereafter Burkhart brought a suit in equity against Scott, to enjoin him from making use of said writing for the purpose of procuring a dismissal of the action at law, alleging in his bill that the compromise agreement had been procured by means of false and fraudulent representations, made to him by Scott. Wamsley was made a party defendant, and his contract for a contingent fee was averred in the bill. Upon the filing of the bill, in April, 1905, in term, a temporary injunction was granted, restraining Scott from making use of the writing for said purpose. On the 12th of September, 1905, Scott appeared, demurred, and tendered his answer to the bill, denying the fraud, and moved a dissolution of the injunction. At the same time, Wamsley also tendered his answer, in the nature of a cross-bill, in which he avers that Scott and Burkhardt had fraudulently combined and conspired together to defeat his attorney's fee to which he was entitled under his contract with Burkhardt, and of which agreement for a contingent fee he alleges Scott had knowledge. Ed D. Wamsley, who was Burkhardt's bondsman for costs in the assumpsit action, and Charles Sheriff and Charles F. Sheriff, to whom it is alleged Burkhardt had assigned his interest in the claim against Scott, were also made defendants to said cross-bill answer. The prayer is that his answer be treated as a cross-bill; that the injunction be perpetuated; that judgment in the action at law be entered upon the verdict; that the rights of all parties be ascertained; and that Scott be required to pay the full amount of the verdict. Scott also tendered written exceptions to the cross-bill, and Wamsley excepted to Scott's answer to the original bill. On the hearing, the court overruled Scott's demurrer to the original bill, and his exceptions to Wamsley's cross-bill, and overruled Wamsley's exceptions to Scott's answer, and held the compromise agreement between Scott and Burkhardt to be fraudulent and void as to all parties to the suit, and perpetuated the injunction. From that decree, Scott has appealed.

[1] The original bill states no cause for injunction. The law court can determine whether or not the compromise was fraudulently made to defeat Wamsley's fee, and, if it should find that it was in fact fraudulent, it has the power to reject the paper as evidence. Harvey v. Fox, 5 Leigh (Va.) 444; Haden v. Garden, 7 Leigh (Va.) 157; Evans v. Taylor, 28 W. Va. 184; Gall v. Bank, 50 W. Va. 597, 40 S. E. 390; Hogg's Eq. Prin. § 46. Injunction is one of the extraordinary remedies, and equity will not relieve by injunction when there is a plain and adequate remedy at law. In fact, it is essential, to confer jurisdiction by injunction, that it must appear that no adequate relief exists in law on the facts averred, and a bill which fails to show the want of such legal remedy is fatally bad. Shepherd v. Groff, 34 W. Va. 123, 11 S. E. 997; Shay v. Nolan, 46 W. Va. 299, 33 S. E. 225.

[2] Wamsley's cross-bill alleges facts, not averred in the original bill, but facts which relate to the same subject-matter, and prays affirmative relief thereon. Consequently a demurrer thereto is proper pleading. Scott's written exceptions are, in legal effect, a demurrer. And, so regarding them, they should have been sustained, and the cross-bill dismissed, for the same reasons which we have given for holding that the original bill stated no cause for equitable relief. The law court has the power to determine the truth of the facts averred in the cross-bill, and if it finds them true Wamsley should be permitted to proceed with the trial of the case to judgment, in the name of his client, for his own benefit. While it is generally true that courts not only favor, but encourage, the settlement of doubtful claims out of court, and while it is also true, as a general proposition, that clients have absolute control over their suits, and may dismiss them without the consent of their attorneys, still these general rules are subject to some exceptions, which the courts have established in the interest of justice, and for the protection of rights of attorneys. An attorney is a licensed and sworn officer of the court, and has a right to make reasonable contracts with his client for his fees for legal advice and services rendered and to be rendered, and the law will not uphold a collusive and fraudulent settlement between parties, made for the purpose of defeating the rights of the attorney. Wamsley's agreement for a contingent fee, payable out of the judgment, in the event one is recovered, may not amount to an assignment of an interest in the chose itself, still the effect of it is to give him such an inchoate right therein, after the suit is brought, as cannot be defeated by a collusive settlement between the parties. 3 A. & E. E. L. (2d Ed.) 466.

[3] The cross-bill avers that the settlement was collusive and fraudulent, and was made to defeat the collection of his fee, and also avers that Scott knew his contract for a fee was contingent upon the recovery of a judgment. If those averments are true, Wamsley is entitled to protection. But his remedy at law is adequate and full. The law court can determine the truth or falsity of the facts alleged, and if it finds them true it can direct the trial to proceed, for Wamsley's benefit, in the name of his client, to final judgment. The demurrer to the cross-bill should therefore have been sustained, and the cross-bill dismissed.

In discussing the right of an attorney to avoid a collusive settlement between parties, after suit has been brought, made for the purpose of defeating his fees, the Court of Appeals of New York, in its opinion in Coughlin v. Railroad Co., 71 N. Y. at page 447, 27 Am. Rep. 75, says: "There are many cases where this has been allowed to be done. It is impossible to ascertain precisely when this practice commenced, nor how it originated, nor upon what principle it was based. It was not upon the principle of a lien, because an attorney has no lien upon the cause of action, before judgment, for his costs; nor was it upon the principle that his services had produced the money paid his client upon the settlement, because that could not be known, and in fact no money may have been paid upon the settlement. So far as I can perceive, it was based upon no principle. It was a mere arbitrary exercise of power by the courts; not arbitrary in the sense that it was unjust or improper, but in the sense that it was not based upon any right or principle recognized in other cases. The parties being in court, and a suit commenced and pending, for the purpose of protecting attorneys, who were their officers and subject to their control, the courts invented this practice, and assumed this extraordinary power to defeat attempts to cheat the attorneys out of their costs. The attorney's fees were fixed and definite sums, easily determined by taxation, and this power was exercised to secure them their fees."

In Hanna v. Island Coal Co., 5 Ind. App. 163, 31 N. E. 846, reported in 51 Am. St. Rep. 246, Mr. Freeman has added a number of valuable notes on the question of the rights, and the remedy, which the law affords to an attorney who has been prevented from fulfilling his agreement with his client by a collusive settlement between the parties, made for the purpose of defeating his fee; and in one of these notes that distinguished writer says that the proper course for the attorney to pursue is to proceed with the cause to judgment, in the name of his client, for the purpose of collecting his costs. In support of this proposition, he cites numerous authorities.

In Randall v. Van Wagenen, 115 N. Y. 527, 22 N. E. 361, 12 Am. St. Rep. 828, it was held that the attorney for plaintiff cannot maintain an independent action against the defendant in such suit, on the ground that a collusive settlement was made before judgment, which defeated him of the fruits of his agreement with his client for a fee, which was contingent upon recovery of a judgment. But it was there held that the attorney could proceed to judgment in the original suit in the name of his client. See, also, on this subject, the following authorities: 4 Cyc. 1022; Nat. Exhibition Co. v. Crane, 167 N. Y. 505, 60 N. E. 768; Matter of Regan, 167 N. Y. 338, 60 N. E. 658; Jones v. Bonner, 2 W. H. & G., Exch. Rep., 229; Talcott v. Bronson, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 501; Cole v. Bennett, 6 Price's Exch. Rep. 15; Morse & Holder v. Cooke, 13 Price's Exch. Rep. 473; Potter v. Mining Co., 19 Utah, 421, 57 Pac. 270; McDonald v. Napier, 14 Ga. 89; Carpenter v. Myers, 90 Mich. 209, 51 N. W. 206; 1 Jones on Liens, § 224, 225; Weeks on Attorneys, § 377.

For the reasons herein given, the decree of the lower court will be reversed, and both the original bill and the cross-bill will be dismissed, but without prejudice to the rights of the parties to pursue any appropriate remedy, or remedies, at law.

H. C. HOUSTON LUMBER CO. et al. v.
WETZEL & T. RY. CO.

FRICK & LINDSAY CO. v. SAME

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 7, 1911.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 149*)—PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT—STATEMENT OF AMOUNT DUE—SUFFICIENCY.

The "just and true account of the amount due," required by section 4, c. 75, Code (1906) to preserve a lien for labor, or material furnished, given by section 2, of said chapter, if the contract therefor be made directly with the owner of the property, need not state the account by items giving the year, month and day, though it is proper, and the better practice to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 256-259; Dec. Dig. § 149.*]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS (§§ 152, 271*)—PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT—STATEMENT OF AMOUNT DUE—SUFFICIENCY—PLEADING.

And although it is essential to the validity of such lien that said account be filed in the clerk's office within sixty days after the lienor ceases to labor or furnish material, it need not show affirmatively on its face that it was so filed within the time prescribed. In a suit to enforce such lien, however, this fact with all other facts necessary to a valid lien must be alleged and if controverted fully proven.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—ENFORCEMENT—BILL—EFFECT.

If the bill to enforce such a lien alleges the existence of all facts essential to a valid lien for labor or material, and these allegations are not controverted, they must for the purposes of the suit be taken as true, unless some exhibit filed therewith and vouched for the truth thereof, impugns the truth of some one or more of the material facts alleged.

4. MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 277*)—ENFORCEMENT—BILL—VARIANCE.

The fact of the filing of such account in the county clerk's office within the time required by said section 4, c. 75, Code (1906) when so alleged in the bill, and proven or not controverted by answer, is not impugned by the original of such account filed as an exhibit with the bill, which does not show on its face the year the last material was furnished, or by the endorsement by the clerk on the back thereof showing the date of the filing thereof and the book and page where recorded, which does not appear to be signed by such clerk.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 546-554; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

5. RAILROADS (§ 159*)—LIENS—PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT—STATEMENT OF CLAIM—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—SUFFICIENCY.

A lien for material furnished a railway company for constructing its railway which described the property on which the lien is claimed, as "the railway of said corporation situate in the counties of Wetzel and Tyler and extending from the city of Sistersville in Tyler county to the town of Brooklyn in Wetzel county," is "sufficiently accurate" for identification, and satisfies all requirements of said section 4, c. 75, of the Code.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 267*)—PRESENTATION OF QUESTIONS IN LOWER COURT—EXCEPTIONS—NECESSITY.

If error of law appear on the face of a decree, or the report of a commissioner, though not excepted to, it may be corrected on appeal to this court by the party aggrieved thereby.

7. MORTGAGES (§ 151*)—PRIORITY—MECHANICS' LIENS.

A mechanic's lien begins from the time the labor or the furnishing of material begins, and has priority over a deed of trust subsequently executed on the same property.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Mortgages, Dec. Dig. § 151; Mechanics' Liens, Cent. Dig. §§ 358-370.]

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

8. RAILROADS (§ 159*)—LIENS—APPLICATION OF GENERAL LAW.

Code 1906, c. 75, § 2, gives mechanics and materialmen, who furnish labor or material for constructing or repairing a house or other structure under contract of the owner or his authorized agent, a lien to secure payment upon such house or other structure and upon the interest of the owner in the lot of land on which the house or structure may stand. Held, that such a lien may be enforced against a railroad.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Wetzel County.

Actions by the H. C. Houston Lumber Company and others and by the Frick & Lindsay Company against the Wetzel & Tyler Railway Company. From an adverse decree, and a decree denying their motion to reverse and set aside the former decree so far as it affected their claim, plaintiffs W. F. White and another appeal. Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and rendered.

Neal & Strickling and Thos. P. Jacobs, for appellants. S. Bruce Hall, for appellees Mercantile Trust Company and others. E. L. Robinson, for appellees First Nat. Bank and others.

MILLER, J. Appellants, White Bros., plaintiffs below, complain of two decrees of the circuit court, the first, pronounced February 24, 1908, adjudicating the principles of the cause, denying them any relief, and decreeing a sale of the property of the defendant corporation to satisfy other debts and liens proven and decreed thereon; the second, pronounced February 10, 1909, denying their motion and refusing, on appellants' petition filed, to reverse and set aside said former decree so far as it affected their claim.

Appellants sought to establish and have decreed against the property of the defendant company a lien for certain materials alleged to have been furnished by them to it, under contract, to be used, and which the bills allege were used by it in the erection and construction of its said railway in Wetzel and Tyler counties, and the same property mentioned and described in their account therefor filed with and made a part of said bills.

So far as we can see the averments of the original and amended bills satisfy all requirements of a bill to enforce such a lien, viz.: The existence of the contract; the terms thereof; that the material was furnished pursuant to the contract; the filing of just and true account of the amount due thereon to them with the clerk of the county court within the time required by law; a description of the property against which the lien is asserted; the name of the owner thereof, and that the suit was brought within the time required by law, and the existence of the debt. Lunsford v. Wren, 64 W. Va. 458, 63 S. E. 308, and cases cited.

These bills were not demurred to, nor were the allegations thereof controverted by any of the answers filed. Both bills specifically allege that within sixty days from the time appellants ceased to furnish said material they filed with the clerk of the county court of said Wetzel county a just and true account of the amount due and owing them from said railway company after allowing all credits, together with a description of the property intended to be covered by said lien, duly sworn to January 19, 1904, and which was duly recorded in Mechanic's Lien Book, as would more fully appear from said account filed as "Exhibit F" therewith. These allegations, therefore, being well pleaded, and for the purposes of the suit stood for confessed, and by the very terms of the statute, section 36, c. 125, Code 1906, no further proof was required.

[1] The correctness of the decrees below depend on the construction that should be given our statute, section 4, c. 75, Code (1906). It provides: "Every lien provided for in the second and third sections shall be discharged unless the person desiring to avail himself thereof shall, within sixty days after he ceases to labor on, or furnish material or machinery for such building or other structure, file with the clerk of the county court of the county, in which the same is situated, a just and true account of the amount due him, after allowing all credits, together with a description of the property intended to be covered by the lien, sufficiently accurate for identification, with the name of the owner or owners of the property, if known, which account shall be sworn to by the person claiming the lien, or some person in his behalf." Appellants' lien, "Exhibit F" with the bill, apparently the original account filed with the clerk of the county court, is dated January 1, 1904, and is sworn to January 19, 1904. The account purports to be itemized, beginning September 3, and running through September, October, November and ending December 18, and showing a total balance, after allowing credits, of $2,920.37; but at no other place in the account, except the date January 1, 1904, does the year appear. On the back of the account there is this endorsement: "Clerk's Office, County Court, Wetzel County, W. Va. Filed for record this 19th day of Jan'y. A. D. 1904, at 10:40 o'clock A. M. Recorded in Book 1, of page 396." In the return of the clerk to a writ of certiorari, bringing up this memorandum, he certifies this note to be by the clerk, and a part of the record of the cause. It does not appear to be signed by the clerk. [2, 3] If, however, the facts alleged in the bills be not impugned by this exhibit, or the memorandum thereon, they must be regarded as facts established for the purpose of this suit. The contention of appellees, however, is that as the lien does not show affirmatively, on its face, as they contend it must, every fact necessary to be alleged and proven to make it a good and valid lien on the property, the lien must fail. They say that by the omission of the year over or opposite the items therein the account fails to show affirmatively "when the work was performed and material furnished," wherefore fatally defective; and that it is not shown on the face of the exhibit, nor at all, except by allegation, which they say is not sufficient, that it was filed in the clerk's office as the statute requires, within sixty days after appellants ceased to furnish said material. Does the "just and true account of the amount due" required by our statute call for an itemized statement, with years, months, and days, when the contract is made directly with the owner? The authorities, or the great weight of them, we think, say No. 27 Cyc. 184. This authority says: "Under a statute requiring the claim to state the time when the materials were furnished or the work done the omission of the year is fatal, although the months and days are stated; but under a statute requiring merely 'a just and true account' the omission of the year is not fatal when the months and days on which the items were furnished are stated. Where the year is stated only at the head of the account but the paper itself shows that such year refers to the days and months placed opposite the items it is sufficient." Boissot on Mech. Liens, section 411, says: "The claim need not contain an itemized account of the lien debt, in the absence of any language in the statute expressly or by necessary implication requiring it." And in section 418 this writer says: "Where the statute expressly requires the claims to set forth the times when the material was furnished or the labor performed, an omission of such allegations in the claim renders the lien void.

* * * But, where the statute does not expressly require the claim to give the dates of the account, such dates need not be stated." See also Id. section 412; Doane v. Clinton, 2 Utah, 417; Cook v. Rome Brick Co., 98 Ala. 409, 12 South. 98. Prior decisions of this court we think support this view. O'Neil v. Taylor, 59 W. Va. 370, 53 S. E. 471; Grant v. Cumberland Valley Cement Co., 58 W. Va. 162, 52 S. E. 36. The second point in the syllabus in the latter case, says: "When the basis of such lien is work and labor, and the recorded paper shows the kind, amount and price thereof, failure to enter each month's, day's or year's service, as the case may be, as a separate item of charge, and credit each payment as a separate item, with the date thereof, will not vitiate such paper, if, on its face, it discloses with reasonable certainty the kind, amount and contract price of the service and time of performance." This point also says that, "Itemization in form is unnecessary, if it appear in substance and effect." And the third point is: "To determine the sufficiency of such an account and claim, the account proper and the sworn statement appended to it, may be read together and considered as a whole." The sixth point is that, "If a bill and its exhibits, read together, show all the facts necessary to be alleged in a bill sufficient in law, a demurrer thereto is properly overruled." The exact point we have for decision in this case was not directly involved or decided in that case. The point seems to have been more or less directly involved however in O'Neil v. Taylor, supra. In the account in that case no dates were given for any of the jobs of work done on the building, and it was said, in point three of the syllabus, that "A general statement of the demand of such contractor showing its nature and character, and the amount due or owing thereon, after allowing all credits is a compliance with the statute." And reviewing the Virginia case of Shackelford v. Beck, 80 Va. 573, construing the statute of that state, and differentiating it from our own, it is said, that under the Virginia statute, "the lienor is required to file, within the time specified after the completion of the work, in the clerk's office among other things, 'a true account of the work done or material furnished,' while our statute requires 'a just and true account of the amount due him.'" The statutes of other states are also differentiated from ours. And at page 378 of 59 W. Va., at page 474 of 53 S. E., it is observed that, "In some of the cases cited by defendant's counsel the dates of performing the work and furnishing the material are required by the statutes to be given," but that the only date material under our statute, is the date when the work was completed, or the last material furnished. This exact point is the subject of sections 421 and 422, Boissot on Mech. Liens. In section 421 he says: "Mechanic's lien statutes usually, if not invariably, limit the time within which the claim may be filed. In many cases this time runs from the completion of the work. The question therefore arises whether a lien claim should affirmatively show that it is filed within the required time, or whether that may be left to be proved at the trial. While it undoubtedly is the better practice to have the claim show this fact affirmatively, yet there are numerous decisions to the effect that it is not necessary to do so." The cases supporting this view, cited and reviewed, are from Alabama, California, Connecticut, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, and Utah. Those opposing it, referred to in section 422, are from Nebraska, Pennsylvania, and Minnesota. Our statute certainly does not require the account to show affirmatively that it was filed within sixty days after ceasing to furnish material; and it seems to us that we should not read into a statute, providing as ours does for continuing or perpetuating such lien, and which begins at the time the work is commenced or the first material furnished, a requirement not specifically provided or clearly implied by the terms thereof. The owner with whom the contract is made is necessarily charged with actual notice of the terms of his contract, the dates of performing the labor or furnishing the material under the contract, and the time when the contractor ceases to labor or furnish material; and the filing of "a just and true account of the amount due," if in fact filed within the time required by statute, is certainly sufficient to give notice of a lien though the fact may not affirmatively appear on the face of the account, and if the bill alleges all the essential facts, entitling the lienor to his lien, and these facts are either admitted or proven, this, under our decisions, is all that should be required. The statute should be given a fair and liberal construction. Blowpipe Co. v. Spencer, 40 W. Va. 698, 21 S. E. 769.

[4] It has been suggested, however, that the exhibit contradicts the allegations of the bills, in that it fails to show on its face, or by the certificate of the clerk, that it was filed within the time prescribed and that although the allegations of the bill be sufficient and be taken for confessed, the exhibit contradicting them must be looked to rather than the bill itself to sustain the lien. The law undoubtedly is, that in cases of conflict between the instrument sued on, or vouched for the allegations of the bill, the instrument itself and not the bill will be looked to for its correct interpretation, and the facts alleged as appear therein. Richardson v. Ebert, 61 W. Va. 523, 56 S. E. 887; Board of Education v. Berry, 62 W. Va. 434, 59 S. E. 169, 125 Am. St. Rep. 975; Loar v. Wilfong, 63 W. Va. 306, 61 S. E. 383; Lea v. Robeson, 12 Gray (Mass.) 290; Dillon v. Barnard, 21 Wall. 430, 22 L. Ed. 678; Land Co. v. Maxwell Land Co., 139 U.

S. 569, 11 Sup. Ct. 656, 35 L. Ed. 278. But there is nothing upon the face of "Exhibit F" contradicting the allegations of the bills, and though the endorsement thereon, brought up on certiorari is not signed by the clerk of the county court, and is a part of the record, it in no way contradicts the averments of the bills. So far as this endorsement is evidence at all it tends to support the bills. The principles enunciated in the authorities cited are not applicable, we think, to the facts in this case.

[5] But it is said the description of the property on which the lien is claimed is too indefinite. As we have seen the statute requires the description to be sufficiently accurate only for identification. The description of the property given in the lien is, "the railway of said corporation situate in the counties of Wetzel and Tyler and extending from the city of Sistersville in Tyler county to the town of Brooklyn in Wetzel county." Because of the character of a railway, traversing as it does in this case the streets and roads of a town and county, the notoriety which is necessarily given such a work of internal improvement, the description in this lien is sufficiently accurate we think for identification.

[8] Another point not presented or argued by counsel, though suggested in council, is that perhaps public policy would forbid the laying of a mechanic's lien upon railways of this character. Mr. Bolsof, section 204, discusses this subject, referring to the conflicting decisions. After a brief review of the cases he says in conclusion, that "the better reason would seem to show that mechanics' liens may be enforced against street car companies under the laws giving liens on railroads." Our statute does not in specific terms give such a lien on railroads, but we think the subject is covered in general terms by section 2, c. 75, Code (1906), giving mechanics or materialmen, who furnish any labor or material "for constructing, altering, repairing or removing a house, mill, manufactory, or other building, appurtenances, fixtures, bridge, or other structure, by virtue of a contract with the owner or his authorized agent, * * * a lien to secure the payment of the same; upon such house or other structure, and upon the interest of the owner in the lot of land on which the same may stand or to which it may be removed." Is not a railway a structure upon land, and does not the owner have an interest in the land or lot on which the railway is built, even though it be built on a public road or street? The Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, for this judicial circuit, has held with respect to the same railroad involved here, that section 7 of the same chapter gave to a corporation employed to supervise the construction of defendant's railway by means of the personal services of its officers and servants, a lien therefor on the property of the railway company, such corporation being within the words of the statute, such "other person" entitled to such lien, section 17, c. 13, subd. 9, Code (1906), providing that: "The word 'person' includes corporations, if not restricted by the context." Wetzel & Tyler Ry. Co. v. Tennis Bros., 145 Fed. 458, 75 C. C. A. 266; Id. (C. C.) 140 Fed. 193. If said section 7 gives to the class of persons described therein a lien on the property of a street railway company, what reason, either on principle or grounds of public policy, can be assigned for denying the like right to the class of persons protected by sections 2 and 3 of the same chapter? We can perceive none.

The question remains, what order of priority should be given appellants' lien? In his report, not excepted to by appellants, the commissioner placed it, along with other mechanic liens, sixth in order of priority, after the bonded indebtedness. On exceptions by Belford and Guyton, and the Best Manufacturing Company, however, who held liens of the same character, and given the same order of priority, the court below properly corrected the commissioner's report by giving them third place in the order of priority, immediately after the vendor's lien of E. A. Pollock. If appellants' lien is valid, as we have decided it is, it is entitled to the same order of priority as those of Belford and Guyton and the Best Manufacturing Company.

[8] Appellants did not except to the report of the commissioner, however, and in a petition filed by them in the court below, for a rehearing of the final decree of February 24, 1908, they represented that their lien had been reported and given its proper and appropriate place in the order of priority. Why they did not except, and why in their petition, after said decree, they should express satisfaction with the order of priority given their lien is not apparent. It is only explainable on the theory of oversight, or inadvertence. The error in the report is pointed out for the first time in this court, and we are urged to correct it. Can we properly do so? The admissions of the petitioners in the court below, we do not regard as concluding them. The order of priority to which they are entitled is a purely legal question presented on the face of the decree or record. Our decisions say that "Although no exceptions are filed to a commissioner's report, and the report is confirmed, if the decree of confirmation, upon its face, shows material error as to matter of law, prejudicial to the appellant, for such error the decree should be reversed." Reitz v. Bennett, 6 W. Va. 417; Ruhl v. Berry, 47 W. Va. 832, 35 S. E. 896; Haymond v. Murphy, 65 W. Va. 616, 64 S. E. 855. If the court below had not, on exceptions to the commissioner's report, denied appellants their lien on the railway property, it would no doubt, in rearranging the order of priority of the several debts and liens reported, have given appellants their proper place in the order of priority.

[7] It has been suggested in argument, however, that as the record shows appellants had not furnished all the material charged in their mechanic's lien, prior to the date of the execution and recordation of the deed of trust securing the bonds, and prior to the delivery of some of said bonds, the lien is not good for the material furnished subsequently. It seems to be the settled law of this state that a mechanic's lien attaches from the time the performance of the work and furnishing the material begin, and has priority over a deed of trust subsequently executed on the same property. Cushwa v. Imp. L. & B. Ass'n, 45 W. Va. 490, 32 S. E. 259; W. Va. Bldg. Co. v. Saucer, 45 W. Va. 483, 31 S. E. 965, 72 Am. St. Rep. 822; Charleston Lumber Co. v. Brockmyer, 18 W. Va. 586; Bank v. Dashiell, 25 Grat. (Va.) 616.

We are of opinion therefore that the court below erred in its decree of February 24, 1908, in sustaining exceptions to the report of the commissioner in favor of the appellants, and that this decree to this extent, as well as the subsequent decree of February 10, 1909, in so far as it may be regarded as affecting the rights of appellants to said lien, be reversed and annulled; and the decree which the circuit court should have entered will be entered here, overruling the said exception, and giving decree for the amount of said lien, to be paid third in the order of priority along with the liens of said Belford and Guyton and the Best Manufacturing Company.

COBERLY v. GAINER et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 7, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS (§§ 62, 90*)—CONTRACTS—VALIDITY—INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY OF OFFICERS.

All three members of a board of education met outside of their school district, on the 7th September, 1904, and signed their names, without giving their official designation, to a contract for "7 sets of The New Education," to be furnished to the public schools of their district, agreeing to pay therefor by warrant to be drawn upon the sheriff, "and not to be presented until the fall of 1905."

Hold:

(1) That said agreement was an attempt to create an obligation on the school district, payable out of the levy to be made for the fiscal year 1905, and was therefore in violation of section 45, c. 45, Code of West Virginia 1899 (section 45, c. 45, Code 1906), the law then in force, and created no charge upon the public fund of the district.

(2) That said contract was made by the board of education in its official capacity, and, notwithstanding it was in excess of authority, the law then in force imposed no individual liability on account thereof.

(3) That said contract was not the personal agreement of the members of the board of education, and that they did not thereby bind themselves individually.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Schools and School Districts, Cent. Dig. §§ 145, 148, 211, 218; Dec. Dig. §§ 62, 90.*]

2. OFFICERS (§ 114*)—INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

In the absence of a statute imposing individual liability upon a public officer for attempting to create a public debt in excess of his authority, he cannot be held personally liable therefor, except upon his agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Officers, Cent. Dig. §§ 187-192; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Randolph County.

Action by C. C. Coberly against S. W. Gainer and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

James Coberly and Cunningham & Stallings, for plaintiff in error. Talbott & Hoover and E. A. Bowers, for defendants in error.

WILLIAMS, P. On the 7th of September, 1904, A. G. Keller, J. W. Courtney, and S. W. Gainer, composing the board of education for New Interest district, in Randolph county, purchased, by written contract, from James J. Ellis, for the public schools of their district, seven sets of The New Education, at the price of $262.50, payable by warrant upon the sheriff, to be presented in the fall of 1905. On the 26th of November, 1904, the board of education made an order, directing said sum to be paid to the order of said James J. Ellis out of the building fund to be levied for the year 1905. Ellis then assigned the order to C. C. Coberly, secretary of said board of education. The order was not paid, and, in April, 1907, Coberly sued the members of the board of education before a justice of the peace, in their individual capacity, and recovered judgment. Defendants appealed to the circuit court of Randolph county, and the case was tried by the court, in lieu of a jury, upon agreed facts, and on the 4th of March, 1909, the court rendered final judgment, dismissing plaintiff's action, and plaintiff obtained this writ of error.

[1] The contract is expressly made a charge upon a future levy, and in making it the board of education exceeded its authority, and plaintiff relies upon sections 3 and 4, c. 16, Acts 1904 (Code 1906, c. 17, § 10a), as fixing individual liability upon the members of the board of education. But this statute did not take effect until the 9th of November, 1904, a little more than two months after the debt had been contracted, and therefore does not apply. Section 45, c. 45, Code 1899 (section 45, c. 45, Code 1906), is the only law, then in force, which imposes personal liability on a board of education for creating a public obligation when it has no fund with which to pay it, and it does not include the case of a debt to be paid out of the levy for a future year. That section reads in part as follows, viz.: "If the trustees of any district, or any board of education, shall make any agreement for the employment of a teacher in violation of this section, or for any other object concerning free schools under their charge, so as to occasion thereby the aggregate of the just claims against the board of education of the district, or independent school district, in any year, to exceed its aggregate receipts, as aforesaid, for such year, such board of education, or trustees, shall be individually responsible to the teacher, or other person with whom such agreement is made." It will be noticed that this provision, creating individual liability upon the members of the board of education, is restricted by its language to cases of overdrafts upon funds levied for a particular year, and does not include the case of an obligation expressly made payable out of the levy of a future year. The first part of the section quoted from forbids a board of education to contract a debt to be paid out of the levy of a future year, but provides no penalty in case it attempts to do so. The section forbids two things: (1) Creating a debt, payable out of the levy for a future year; and (2) creating debts, payable out of the levy of a particular year, the aggregate of which shall be in excess of the funds at the disposal of the board of education for that year. For exceeding its authority in the first particular, the statute under discussion does not expressly provide a remedy; but for exceeding its authority in the second instance a remedy is given to the party contracted with by making the members of the board individually liable. Why a liability was created in the one instance, and not in the other, it is not necessary for us to inquire. The Legislature may have reasoned that, as no one could be deceived by a contract creating an obligation, payable out of the levy of a future year, every one dealing with the board of education being chargeable with knowledge of its lawful powers, it was not necessary to give a remedy in that case; while in the case of an obligation, payable out of a fund then at its disposal, no one should be held to a knowledge of the condition of the public accounts, and therefore might easily be deceived with reference thereto, and might innocently accept such overdraft. But, whatever may be the reason for it, the statute has provided a remedy in one instance, and not in the other. In respect to creating individual liability, the statute is penal, and must therefore be strictly construed; and, so construing it, we must say that the law in force on 7th September, 1904, created no individual liability upon the members of the board of education for attempting to create an obligation to be paid out of a future levy.

[2] But the fact that the individual members were not made liable by law, for exceeding their powers, does not preclude the possibility of their individual liability by agreement. The question is then presented, Did they assume personal liability by signing the contract as individuals, and without official designation? We think not, because it is evident, from both the nature of the transaction and the language of the contract, that it was executed in an official, and not a private, capacity. The articles purchased were for the use of the public schools of their district. The transaction is free from fraud, and the contract was signed at a meeting at which all three were present. True it was signed outside of their district; but the board of education is not forbidden by law to meet and transact business outside of its district. Hence the fact that the contract was signed in the city of Elkins, outside of New Interest district, does not affect its character as being an official act. The agreement shows on its face that the debt was created for a public purpose, and the fact is agreed that it was signed by all three members at a meeting at which all three were present. That gives it the force of official action, and if it was official action it negatives intention to assume personal responsibility. The manner in which the obligation was to be paid—that is, by warrant upon the public treasury—also clearly indicates that there was no intention to assume individual liability by the manner of signing it. The board of education acted in its corporate capacity in making the contract, and the fact that each member signed his name to it, without official designation, does not imply intention to bind himself individually. 35 Cyc. 910; Mackenzie v. Board of Trustees, 72 Ind. 189; Lyon v. Adamson, 7 Iowa, 509. Public officers will not be held personally liable on contracts made on behalf of the public, even though such contracts be made in excess of their authority, unless a clear intention to assume personal liability is shown. 29 Cyc. 1446, and numerous cases cited in note 15.

The creation of a debt by a board of education, to be paid out of a future levy, is expressly prohibited by section 45, c. 45, Code 1899, which was the law in force when the debt sued for was contracted, and the attempt to create such an obligation is an act ultra vires, and therefore void. Shinn v. Board of Education, 39 W. Va. 497, 20 S. E. 604.

The principle of law by which the agent of a private individual may be held personally liable when he exceeds his authority, or when he acts for an undisclosed principal, does not apply in the case of a public officer, acting in his official capacity. The board of education must act strictly within the powers conferred on it by law, and those who deal with it must take notice of the extent of its powers. Honaker v. Board of Education, 42 W. Va. 170, 24 S. E. 544, 32 L. R. A. 413, 57 Am. St. Rep. 847; State v. Chilton, 49 W. Va. 453, 39 S. E. 612.

The contract shows on its face that it was in excess of power, and is therefore void, because it expressly states that the warrant for the debt was not to be presented until the fall of 1905, which means that it was payable out of the levy for 1905, and the order for the warrant itself so states. Shinn v. Board of Education, supra.

The order, made on 26th November, 1904, directing the issuance of a draft in favor of Ells, notwithstanding said order was made after chapter 16, Acts 1904, became operative, does not affect the case. That order is only a step in the process of making payment, a matter merely incidental to the attempted discharge of a pre-existing void obligation, and to which it can give no vitality. Jurisdiction was exceeded by making the agreement on 7th September, 1904, and the order for the warrant, made November 26, 1904, was not a separate act by the board of education, distinguishable from the original obligation, so as to bring it within chapter 16, Acts 1904. That act is not retroactive.

The contract was ultra vires, and therefore void, and created no liability upon the public fund of the school district, or upon the individual members then composing the board of education.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment will be affirmed.

STATE v. DOVE.

1. HOMICIDE (§ 300*)—SELF-DEFENSE—INSTRUCTIONS.

The evidence showed that accused and decedent quarreled while drinking, and decedent fell to the floor with accused on top. When they both got up, and accused turned to leave the place, decedent struck him on the head. Decedent then ran past him and toward a buggy, when accused kicked at him, and ran around the buggy, and met decedent on the other side, where they continued fighting, and decedent was cut. Held, that accused was an aggressor by continuing the difficulty, and could not claim that the cutting was in self-defense, so that a requested charge as to right to repel force by force in defense of his person was properly refused.

2. HOMICIDE (§ 112*)—SELF-DEFENSE—PROVOCATION.

One who provokes a fight by unlawfully assaulting another will at least be guilty of manslaughter, if he kills the other person, though at the exact time of the homicide it was necessary for him to kill to save his own life.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 380*)—CHARACTER EVIDENCE—PARTICULAR INSTANCES.

A witness testifying to accused's good character in a murder case cannot be cross-examined as to his knowledge of particular facts or occurrences tending to accused's character.

4. WITNESSES (§ 387*)—CROSS-EXAMINATION—REBUTTAL.

A witness who had testified as to accused's good character could be asked on cross-examination whether he had not stated to the officer who was required to arrest accused that accused was a bad man and dangerous when drunk, and might kill him, such evidence tending to contradict witness' character testimony.

Appeal from Superior Court, Granville County; Daniels, Judge.

G. Houston Dove was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Indictment for murder tried at February term, 1911. At the conclusion of the testimony, the solicitor made formal announcement that the state would not ask for conviction of murder in the first degree. The court thereupon charged the jury, and verdict was rendered not guilty of the felony and murder charged in the bill of indictment, but guilty of manslaughter. Judgment on the verdict, and the prisoner excepted and appealed.

V. S. Bryant and B. S. Royster, for appellant. The Attorney General and Geo. L. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HOKE, J. It was chiefly urged for error that his honor declined to allow the jury to consider the plea of self-defense, being of opinion that there were no facts in evidence tending to support such a position. The homicide was shown to have occurred near Benehan, at about 8 o'clock at night, on January 27, 1911; and it appeared: That the prisoner, the deceased, and others were at a near beer stand, when the two had a quarrel, closed in a scuffle, and prisoner got deceased down and was on him. That deceased begged pardon. The parties got up, and more beer was ordered at prisoner's expense. The latter turned to go out when deceased struck him on the side of the head, knocking him out of the door, and flat down on his face. As he rose and got up, deceased ran by him and under a horse, which was hitched to a buggy, standing seven or eight feet from the door. That the prisoner kicked at deceased as he darted under the horse, then ran around the buggy, and pursued the deceased down the road. Fighting was heard between them, and deceased was heard to say, "Lord have mercy. He has cut me to death." One witness testified to this exclamation, and said, further, that he heard a voice, which he took to be prisoner's, reply: "If I haven't, I will." That after this, and in about two minutes from the time the two had disappeared down the road, the prisoner returned to the beer stand, saying deceased had gone home. When prisoner came back, he was very bloody, was bleeding himself from a cut in the neck or side of the head, apparently made by the bottle, and was very bloody on his shirt and both sleeves; the right sleeve being the bloodiest. In this connection a witness stated that prisoner said: "The blood on my arm didn't come out of me. It came out of the other fellow." The body of the deceased was found the next morning, with the throat cut; the doctor testifying that the wound was sufficient to cause death. Another witness said that the cut seemed to have been done from behind. About 150 feet from the beer stand, 30 or 40 feet from the road, in the direction the prisoner and deceased had gone, there was found a pool of blood and signs of a struggle, and the shoe of the prisoner fitted in some of the tracks near this place and going to it and returning to the road, and some little distance beyond this point was the place where the body was found, and there was the track of one person, that of deceased, from the place where the last struggle occurred to the body.

The prisoner, testifying in his own behalf, admitted having entered into the struggle in the beer stand, having kicked at deceased as he went under the horse, and having followed him around the buggy, and had a few licks with him, but denied having followed him down the road or having done the cutting; the prisoner's statement being, in part, as follows: "Joe said: 'Let's go to the beer stand.' Four or five of us went, and I treated the crowd. Then Joe treated. While drinking beer, he said, 'Some one told me you were going to throw some beer in my face,' and I said, 'If you did, I was going to fight you.' I said it didn't amount to anything. Another time he said, 'Don't throw that beer in my face.' I told him that I would not, and whoever told him that I would told a lie. He said whoever called him a liar had to fight. I caught him by the coat, and he fell on the floor; turned on his side; tried to get up. I told him to wait. I believe he proposed to fight, and I did not want to fight; but, if nothing else would do, I could accommodate him. I told Mangum to give him beer. I turned to go home, and, as I turned to step out, he struck me on the side of the head with a beer bottle, and knocked me out of the door. The buggy was five or six feet from the door. As soon as I recovered, I jumped up and looked back in the house. Then looked, and saw him going under the horse. I turned and kicked at him. I ran around buggy, and met him on the other side.

We passed several licks. Several people were there then. We went a little further off, and somebody cut me on the neck. I ran far enough around to get out of the way, 5 or 10 steps, then turned, and came back in the door. I saw that I was bleeding when I got inside, and don't know what cut me. Mangum said it was the beer bottle. I didn't feel the cut until I was outdoors near the buggy, knocking. The doctor came. I washed my neck before he came, and I didn't tell any one that the blood on my coat sleeve came from the other man. I don't remember having any knife. Joe said something about fighting and cutting, and took out his knife. I did take my knife out, but don't know what became of it. I did not open it. I told them that they might find my knife at the door where the fight occurred."

There were other facts tending to establish guilt, and, on perusal of the entire testimony, there is no room for doubt that the prisoner killed the deceased, and it is equally clear that his honor correctly ruled that there was no evidence to support the plea of self-defense. According to his own statement, and whether the occurrence is held to consist of one fracas or two, the prisoner was an aggressor.

[1] In the first place, "he caught the deceased by the coat when he fell to the floor," and, in the second place, he kicked at the deceased as he fled, and then, going around the buggy, renewed the difficulty when there was no necessity for him to do so, real or apparent, for his own protection, and in either aspect the principle of self-defense is excluded, and the prisoner is guilty of manslaughter at the least.

[2] The doctrine applicable, as it obtains in this state, is stated in Garland's Case as follows: "It is the law of this state that where a man provokes a fight by unlawfully assaulting another, and in the progress of the fight kills his adversary, he will be guilty of manslaughter at least, though at the precise time of the homicide it was necessary for the original assailant to kill in order to save his own life." State v. Garland, 138 N. C. 678, 50 S. E. 854, citing with approval Foster's Crown Law, p. 276, and State v. Brittain, 89 N. C. 481. Apart from the testimony as to the origin of the difficulty, there is no error to prisoner's prejudice certainly in the verdict convicting him of the crime of manslaughter. State v. Kendall, 143 N. C. 659-665, 57 S. E. 340; State v. Peter Johnson, 48 N. C. 266. And this view of the homicide is the sufficient answer to another objection, earnestly insisted on by the prisoner, that his honor declined to give his prayer for instruction No. 8, as follows: "A man may repel force by force in defense of his person against one who manifestly intends, or endeavors by violence or surprise, to commit a known felony such as murder and the like. In such cases he is not obliged to refract, but may pursue his adversary until he has secured himself from all danger, and, if he kills him in so doing, it is called justifiable self-defense"—the prayer citing State v. Dixon, 75 N. C. 279. The decision in State v. Dixon announces a correct principle of law of the facts as they are there presented, but it has been several times referred to as sustaining a doctrine of "rare and dangerous application," and is never permissible except when actual assault is being made with a present purpose to kill, and with the present ability, real or apparent, to carry out the felonious purpose. State v. Kennedy, 91 N. C. 572; State v. Blevins, 138 N. C. 670, 50 S. E. 763. In this last case, speaking to the position, the court said: "True, as said in one or two of the decisions, this is a doctrine of rare and dangerous application. To have the benefit of it the assaulted party must show that he is free from blame in the matter, that the assault upon him was with felonious purpose, and that he took life only when it was necessary to protect himself. It is otherwise in ordinary assaults, even with deadly weapons. In such case a man is required to withdraw if he can do so, and to retreat as far as is consistent with his own safety. State v. Kennedy, 91 N. C. 572. In either case he can only kill from necessity. But in the one he can have that necessity determined in view of the fact that he has a right to stand his ground; in the other, he must show as one feature of the necessity that he has retreated to the wall."

In this case the evidence tends to show that the prisoner went around the buggy to renew the assault on the deceased, followed him down the road, and killed without necessity. Therefore it is that the right of self-defense and the manner and extent of it, as correctly stated and approved in State v. Hill, 141 N. C. 769, 53 S. E. 311; State v. Hough, 138 N. C. 663, 50 S. E. 709, and State v. Dixon, supra, may not be allowed to avail the prisoner. Nor can the exceptions to the rulings of the court on questions of evidence be sustained. It appears that on the trial one J. H. Keith, a witness for the prisoner, had testified to his good character, and the state, over objection, was allowed to show declarations on the part of witness after the occurrence and before the trial made to the officer charged with the duty of arresting the prisoner, that the latter was a "bad man, dangerous when drunk, and might kill him," etc.; the prisoner relying upon State v. Holly, 71 S. E. 450, at the last term, in support of the objection.

[3] In that well-considered opinion by Associate Justice Allen, it was correctly held that a witness who had testified to the good character of a prisoner being tried for murder could not be cross-examined as to his knowledge or having heard rumors of particular facts or occurrences which tended to impeach such character for the purpose of weakening the force of the witness' testimony, but the evidence admitted is not of that character.

[4] On the contrary, it consisted of declarations from the witness himself, having a direct tendency to contradict the testimony he had given in prisoner's favor, and was clearly admissible under the principles approved in the Holly Case and the other decisions there cited.

There is no error in the record, and the judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

No error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by R. H. Trollinger against F. H. Fleer. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This action was brought by the plaintiff for loss of wages for himself and his two sons for 12 months, alleging that he made a contract to work for the defendant on his farm near Thomasville for one year from July 1, 1909, at the price of $1,200 and $1 per day for each of plaintiff's sons, said payments to be made monthly, and also for expenses of moving his furniture to the defendant's farm, and for loss incurred in giving up his position, which he claimed he filled, with some other parties. The defendant denied that he had ever hired either the plaintiff or his sons, and alleged that the proposal to hire them was altogether tentative, and was dependent upon his interview with the plaintiff at the defendant's farm, as appears in the last clause in defendant's letter to plaintiff, dated June 22, 1909, in which he says: "I will look for an immediate reply, after receiving which, I will make it convenient to meet you at an early date." The defendant further alleges that the plaintiff had made certain representations as to his qualifications to do the work required with machinery, which he ascertained were not true, as he could not operate the machinery with which the defendant expected to farm. The defendant further denied that he had made any contract for the hire of the boys, but the court treated the hiring of the plaintiff and the two sons as an entire contract. The plaintiff and his sons were discharged by the defendant and, they allege, without just cause or excuse. The defendant contended at the trial that there was no sufficient contract of hiring between the plaintiff and himself, and that his brother, M. L. Fleer, who actually hired the plaintiff and his boys upon the terms mentioned, had no authority from him to do so. This requires a summary of the testimony. On June 7, 1909, plaintiff mailed to the defendant, from Seneca, S. C., a letter, in which he proposed to hire himself as manager, and his boys as laborers, to the defendant, who owned and cultivated a farm in Davidson county, making a formal application for the positions. Defendant answered, June 16, 1909, as follows: "I believe you would be the man for the job, and if you will tell me what pay you expect I am willing to take the matter into consideration. Figure upon straight wages by the month, or year, as I do not care to share crops. Your reply should be sent to my Phila. office to reach me promptly. Use the enclosed envelope." To this letter plaintiff replied, proposing to hire himself, as manager, at $1,200 a year, and each of his boys at the wages of "a common day laborer." Defendant acknowledged the receipt of this letter June 22, 1909, in a letter of that date, and then proceeded as follows: "I am very favorably impressed with the statement you make regarding your ability, and I have no doubt that if I were to engage you, we could get along nicely. The only house I have in which it would be practical for you to live, in order to have the place under supervision, is the tenant house now occupied by a colored man. This only has four rooms, but could be enlarged by a second story, whereby it would be large enough to accommodate you. I should like to send the present tenant of this house away not later than July 1st, if you could be ready to move in by that time with only part of your family. I would then immediately start to erect an addition large enough to accommodate you all. It would require one or two of your boys to take care of the work around the barn and place, and they should come along with you at once. The wages for common farm labor around our parts is $1.00 per day, and your boys will have to start at that price. If you, yourself, could start in on July 1st, I should like to have an immediate answer by telegraph, in order to give the colored man now in the tenant house a chance to look for work elsewhere, and make other necessary arrangements." In answer to this letter, plaintiff wired defendant, June 28th, as follows: "Will start to work July 1, with one boy. Will be here to-day." Plaintiff testified: That on June 30, 1909, he went to the farm with one of his sons for the purpose of making preparations to move into the house with his family, and to do the work assigned to them. He found there M. L. Fleer, defendant's brother, who had entire charge and control of the farm, defendant being absent and at his home in Philadelphia, Pa. That M. L. Fleer directed the work on the farm, kept the time of the employes, and paid them their wages, issuing checks for F. H. Fleer. He then stated that M. L. Fleer told him "to move into the house," and also put him and his son to work. When he first met M. L. Fleer at the farm, he said to plaintiff: "This is Mr. Trollinger, is it?" to which the plaintiff replied, "Yes." He then said: "I was looking for you. Had a letter from Brother that you would be here to-morrow to go to work; and where are the boys?" to which witness replied that he had not agreed to bring but one, and he was with him. M. L. Fleer also told him that he had the house cleaned up ready for him to move into, but he was to have two boys. Witness told him he would furnish the other one later, that he had wired to the defendant that he would bring one, and he had him with him. Plaintiff testified further as follows: He had worked nine days, and was taken sick and had to go to bed, but before he went to bed the defendant came, but he had no conversation with him except with regard to work; talked to him frequently about the work; was working just as a hand with the rest. The defendant was on the farm only two days. The second day he was there the plaintiff went over to see him, and spoke to him, and the defendant said, "I am afraid I have made a mistake and hired a sick man," to which the plaintiff replied, "Yes, I am sick. I guess I will get well or die off your hands." That the defendant then excused himself, and he has never spoken to him since. He left for Philadelphia that night. There was evidence tending to contradict the plaintiff's proof as to the authority of M. L. Fleer to make the contract, and as to what the defendant had said to the plaintiff when he was sick; the general trend of the evidence on the part of the defendant being to show that no contract was made unless by the letters which passed between the parties, and there was also evidence on the part of the plaintiff tending to show that he and his boys had complied with the contract to the date of their discharge, and that the discharge was wrongful, and evidence on the part of the defendant to the contrary.

The judge substantially charged the jury to find whether the contract of hiring was entered into by the parties, as alleged by the plaintiff, and that if the plaintiff and his boys, after the telegram of June 28th was sent to the defendant, went to the farm and were put to work by M. L. Fleer, and he was the agent of the defendant for that purpose, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover the contract price, less what he and his sons had since received for their services elsewhere, unless the jury should find that they were rightfully discharged, the burden to prove that fact being upon the defendant, and if the jury found that there was no contract, or if there was one and the plaintiff and his sons were rightfully discharged for a breach thereof, their verdict should be for the defendant. There was a verdict for the plaintiff and judgment thereon. Defendant appealed.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1-3] There was ample evidence to show that a contract for the hire of plaintiff and his sons had been made, by the defendant, and we think the case was fairly submitted to the jury, with proper instructions as to the law. The motion to nonsuit and the prayer for peremptory instructions were therefore properly overruled.

[4] The charge may not have been as full or as explicit as defendant may have desired it to be, but, if not so, they should have asked for special instructions so that it might be made so. McKinnon v. Morrison, 104 N. C. 354, 10 S. E. 513; Simmons v. Davenport, 140 N. C. 407, 53 S. E. 225; State v. Yellowday, 152 N. C. 793, 67 S. E. 480. We have no doubt that the learned judge would promptly have complied with any such request.

We need not decide the case by an answer to the question whether the letters constituted a definite offer and the filing of plaintiff's telegram an acceptance thereof as of the date of such filing, without regard to the fact, if true, as defendant testified, that he did not receive the telegram before he left Philadelphia, or to any loss or delay in transmission, or to any other casualty which prevented a receipt of plaintiff's notice of acceptance. This subject is fully discussed in Clark on Contracts (2d Ed.) pp. 25-27; 1 Wharton on Contracts, § 18; 1 Parsons on Contracts (9th Ed.) *pp. 475-485, all citing and commenting upon the celebrated case of Dunlop v. Higgins, 1 H. L. Cases 381.

[5, 6] There is, of course, no contract unless the parties assent to the same thing in the same sense, but it is not necessary that the assent should be given by the party himself, as it may be given by his agent, and it was in this way that the case was submitted to the jury.

[7] The real question then is, Was there evidence in the case that M. L. Fleer was the agent of the defendant to make the contract, and this agency could be established by express authority given to him or by the conduct of the defendant in holding him out as an agent for that purpose. He was certainly willing to contract with the plaintiff upon the terms stated in the letter of June 21st and 22d. The evidence tends to show that he had left M. L. Fleer in full charge of his farm, with apparent authority to act for him in the premises, and there was also evidence that he afterwards recognized him as his agent by ratifying what he had done and with knowledge of the facts.

[8] "Where a person by words or conduct represents or permits it to be represented that another person is his agent, he will be estopped to deny the agency as against third persons who have dealt on the faith of such representation with the person so held out as agent, even if no agency existed in fact." Tiffany on Agency, p. 84.

[9] This has been called an agency by estoppel, but, whether the defendant was estopped or not, the fact of the defendant's having put M. L. Fleer in general charge of his business with the apparent right to make contracts of employment is competent to be considered by the jury upon the question whether an agency existed or not. The rule is thus stated in Reinhard on Agency, §§ 89a-92, especially in section 91: "The doctrine of estoppel as applying to agency may, therefore, be summarized that where a party holds out another as his agent, or has knowingly allowed such person to act for him in one or more similar transactions without objection, he will, as a general rule, be estopped to deny the agency, whether it in fact existed or not, if a third party, without knowing the real state of the matter, and acting in good faith, and as a reasonable man would act from the appearance of things as created by the supposed principal, relies upon the existence of the agency and deals with the supposed agent as such, if the transaction be within the real or apparent scope of the authority exercised."

[10] But "it is not necessary, however, that the principal's assent or sanction be given in advance of the performance of the transaction which constitutes the subject-matter or purpose of the agency. If his assent be obtained after the transaction by a confirmation of the assumed relation, it is equally binding and efficacious. Such a confirmation of the authority of the supposed agent is called a ratification." Reinhard on Agency, § 96. This assent is equivalent to prior authority. "The relation of principal and agent is created by ratification when one person adopts an act done by another person, assuming to act on his behalf, but without authority or in excess of authority, with the same force and effect as if the relation had been created by appointment." Tiffany on Agency, p. 46.

[11, 12] There were facts and circumstances which the jury might well have found from the evidence to exist, and which would reasonably induce a careful and prudent person to suppose that M. L. Fleer was clothed with sufficient authority to make the contract of hiring, and certainly there was ample evidence to support a finding that the defendant had ratified his acts.

[13] There was a direct conflict between the plaintiff and the defendant in their testimony upon this question, but it was for the jury to pass upon the evidence, and to find the truth of the matter. If defendant held his brother out as his agent, and thereby induced others to act to their prejudice, upon the assumption that he had full authority to represent him, it is the same in law as if he had expressly authorized him to do so, or, if he ratified what he did, it is the same as if he had actually and expressly conferred the requisite authority. In either case, he is bound. Bank v. Hay, 143 N. C. 326, 55 S. E. 811. This covers all the exceptions to evidence, refusal to nonsuit, refusal to instruct as requested, and to the charge as given. It is to be noted that the exceptions to the charge were taken to instructions which had already been given without exception; in other words, to the repetition of those instructions. But, waiving that defect, we place our decision upon another ground. The question was really one of fact, which the jury have found against the defendant. They believed the plaintiff's version.

A careful review of the case leads us to the conclusion that the learned judge committed no error at the trial.

No error.

STATE v. NEVILLE.

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1173*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a prosecution for the theft of a mule, where it appeared that accused and his nephew met at a certain place for the avowed purpose of trading horses, that accused left his nephew, and was gone some time, and returned with the prosecuting witness' mule, and that he gave his nephew some money and a pistol, and told him to take the mule and sell him in an adjoining state, and the court instructed the jury that they should consider accused's recent possession of the mule as only a circumstance as passing upon his guilt, the failure of the court to charge that the recent possession of the property raised a presumption of guilt did not injure accused; the instruction given being more favorable to him.

2. LARCENY (§ 51*)—PROSECUTION—EVIDENCE—POSSESSION OF STOLEN PROPERTY.

Recent possession of stolen property is a circumstance tending to show the guilt of the possessor on his trial for stealing such property.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 784*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for stealing a mule, where it appeared that accused and his nephew, with the ostensible purpose of trading horses, went to a point near the barn of the prosecuting witness, and that accused left his nephew and returned with a mule belonging to prosecuting witness, and gave his nephew money and a pistol, telling him to sell the mule in an adjoining state, these facts being testified to by the nephew, a special charge upon circumstantial evidence was unnecessary; the case depending upon the credit given the testimony of the nephew.

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 784*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

In a criminal prosecution resting upon circumstantial evidence, there is no necessity for a formal charge upon the value of circumstantial evidence, it being sufficient that the jury be clearly instructed that unless, after due consideration, they are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt of the guilt of defendant, they should acquit.

In a prosecution for stealing a mule, a letter written by defendant's nephew, who had already been convicted of receiving the mule, knowing it to be stolen property, and who testified against defendant, which stated that the nephew did not steal the mule, was collateral to the issue, and its contents could be shown without producing the original.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alamance County; Daniels, Judge.

Richard Neville was convicted of larceny, and appeals. Affirmed.

The defendant was indicted in the court below for the larceny of a mule, the property of Walter Shepherd. The mule was last seen by its owner the fourth Sunday night in August, at about sundown, and it was not missed from the stable until the next day at about 4 o'clock a. m. He was found by Shepherd several weeks afterwards, near Martinsville, Va., with a saddle belonging to W. L. Spoon and a bridle belonging to the defendant, who lived with Spoon. After the mule was stolen, the defendant left home.

John Cole, a witness for the state, who had been convicted of receiving the mule from the defendant, knowing it to have been stolen, testified: That the defendant came to him when he was working for one Joe Cobb, and told him that he wanted him to assist in some horse trading. Cole at first said he could not go, but finally assented, and it was agreed that he would meet the defendant on the following Sunday, which he failed to do, but they did meet afterwards at Burlington on the night the mule was stolen. They rode in a buggy to a bridge over the creek, which is two miles from the home of W. L. Spoon, the brother-in-law of the defendant and an uncle of Cole, and three miles from the house of the prosecutor, from whose stable the mule was taken. Cole, being on unfriendly terms with Spoon, refused to go nearer the house than the bridge, and stopped there to wait for the defendant's return; the defendant having told him that he was going to get a mare and a colt which he had in Spoon's barn. When the defendant returned, he had a mule, which was identified as the one taken from the stable of Shepherd that night. The defendant told Cole to take the mule and trade or sell it, and he could have all over $50 that he could get for it. The defendant at the same time gave him a pistol to carry with him for protection, and $2.50 in money, and suggested that it might not be a bad idea for him to change his name after he had left with the mule, in order that he might not have any trouble. Cole took the mule to Virginia and sold him, receiving $5 in cash and a note for $60. On his return he told the defendant what had been done, and gave him the pistol which had been borrowed and $2.50 in money. A few days after Cole's return from Virginia, the defendant went to see him, and told him that a warrant had been issued for him for stealing the mule, and advised him to "hit the bushes." He asked Cole for the pistol, and it was given to him. There was evidence tending to show that the prosecutor traced the mule from his home to the bridge by tracks which were made both by the mule and the man who had taken him, which tracks were made by the same number of shoes as those worn by the defendant. The defendant introduced evidence tending to contradict the witness for the state, and to show that he was not at the bridge with Cole on the night the mule was stolen, nor at any other time, and each side introduced testimony in corroboration of its witnesses. It was admitted on the trial that the mule had been stolen from Shepherd, but the defendant denied that he was the thief, and offered evidence as to his good character.

There was a verdict of guilty, and from the judgment thereon the defendant appealed.

Parker & Parker and Long & Long, for appellant. Attorney General Bickett and Geo. L. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] We will have to deal, in this case, largely with the question as to the nature of the evidence and its legal significance, and it is therefore necessary to examine the testimony introduced by the state and the defendant in order to ascertain if, in any view of it, the defendant was entitled, without asking for them, to special instructions upon the law relating to recent possession and circumstantial evidence. We do not think the case called for specific instructions of the kind defendant now contends should have been given. The evidence, when properly viewed, tended either to acquit or convict the defendant without the necessity of any special consideration of the probative force of recent possession or of evidence by circumstances. The proof on the part of the state, briefly stated, was that the defendant and Cole, his nephew, it must be understood being younger than he was, and naturally under his influence, had agreed, at the defendant's solicitation, to meet at a certain place for the purpose of trading horses, but really with the design of stealing the mule, as the gravely suspicious circumstances strongly indicate. They met in Burlington, according to agreement, or by accident, which makes no difference, and drove in a buggy to the bridge over the creek two miles from W. L. Spoon's and three miles from the prosecutor's home. There was evidently a conspiracy to steal the mule, and that would seem to have been the sole object of the journey, the swapping of horses being a mere sham or pretense, as the jury apparently found it to be. The defendant left John Cole, the state's witness, and went to W. L. Spoon's home, where he got a saddle and bridle. He then went to the stable of the prosecutor and got the mule, and rode him to the meeting place at the bridge, where he told Cole that he had swapped the colt for the mule. He then sent Cole on his way to Virginia with the mule, for the purpose of selling or trading him, armed him with a pistol for protection, and supplied him with money for the journey, and when he returned, after the sale of the mule, he received a part of the money and the pistol from Cole. Upon this statement of the facts we do not see how the defendant could have been benefited by a charge from the court as to the weight which they should give to the fact of recent possession. If Cole told the truth and the jury believed him, the possession of the mule by the defendant was about as recent as it was possible for it to be, but the judge, instead of instructing the jury that, owing to its nature, the law raised a presumption of guilt from such a possession, he told the jury that they should consider it as only a circumstance in passing upon the defendant's guilt, for he nowhere charged the jury that there was any presumption either of law or fact as to the defendant's guilt. This charge was much more favorable to the defendant than it would have been if the court had told the jury, in accordance with the rule of law, that special weight should be given to the fact of recent possession.

[2] The charge is sustained by the case of State v. Hullen, 133 N. C. 656, 45 S. E. 513, in which the court said: "Recent possession of stolen property has always been considered as a circumstance tending to show the guilt of the possessor on his trial upon an indictment for larceny. It is not necessary that we should here draw any nice distinction concerning the presumptions of guilt based on recent possession as being strong, probable, or weak, because the court in its charge, to which there was no exception, instructed the jury that the recent possession of the defendant was only a circumstance to be weighed by them in passing upon his guilt, and this charge is sustained, we believe, by all the authorities. State v. Graves, 72 N. C. 482; State v. Rights, 82 N. C. 675; State v. Jennett, 88 N. C. 665; State v. McRae, 120 N. C. 608 [27 S. E. 78, 58 Am. St. Rep. 808]."

The rule in regard to recent possession of stolen goods was thus stated in State v. Graves, 72 N. C. 482, by Chief Justice Pearson: "The rule is this: 'When goods are stolen, one found in possession so soon thereafter that he could not have reasonably got the possession unless he had stolen them himself, the law presumes he was the thief.' This is simply a deduction of common sense, and, when the fact is so plain that there can be no mistake about it, our courts, following the practice in England, where the judge is allowed to express his opinion as to the weight of the evidence, have adopted it as a rule of law, which the judge is at liberty to act on, notwithstanding the statute which forbids a judge from intimating an opinion as to the weight of the evidence." It is said in that case that this presumption of law is subject to some qualifications, depending upon the recency of the possession and the other facts and circumstances of the particular case. We need not decide whether the presumption of guilt was strong or weak in this case as a matter of law, as the judge simply gave to it the force and effect of a bare circumstance against the defendant, to be considered by them in passing upon the question of his guilt or innocence. In State v. McRae, 120 N. C. 608, 27 S. E. 78, 58 Am. St. Rep. 808, it was held that the presumption of guilt arising from recent possession of stolen property is strong, slight, or weak, according to the particular facts surrounding any given case, and the cases are very rare in which the presumption of guilt can be held as matter of law to be strong, though the presumption in this case is stronger than usual, owing to the other facts and circumstances, as the possession of the defendant when first discovered by Cole was very recent after the theft had been committed, and the circumstances of the case surrounding it tended very strongly to convince a reasonable man that the defendant was the thief. It is unnecessary, though, to consider this question any further, as the charge of the court was as favorable to the defendant as he had a right to expect, nor do we think it was necessary for the court to charge specially as to the rule in regard to circumstantial evidence.

[3] There was no chain of circumstances in this case which required the court to tell the jury that each circumstance which constituted a link in the chain should be established to their full satisfaction. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, it is true; but there is no series of facts in this case necessary to be considered by the jury in order to convict the defendant. The case was without complication, and depended mainly upon the credit which the jury should attach to the testimony of John Cole, the witness for the state, when considered in connection with the other evidence in the case.

[4] In State v. Adams, 138 N. C. 688, 50 S. E. 765, we said: "No set of words is required by the law in regard to the force of circumstantial evidence. All that the law requires is that the jury shall be clearly instructed that, unless after due consideration of all the evidence they are 'fully satisfied' or 'entirely convinced' or 'satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt' of the guilt of the defendant, it is their duty to acquit, and every attempt on the part of the courts to lay down a 'formula' for the instruction of the jury by which to 'gauge' the degrees of conviction has resulted in no good." These are the words used by Chief Justice Pearson in State v. Parker, 61 N. C. 473, which we quoted and approved in the Adams Case, as "they present in a clear and forceful manner the true principle of law upon the subject."

[5, 6] There are some questions of evidence in the case which we will briefly consider. The witness, John Cole, was permitted to refer to the contents of a letter written by him to the sheriff without the letter being produced and offered in evidence. He stated that in the letter he said to the sheriff that he had not stolen the mule. This did not tend to prove anything prejudicial to the defendant, and, besides, it was collateral to the issue, and the contents of the letter could be shown without producing it. State v. Ferguson, 107 N. C. 846, 12 S. E. 574; State v. Sharp, 125 N. C. 631, 34 S. E. 264, 74 Am. St. Rep. 663.

[7] What Joe Cobb, a witness for the state, testified as to his conversation with John Cole in regard to the arrangements he had made with the defendant, was corroborative of Cole's evidence, and was therefore competent; Cole having been previously examined as a witness. State v. Freeman, 100 N. C. 434, 5 S. E. 921; State v. Maultsby, 130 N. C. 664, 41 S. E. 97. In Freeman's Case, supra, it is said: "This is in consonance with adjudications in this state, which, whenever the witness is impeached and in whatever manner, even if it is done in the cross-examination, permits his credit to be sustained by proof of declarations made to others similar to the testimony given in and assailed, and these may be proved by the witness who made them."

[8, 9] It seems that the solicitor in the course of the trial had stated that he would not ask the jury to convict upon the sole and unsupported testimony of John Cole, who was an accomplice, and the judge repeated the remark of the solicitor in his charge to the jury, and the defendant entered exception thereto. We do not see how this was prejudicial to the defendant, even if it was error, for the jury could properly convict upon the unsupported testimony of John Cole, if they found that he had told the truth in regard to the matter, even though he was an accomplice of the defendant. The judge virtually told the jury by referring to this remark of the solicitor that they should not convict the defendant unless they believed that John Cole's story of what had occurred between him and the defendant, and as to what he saw at the bridge, had been supported by other evidence.

The other exceptions are without merit, and, besides, the rulings of the court were harmless, if erroneous. We have carefully reviewed the entire record, including the great volume of evidence sent up to this court, by question and answer taken down by and recorded by a stenographer, and have failed to find any error committed by the court in the trial of the cause.

No error.

KING v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 100*)—RELIEF FUND AGREEMENTS—ACCEPTANCE OF BENEFITS—EFFECT.

An acceptance by an injured employé of benefits from a relief fund maintained by the employer, who has not contributed anything to the fund, but who merely guarantees to fulfill the obligations incurred in consequence of the maintenance of a relief department under his absolute control with power to determine the amount of the contributions of the members of the department, does not constitute a consideration moving from the employer for a release of a claim for the injuries, and the employé may sue therefor under the rule that a release must be founded on a valuable consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 166-170; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 100*)—RELIEF FUND AGREEMENTS—PAYMENT OF PART OF BENEFITS—EFFECT ON RIGHT OF ACTION.

A payment to an employé of a part of the benefits to which he is entitled under a relief fund agreement in consequence of injuries sustained does not bar a recovery for the injuries, in the absence of an express stipulation that the acceptance of the part shall have that effect.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 100*)—RELIEF FUND AGREEMENTS—VALIDITY.

An agreement by an employé of a railroad company maintaining a relief fund for injured employés that he will accept benefits from the fund in accordance with the rules of the company controlling the fund in discharge of any claim which may accrue to him for damages for personal injuries is valid where the employé merely agrees to elect after sustaining an injury whether to sue therefor or to accept the benefits; and an injured employé voluntarily and without fraud electing to accept the benefits is bound thereby.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 100*)—RELIEF FUND AGREEMENTS—VALIDITY.

A railroad company maintaining a relief department for the payment of benefits to injured employés who become members is not thereby engaging in the insurance business, and an agreement by an employé that he will accept benefits from the fund in discharge of any claim for personal injuries is not invalid on that ground.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 100*)—RELIEF FUND AGREEMENTS—ACCEPTANCE OF BENEFITS—VALIDITY.

The court in determining whether an injured employé accepting benefits from a relief fund maintained by the employer in discharge of any claim for the injuries voluntarily and without fraud elected to take such benefits, instead of electing to sue for the injuries, will scrutinize the evidence in view of the fact that the employer has great influence in determining the conduct of its employes, and that he may use such influence to their injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 166-170; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

6. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 100*)—RELIEF FUND AGREEMENTS—ACCEPTANCE OF BENEFITS—FRAUD—UNDUE INFLUENCE.

Where an injured employe of a railroad company was induced by fraud or undue influence to accept benefits from a relief fund in discharge of his claim for personal injuries, he could recover damages therefor without returning the benefits, but they must be allowed in reduction of the damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Cent. Dig. §§ 166-170; Dec. Dig. § 100.*]

Clark, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Whedbee, Judge.

Action by La Fayette King against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and new trial granted.

The plaintiff brings this action to recover damages for personal injuries caused, as he alleges, by the negligence of the defendant. The defendant denies negligence, and alleges, as a defense, that the defendant maintains a relief department, that the plaintiff was a member thereof, and that, after he was injured, he accepted benefits from said department which under its rules and regulations bars a recovery. Evidence was offered by the plaintiff in support of his contention. The defendant introduced evidence in rebuttal, and also introduced the rules and regulations of said department, which are very fully stated in the report of Barden v. Railroad, 152 N. C. 318, 67 S. E. 971. Section 4 of the rules and regulations provides: "The company shall have general charge of the department, guarantee the fulfillment of its obligations as determined by these regulations, take charge of all moneys belonging to the relief fund, and be responsible for their safe-keeping, pay into the fund interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum on monthly balances in its hands, supply the necessary facilities for conducting the business of the department, and pay all the operating expenses thereof." No evidence, however, was introduced that the defendant had contributed any money to the funds of the department or for its maintenance. There was evidence that the plaintiff was entitled to be paid benefits for a period of eight months, and that he was paid for about four months.

It appears from the rules and regulations:

(1) That the relief department is a department of the defendant.

(2) That the rules and regulations thereof are prescribed by the defendant.

(3) That under these rules and regulations the defendant has control of the department and of its money.

(4) That the rules and regulations can be changed by the defendant without the consent of the members of the department, and that they cannot be changed except with the consent of the defendant.

(5) That the object of the department is the establishment and management of a fund, to be known as the "Relief Fund," for the payment of definite amounts to employes contributing thereto, who are to be known as "members of the relief fund," when under the regulations they are entitled to such payment by reason of accident or sickness, or, in the event of their death, to the relatives or other beneficiaries designated by them, with the approval of the superintendent. The relief fund will consist of contributions from members thereof, income derived from investments and from interest paid by the company, and advances by the company, when necessary, to pay benefits as they become due.

(6) That the defendant is not a member of the department, but it is provided the company shall have general charge of the department, guarantee the fulfillment of its obligations as determined by these regulations, take charge of all moneys belonging to the relief fund, and be responsible for their safe-keeping, pay into the fund interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum on monthly balances in its hands, supply the necessary facilities for conducting the business of the department, and pay all the operating expenses thereof.

(7) That all employes of the company who under the regulations are contributors to the relief fund shall be designated as "members of the relief fund." There shall be five classes of members. The highest class in which an employe may be a member shall be determined by his regular or usual monthly pay, as follows:

Monthly Pay.	Highest Class.
Less than $35.00.....	1st.
$35.00 or more, but less than $55.00.....	2d.
$55.00 or more, but less than $75.00.....	3d.
$75.00 or more, but less than $95.00.....	4th.
$95.00 or more.....	5th.

For employes paid by the hour, trip, piece, or in any other way than by the month the highest class shall be determined by the usual amount of earnings in a month.

(8) That the word "contribution," wherever used in these regulations, shall be held and construed to refer to such designated portion of the wages payable by the company to an employe, as he shall have agreed, in his application, that the company shall apply for the purpose of securing the benefits of the relief fund, or to such cash payment as it may be necessary for a member to make for said purpose. Contribution for full membership shall be made monthly in advance at the following rates: First class, 75 cents per month; second class, $1.50; third class, $2.25; fourth class, $3; fifth class, $3.75.

(9) Wherever used in these regulations, the word "disability" shall be held to mean physical inability to work by reason of sickness or accidental injury, and the word "disabled" shall apply to members thus physically unable to work. The decision as to when members are disabled and when they are able to work shall rest with the medical officers of the department. The decision as to whether disability at any time shall be classed as due to sickness or due to accident, and as to whether any disability shall be considered a relapse or an original disability, shall rest with the medical officers of the department.

(10) That the following benefits will be paid to members or beneficiaries entitled thereto in accordance with the provisions of these regulations: Payment for each day of disability classed as due to accident for a period not longer than 52 weeks, as follows: To a member of the first class, 50 cents; second class, $1; third class, $1.50; fourth class, $2; fifth class, $2.50; and at half these rates thereafter during the continuance of disability. Also payment to or in behalf of the members of such amounts for necessary surgical treatment as may be approved by the chief surgeon, and provision by the department for free surgical treatment of the member in one of the hospitals under its control when requested by a medical examiner of the department and authorized by the superintendent or chief surgeon. No member shall have authority to contract any bills against the department, and nothing herein shall be held to mean or imply that the department shall be responsible for the payment of such bills as a member shall contract or his surgeon may charge. Bills for surgical attendance, to be considered by the department, must be made out against the member, and must be itemized. Payment, in accordance with the conditions prescribed in the regulations, upon the death of a member, as follows: To the beneficiary of a member of the first class, $250; second class, $500; third class, $750; fourth class, $1,000; fifth class, $1,250; also payment of $250 for each additional death benefit of the first class to which the beneficiary is entitled.

departments, for damages arising from or growing out of said injury; and, further, in the event of my death, no part of said death benefit or unpaid disability benefit shall be due or payable unless and until good and sufficient releases shall be delivered to the superintendent of said relief department of all claims against said relief department, as well as against said company, and all other companies associated therewith, as aforesaid, arising from or growing out of my death, said releases having been duly executed by all who might legally assert such claims; and, further, if any suit shall be brought against said company, or any other company associated therewith as aforesaid, for damages arising from or growing out of injury or death occurring to me, the benefits otherwise payable, and all obligations of said relief department and of said company created by my membership in said relief fund shall thereupon be forfeited without any declaration or other act by said relief department or said company."

(12) That section 62 of the rules and regulations is as follows: "62. In case of injury to a member he may elect to accept the benefits in pursuance of these regulations, or to prosecute such claims as he may have at law against the company or any companies associated therewith in the administration of their relief departments. The acceptance by the member of benefits for injury shall operate as a release and satisfaction of all claims against the company and all other companies associated therewith as aforesaid for damages arising from or growing out of such injury; and, further, in the event of the death of a member, no part of the death benefit or unpaid disability benefit shall be due or payable unless and until good and sufficient releases shall be delivered to the superintendent of all claims against the relief department, as well as against the company and all other companies associated therewith as aforesaid, arising from or growing out of death of the member, said releases having been duly executed by all who might legally assert such claims; and further, if any suit shall be brought against the company or any other company associated therewith as aforesaid for damages arising from or growing out of injury or death occurring to a member, the benefits otherwise payable and all obligations of the relief department and of the company created by the membership of such member in the relief fund shall thereupon be forfeited without any declaration or other act by the relief department or the company; but the superintendent may, in his discretion, waive such forfeiture upon condition that all pending suits shall first be dismissed. If a claim for damages on account of injury to or death of a member shall be settled by the company, or any company associated therewith as aforesaid, without suit, or by compromise, such settlement shall release the relief department and the company from all claims for benefits on account of such injury or death."

At the conclusion of the evidence, his honor stated that he would charge the jury "that the defendant company, having paid a part of the relief money to the plaintiff and the plaintiff having accepted it, whether it was the full amount or not, if he accepted any part of it, he could not recover," and in deference thereto the plaintiff submitted to judgment of nonsuit, and appealed.

Kellum & Loughlin and Herbert McClammy, for appellant. Davis & Davis and Geo. B. Elliott, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). The plaintiff having introduced evidence tending to prove that he was injured by the negligence of the defendant, it follows that there was error in the ruling of his honor, unless the acceptance of benefits from the relief department by the plaintiff after his injury operates to release the defendant company from liability. We think it does not have this effect under the evidence in this case, for two reasons:

[1] (1) It does not appear that there is any consideration for the release moving from the defendant. The answer alleges that the defendant has expended large sums in maintaining the relief department, and in contributions to the fund from which benefits are paid to members, but these are matters of defense, and under our system of pleading are deemed to be denied by the plaintiff, and no evidence was introduced in support of the allegations of the answer. The evidence does not disclose that the defendant has paid one dollar for operating expenses or otherwise, or that the plaintiff has received anything that he has not paid for by his own contributions. The only reference in the evidence to the payment of any sum by the defendant is in the following question and answer: "I ask you if all this money that has been paid into the relief department, and upon which the relief department has been operated, has not been the wages taken out of the laborers of the Atlantic Coast Line? Ans. No, sir." The authorities are uniform that a release must be founded on a valuable consideration, and that the plea is not good, unless the consideration is alleged. 18 A. & E. Ency. Pl. & Pr. p. 92; Story, Eq. Pl. § 797; 1 Don. Ch. Pr. 670; Hale v. Grogan, 99 Ky. 173, 35 S. W. 282; Maness v. Henry, 96 Ala. 458, 11 South. 410; Swan v. Benson, 31 Ark. 730; Scott v. Scott, 105 Ind. 584, 5 N. E. 397. In Crawley v. Timberlake, 38 N. C. 350, Chief Justice Ruffin says: "A court of equity does not sustain these shorthand bars, such as a release, a stated account, and the like, unless they be pleaded as not only existing instruments, but also as being fair and wise, and proper to be equitably enforced. * * * So, with respect to this particular subject of a release now before us, Lord Redisdale states (in Hughes v. Kearney, 1 Sch. & Lef.) that the plea of release must set out the consideration upon which it was made, if it be impeached in that point. * * * In other words, the release, unless fairly obtained and on a proper consideration, ought not to preclude the court from going into the case, and dealing out justice to the parties according to its real facts." This case was approved in Shaw v. Williams, 100 N. C. 281, 6 S. E. 196, and in Boutten v. Railroad, 128 N. C. 341, 38 S. E. 921, the court quotes with approval this language from Shaw v. Williams, supra: "And so every release must be founded on some consideration, otherwise fraud must be presumed." Some of the authorities speak of transactions of this character as a release, and others as an accord and satisfaction, but, by whatever name it is called, it is pleaded by the defendant as a binding contract existing between it and the plaintiff; and a promise without consideration cannot be enforced. If it is necessary to a good plea to allege the consideration, the party relying on the defense assumes the burden of proving the allegation as made. He is not required to prove a full consideration, but it must be valuable, and as such must not be so small as to cause one of ordinary discretion and judgment to say he paid nothing. Fullenwider v. Roberts, 20 N. C. 420; Worthy v. Caddell, 76 N. C. 86.

The defendant contends, however, that, in the absence of evidence proving the payment of a consideration, the guaranty by the defendant to fulfill the obligations of the department, and its agreement to supply the necessary facilities for conducting its business and to pay all the operating expenses, furnishes a consideration. Ordinarily this would be true, but we cannot concede its sufficiency, standing alone, to support a release of the plaintiff's cause of action, when considered in connection with the other regulations of the department. The department has been established by the defendant, and its rules and regulations made by it. Under these rules and regulations, it retains the control of the department, with the power to make changes as it sees fit, and it determines the contributions of members, and may decrease or increase them. It is therefore possible for the defendant to fix the amounts to be contributed by members large enough to save it harmless from loss on account of accident and negligence, and to throw on the employees a burden which does not rightfully belong to them. If such a result should be reached, and it appeared affirmatively that the defendant paid nothing under its rules and regulations, the promises of the defendant "to guarantee," etc., would be promises incorporated in the regulations by the defendant, without any expectation of being called on to perform them, and would not furnish a consideration, and under such circumstances the acceptance of benefits would not affect the right to recover.

[2] (2) If a consideration had been proven, it appears, according to the evidence of the plaintiff, that he was entitled to receive benefits for eight months, and that he was paid for four months. In the consideration of this phase of the case, it must be remembered that it is the "acceptance of benefits," not the acceptance of a promise to pay benefits, that bars a recovery. The transaction partakes of the nature of an accord and satisfaction, which to be effectual, must be performed in its entirety. If performed in part only, the original right of action remains, and the party to be charged is allowed what he has paid in diminution of the amount claimed. Chief Justice Bleckley states the rule, with its qualifications, in Railway Co. v. Clem, 80 Ga. 539, 7 S. E. 86. He says: "As long as the accord is executory, although it is partially performed, the original cause of action is not extinguished, and an action may be brought upon it; and the remedy of the defendant is to plead his part performance as a satisfaction pro tanto. He gets credit for all he has paid upon it, but the right of action is not extinguished by an accord merely without complete satisfaction, where the parol contract is that performance, not mere promise, is to constitute the satisfaction, though, if a promise is to constitute it before performance, then the accord is executed by the promise." Blackstone says: "An accord is a satisfaction agreed upon between the party injuring and the party injured, which, when performed, is a bar to all actions on this account." 3 Bl. Com. 15. "Accord executory without performance accepted is no bar. Accord with part execution cannot be pleaded in satisfaction. The accord must be completely executed to sustain a plea of accord and satisfaction." Bacon, Abr., tit. Accord & Satisfaction, A. & C. In Peytoes' Case, 9 Co. 79, it is said: "And every accord ought to be full, perfect and complete, for, if divers things are to be done and performed by the accord, the performance of part is not sufficient, but all ought to be performed." These and other authorities to the same effect are cited with approval in Kromer v. Helm, 75 N. Y. 574, 31 Am. Rep. 491; and in conclusion the court there says: "The doctrine which has sometimes been asserted that mutual promises, which give a right of action, may operate and are good as an accord and satisfaction of a prior obligation, must, in this state, be taken with the qualification that the intent was to accept the new promise as a satisfaction of the prior obligation. Where the performance of the new promise was the thing to be received in satisfaction, then, until performance, there is not complete accord, and the original obligation remains in force." The following authorities announce the same rule: 5 Lawson R. & R. §§ 2567, 2568; 2 Par. Con. (5th Ed.) p. 683; 1 Cyc. p. 815, and cases in note; Clark, Con. 491.

There are three cases bearing directly on the effect of the payment of a part of the benefits due under the provisions of a relief department on the original cause of action for negligence—Penn. Co. v. Chapman, 220 Ill. 428, 77 N. E. 248; Johnson v. Railroad, 58 S. C. 488, 36 S. E. 851; and Petty v. Brunswick Railroad, 109 Ga. 666, 35 S. E. 82. In the Illinois case it is held that part performance does not extinguish the right of action for negligence, and the cases from South Carolina and Georgia hold to the contrary. These last cases from South Carolina and Georgia proceed upon the idea that, by the terms of the relief department then before the court, the employé had stipulated that the acceptance of any benefit released the right of action, as appears from what is said in the Petty Case. "Petty (the plaintiff) therein expressly stipulated that acceptance by him from the relief and hospital department of any of the benefits provided for by its regulations should operate, without more, to release the defendant company from all claims for damages he might have against it;" and it is upon this ground that the case is distinguished from Railway Co. v. Clem, supra. We do not so understand the rules and regulations before us. In an extended note to Johnston v. Fargo, 6 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 3, practically all the cases considering the terms of relief departments and their legal effect are collected, and among others the three above referred to. After stating the rule adopted by the Georgia and South Carolina courts, the editors say: "It will be observed that his doctrine is not only opposed to the reasoning in Penn. Co. v. Chapman, but is inconsistent with the well-considered cases, cited supra, holding that it is the receipt of benefits under the contract, and not the contract itself, that binds the employé." We conclude, therefore, that the weight of authority and the reason of the thing favor the rule that a payment of a part of the benefits to which the employé is entitled does not prevent the prosecution of an action to recover damages for negligence, in the absence of an express stipulation that the acceptance of a part shall have that effect, and we so hold.

[3] This disposes of the appeal, but the rules and regulations of the relief department are in evidence, and the question has been fully argued as to the effect of an acceptance of all the benefits to which an employé is entitled from a fund to which the defendant has contributed on his right of action for negligence, and, as the question will necessarily arise again, it is our duty to consider it. The question is undecided by this court. The views expressed in Barden v. Railroad, 152 N. C. 318, 67 S. E. 971, relied on by the plaintiff, are entitled to great respect, emanating, as they do, from a member of this court of learning and of much capacity for research, but the point in controversy here was not raised in that case.

In the Barden Case no benefits were paid to the employé, and the defendant railroad company did not rely on the provisions of the relief department as a defense. On the contrary, both plaintiff and defendant admitted the validity of the rules and regulations of the department. The case in brief was this: The plaintiff alleged in his complaint: (1) That the defendant was a railroad corporation. (2) That it maintained a relief department. (3) That as a part of its relief department it maintained a hospital. (4) That in this hospital it employed surgeons and physicians. (5) That he was an employé of the defendant and a member of the relief department. (6) That as such he was entitled to be treated in the hospital when sick or disabled. (7) That he was suffering from fistula, and was admitted to the hospital, and there negligently treated by the physicians.

The argument of the plaintiff was that the relief department was an agency of the railroad; that the hospital was a part of the department; that the physicians were employed in the hospital, and the conclusion deduced was that the physicians were agents of the railroad, and therefore it was responsible for their negligence. The defendant demurred to the complaint upon the ground that it did not state a cause of action, in that it was not alleged that the defendant failed to exercise due care in the selection of the physicians. The demurrer was overruled by the judge of the superior court, but on appeal this ruling was reversed, and the complaint held to be insufficient. We therefore regard the question as an open one presented for our decision.

It has been considered by the highest courts of Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, Maryland, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, and Nebraska, and by the Circuit Courts and the Circuit Courts of Appeal of the United States, and, with two exceptions, it has been held that an acceptance of all the benefits under the rules and regulations of a relief department, when it is the voluntary act of the employé, and is free from undue influence or fraud, bars an action for negligence. The exceptions are Pittsburg R. R. v. Montgomery, 152 Ind. 1, 49 N. E. 582, 69 L. R. A. 875, 71 Am. St. Rep. 301, which was overruled in Pittsburg R. R. v. Moore, 152 Ind. 345, 53 N. E. 290, 44 L. R. A. 638, and Miller v. Railroad (C. C.) 65 Fed. 305, which was disapproved on this point on appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals, 76 Fed. 439, 22

C. C. A. 264. We do not cite in support of the proposition the English cases of Clement v. Railroad, 2 Q. B. Div. 490, Griffiths v. Dudley, 9 Q. B. Div. 362, and the Queen v. Grevier Can. Sup. C. 30, p. 50, because they hold that a regulation is permissible which gives no option to the employé to accept benefits or sue, and which compels him to accept the benefits, although injured by the negligence of his employer, which we would not follow. In the cases which have come before the courts, it would seem that every attack conceivable has been made on the relief department.

It has been urged that it is against public policy, that there is no privity of contract between the employé and the railroad, and that there is no consideration to support a release of a right of action, and in reply the courts say, as stated in Eckman v. Railroad, 169 Ill. 318, 48 N. E. 498, 38 L. R. A. 750: "The various courts which have had this question under consideration appear to agree that the stipulation in question is not opposed to sound public policy, but, on the whole, is conducive to the well-being of those whom it immediately affects, inasmuch as many railroad employes, owing to the dangerous character of their employment, are hurt without any culpable negligence on the part of their employer, and inasmuch as the employé retains, until after he sustains an injury, the right to elect whether he will sue his employer for negligence or accept benefits from the association. It also appears to be agreed that the obligation assumed by the employer to maintain and support such association by contributing the funds necessary for that purpose creates a privity of contract between the employer and all the members of the association, and at the same time furnishes a sufficient consideration to support such contract." Substantially the same language and reasoning have been used in the following cases, all of which sustain the sufficiency of such a defense: Maine v. Railroad Co., 109 Iowa, 260, 70 N. W. 630; Railroad Co. v. Bell, 44 Neb. 44 [62 N. W. 314]; Donald v. Railroad Co., 93 Iowa, 284, 61 N. W. 971 [33 L. R. A. 492]; Railroad Co. v. Wymore, 40 Neb. 645 [58 N. W. 1120]; Vickers v. Railroad Co. [C. C.] 71 Fed. 139; Lease v. Pennsylvania Co., 10 Ind. App. 47 [37 N. E. 423]; Ringle v. Pennsylvania Co., 164 Pa. 529 [30 Atl. 492, 44 Am. St. Rep. 628]; Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co. [C. C.] 71 Fed. 931; Otis v. Pennsylvania Co. [C. C.] 71 Fed. 136; Johnson v. Railroad Co., 163 Pa. 127 [29 Atl. 854]; Spitze v. Railroad Co., 75 Md. 162 [23 Atl. 307, 32 Am. St. Rep. 378]; Fuller v. Relief Ass'n, 67 Md. 433 [10 Atl. 237]; Graft v. Railroad Co. (Pa.) 8 Atl. 206; Martin v. Railroad Co. [C. C.] 41 Fed. 125; State v. Railroad Co. [C. C.] 36 Fed. 655; Owens v. Railroad Co. [C. C.] 35 Fed. 715 [1 L. R. A. 75]. * * * In the case at bar the ap-pellee contributes largely to the fund under its agreement to make up or guarantee deficits, to furnish surgical aid and attendance, to pay all the expenses of administration and management, and to become responsible for the safe-keeping of the funds of the relief department."

It is the fact that the employé is not compelled to accept the benefits, that he has the choice after his injury to accept benefits or to sue to recover damages, which saves the rules and regulations from condemnation as a contract against public policy or against negligence. To deny this right of exercising his choice to the employé would be equivalent to saying that, when injured, he can make no settlement with his employer. "The injured party, therefore, is not stipulating for the future, but settling for the past. He is not agreeing to exempt the company from liability for negligence, but accepting compensation for any injury already caused thereby. He may as well accept it in installments as in a single sum, and from an appointed fund to which the company has contributed as from the company's treasury as a result of litigation. The substantial feature of the contract, which distinguishes it from those held void as against public policy, is that the party retains whatever right of action he may have until after knowledge of all the facts, and an opportunity to make his choice between the sure benefits of the association or the chances of litigation. Having accepted the former, he cannot justly ask the latter in addition." Johnson v. Railroad, 163 Pa. 127, 29 Atl. 854. The same reasoning meets the objection that the rules and regulations are in violation of the statutes existing in many states, invalidating agreements between employer and employé, having for their object the exemption of the employer from liability for negligence. Hamilton v. Railroad (C. C.) 118 Fed. 92; Petty v. Railroad, 109 Ga. 686, 35 S. E. 82; Pittsburg R. R. v. Moore, 152 Ind. 345, 53 N. E. 290, 44 L. R. A. 638; Pittsburg R. R. v. Hosea, 152 Ind. 412, 53 N. E. 419; Donald v. Railroad, 93 Iowa, 284, 61 N. W. 971, 33 L. R. A. 492; Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Cox, 55 Ohio St. 497, 45 N. E. 641, 35 L. R. A. 507; Day v. Railroad, 179 Fed. 30, 102 C. C. A. 654. The opinion in the last case was written by Connor, J., and concurred in by Judges Goff and Pritchard, in which it is said: "Assuming that the averments of the declaration bring the plaintiff's case within the provisions of the Constitution, and that 'he was injured by an act or omission of a fellow servant,' as defined and limited by the language of the section, does the contract, set forth in the special plea, waive any of the 'benefits' conferred by said section? It is manifest that by becoming a member of the relief department plaintiff did not waive or deprive himself of the right to maintain an action against defendant for an injury sustained by him while in its service as defined by the Constitution 'by an act or omission of a fellow servant.' There is nothing in the rules and regulations of the relief department which could be averred or pleaded in bar of an action brought by him for such injury; nor did he by becoming a member thereof make any 'contract, express or implied,' by which he waived any of the 'benefits' conferred upon, or secured to, him by the Constitution. Giving the language of the section the most liberal construction possible, nothing more is secured to the employé injured by the negligence of a fellow servant than the right to recover from the common master damages for such injury in the same manner and to the same extent as if the same acts or omissions were those of the master himself in the performance of a nonassignable duty. We are unable to perceive how by any possible interpretation the scheme known as the relief department, or becoming a member thereof, can be said to waive the right of action secured to the employé by the Constitution. As uniformly held by other courts, in which the same contention has been made, the employé does not waive, or agree to waive, any rights to which he is entitled by becoming a member of the relief department. He simply agrees that, after the injury is sustained, and his cause of action accrues, he will elect whether to sue for damages or accept the benefits secured by the relief department—that he will not do both. There is no suggestion that plaintiff made his election under such circumstances or conditions either mental, moral or physical, making it inequitable to enforce it. Similar statutes have been enacted, whereby agreements made in advance of an injury, caused by the negligence of a fellow servant or defective appliances, ways, or means, are declared to be invalid. The courts have held that becoming a member of the relief department was not within the letter or spirit of these statutes."

[4] Again, it is contended that the business is that of insurance, and that it is outside of the powers granted to a corporation to do a railroad business. The authorities hold the contrary view. Maine v. Railroad, 109 Iowa, 260, 70 N. W. 630; State v. Railroad, 68 Ohio St. 41, 67 N. E. 93, 64 L. R. A. 405, 96 Am. St. Rep. 635; Beck v. Railroad, 63 N. J. Law, 232, 43 Atl. 908, 76 Am. St. Rep. 211. In the New Jersey case the court says: "We must recognize that it (the railroad) has either express or implied power to engage the services of many men, and contract with them as to the compensation they shall receive for their services. Each of such employés is engaged in an employment which subjects him to the hazard of injury and the danger of death. Each is possessed of the liberty to contract with the employer respecting his compensation. A contract by which an employé permits such an employer to create a fund in part out of his wages, supplemented by a contribution by the employer when necessary, out of which relief for sick and injured employes is provided, and by which the employer undertakes to manage the fund and furnish the agreed-on relief, is, in my judgment, within the implied powers of the employer, if a corporation. On the part of the employer, such a scheme may be deemed likely to increase the efficiency of the force it employs, and on the part of the employe it may tend to relieve from anxiety as to support if injured by any of the many dangers to which he is daily and hourly exposed. As incidental to the contract of employment and compensation, therefore, it is not ultra vires."

The following authorities are also in point: Sturgiss v. Railroad, 80 S. C. 167, 60 S. E. 940; Fuller v. Relief Ass'n, 67 Md. 436, 10 Atl. 237; Chicago v. Curtis, 51 Neb. 442, 71 N. W. 42, 66 Am. St. Rep. 456; Chicago v. Bell, 44 Neb. 44, 62 N. W. 314; Harrison v. Railroad, 144 Ala. 252, 40 South. 394; A. C. L. v. Dunning, 166 Fed. 850, 94 C. C. A. 128; Carter v. Railroad, 115 Ga. 853, 42 S. E. 239; Owens v. Railroad (C. C.) 35 Fed. 718, 1 L. R. A. 75; Spitze v. Railroad, 75 Md. 168, 23 Atl. 307, 32 Am. St. Rep. 378; Otis v. Railroad (C. C.) 71 Fed. 136; Lease v. Railroad, 10 Ind. App. 57, 37 N. E. 423; Ringle v. Railroad, 164 Pa. 532, 30 Atl. 492, 44 Am. St. Rep. 628; Railroad v. Elwood 25 Ind. App. 674, 58 N. E. 866; Brown v. Railroad, 6 App. D. C. 244; Graft v. Railroad (Pa.) 8 Atl. 207; Clinton v. Railroad, 60 Neb. 692, 84 N. W. 90; Black v. Railroad (C. C.) 36 Fed. 655; Martin v. Railroad (C. C.) 41 Fed. 126; Colaizzi v. Railroad, 143 App. Div. 638, 128 N. Y. Supp. 312, March term, 1911; 3 Elliott on Railroads, § 1379 et seq. Up to this point we have considered the effect of the voluntary acceptance by the employe of the benefits to which he is entitled, based upon the language of the rules and regulations, and uninfluenced by other matters, and hold that such acceptance operates as a release or an accord and satisfaction of a claim for damages on account of negligence when based on a consideration moving from the defendant. If, however, the release is not voluntary, and if it is procured by undue influence or fraud, or has no consideration to support it, it will not avail as a defense.

[5] The history of the relief department justifies the courts in subjecting settlements made thereunder to close scrutiny. They seem to have kept pace with the employer's liability acts, and as one of these was passed a relief department would be organized. The English act, on which most of the American statutes are based, went into effect on the 1st day of January, 1880, and on the same day the owner of a colliery notified his employes they must look to the department in the event of injury by negligence, and from then until now the effort has continued to avoid the increased liability imposed by the acts. In so far as those efforts are legitimate and fair, they should be upheld, and no further. By "undue influence" is meant a controlling influence, one which impels a person to do an act he would not otherwise do. Westbrook v. Wilson, 135 N. C. 402, 47 S. E. 467; In re Abee, 146 N. C. 274, 59 S. E. 700. As is well said by Justice Brown in Re Will Amella Everett, 153 N. C. 85, 68 S. E. 924: "Experience has shown that direct proof of undue or fraudulent influence is rarely attainable, but inference from circumstances must determine it. * * * Undue influence is generally proved by a number of facts, each one of which standing alone may be of little weight, but, when collectively stated, may satisfy a rational mind of its existence." When it is in issue, the jury have the right to consider the relation of the parties, the circumstances connected with their relationship, the condition and situation of the parties at the time of the transaction, the adequacy of the consideration, and any other relevant facts.

The relation of employer and employe is not one of those regarded as confidential, from which a presumption of fraud or undue influence will arise, but it is recognized by the courts that the employer has great influence in determining the conduct of the employe, and may use it to his injury. It is upon this ground that the statutes regulating the hours of labor are sustained, as stated in Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 18 Sup. Ct. 383, 42 L. Ed. 780. "The Legislature has also recognized the fact, which the experience of legislators in many states has corroborated, that the proprietors of these establishments and their operatives do not stand upon an equality, and that their interests are to a certain extent conflicting. The former naturally desire to obtain as much labor as possible from their employes, while the latter are often induced by the fear of discharge to conform to regulations which their judgment, fairly exercised, would pronounce to be detrimental to their health or strength. In other words, the proprietors lay down the rules, and the laborers are practically constrained to obey them. In such cases self-interest is often an unsafe guide, and the Legislature may properly interpose its authority." This language was approved by the Supreme Court of the United States in an opinion written by Mr. Justice Hughes in Railroad v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 552, 31 Sup. Ct. 259, 55 L. Ed. 328. It is also competent to consider the fact that the option to accept benefits or sue is in the application for membership, and that the defendant has control of the department and prescribes its rules and regulations. It is true that it is the acceptance of benefits that bars the action, when free from fraud or undue influence, but this acceptance receives its vitality from the clause in the application for membership, or, as is said in the McGuire Case: "The payment of benefits is the performance of the promise to pay contained in the contract of membership."

The situation of the employe at the time he accepts the benefits, his condition and surroundings are relevant. Was it soon after his injury and while suffering, or was he surrounded by the employes of the company, with no opportunity to confer with relations or friends? In 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 948, it is said: "Whenever a person is in pecuniary necessity and distress, so that he would be likely to make any undue sacrifice, and advantage is taken of such condition to obtain from him a conveyance or contract which is unfair, made upon an inadequate consideration and the like, even though there be no actual duress or threats, equity may relieve defensively or affirmatively." Note, however, that it is not pecuniary necessity and distress which are the basis of the equity jurisdiction, but it is taking advantage of this condition. Again, Pomeroy says (Vol. 2, § 851): "Where there is no coercion amounting to duress, but a transaction is the result of a moral, social, or domestic force exerted upon a party, controlling the free action of his will and preventing any true consent, equity may relieve against the transaction on the ground of undue influence, even though there may be no invalidity at law. In the vast majority of instances undue influence naturally has a field to work upon in the condition or circumstances of the person influenced which render him peculiarly susceptible and yielding, his dependent or fiduciary relation towards the one exerting the influence, his mental or physical weakness, his pecuniary necessity, his ignorance, lack of advice, and the like. All these circumstances, however, are incidental, not essential."

The consideration paid to the employé is important, and may be controlling, but it is not to be determined alone by the amount of benefits paid to the employé and the proportion this may bear to a fair compensation for his injury. On the part of the employé it must be remembered that he has contributed to the fund out of which he is paid, and that the department has been established primarily for the benefit of the railroad, and not as a charity, and that it has been relieved of liability for negligence in many instances under its rules and regulations; on the part of the railroad, that the party injured is a member of the relief department, and as such is entitled, upon the payment of a small sum, to hospital treatment and benefits when sick or disabled, or when injured by accident, and to larger benefits at death, that to maintain the department it is necessary to keep up its membership, that the railroad has been compelled to expend large sums in operating expenses, and in contributions to the relief fund, if this appears. When due weight is given to these matters, and there is evidence that the consideration is inadequate, it is a circumstance which, in connection with other circumstances, may be submitted to the jury, and, if grossly inadequate, it alone is sufficient to carry the question of fraud or undue influence to the jury. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 926, 927. At the last term, this court said in Leonard v. Southern Power Co., 70 S. E. 1063, on this question: "In Byers v. Surget, 19 How. 311 [15 L. Ed. 670], the Supreme Court of the United States says: 'To meet the objection made to the sale in this case, founded on the inadequacy of the price at which the land was sold, it is insisted that inadequacy of consideration singly cannot amount to proof of fraud. This position, however, is scarcely reconcilable with the qualification annexed to it by the courts, namely, unless such inadequacy be so gross as to shock the conscience, for this qualification implies necessarily the affirmation that, if the inadequacy be of a nature so gross as to shock the conscience, it will amount to proof of fraud.' And, again, in Hume v. U. S., 132 U. S. 411, 10 Sup. Ct. 136, 33 L. Ed. 393: 'It (fraud) may be apparent from the intrinsic nature and subject of the bargain itself, such as no man in his senses, and not under delusion, would make on the one hand, and as no honest and fair man would accept on the other.' Our court, speaking through Justice Brown, so declares the law in reference to awards and other transactions, in Perry v. Insurance Co., 137 N. C. 406, 49 S. E. 890. He says: 'Where there is a charge of fraud or partiality made against an award, the fact that it is plainly and palpably wrong would be evidence in support of the charge, entitled to greater or less weight according to the extent or effect of the error and the other circumstances of the case. There might be a case of error in an award so plain and gross that a court or jury could arrive only at the conclusion that it was not the result of an impartial exercise of their judgment by the arbitrators. Goddard v. King, 40 Minn. 164, 41 N. W. 659. The settled rule, which is applicable not only to awards, but to other transactions, is that mere inadequacy alone is not sufficient to set aside the award; but, if the inadequacy be so gross and palpable as to shock the moral sense, it is sufficient evidence to be submitted to the jury on the issues relating to fraud and corruption or partiality and bias.' Where there is inadequacy of consideration, but it is not gross, it may be considered in connection with other evidence upon the issue of fraud, but will not, standing alone, justify setting aside a contract or other paper writing on the ground of fraud." In the enforcement of these principles, relief should be granted with caution. If nothing appears except that the employé has signed the application for membership, the rules and regulations of the department that the employé was not with his friends, and that the consideration is inadequate, but not grossly so, relief should be denied. The employé is required to exercise diligence in protecting his rights, and will not be excused on the ground of want of knowledge when he has the opportunity to learn.

fluence is found in favor of the employé, and he has been injured by the negligence of the railroad, he may recover damages, without returning what he has received as benefits, but this will be allowed in reduction of the damages. Hayes v. Railroad, 143 N. C. 125, 55 S. E. 437.

There must be a new trial.
New trial.

CLARK, C. J., concurs in the result upon the ground that the contract of the relief department of the defendant company is invalid because it is in violation of both the federal and state statutes which have been passed for the protection of the employés of railroad companies. It is so held because a violation of the state statute in Barden v. Railroad, 152 N. C. 818, 67 S. E. 971, and no reason has been shown in my judgment to overrule the able and well-considered opinion of the court in that case which was written by Mr. Justice Manning. The fellow servant act of North Carolina of 1897, now Rev. 1905, § 2646, giving employés of railroads an action for wrongful death or personal injuries caused by the negligence of the defendant or a fellow servant or from defective machinery, ways, or appliances of a railroad company, provides "any contract or agreement, expressed or implied, made by any employé of such company to waive the benefit of this section shall be null and void." Every employé of the defendant company is required to join this "relief department," and the contract which he signs upon entering its relief department contains this provision: "I also agree that in consideration of the amounts paid by the said company for the maintenance of the said relief department, and the guaranty by the said company of the payment of said benefits, the acceptance by me of benefits for injury shall operate as a release and satisfaction of all claims against said company and all other companies associated therewith in the administration of the relief department for damages arising from or growing out of said injury." This contract made prior to the injury is invalid because in violation of the express terms of the statute. It is also without consideration, for the evidence in this case does not show that the defendant in fact contributed any money to the department or for its maintenance. It appears from the rules and regulations that said relief department is a bureau of the defendant, and that its rules and regulations are prescribed by the defendant; also, that under those rules and regulations the defendant has sole control of the department and of its money; that the rules and regulations can be changed by the defendant without the consent of the members of the department, and cannot be changed without the consent of the defendant. It was admitted in the argument here, and is a well-known fact, that no employé of the defendant can remain in its service unless he is a member of this department. The so-called relief department was not established until after the enactment of the act of 1897, called the fellow servant act.

From the above-condensed statement of the evidence, it is clear that the sole object of the relief department is for the relief of the railroad company by requiring the employés of that company to raise by a forced contribution out of their salaries and wages a fund out of which all damages for personal injuries or wrongful death caused to employés by the negligence of the defendant shall be paid. It is public policy as declared by statute that, in case of injury or death resulting to an employé from the negligence of a railroad company or of a fellow servant, such loss shall fall upon the company whose negligence caused it, and thus the stockholders will see that their officers and agents take proper steps to prevent such negligence, and to safeguard by proper care the lives and limbs of its employés. This safeguard is entirely swept away by this device of a relief department, whereby the employés are compulsorily required to raise out of their own meager wages a fund of $9 to $45 per annum from each employé, amounting in the aggregate to many hundreds of thousands of dollars annually, out of which fund the damages for the injuries and deaths which may be inflicted upon them by the negligence of the railroad company shall be paid. The defendant is the only railroad company in this state which has resorted to this device. If, after an injury has been inflicted, there is a fair and free settlement made between the injured party and the company for the damages sustained by the negligence of the corporation, which damages are paid out of the funds of the company, it would be upheld by the courts. But such arrangement needs no previous agreement as is here required to be signed by each employé of the defendant company. Nor should such a settlement be made out of funds raised by involuntary contributions exacted by the company out of the wages of its employés. Nor is it a valid contract to impose upon plaintiff the loss of all he has paid in if he elects to sue, or if he leaves the service. The so-called relief department is also in violation of the federal employer's liability act of April 22, 1908 (35 Stat. 65, c. 149 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1171]). That statute, after giving employés of any railroad company an action for injury caused by the negligence of any railroad company or of fellow servants, or by reason of any defects in appliances, machinery, etc., provides: "Sec. 5. Any contract, rule, regulation or device whatsoever, the purpose or intent of which shall be to enable any common carrier to exempt itself from any liability created by this act, shall to that extent be void." The debates in both houses of Congress over the enactment of this section, as preserved in the "Congressional Record," show that the object of this section was to prohibit these relief departments which had sprung up in the several states immediately after the passage of state acts to the above effect, and which had been held valid by courts, which, to say the least, were not unfriendly to these great aggregations of capital. The labor associations of the country were powerful enough to have their rights presented in the debates in Congress, and to secure the enactment of the above section for their protection. If the above section does not have that effect, the mind of man cannot conceive a form of words which will have that effect. In a very recent case decided by the United States Supreme Court October 30, 1911 (Railroad v. United States, 222 U. S. 20, 32 Sup. Ct. 2, 56 L. Ed. —), it was held that when the defendant railroad company, operating a railroad which was "a part of a through highway over which traffic was continually being moved from one state to another," hauled over a part of its road five cars, the couplers of which were defective, two of the cars being used at the time in moving interstate traffic and the other three in moving intrastate traffic, though the use of the last three was not in connection with any car or cars used in interstate commerce, yet the federal liability statute applied to said three cars, and the defendant was liable to the penalty for not having automatic couplers thereon because the act applies "on any railroad engaged in interstate commerce." If above decision is controlling, certainly the relief department of the defendant is forbidden by the federal statute. While the three cars in the above case were not directly in use in interstate commerce, every employé of the defendant company is more or less connected in some way every day and hour with the transportation of through freight or passengers by the company which is "engaged in interstate commerce."

BROWN, J. (concurring). I concur in the judgment of this court granting a new trial, although I cannot concur in all that is said in the opinion.

1. I think it has been fully demonstrated in the opinion in this case by Mr. Justice ALLEN, as well as in my dissenting opinion on the Barden Case, 152 N. C. 318, 67 S. E. 971, that the relief department agreement of the defendant company is valid, not against public policy, not a mere scheme upon the part of the defendant to evade liability for its own negligence, and in proper cases should be enforced as a bar to actions for damages. Similar articles of agreement have been in vogue in other parts of this country between other railway companies and their employés, and have been invariably upheld. If overwhelming authority and unanimous judicial precedent are worth anything, then the legality of these relief associations and their articles of agreement ought no longer to be questioned. This should be especially true in this state, for the reason that three successive Legislatures have thoroughly investigated this very relief department of the defendant company, have examined scores of its employés of all grades, and have refused to interfere.

That this is a matter addressed entirely to the wisdom and within the jurisdiction of the General Assembly is expressly declared by the Supreme Court of the United States in the McGuire Case, 219 U. S. 550, 31 Sup. Ct. 259, 55 L. Ed. 328, where it is held: "Whether the relief scheme of a railroad company involving contracts with its employés and contributions from both employés and the company, such as the one involved in this case, is a wise and proper scheme which should be approved, or an unwise scheme which should be disapproved by the public policy of the state, is under the control of the legislative power of the state." If this relief association agreement had been found by our General Assembly to work an injustice or hardship to the employé, it would have been destroyed long ago.

2. This association does not deprive the employé of any legal right he has under the law, and does not attempt to. On the contrary, it confers upon him many benefits and privileges which the company is under no legal obligation to assist in providing. If the employé is sick or injured from any cause with which the company is wholly disconnected, he may enter its hospitals and without expense be nursed back to health. When he is convalescent, but unfit to return to labor, he can draw a weekly allowance. There is an insurance feature by means of which the employé can provide for his family in case of death at a cost far less than that of ordinary insurance. In fact, the benefits to be derived from this association by its members are very great, and cannot be well measured by a present cash equivalent. That is the reason that scores of the members have appeared before successive legislative committees and protested against its destruction by legislative enactment. My opinion is that when a member is injured in the service of the defendant, and claims that his injury is due to negligence for which the defendant is responsible, he should consider well whether he will take the emoluments and benefits which membership in this association confers and continues through a long course of years, or whether he will give up those, and sue the company for damages, and take the chances of litigation. The courts should be careful to see that, when the employé makes this choice, he is in a mental and physical condition and his surroundings are such that he may make a deliberate and voluntary choice, free from any overruling influence. It should be the voluntary act of the employé and the choice made when he is in fit condition to make a free choice. When he does make such election, then, according to all the authorities, the employé should be compelled to abide by it. I do not think that under such circumstances, if he decides to remain in the association and take what it offers and abide by its regulations, the courts can look any further into the matter to see if the employé has received enough compensation or has made a wise choice. Being a member of the association, the employé is familiar with its advantages, and knows beforehand exactly what it offers him. He also knows the uncertain fruits to be derived from a lawsuit. Therefore I think the court errs in considering the matter as an adjustment or a settlement in any sense. It is simply an election. There are two courses open to the injured employé. He may elect to take either, but he cannot take both. And, when he deliberately decides in the full possession of his faculties, knowing well what he does, and free from undue restraint or influence, that should end the matter so far as the courts are concerned. This is not only the consensus of all the authorities, but it is, to my mind, entirely consistent with the principles of justice and fairness.

3. All the evidence shows that this plaintiff after he was injured in the shops decided to "abide in the ship," and take the benefits offered by the relief department. He filed the application voluntarily, and complied with the regulations, and for some few weeks he received his allowance regularly. I find nothing in the record to indicate any wrong undue influence or oppression practiced on plaintiff to influence his decision. But there is evidence that, before he was recovered, the allowance and benefits were arbitrarily and abruptly terminated and stopped by Dr. Wessell, an assistant surgeon of the relief department of the defendant, and without any notice to plaintiff or opportunity to be heard. I am not aware that there is anything in the articles of agreement which conferred upon Dr. Wessell the right to terminate the plaintiff's benefits in such manner.

In order that this may be considered and inquired into on another trial, I concur in the order of the court granting a new trial.

WALKER, J., concurs in the opinion.

HOKE, J. (concurring). In Barden v. Railroad, 152 N. C. 319, 67 S. E. 971, and several other cases, where a similar question was presented, it was contended for the company that a receipt of benefits under the provisions of the relief department by an employé who was a member should operate as an absolute bar to any action by said employé to recover damages for injuries caused by the negligence or other wrong of the company. Being of the opinion that to allow the receipt of benefits the effect contended for would in nearly every instance be in direct violation of our statute law (Revisal, § 2646), I concurred in the decision declaring the provision void. The statute in question enacts, in substance, that any employé of any railroad company, operating in this state who shall suffer injury to his person, or the personal representative of any such employé, who has in the course of his employment been killed by the negligence, carelessness, or incompetence of any other employé, or by any defect in the machinery, ways, or appliances of the company, shall be entitled to maintain an action against such company, and then concludes with the provision "that any contract or agreement, expressed or implied, made by any employer of the company to waive the benefit of this section, shall be null and void." True, there are numerous decisions of the courts elsewhere that the receipt of benefits under the provisions of this charter or scheme known as the relief department shall operate as a bar to the action, basing their ruling chiefly on the position that the acceptance of benefits is in the nature of an adjustment after the injury, but, in my view, the position is untenable here, for the reason that to allow the receipt of benefits the effect of an absolute bar resort must be had to the stipulations of the contract, by which the injured employé became a member and so comes directly within the prohibition of the statute referred to. While not directly presented because the court was upholding the provisions of the federal statute as to companies engaged in interstate commerce avoiding a similar stipulation, this view was suggested in a recent case before the Supreme Court of the United States—Railroad v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 566, 31 Sup. Ct. 262, 55 L. Ed. 328—in which Associate Justice Hughes, delivering the opinion, said: "The acceptance of benefits is, of course, an act done after the injury, but the legal consequences sought to be attached to that act are derived from the provision in the contract of membership. The stipulation which the statute nullifies is one made in advance of the injury, that the subsequent acceptance of benefits shall constitute full satisfaction of all claim for damages," etc. From the principle here suggested and on the view of this relief department and the acceptance of benefits under it, which has been always heretofore presented, I am of opinion that the case of Barden v. Railroad, supra, was properly decided, and might be allowed to prevail now, as a correct and forcible statement of the law controlling the subject. In the present cause while disapproving Barden's Case to the extent that it holds the provision in question absolutely void, the principal opinion by Associate Justice ALLEN now decides that the acceptance of benefits by an injured employé, having a right of action against the railroad company, whether regarded in the nature of a release or an accord and satisfaction, may be successfully assailed in the courts for fraud, undue influence, or oppression and that on such issue joined the entire facts may be presented, including the circumstances under which the employé became a member, as well as those more directly attendant upon the transaction, and that in some instances this fraud may be inferred when there is such gross disproportion between the amount received and the extent and value of the claim as to make it clear that no fair adjustment has been had, nor one that in equity and good conscience should be allowed to stand. From this opinion and two on the same subject and under differing facts by the same learned judge, at the present term (Nelson v. Railroad, 72 S. E. 998, and Wacksmuth v. Railroad, infra), I am convinced that a wise and workable rule has been found and established by which the beneficent features of this department may be preserved, and proper and adequate relief afforded to injured employés having meritorious claims, and therefore concur in the opinion as written.

WACKSMUTH v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

1. DAMAGES (§ 166*) — PERSONAL INJURIES — ASSESSMENT OF DAMAGES — EVIDENCE.

It is competent to ask plaintiff suing for a personal injury as to the extent of his injury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Damages, Dec. Dig. § 166.*]

2. TRIAL (§ 90*) — NONRESPONSIVE ANSWERS — REMEDY — MOTION TO STRIKE.

A party must promptly move to strike out a nonresponsive answer of a witness to a proper question, or the objection is waived.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 100*) — RELIEF FUND AGREEMENTS — VALIDITY — EVIDENCE.

Where a railroad employé suing for personal injuries had accepted benefits from a relief fund maintained by the company, parol evidence that the employé was induced to accept the benefits by the promise of the company to give him employment, and that the company breached its promise, was admissible on the issue whether the employé was relieved thereby from the legal effect of the acceptance, so as to permit him to sue for the injuries received.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 100*) — RELIEF FUND AGREEMENTS — ACCEPTANCE OF BENEFITS — EFFECT.

An acceptance of benefits by an injured employé of a railroad company maintaining a relief fund for injured employés induced by a verbal contract to furnish employment to the employé does not bar an action for the injuries, where the company breaches its contract.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 928*) — QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE — INSTRUCTIONS — PRESUMPTIONS.

Where the instructions are not set out, and there is no exception to them, the court on appeal must assume that the trial court correctly charged on the issues.

6. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 20*) — CONCLUSIVENESS — PERFORMANCE.

One relying on a contract of compromise and settlement calling for the performance by him of certain acts must show a performance of such acts.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 100*) — INJURIES TO SERVANTS — ACTIONS — RECOVERY.

Where an employé suing for injuries had accepted benefits from the employer maintaining a relief fund for injured employés, but the acceptance did not preclude a recovery, the employer was entitled to have the amount of the benefits credited on the judgment received, the employé offering to return such amount.

Appeal from Superior Court, Edgecombe County; Whedbee, Judge.

Action by Louis Wacksmuth against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action to recover damages for personal injuries caused as the plaintiff alleges by the negligence of the defendant. The defendant denies negligence, alleges that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, and specially pleads, as a defense, that the plaintiff was a member of its relief department, and that, after his injury, he accepted benefits from the department. There was evidence that the plaintiff was injured on the 18th day of April, 1904, in a collision, while performing his duty for the defendant as engineer, and without fault on his part. It was admitted that, after his injury, four checks aggregating $155, were sent to him from the relief department as benefits. The plaintiff did not collect the money on the checks, and on the 29th of August, 1904, wrote a letter to the superintendent of defendant, containing the following proposition: "If you, as the proper representative of the A. C. L., will give me steady work at a salary of $4.50 per day and I to be employed in the shops at Rocky Mount and to break in new engines and such other similar work that will not require me to make long runs or do service at night, and give me further guarantee that I shall remain in the above employment for a term of not less than fifteen years at a salary of not less than $4.50 per day, steady time, and with the further privilege of returning to my regular run or daylight run, going out of Rocky Mount, whenever my physical condition will admit of the same, I will release the A. C. L. from any further claims for damages resulting from the above-named accident. It being agreed that you are to allow me also the amount agreed to in your letter of August 1st, and the amount that I am entitled to from the relief department." The superintendent replied, inviting the plaintiff to Wilmington, and saying: "I think it is better for us to talk over the matter about which you have written." The plaintiff testified that he went to Wilmington and saw the superintendent, and that he agreed to give him employment and to look out and care for him, and that in consequence of these promises he collected the checks. There was evidence to the contrary. The defendant offered evidence tending to show that it had contributed to the relief department, but no issue was submitted or requested on this question. The rules and regulations of the relief department are fully stated in Barden v. Railroad, 152 N. C. 318, 67 S. E. 971, and in King v. Railroad, 72 S. E. 801, and Nelson v. Railroad, 72 S. E. 993, at this term. There was evidence tending to prove negligence.

The jury returned the following verdict:

"(1) Did the plaintiff voluntarily become a member of the relief department of defendant, and execute the agreement introduced in evidence? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Did the plaintiff, after his alleged injury, accept benefits under said contract, and, if so, in what amount? Answer: Yes; $155.

"(3) Was the plaintiff induced to cash the relief checks and accept benefits under said contract upon the promise and agreement of defendant to furnish him such work or employment as he might thereafter be able to perform, and to take care of him as an old employé? Answer: Yes.

"(4) If so, did the defendant comply with its agreements? Answer: No.

"(5) Was the plaintiff injured by the negligence of the defendant company? Answer: Yes.

"(6) Did the plaintiff, by his negligence, contribute to his own injury? Answer: No.

"(7) What damage is plaintiff entitled to recover of defendant? Answer: $7,500."

There was a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant excepted, assigning the following errors:

First exception: For that the court erred in allowing the plaintiff, in answer to question of plaintiff's counsel, "How much did you suffer?" over the defendant's objection, to answer, "Suffered all kinds of troubles with doctors, thinking they were doing justice by me, kept telling me I would be all right, and I was continually having trouble." This exception is upon the ground that both question and answer are improper and incompetent, and should have been excluded.

Second exception: For that the court erred in allowing the plaintiff, under the defendant's objection, to testify to what passed between him and the superintendent, as follows: "Q. And you went to see the superintendent about your letter of August 29th, and his reply of September 10th. Tell the jury what passed between you? A. The superintendent said that in regard to entering into a contract they did not do such a thing (this is as I understood him to say), and I told him my reasons for it, that I thought there might be some changes around the railroad, as there had been in the past, and I thought best to have a contract, and he said, 'We are likely to stay as long as you,' and I said that might be true, and he said, 'Haven't we always looked out for old employés?' I said, 'Yes,' and I insisted that in case I could not run on the short cut, as my nerves were not right, and I would want to be on the safe side, that they give me something else to do, and he said to the manager, 'Isn't there going to be a light run put on to Fayetteville, and maybe that will suit Mr. Wacksmuth?' And I said maybe it would, that all I wanted was something in case I couldn't run, so I would have something to do, and he said, 'Go back, and don't work until you feel stronger, and put in your application for this run, and we will look out for you.' And I said, 'I am going to have my relief check signed,' and I think I also signed for my watch, pin, etc. Q. What did he do that first thing? A. He touched me and said, 'Go back,' they would look out for me, and the manager said he knew I was a good workman, that he had passed through the shops and seen me at work, and he knew I was a good workman, and he left me with the impression— Q. He told you that they would care for you, and he said they always took care of old men. The last thing he said to you was that you were to go back and they would take care of you, and you went and cashed those checks? A. Yes; I went from there down to Mr. B's office, an architect in Wilmington, and told him what I had done." This exception is upon the ground that the same is irrelevant and incompetent, for that (1) it does not constitute any promise or agreement which is sufficiently explicit to make the basis of a contract; and (2) it contradicts by parol the express terms and provisions of a written contract, and should have been excluded.

Third exception: For that the court erred in allowing the plaintiff, in answer to his counsel's question, "Why did you cash the relief checks?" to state, under defendant's objection, that it was "with the promise that they would look out for me." This exception is upon the ground that the question and answer are both irrelevant and incompetent, in that they contradict by parol the express terms of the written contract or agreement.

Fourth exception: For that the court erred in refusing to give the special instruction, numbered 1, asked for by the defendant, as follows: "The defendant prays the court to instruct the jury that there is no evidence that plaintiff was induced by the defendant to accept the relief benefits." This exception is upon the ground that there was no such evidence, and the court should have so instructed the jury.

Fifth exception: For that the court erred in refusing to give the special instruction numbered 5, asked for by the defendant, as follows: "Before you can answer the issue, was plaintiff induced to accept the benefits by the defendant? you must find the facts from the evidence that the defendant knowingly, purposely offered and agreed to give plaintiff indefinite employment, and that this was done to induce him to accept the benefits, and release his right of action. There is no evidence of this, and you are instructed to answer the issue, 'No.'" This exception is upon the ground that the instruction asked for was a correct statement of the matter necessary to be found before the issue could be answered in favor of the plaintiff, and that there was no evidence upon which said finding could be based, and the instruction should have been given.

Sixth exception: For that the court erred in using the following language in the general charge to the jury, to wit: "If you find as a matter of fact that the plaintiff went to Wilmington, and the general superintendent promised and agreed and said to him that if he would go back, and not sue the company, that he would see that he was taken care of, and would be given such work as he would be able to do, and that by reason of these representations he did cash his checks, then I charge you that that would be such an inducement, and you ought to answer the third issue, 'Yes'; but if, on the other hand, they did not induce him to, or did not intend to induce him to, cash those checks, but that he did it voluntarily or without promises, then you should answer that issue, 'No.' Upon This issue the burden is on the plaintiff. What is meant by the burden is that the evidence of one party outweighs the evidence of the other; in other words, if upon this issue the evidence is equally balanced, then the answer would be against the plaintiff, because the plaintiff has the burden of the issues. If the testimony of the plaintiff outweighs or bears down the evidence of the defendant, then he is said to have carried the burden, and it would be your duty to answer this issue 'Yes.'" This exception is upon the ground that there was no evidence offered by the plaintiff from which such a finding of fact as is contemplated in that part of the charge quoted could have been made.

Seventh exception: For that the court erred in refusing to grant the defendant's request for judgment of nonsuit at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, and again at the close of all the evidence.

F. S. Sprull, for appellant. H. A. Giliam and L. V. Bassett, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] An examination of the record shows that no exception was taken to the answer of the witness embraced in the first assignment of error. The objection was to the question, and it was clearly competent to ask the plaintiff as to the extent of his injuries, and for him to state how much he suffered, and, if the defendant thought the answer was not responsive, it was its duty to move to strike it out.

[2] This is fair to the judge and the parties, as it gives an opportunity to correct any error that has been committed, and the judge may well conclude when objection is made to a question, which is proper, and none to the answer, that it is not regarded of sufficient importance to note an exception, or that it is unobjectionable. "Defendant's remedy was to promptly move to strike out the objectionable testimony, and by the failure of its counsel to adopt this course any and all right which the defendant may have had to object thereto was waived." 8 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. p. 134.

The remaining assignments, as indicated in the brief of the appellant, are intended to present three questions:

(1) The plaintiff having admitted that he accepted benefits, is it competent to prove by parol that he was induced to do so by the promise of the defendant?

(2) If such evidence is competent, was the evidence introduced by the plaintiff sufficient to sustain a finding that the promise was made?

(3) If the promise was made, would it relieve the plaintiff from the legal effect of the acceptance of the benefit?

The term "benefits," as used in the regulations of the department, has a definite meaning, and does not include hospital treatment and medical attention, and it is the acceptance of benefits, not the agreement to do so, which under certain conditions may bar a recovery. The acceptance of the benefit is an act of the party, which is not evidenced by any writing, and, when its effect is in dispute, it is competent to show the circumstances connected with it. It is in this respect that Aderholt v. Railroad, 152 N. C. 411, 67 S. E. 978, and Railroad v. Vanordstrand, 67 Kan. 387, 73 Pac. 113, are distinguishable from the case at bar, as in each of those cases there was a written release.

[3] We think the evidence was competent, and that it was sufficient to be submitted to the jury on the third issue.

[4] There was evidence that the plaintiff received the checks for benefits; that he wrote the superintendent of the defendant and submitted a proposition of settlement, which included future employment, and said he would release the defendant if it would give him this employment; that the superintendent invited him to see him in order that they might talk the matter over; that he went, and that in the conversation the superintendent said that, "in regard to entering into a contract, they did not do such a thing (this is as I understood him to say), and I told him my reason for it, that I thought there might be some changes around the railroad, as there had been in the past, and I thought it best to have a contract, and he said, 'We are likely to stay as long as you,' and I said, 'That might be true,' and he said, 'Haven't we always looked out for old employes?' I said 'Yes,' and I insisted that in case I couldn't run on the short cut, as my nerves were not right, and I would want to be on the safe side, that they give me something else to do, and he said to the manager, 'Well, isn't there going to be a light run put on to Fayetteville, and maybe that will suit Mr. Wacksmuth?' And I said maybe it would, that all I wanted was something in case I couldn't run, so I would have something to do, and he said, 'Go back, and don't go to work until you feel stronger, and put in your application for this run, and we will look out for you.' And he said, 'You go back to Rocky Mount, and we will look out for you.' And I said, 'I am going to have my relief checks signed,' and I think I also signed for my watch, pin, etc. He touched me and said, 'Go back,' that they would look out for me," and that, relying on what was said to him, he then collected the benefit checks, and this, if believed, justified the jury in answering the third issue, "Yes."

[5] The charge of his honor is not set out, but, as there is no exception to it, we must assume that he fully explained to the jury the significance of the issue and the bearing of the evidence. If the evidence was competent and was sufficient to sustain the verdict, does the acceptance of benefits, induced by the promise of the defendant which it failed to perform, bar a recovery? In the consideration of this question, it must be remembered that the defendant is not relying on the promise. It does not say that the plaintiff has accepted a new promise of future employment in satisfaction of his claim for damages, and therefore he must declare for breach of the promise, but, on the contrary, it says no promise was made. It seems to us that a fair interpretation of the verdict is conclusive against the defendant on the principles declared in King v. Railroad, 72 S. E. 801, at this term. The jury has found that there was a contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, and that by its terms the plaintiff agreed to release the defendant from claims for damages on account of negligence upon payment to him of the benefits and giving him employment, and that the defendant has broken the contract. If so, the acceptance of the benefits did not constitute the settlement, but an act done in furtherance of it. Dalrymple v. Craig, 70 Mo. App. 155. The contract must be considered as a whole, and, if treated as an accord and satisfaction or as a contract with dependent stipulations, the defendant must show performance in order to rely on it. Our views, as to the controlling principles when an accord and satisfaction is pleaded, are stated in the King Case, and it is unnecessary to repeat them.

[6] It is also well settled that "one relying on a contract of compromise and settlement calling for the performance by him of certain acts must show a performance of the conditions imposed on him by such agreement." 8 Cyc. 534. This is declared to be the law in Quarles v. Jenkins, 98 N. C. 261, 3 S. E. 396, where the court says: "The court therefore properly instructed the jury, in effect, that if the settlement alleged was to be final, on conditions to be observed and performed on the part of the defendant, and he failed to observe and perform the same according to the terms as agreed upon between the parties, then there was no such settlement and discharge." The case of Armistead v. Railroad, 108 La. Ann. 173, 32 South. 456, is in principle like this. There the plaintiff's boat was injured by the negligence of the defendant, and he brought an action to recover damages. The defendant pleaded a compromise and settlement, and it was held that the plea was not good because it had promised to furnish a steamboat and had failed to do so; the court saying: "The defendant violated the compromise, and then voluntarily canceled it, and is therefore not in a position to plead it in bar of plaintiff's action." We conclude that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment upon the verdict.

[7] On the trial the plaintiff offered to return the amount he received as benefits. This was proper, and the defendant is entitled to have this sum credited on the judgment recovered.

We find no error.

No error.

CLARK, C. J., concurs in the result upon the ground that the contract of the plaintiff with the so-called relief department is denounced as null and void by the provisions of the state statute Rev. 1905, § 2646 (the Fellow Servant Act), and also by section 5 of the Federal Employer's Liability Act of April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 66 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1173), and refers to his concurring opinion in King v. Railroad, 72 S. E. 801, at this term.

RODGERS, McCABE & CO. v. BELL.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 9, 1911.)

1. GAMING (§ 12*)—CONTRACTS FOR FUTURE DELIVERY—VALIDITY.

A contract to deliver cotton on or before a fixed date is not rendered invalid as a gambling contract by a stipulation therein that the measure of damages for failure to deliver shall be the highest market price between certain dates with interest, etc.

2. CONTRACTS (§ 15*)—ESSENTIALS—MEETING OF MINDS.

To constitute a valid contract, the minds of the parties must meet on the same thing at the same time; but this may be by words written or unwritten, or by conduct, or both.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Cent. Dig. §§ 61-66; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

3. GAMING (§ 12*)—CONTRACTS FOR FUTURE DELIVERY—VALIDITY.

Under Revisal 1905, § 1689, making void contracts to deliver cotton, etc., when actual delivery by the parties is not intended, uncommunicated intent of one of the parties not to deliver does not invalidate the contract.

4. GAMING (§ 49*)—GAMBLING CONTRACTS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Revisal 1905, § 1689, makes void contracts to deliver cotton, etc., when actual delivery is not intended. The last sentence provides that the section shall not apply to manufacturers or wholesale merchants dealing in commodities required in the ordinary course of their business. Section 3823 unqualifiedly makes such contracts criminal. Section 1691 provides that, on verified answer claiming that a contract sued on is void as being a gambling contract, the burden shall be on plaintiff to show validity of the contract. Held, that the last provision of section 1689 should be read as qualifying section 1691, and not as exempting manufacturers, etc., from the prohibition against speculation in futures, and hence, in an action by a wholesale dealer in spot cotton for breach of a contract to deliver, the burden is not on him to prove the validity of the contract, but on defendant to prove its invalidity.

5. STATUTES (§ 205*)—CONSTRUCTION.

A statute should be construed as a whole in arriving at the Legislature's intention.

6. STATUTES (§ 224*)—CONSTRUCTION.

If possible, a statute should be construed in harmony with existing laws, unless the legislative intent is clearly expressed in the contract.

7. STATUTES (§ 225½*)—CONSTRUCTION.

In construing a codified statute, resort may be had to the original legislation.

Walker and Brown, JJ., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Edgecombe County; Ward, Judge.

Action by Rodgers, McCabe & Co. against

J. H. Bell. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The written contract, on its face, provided for the delivery of 50,000 pounds of cotton at the depot or boat landing in Pollocksville, N. C., on or before January 1, 1910, and contained a stipulation that, in case the party of the second part failed to deliver said cotton or any part thereof, the damages should be admeasured at the highest price in the above-mentioned market on any day between September 10, 1909, and December 1, 1909, with interest, etc. There was testimony on part of plaintiff tending to show a failure to deliver 29,454 pounds of cotton causing damage, etc., and further that actual delivery of the cotton was intended. The defendant filed verified answer, admitting execution of the written contract and containing averment that, although the contract on its face provided for actual delivery, it was not so intended by the parties, but that same was a gambling contract prohibited by the statute, etc., and offered evidence tending to show that the contract was negotiated by plaintiff's agents, and it was understood between them at the time that no actual delivery was intended or should be required, etc.

Issues were submitted and responded to by the jury as follows: "(1) Did the plaintiff and defendants enter into the contract as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes. (2) Was the plaintiff at all times able, ready, and willing to accept and receive and pay for said cotton upon its delivery during the time and at the place mentioned therein? Answer: Yes. (3) Was the said contract illegal and void? Answer: No. (4) If not, what damage is plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: 29,454 pounds at 4½ cents per pound, with interest at 6 per cent. until paid from December 1, 1909." Judgment on the verdict, and defendant excepted and appealed, assigning errors, etc.

T. D. Warren, Aycock & Winston, and P. M. Pearsall, for appellant. F. S. Spruill and H. A. Gilliam, for appellee.

HOKE, J. [1] The defendant moved to nonsuit, contending that the contract on its face is a gaming contract avoided by the statute, and this because it contains definite provision for an adjustment of damages on failure to deliver; but the question has been resolved against defendant in Harvey v. Pettaway, 72 S. E. 364, at the present term, holding that this and other stipulations of similar import, appearing in the contract, are not conclusive as a matter of law.

[2, 3] It was also insisted that the court below erred in charging the jury as he did on the third issue, as follows: "Upon this issue the jury is instructed that whether or not such contract is illegal and void is to be settled from the evidence in the case by ascertaining the real underlying intention of both parties to the contract, and the inquiries are to be directed to the question as to whether it was the intention of both parties to the contract that the cotton described therein should not be delivered, and whether it was the purpose and intent of both parties to conceal in the terms of the written contract a gambling deal in which the parties to the contract contemplated no real transaction as to the articles to be delivered." The objection being that, if either party had the intent and purpose not to deliver, though uncommunicated to the other, the contract was prohibited by the statute. Defendant also tendered an issue presenting this view which was rejected. It is true that, in order to constitute a valid agreement, the minds of the parties must have met on the same thing at one and the same time; but this is said in reference to the common intent as contained and expressed in the communications had between them. This may be by words written or unwritten, or by conduct, both or either; but it must be in some way expressed, or it does not bind, and the position may not be allowed that when the parties have made an agreement for valuable consideration, clearly expressing their common intent and purpose in one way, this can be frustrated or altered by the secret and undisclosed intent of one of the parties to the contrary. This is true on general principles. Williams v. Carr, 80 N. C. 294; Anson on Contracts, pp. 2, 3, 4; Clark on Contracts, pp. 2, 3. And on the facts of this case both the statute in question and authoritative interpretation of this and similar enactments here and elsewhere are against defendant's position.

Section 1689, Revisal, being the law by which contracts in futures are declared to be unlawful, provides, in part, "that every contract, whether in writing or otherwise, whereby any person shall agree to sell and deliver cotton, corn, wheat, rye, bacon, salt, etc., at a place and time specified and agreed upon therein," to any other person, etc. When in fact and notwithstanding the terms expressed of such contract, it is not intended by the parties thereto that the articles or things so agreed to be sold and delivered shall be actually delivered or the value thereof paid, "but it is intended and understood by them that money or other thing of value shall be paid to the one by the other or to a third party dependent on whether the market price or value of the thing shall be greater or less, at the time and place, etc., * * * shall be utterly null and void." It will be noted that the statute avoids the contract when the vitiating purpose is held by the "parties thereto," and, further, "but it is intended and understood by them" that settlement may be had by paying the difference according to the rise or fall of the market or other change in value, and this view has prevailed in the different cases with us construing the law. Harvey v. Pettaway, supra; Edgerton v.

Edgerton, 153 N. C. 167, 69 S. E. 53; Burns v. Tomlinson, 147 N. C. 634, 61 S. E. 615; Id. 147 N. C. 645, 61 S. E. 614; Rankin v. Mitchem, 141 N. C. 277, 53 S. E. 854; State v. McGinnis, 138 N. C. 724, 51 S. E. 50; State v. Clayton, 138 N. C. 732, 50 S. E. 866. And authoritative decisions elsewhere are to the same effect. Crawford v. Spencer, 92 Mo. 498, 4 S. W. 713, 1 Am. St. Rep. 745; Scanlon v. Warren, 169 Ill. 142, 48 N. E. 410; Wall v. Schneider, 59 Wis. 352, 18 N. W. 443, 48 Am. Rep. 520; Clark on Contracts, p. 331. In State v. Clayton, supra, it was held: "The test of the validity of a contract for 'futures,' which Laws 1889, c. 221, requires, is the 'intention not to actually deliver' the articles bought or sold for future delivery. No matter how explicit the words in any contract which may require a delivery, if in fact there is no intention to deliver, but the real understanding is that at the stipulated date the losing party shall pay to the other the difference between the market price and the contract price, this is a gambling contract and void at common law and indictable under the statute." In Rankin's Case, Associate Justice Brown, for the court, said: "That being so, the matter is to be settled by ascertaining the real underlying intention of the parties to the contract. Was it the intention of both parties to the contract that the cotton should not be delivered? Was it their purpose to conceal in the terms of a fair contract a gambling deal, in which the parties contemplate no real transaction as to the articles to be delivered? This purpose and underlying intent his honor properly left to the jury; the contract not being a gambling one on its face."

Undoubtedly, if it was understood by both that either party to the contract could be relieved by paying the difference, and that no actual compliance was intended at the time, this would avoid the contract; the language of the statute being that the contract is utterly void if there was no intent "that the thing should be actually delivered or the value thereof paid." It is in this sense that the court said in Burns v. Tomlinson, 147 N. C. 634, 61 S. E. 615: "That a lawful contract was one where actual delivery was intended by both parties"—a correct statement of the burden placed on plaintiff by section 1691 of the statute, whenever the same applies. But it was never held in this case, or any other with us, that, when an innocent party had made a contract valid in its terms, his rights acquired thereunder should be denied him by reason of an undisclosed purpose or intent of the other. To avoid the contract the vitiating purpose or understanding must be shared in by both.

The cases apparently holding a contrary view, to which we were cited by counsel (McGrew v. City Produce Ex., 85 Tenn. 572, 4 S. W. 38, 4 Am. St. Rep. 771, and Connor v. Black, 119 Mo. 126, 24 S. W. 184), were on statutes differing from ours and permitting or requiring, perhaps, a different interpretation. Thus the Tennessee statute in express terms condemns the contract "if either of the contracting parties, dealing simply for the margin or on the prospective rise and fall of prices, had no intention or purpose of making actual delivery." And the Missouri statute of similar import received like construction and seems to have been enacted just after the decision from that state which we have cited in support of our conclusion.

[4] It was further urged for error that the court, after imposing upon the plaintiff the burden of proving the contract a lawful one as required by chapter 36, § 1691, of the Revisal, in a subsequent part of the charge changed this ruling by placing the burden on defendant showing it to be unlawful. On a perusal of the charge of his honor, we doubt if it is subject to this criticism; but, assuming that defendant's position concerning the charge is correct, we are of opinion that there is no error committed to defendant's prejudice, and this by reason of certain qualifying words appearing elsewhere in the chapter as follows: "This section shall not be construed so as to apply to any person, firm, corporation, or his or their agent, engaged in the business of manufacturing or wholesale merchandizing in the purchase or sale of necessary commodities required in the ordinary course of their business." These words now have place at the end of section 1689 of the same chapter, that defining and declaring what contracts of this kind shall be considered unlawful, and the court has already held in State v. McGinnis and State v. Clayton, supra, that, in so far as these qualifying words are considered in reference to that section, they are without significance. In answer to the suggestion made in the McGinnis Case that this statute gave manufacturers and wholesale merchants the right to "hedge" by purchasing "future contracts" for raw commodities without intending to demand actual delivery, the Chief Justice said in McGinnis' Case that the words referred to had no such meaning, but were inserted "unnecessarily and out of abundance of caution," and further that: "Section 7 does not confer any exclusive right or privilege upon manufacturers or wholesale merchants. It does not authorize them to engage in any business prohibited by the act of 1889. It does not authorize them to speculate in cotton or other commodities. It simply provides that the courts shall not construe the act of 1905 to have the effect of preventing them from buying and selling for future delivery the necessary commodities required in their ordinary business." And in Clayton's Case he further said: "It is this class of bona fide contracts, in aid of business and not for gambling purposes, that section 7, c. 538, Laws 1905, was intended to authorize. That section did not authorize, nor can it be construed to intend to authorize, manufacturers and wholesale merchants to gamble by buying commodities for future delivery when there was no intention to deliver." To allow to this proviso the meaning which the words, used ordinarily, import, and as affecting the body of the section where it now has place, would cause a direct conflict with section 3823 of the Revisal, by which contracts, of the very kind described in section 1689, are made criminal and without qualifying words of any description. Accordingly, in McGinnis' Case, it is suggested that the clause in question should probably be annexed to section 1691 of the chapter, that in reference to the burden of proof, and, on full consideration, we hold this to be the proper construction.

[5] It is a well-recognized principle that, in construing a statute, "in order to determine the true intent of the Legislature, the particular clauses and phrases should not be studied as detached and isolated expressions, but the whole and every part of the statute must be considered, in fixing the meaning of any of its parts." Black on Interpretation of Laws, § 74, p. 166. A principle especially insistent in case of legislation "in pari materia" and directly applied to our Revisal is State v. Lewis, 142 N. C. 626, 55 S. E. 600, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 666, and other decisions of like import.

[6] Having reference to this general principle, it is also well understood that a statute should be so construed as to make it "harmonize with the existent body of the law, unless the legislative intent is clearly expressed to the contrary, and that each and every clause shall be allowed significance if this can be done by any fair and reasonable interpretation." Black, Interpretation of Laws, p. 60, §§ 32, 49; Lewis' Sutherland, Statutory Construction, § 516.

[7] It is also held that where laws have been codified, and in case of ambiguity or doubt, permitting construction, it is allowed that the court may examine the original legislation, as an aid to a correct interpretation. Lewis' Sutherland, § 450. On examination of the original statutes, it appears that the act, defining and declaring contracts of the kind in question unlawful, was passed in 1889, chapter 221. In 1905, chapter 538, the Legislature enacted a law to suppress what is known, in popular phrase, as "bucket shops," and, having provided for this in sections 1 and 2, the statute contains several additional sections, relating to the statute of 1889, and all of them having reference to the mode or quantum of proof which should be required in enforcement of that act. The law of 1905 then, in its closing section, provided: "That this act shall not be construed so as to apply to any person, firm or corporation," etc. This is the first time the words we are considering appear in our legislation on this subject, and, so far as they had reference to the law of 1889, it is clear that the Legislature, in the original statutes, only intended that they should affect questions of proof. From these considerations, we are of opinion, as stated, that the proviso at the end of section 1689 of the Revisal, by correct interpretation, should appear, and only affect section 1691, that relating to the burden of proof, and, giving the words this effect and placing, there has been no error committed which gives defendant any just ground of complaint. On the undisputed fact, it appears that plaintiffs are dealers in spot cotton; that they buy from 200,000 to 300,000 bales of cotton each year, supplying in the ordinary course of their business other dealers in Baltimore, New York, Boston, and various cotton mills in different sections of the country. Under and by virtue of the words in question, plaintiff's case is therefore withdrawn from the operation of section 1691, and he is entitled to have his cause tried under the rule which generally prevails "that one who asserts that an ordinary business contract is unlawful is required to prove it to the satisfaction of the jury by the greater weight of evidence." Defendant objected, further, that his honor, on the issue as to damages, allowed the jury to award same on the basis of the highest market price of cotton between September and December 1st, as provided by the contract. It is a general trend of court decisions to hold that, when "a contract is for a matter of certain value or value easily ascertainable" (Clark on Contracts, p. 412), or, as stated by another author, "where damages can be easily and precisely determined by a definite pecuniary standard, as by proof of market values" (Hale on Damages, p. 137), that any sum stipulated for in the contract, in excess of that value, should be considered as a penalty, and especially is this true when the stipulated sum would necessitate an exorbitant recovery or one greatly disproportioned to the loss; but, on perusal of his honor's charge, we do not find that such an exception is open to defendant. The court seems to have submitted the question of damages under the rule which ordinarily obtains; that is, to be admeasured on the difference between the market and contract price at the time and place of delivery. Hosliery Co. v. Cotton, 140 N. C. 452, 53 S. E. 140. The damages were no doubt awarded on that basis, and the plaintiff does not appeal. The question therefore is not presented, and on the facts in evidence we make no decision upon it.

There is no reversible error disclosed in the record, and the judgment for plaintiff is affirmed.

No error.

WALKER, J. (concurring in result). In Sprunt v. May, 72 S. E. 821, decided at this term, I filed a dissenting opinion, stating my views as to the Acts of 1889, c. 221, and Acts of 1905, c. 538, forbidding dealings in "futures," and the conduct and maintenance of bucket shops. For the reasons therein given, I dissent from so much of the opinion of the court in this case as is in conflict therewith, and assent to the conclusion that there was no error in the trial below, as the plaintiff is excepted from the operation of Revisal, § 1689.

BROWN, J. (concurring). I concur generally in the opinion of the court, but will state my view as to the effect of the last sentence in section 1689 of the Revisal upon wholesale dealers.

I am of opinion that they are exempted entirely from the effect and operation of the act of the General Assembly embraced in chapter 36, Revisal, sections 1687 to 1691, inclusive. The validity of contracts for future delivery entered into with such dealers are to be determined according to the principles of the common law just as if no such legislation had ever been enacted.

RODGERS, McCABE & CO. v. BROCK.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 9, 1911.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 4*)—RIGHT TO REMEDY—CONTRACTS OF SALE.

Generally, equity will not specifically perform a contract to deliver cotton, since failure to deliver may be compensated in damages.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. § 4; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

2. GAMING (§ 12*)—FEATURES.

That the measure of damages provided in a contract of sale of cotton for future delivery, for breach of contract, provides for settlement on an artificial price of cotton, does not conclusively indicate that it is a gambling contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Cent. Dig. § 22; Dec. Dig. § 12.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Edgecombe County; Ward, Judge.

Action by Rodgers, McCabe & Company against Furney Brock. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals. New trial ordered.

The court at the close of the testimony stated it would charge the jury, if they believed all the evidence and should find all the facts to be as testified, there could be no recovery, and they should answer issues in favor of defendant, upon which plaintiff excepted and submitted to nonsuit and appealed.

H. A. Gilliam and F. S. Spruill, for appellant. Aycock & Winston, Thos. D. Warren, and P. M. Pearsall, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The first contention of the defendant is that the contract is a gambling one on its face for these reasons: (1) No cotton is specified so as to enforce delivery. (2) Delivery cannot be compelled, as contract provides for a settlement on an artificial price of cotton. (3) Measure of damage provided is arbitrary and not such as law provides. The contract calls for delivery of 75,000 pounds lint cotton at Trenton on or before January 1, 1910. This is sufficiently specific.

[1] It is true that specific performance of a contract to deliver cotton will not generally be enforced by a court of equity because the failure to deliver the cotton may be compensated in damages. That does not necessarily stamp a contract as a gambling one.

[2] That the measure of damages provided in the instrument for a breach of the contract differs somewhat from the rule of the law does not of itself conclusively indicate that it is a gambling contract on its face. This is decided at this term in Harvey v. Pettaway, 72 S. E. 364.

While there is evidence in this case tending to prove that the contract sued on is a gambling contract, we think there are phases of the evidence to the contrary.

The principles of law governing cases of this character are fully discussed and settled in the opinions of this court at this term by Mr. Justice Hoke in Rodgers, McCabe & Co. v. Bell, 72 S. E. 817, and Sprunt v. May, infra.

The case should be submitted to the jury upon the issues raised by the pleadings under appropriate instructions.

New trial.

ALEX. SPRUNT & SONS v. MAY.

1. GAMING (§ 49*)—FUTURES—BURDEN OF PROOF—STATUTES.

Where plaintiffs, in the cotton business, exported cotton in large quantities, they are within Revisal 1905, § 1689, relating to gaming contracts and providing that the section shall not apply to persons in the wholesale business, so that section 1691, placing the burden of proof on plaintiff in a suit for breach of contract to deliver cotton, etc., to show that the contract was not gambling in futures, does not apply.

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 171*)—ACTS OF AGENT—EFFECT ON PRINCIPAL—GAMBLING CONTRACTS.

A bona fide wholesale dealer in cotton for actual delivery cannot recover for breach of defendant's contract for future delivery, if it was understood between the dealer's agent and defendant that actual delivery should not be made, and that the transaction should be a speculation in futures, though the agent was only authorized to make a contract for actual delivery, since the dealer adopts the contract by suing on it.

3. GAMING (§ 49*)—FUTURES—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to warrant a finding of an understanding that actual delivery under a contract to sell cotton was not intended, vitiating the agreement under Revisal 1905, § 1689.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Gaming, Cent. Dig. §§ 100-102; Dec. Dig. § 49.*]

Walker, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, New Hanover County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by Alex. Sprunt & Sons against C. C. May. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. New trial ordered.

Civil action to recover damages for an alleged breach of a written contract for delivery of cotton. The evidence, on part of plaintiffs, tended to show: That on September 9, 1909, defendant entered into a written contract with plaintiffs, agreeing to deliver 100 bales of cotton at Trenton, N. C., between September 15, 1909, and November, at the price of 12 cents per pound, and plaintiffs agreed to accept same and pay the stipulated price. That defendant had failed to deliver said cotton or any part thereof, to plaintiffs' damage, $1,000. That the contract was negotiated, on part of plaintiffs, by one F. Brock, their agent, and signed by plaintiffs "per F. Brock, Agent," and by defendant. That plaintiffs were large dealers and exporters of cotton, supplying other dealers and mills in Europe, etc., and, through their agents, bought spot cotton, required for their business, in different sections of the country to the average amount of 400,000 bales annually. That plaintiffs intended in good faith to carry out the terms of the contract, and that no agent had authority from them to make purchases and contracts therefor with any other understanding. Defendant, having filed a verified answer, alleging that the contract in question was a gaming contract, prohibited by the statute, offered evidence tending to show that it was the understanding between defendant and plaintiffs' agent, when contract was entered into, that actual delivery of the cotton was not intended, and that, on failure to comply, the demand could be satisfied by paying the differences, etc. The court charged the jury. There was verdict in plaintiffs' favor for $1,000 damages. Judgment on the verdict, and defendant excepted and appealed.

G. D. Warren, J. K. Warren, Aycock & Winston, and P. M. Pearsall, for appellant. Rountree & Carr, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] We have held, in Rodgers, McCabe & Co. v. Bell, 72 S. E. 817, at the present term, in reference to our statute as to gaming contracts (Revisal 1905, c. 36), that the words now appearing at the end of section 1689, to wit, "this section shall not be construed so as to apply to any person, firm, corporation or his or their agent, engaged in the business of manufacturing or wholesale merchandizing, in the purchase or sale of the necessary commodities required in the ordinary course of their business," by correct construction, should appear and only affect section 1691 of said chapter, the section relating to the burden of proof, and that, by reason of this clause, so placed, a bona fide wholesale dealer in spot cotton, who purchased the same, in the ordinary course of his business, is not affected by said section, but is entitled to have his cause tried and determined under the rule, which generally obtains, that one who asserts that an "ordinary business contract, valid on its face, is unlawful, is required to prove it by the greater weight of the evidence." On the facts in evidence it appears that plaintiffs and their predecessors, under the style of "Alex. Sprunt & Sons," from 1868 have been engaged in the cotton business, and since 1880 they have exported cotton in large quantities, supplying mills and dealers abroad, and, in the ordinary course of their business, they buy annually on an average 400,000 bales of cotton. They are, therefore, if this evidence is accepted by the jury, well within the clause withdrawing their case from the provision of section 1691, and on another trial the same will be submitted under the ordinary rules of evidence obtaining in such cases.

[2] Objections were chiefly made to the validity of the trial for alleged error in a portion of his honor's charge, as follows: "So, therefore, if you find as a fact that Alexander Sprunt & Sons were engaged in the wholesale cotton business here, buying cotton and shipping it to Europe, and that they had not been engaged and were not engaged in gambling contracts or futures with the expectation of taking margins or the difference between the contract price and the price at the time of the delivery, and that they did not authorize Brock to make any such contracts, but simply authorized him to make a contract for the actual delivery of the cotton, then you will find the first issue, 'Yes.' As we understand it, the charge could only mean, and was intended by his honor to mean, that if plaintiffs were bona fide wholesale dealers in cotton and only authorized Brock to make a contract for actual delivery, plaintiffs could recover for breach of a contract, made by Brock, although in the negotiations and making of the contract there was an understanding between Brock and the other party that actual delivery was not intended and would not be required," a position that cannot be sustained. If plaintiffs were seeking to avoid this contract and its effect, they might, under certain conditions and circumstances, be heard to repudiate the representations and conduct of their agent, Brock, who acted for them, in this matter. But the plaintiff, here, adopts the contract and is seeking recovery on it, and, where this is true, he must be held bound by the acts and statements of his agent, in negotiating and closing the trade. The position indicated has been often upheld in decisions of our court and elsewhere. Beeson v. Smith, 149 N. C. 145, 62 S. E. 888; Corbett v. Clute, 137 N. C. 551, 50 S. E. 216; Black v. Bayless, 86 N. C. 527; Harris v. Delamar, 38 N. C. 219; McIntire v. Pryor, 173 U. S. 38, 19 Sup. Ct. 352, 43 L. Ed. 608; Manufacturing Co. v. Cotton & Long, 126 Ky. 750, 104 S. W. 753, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 427; Huguenin v. Baseley, 14 Ves. 273. In Corbett v. Clute, plaintiff sued to foreclose a mortgage. There was allegation, with evidence, on part of defendant, tending to show that the agent of plaintiff had wrongfully procured the note and mortgage by falsely representing that the son of the mortgagor, an old, feeble, inexperienced woman, had been guilty of a criminal offense, and that unless mortgage was executed her son would be prosecuted and sent to the penitentiary. It was claimed by plaintiffs—and this was very well established—that they had not authorized the conduct of their agent; but the position was not allowed to affect the question, the court saying: "It will not be contended that the plaintiff is not bound by the statements of his agent. He is here now, asserting his claims under the note and mortgage, obtained for him by this transaction, and, if he claims the benefits, he must accept the responsibility"—citing Black v. Bayless and Harris v. Delamar, supra. In Manufacturing Co. v. Cotton & Long, supra, it was held: "That when a principal accepts an order for goods, obtained by agent, he is bound by the agent's acts in obtaining it, although he violated the principal's instructions." The principle is very generally recognized, and further citation of authority is not required.

[3] Nor can it be contended, for a moment, that there was no testimony tending to show an understanding and agreement between defendant and plaintiff's agent, Brock, forbidden by the statute. Revisal, § 1689. Speaking to this question, the defendant testified as follows: "Mr. Brock asked me if I wanted to sell some cotton for 12 cents, and I told him there was already more cotton sold around there than could be delivered, even if cotton went down below the contract price. He says: 'We are already in the hole. We have already sold some for 10 and 11.' Q. Who had? A. He and I, too, and several others. He says, 'If you can sell this for 12 cents, you can take this and pay the difference in that 10-cent cotton.' Q. What was the agreement between you and him in reference to the actual delivery of the cotton? A. He told me it would not be expected, and we could settle on the difference. Q. Did you intend to deliver any cotton under that contract? A. No, sir. Q. Did you have any cotton to deliver? A. No, sir. Q. Did you own any cotton? A. No, sir. Q. Did Mr. Brock know that you were not farming? A. Yes, sir." And the agent Brock testified: "Q. You say you told Mr. May that the cotton was not expected to be delivered? A. Yes, sir; I told him I didn't think they would require the delivery of the cotton. I asked Mr. May did he want to sell some cotton for 12 cents. He said he had already sold some cotton, and as far as everything said in the conversation, I don't know about that; I can't remember that. We were talking over what they were intending to do about it, that they could take the difference in one and pay the difference in the other, and that was the way the contract was made. Q. What was it Mr. May said to you before you signed the contract in reference to having sold some contract cotton? A. He said he had already sold some contract cotton, and in the general discussion of the contract cotton, and if he would sell more, he would take the difference in one way and pay the difference in the other. That's exactly what was said about it. Q. What did you say to him at the time of the execution of this contract in reference to the delivery of the actual cotton? A. I told him I didn't think the actual delivery of the cotton was expected at all. If I was wrong in it, that was what I told him." Applying the principle as stated, if, when this contract was negotiated and made, there was an understanding between defendant and plaintiff's agent that actual delivery of the cotton should not be required, but that the difference between the contract and market price could be paid in money, such a contract is condemned by the statute, and no recovery can be had thereon.

For the error in the charge the defendant is entitled to a new trial, and it is so ordered.

New trial.

WALKER, J. (dissenting). I regret always to differ from my Brethren; but when an important and valuable right of the citizen, which, in my opinion, is recognized by the law, is abridged or impaired by a decision of this court, it is my clear duty to enter my dissent, and, when required, as is the case here, to give my reasons therefor. I cannot agree to the proposition, which seems to form the basis of the court's opinion, that the exception in the statute (Revised, §§ 1689, 1690) as to purchases or sales by manufacturers and wholesale merchants of the necessary commodities used in their business is restricted to the burden of proof or to the clause of the statute raising a prima facie case of illegality in the transaction upon the proof of certain facts, nor do I think that it was so decided in State v. McGinnis, 138 N. C. 724, 51 S. E. 50, or

State v. Clayton, 138 N. C. 732, 50 S. E. 868. An extract from the opinion of the Chief Justice in the former case will show the contrary: "That no other businesses or persons are mentioned as authorized to deal bona fide for the purchase of commodities on 'margin' is not an implied restriction upon others to do an act not forbidden by any statute. Section 7 does not confer any exclusive right or privilege upon manufacturers or wholesale merchants. It does not authorize them to engage in any business prohibited by the act of 1889. It does not authorize them to speculate in cotton or other commodities. It simply provides that the courts shall not construe the act of 1905 to have the effect of preventing them from buying and selling for future delivery the necessary commodities required in their ordinary business." It is true that the court, in that case, when considering the burden of proof, did say: "There may be good reasons why the purchase of 'necessary commodities required in the ordinary course of their business' for future delivery 'on a margin,' by manufacturers and wholesale merchants, shall not raise a presumption that such dealings are 'wagering' contracts, while purchases by them, not of such commodities, or when not 'required in the ordinary course of their business,' or the purchase by others of any commodities, when made on the deposit of a 'margin' and for 'future' delivery, shall raise the presumption of a 'wagering' contract. Whether the reason is good and sound for making the purchase of commodities upon 'margin' prima facie evidence of a 'wagering' contract, under a certain state of facts, and providing that upon a different state of facts such purchase upon 'margin' does not constitute prima facie evidence of a 'wagering' contract, is a matter for the Legislature."

But this but emphasizes the correctness of my position that no such decision was made in that case, when we connect the two quotations and consider them together. It was evidently in the minds of the Chief Justice and the other members of the court, at the time, that such manufacturers and dealers could buy cotton and other commodities "on margin," if done bona fide, and not for the mere purpose of speculation, but for the legitimate purpose of preventing losses in their business by sudden and violent fluctuations of prices in the market. It is said in the McGinnis Case, as we have seen, that they may purchase commodities used and required in the ordinary course of their business, "for future delivery on a margin." It is thus conceded that the mere fact that such a dealer buys "on a margin" does not make the transaction unlawful under the statute, but is clearly authorized. The statute covers the whole subject and provides a general scheme of legislation to prevent the vicious practice of dealing, for the purpose of speculation, in "futures," which have a well-known and definite meaning, being regarded by the law as a cover for gambling, and therefore denounced by it as illegal. Such purchases and sales by manufacturers and wholesale dealers or merchants being lawful, the Legislature, by section 1689, which declared "future contracts" unlawful, excepted such manufacturers and dealers, as we have described, from the operation of that section, which means, of course, that as to them the purchase of commodities used in their business "on margins" should be lawful, or, expressing it negatively, should not be unlawful. That exception is in section 1689, and not in the two sections 1690 and 1691, which relate to the prima facie case and the burden of proof. I understood, at the time they were decided, that McGinnis' Case and Clayton's Case were in accord with this view, and I believe that they were intended to be; but, if they are not or were not so intended to be, I cannot longer give my assent to them. The defendants in those two cases were indicted for conducting and maintaining bucket shops, which was plainly unlawful. They were not manufacturers or merchants, in the sense of those terms as used in the statute, and the question now presented was not necessarily involved in those decisions, although the court, I think, recognized the law to be as I now contend it is. Alex. Sprunt & Sons are engaged in a perfectly legitimate business, that of buying spot cotton for export, and are not dealing in what are known as "futures" for the purpose of speculation. They are wholesale dealers in the cotton itself, and buy it for resale or to fill orders, and, in no view, are they gambling in the article. When they buy "on a margin," it is merely for the purpose of protecting themselves against losses which may arise from the rise or fall in prices in the cotton market, and only to that extent, and this is precisely what they are authorized to do by the last provision in Revisal, § 1689.

But it is said that the exception to be found at the end of that section (1689) should be bodily taken therefrom and transferred to sections 1690 and 1691, which relate to the burden of proof, and the prima facie case made against the plaintiff by the plea of the defendant that the contract sued on is illegal, it being a gambling contract, for the purchase or sale of cotton "on margins," to be settled merely by paying the difference in the price of the commodity at a given time, which is determined by the rise or fall of the price in the market, and therefore purely speculative. We are permitted to construe statutes in pari materia together and to transfer terms, if necessary, to ascertain the legislative intention; but we are not authorized to take an important exception from one section of the Revisal, withdrawing thereby its qualification of the broad and general provisions of the enactment, and transfer it to another section relating to a different branch of the law. It will be seen at once that this is not ascertaining, but changing, the legislative meaning; besides, the Acts of 1905, c. 538, § 1, not only refers to transactions therein forbidden, such as bucket shops, but is expressly made applicable to the Acts of 1889, c. 221, and to every section thereof, and by section 7 of the act of 1905 it is explicitly provided that it shall not apply to commodities bought and sold by wholesale dealers in their business. It was unnecessary to enact such a provision unless reference was had to purchases and sales "on margins," for those otherwise made, or in a legitimate manner, were clearly not within the prohibitory terms of the statute. The codifiers inserted the exception at the proper place; not only because the act of 1905 made it applicable to that section by plain and direct words, but also because, if a purchase or sale on margins by such a dealer was not unlawful under that section, the sections as to the burden of proof and the prima facie case could have no bearing upon the transaction; it being a lawful one. They relate only to gambling contracts. But there is another fact to be taken into account. The Legislature, when it enacted the Revisal of 1905, placed the exception at the end of section 1689 at the very session of that body when the proviso or exception was first adopted, and the Revisal was passed in this form, with a provision repealing all public and general statutes not contained in the Revisal, with certain limitations not pertinent to this question. The Revisal took effect August 1, 1905, and became the law of the state from that date, in form and substance as adopted. Revisal, §§ 5453, 5463. The last-cited section is in these words: "All the provisions, chapters, subchapters and sections contained in this Revisal shall be in force from and after August 1, 1905."

It is suggested that, as section 1689 of the Revisal does not apply to the plaintiff, who is a wholesale dealer in cotton, by reason of the exception at the end of that section, the common law is in force as to him, and the burden, instead of being upon the plaintiff to show, apart from the writing, that the contract is a lawful one, where illegality of the contract is pleaded as a defense, is upon the defendant to show, as he was required to do at common law, that it was illegal. But the glaring fallacy of this position is seen in the well-recognized and established rule, by which we construe all statutes. It is conceded by all writers upon the subject, and by all the judges who have considered it, to be a rule of universal application, and it is thus stated by them: "(1) The common law, of course, gives way to the statute, which is inconsistent with it. (2) When a statute is designed to be a revision, consolidation, or codification of the whole body of the law, applicable to a given subject, it supersedes and supplants the common law, so far as it applies to the subject, and leaves no part of it in force." Black's Inter. of Law, p. 236; Hannon v. Madden, 10 Bush (Ky.) 664; Kramer v. Rebman, 9 Iowa, 114; Com. v. Cooley, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 37; State v. Wilson, 43 N. H. 415, 82 Am. Dec. 163. The courts, whose reports I have cited, are of very high repute, and could not well go astray upon such a simple proposition. The theory and practical operation of this rule are so well explained and clearly illustrated by the Supreme Court of Alabama, in the case of Barker v. Bell, 46 Ala. 216, that no room is left for doubt that our statute (Revisal, § 1689) takes the place of the common law and is the one and only rule upon the subject with which it deals. That court, which is held in high esteem by all courts for its juridical learning and ability, said in the case just cited: The Revisal "is intended to contain all the statute laws of the state of a public nature, designed to operate upon all the people of the state, up to the date of its adoption, unless otherwise directed in the Code. This law is not merely cumulative of the common law, and made to perfect the deficiencies of that system, but it is designed to create a new and independent system, applicable to our own institutions and government. In such case, where a statute disposes of the whole subject of legislation, it is the only law. Otherwise, we shall have two systems, where one only was intended to operate, and the statute becomes the law only so far as a party may choose to follow it. Besides, the mere fact that a statute is made shows that, so far as it goes, the Legislature intended to displace the old rule by a new one. On some questions, the common law conflicts more or less with our constitutional law, and is necessarily displaced and repealed by it; and in others it has, by the lapse of ages, and by mistakes inevitably attendant on all human affairs, become uncertain and difficult to reconcile with the principles of justice. Hence the Legislature intervenes to remove such difficulties, uncertainties, and mistakes, by a new law. This new law, to the extent that it goes, necessarily takes the place of all others. It would be illogical to contend that the old rule must stand, as well as the new one, because this would not remedy the evil sought to be removed and avoided." Even if the statute introduces a new rule, it repeals immemorial custom and the common law, provided the enactment introduces a new principle or rule sufficient in itself. Black, p. 236; Delaplane v. Crenshaw, 15 Grat. (Va.) 457. So we see it is not necessary that a statute should be in direct conflict with the common law, in order to repeal it; but it is quite sufficient if the statute introduces into the law a new principle and a new rule sufficient of itself to create or answer for a full provision upon the subject. Revisal, § 1689, is of this character, and it takes the place of the common law as much so as if there had been an express clause of repeal of that law in it. The exception, therefore, applies to the law as declared in that section, and there is no common law upon the subject left to operate, it having been repealed, and the statute furnishes the only rule.

After careful deliberation, my conclusion is that the charge of the court was correct, regardless of what occurred between the defendant, C. C. May, and the plaintiff's agent, F. Brock. His honor appears to have entertained the same views as those herein expressed, and for that reason instructed the jury as he did.

I concur with the majority of the court in the construction placed upon section 1689 of the Revisal, so far as it relates to the real agreement of the parties. If it is agreed or understood by both parties that there need not be an actual delivery of the cotton, but that the contract may be settled by either one of them, by paying the difference in the price, and the transaction is not within the exception, it is void by the terms of the statute; but the undisclosed or unexpressed intention of one of the parties is not sufficient to invalidate it, as a contract is the agreement of both parties, and not merely the intention of one. "A contract, express or implied, executed or executory, results from the concurrence of minds of two or more persons, and its legal consequences are not dependent upon the impressions or understandings of one alone of the parties to it. It is not what either thinks, but what both agree." Prince v. McRae, 84 N. C. 675. See, also, Brunhild v. Freeman, 77 N. C. 128; Pendleton v. Jones, 82 N. C. 249; Bailey v. Rutjes, 86 N. C. 517. Besides, Revisal, § 1689, declares that the contract shall be void, notwithstanding the terms stated therein, if it was not intended, by the parties thereto, that the articles or thing so in form agreed to be sold and delivered should be actually delivered or the value thereof paid, but that it should be settled by paying the differences in the market price, according as the same may be greater or less at the time and place fixed for the performance of the contract. It will be seen that it is the unlawful intention in the understanding of both parties, and not merely the secret purpose of one of them, that renders the contract invalid.

STANDARD MIRROR CO. v. PHILADELPHIA CASUALTY CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 1, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 797*)—DISMISSAL OF APPEAL—FAILURE TO DOCKET—TIME OF MOTION.

Supreme Court rule 17 (140 N. C. 659, 66 S. E. vii) provides that if appellant fails to file his transcript seven days before the court begins the call of causes from the district from which it comes, at the term of the Supreme Court at which the transcript is required to be filed, appellee may file the certificate of the clerk of the trial court, showing the time the judgment and appeal were taken, etc., with his motion to docket and dismiss at appellant's cost, which motion shall be allowed at the first session of the court thereafter, with leave to appellant during the term to apply for redocketing. Held, that a motion to dismiss an appeal in a case tried at the February, 1911, term of the Guilford superior court, for failure to docket at the August term, as it was required to do, was made in apt time, when made at the August term to which the appeal was returnable; the change in the time prescribed by the court rules for docketing transcripts not changing the requirements of rule 17.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 797.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 807*)—DISMISSAL—MOTION FOR REDOCKETING.

Appellant is required by the rule to move for the reinstatement of his appeal at the term of the Supreme Court to which his appeal is returnable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. § 807.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 797*)—DISMISSAL—FAILURE TO DOCKET APPEAL.

Appellee's right to move, under rule 17 (140 N. C. 659, 66 S. E. vii), to dismiss the appeal for failure to docket in time will be defeated by appellant docketing the appeal before the motion is made.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3153; Dec. Dig. § 797.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 627*)—DISMISSAL—FAILURE TO DOCKET.

An appeal, docketed after the end of the return term of the Supreme Court, will be dismissed on motion.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2744-2746; Dec. Dig. § 627.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 564*)—RECORD—FILING—STIPULATIONS—WRITING—NECESSITY.

Under Supreme Court rule 39 (66 S. E. x), providing that that court will not recognize any agreement by counsel, unless the same appear in the record or a writing filed in the cause of the Supreme Court, an oral agreement of counsel for the extension of time for preparing and serving the case on appeal will not be considered by the court.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 632*)—RECORD—CASE—RETURN.

The officers of the court should make true returns as to the time and manner of service of the case on appeal, etc., and the reason for misdating a return, or of any apparent inaccuracy, should be fully stated in the return, so that, although the return of service of a case on appeal, as served April 4th, the actual service being on September 14th, was signed by the officer in presence of the counsel for both parties and with their assent, the return should have shown the actual facts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Daniels, Judge.

Action by the Standard Mirror Company against the Philadelphia Casualty Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, both parties appeal, and each moves to dismiss the other's appeal. Defendant's motion denied, and its own appeal dismissed.

Stern & Stern and Walser & Walser, for appellant. Wescott Roberson and King & Kimball, for appellee.

Plaintiff's Appeal.

WALKER, J. The above-entitled action was tried at February Term, 1911, of Guilford superior court, and both parties appealed from the judgment therein. The plaintiff failed to docket its appeal at this term of court, as it was required to do, and the defendant moved to dismiss the appeal, under rule 17. The motion of the defendant would be granted, but for the fact that plaintiff had abandoned the appeal below.

[1, 2] Rule 17 (140 N. C. 659, 66 S. E. vii) provides that such a motion shall be made during the term of this court to which the appeal is returnable, and not after said term, so that the defendant moved in apt time. Even the appellant is required by the rule to move for a reinstatement of his appeal at that term. Not only is that the requirement of the rule, but it has been so construed to be its meaning in several of our decisions. Benedict v. Jones, 131 N. C. 473, 42 S. E. 909; Graham v. Edwards, 114 N. C. 228, 19 S. E. 150. The practice in such cases as arise under this rule of the court is fully stated by the present Chief Justice, in Porter v. Railroad, 106 N. C. 478, 11 S. E. 515, which was followed by Hinton v. Pritchard, 108 N. C. 412, 12 S. E. 338, Paine v. Cureton, 114 N. C. 606, 19 S. E. 631, Causey v. Snow, 116 N. C. 493, 21 S. E. 179, and numerous other cases cited in the note to Porter v. Railroad, at margin page 480 of the annotated edition of 106 N. C. The change in the time prescribed by the rules for docketing transcripts in this court has not had the effect of altering the requirement in regard to motions of appellees to dismiss under rule 17, as was decided in Benedict v. Jones, supra.

[3] If the appellant should docket the case before a motion is made by the appellee to dismiss, it will defeat such a motion; but the latter may move in the matter, during the return term of the appeal, at any time after the case should be docketed here.

[4] If the appellant should docket his appeal at any time after the end of said term of this court, it will also be dismissed on motion. Benedict v. Jones, supra; Causey v. Snow, supra; Burrell v. Hughes, 120 N. C. 277, 26 S. E. 782; State v. James, 108 N. C. 792, 18 S. E. 112. It follows that, while the appellee in the plaintiff's appeal has come into this court in time to avail itself of the right given by rule 17 to dismiss, the motion is nevertheless denied; the plaintiff having abandoned its appeal, as appears from the papers on file here, and no motion to dismiss being really necessary.

Motion denied.

Defendant's Appeal.

[5] This is a motion to dismiss the appeal or to affirm the judgment below in favor of the plaintiff, because the defendant did not prepare and serve its case on appeal in time. It appears that, by consent of the appellee, the plaintiff, it was allowed 30 days after the adjournment of the court, on February 28, 1911, to serve the case on appeal, but it was not served within the extended period. An unfortunate dispute between counsel, as to an alleged further extension of time, by agreement between defendant's and one of appellee's (plaintiff's) counsel, has brought into this court a disagreeable controversy, which we have said more than once before we would not undertake to decide. It would impose upon us an exceedingly unpleasant and delicate duty to perform, if we should consent to hear and pass upon such disputes; and therefore this court not only decided that it would not consider such controverted questions between counsel, but we have actually adopted rule 39 (68 S. E. x), which is as follows: "The court will not recognize any agreement of counsel in any case, unless the same shall appear in the record, or a writing filed in the cause in this court." This should have sufficiently warned members of the bar that if they consent to waive the directions of the statute, or of the rules regarding the service of cases or the extension of time, the agreement must be evidenced by a writing; otherwise, if disputed, the party seeking to take benefit under it will not be heard by us. It is always better to reduce such agreements to writing, in order to prevent these unpleasant controversies, and this case but strikingly illustrates the wisdom and practical utility of the rule. The subject is fully reviewed by the present Chief Justice in Graham v. Edwards, 114 N. C. 229, 19 S. E. 150, and we reproduce here what was so aptly said by him in that case:

"The alleged agreement [for an extension of time to docket case in this court] was not in writing, and is denied by appellee's counsel. It cannot, therefore, be considered. Rule 39 of this court, and numerous cases cited in Clark's Code (2d Ed.) 704. This court is for the correction of errors of law committed in the trial of causes below. We cannot be called upon to settle disputed matters of fact arising upon oral agreements of counsel. Hemphill v. Morrison, 112 N. C. 756 [17 S. E. 535]. The duty of passing upon the correctness of memory of counsel as to such agreements when there is a difference is a delicate one. It is not contemplated by the statute that we should be called upon to discharge such function, and we have no right or disposition to assume it. We again repeat, as was lately said in Sondley v. Asheville, 112 N. C. 694 [17 S. E. 535]: 'It is to be hoped that hereafter counsel will in every instance put their agreements in writing, or have them entered of record, when for any reason they may think best to depart from the plain provisions of the statute. If they do not care to do this, the courts will not pass upon the controversies, as to the terms or existence of such agreements.' Our brethren of the bar owe it to themselves and to the court to avoid bringing such controversies hereafter before the courts. Their experience as lawyers must impress upon them the treachery of memory among the very best of men. If not disposed to guard against differences of recollection by the easy mode of reducing agreements to writing, or having them entered on the minutes, the courts have no process to gauge the accuracy of their respective recollections."

In this case, there is not the least ground for the disparagement of counsel, as nothing has been done which is not entirely consistent with the strictest integrity and a proper professional courtesy. Counsel simply have disagreed in their understanding of the facts, and that is all, and to avoid such unpleasant occurrences the rule was adopted, and must be observed, as stated by the Chief Justice in the case just cited. We are unable to say that either of the counsel is infallible; and therefore that the statement of the one should give way to that of the other. They are equally honorable and truthful, and there is nothing to show that the memory of either one of them is more retentive than that of the other. We are all liable to err, and should deal with each other charitably on that account, as it is a frailty of human nature, and forgetfulness, therefore, is consistent with perfect honesty. The plaintiff's counsel was under the express and positive instructions of his client not to make any agreement for an extension of time in serving the case on appeal, at least after the allotted time had expired, and therefore did not have the authority to do so. It appears to us that he was very careful not to waive any of his client's rights, or to disobey his instructions in what he did. We fully and readily acquit him of even the slightest wrongdoing, and find as a fact, and hold as matter of law, that he was at all times in the clear exercise of his legal rights as an attorney, and strictly observed the directions of his client, under which he was acting. He was without doubt misunderstood by the defendant's counsel, and in his eagerness to be liberal and not disregard his client's instructions he may have conceded too much when the sheriff signed the return of service; but he did not surrender any of his client's rights, and could not do so under the circumstances. This is an honest difference of recollection between counsel, but we cannot settle it otherwise than by enforcing the rule of this court.

[6] It appears by the return of the officer that the defendant's case on appeal was served April 4, 1911, but he testifies by affidavit that this return is not true in fact, and that the case was actually served September 14, 1911, long after the lapse of the extended time. In his justification, it may be said that he merely signed the return in the presence of the counsel of plaintiff and defendant, at their request, or with their assent; the plaintiff's counsel expressly reserving all of his client's rights, and especially the right to object to the service, as being too late. But officers should make true returns as to time and manner of service, and if they do not the reason for misdating a return, or for any other inaccuracy, should be explained in the return; that is, the real facts should be fully stated. In this case, no copy of the case on appeal was served upon the plaintiff's counsel, as admitted by the officer. He should have stated this fact in the return, and also the other undisclosed matters which are inconsistent with the return. But, after all that can be said, the fact remains that there was no service of a case on the plaintiff within the time prescribed by law, or within the extended time, and the motion of the plaintiff is granted.

The appeal of defendant is dismissed, and judgment will be entered in the court below for the plaintiff, if it has not already been done.

Appeal dismissed.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 269*)—ISSUES AND PROOF—CAUSE OF INJURY.

Where defendant, in an action by its employé for the loss of an eye, alleged in its answer that the chip of brass which entered the plaintiff's eye came from the hammer he was using, and not from a boring machine as plaintiff charged, evidence that, on account of the condition of the hammer, plaintiff was not striking with it at the time he was injured, is within the issues.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 274*)—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In an action against an employer for personal injuries, where there was evidence that a nearby boring mill was in operation and throwing off chips when plaintiff began to work, and that a chip of brass from the mill entered his eye almost instantly, evidence that the plaintiff could have completed the job upon which he was at work within 1½ minutes was relevant as bearing on the plaintiff's contributory negligence.

In an action for personal injuries, alleged to have resulted from an unsafe place to work, plaintiff has the burden of proving that the place where he was at work was unsafe, and that the defendant knew it to be so, or he could have discovered it by the exercise of ordinary care.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rowan County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by J. E. Pritchett against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. No error.

This action is to recover damages for the loss of an eye and other injuries caused, as the plaintiff alleges, by the negligence of the defendant in failing to furnish him a safe place to work, and in not providing a shield to protect him from brass chips falling from a boring mill. The defendant denies negligence and alleges that the injury to the plaintiff was an accident, or that it was caused by his contributory negligence, or was the result of one of those risks assumed as a part of his employment. All of the evidence is not set out, but enough to consider the motion of the defendant for judgment of nonsuit.

J. E. Pritchett, the plaintiff, testified: "I am the plaintiff. I am 31 years old. Am a machinist." Here the defendant admitted that the plaintiff was in its employment as a machinist in its machine shops at Spencer, N. C., at the time he was injured. "I have served my apprenticeship and have been working at my trade as machinist for 15 or 16 years. I was employed by the Southern Railway Company in its machine shop at Spencer, beginning work on the 20th day of June, 1910. I reported for work, and my first work was on the rod job on the eastern side of the shops. After I had been at work on the rod job three-fourths of an hour that afternoon, Mr. Daniels, defendant's shop foreman, came and told me that they were behind on the driving-box job, and that he wanted me to assist in the driving-box job in the place of the regular man, who was sick. Shop Foreman Daniels took me over there to the driving-box space, and introduced me to Foreman Hege, who was in charge of the driving-box shop that afternoon. Foreman Hege then laid off some oil grooves with chalk on some driving boxes in this driving-box space, for me to chip. I then went to work on those oil grooves, when I was instantly struck blind by something striking me in the eye. I had no warning of where it came from. Mr. Carver then took me in his arms. I could not see him, but I recognized him by his voice. Quite a number of men gathered round me, as I could tell by their voices. I do not know who pulled the brass out of my eye, but I am told that Foreman Daniels did it. This driving-box job space is 10x15 feet, and is located northwest of the rod-job space where I had been working. That driving box they put me to work on weighed from 500 to 700 pounds. Those driving boxes had been placed in that driving-box space before I got to that space. I did not help place them. I had chipped grooves on two or three of those driving boxes before I was hurt. The driving box on which I was ordered to work was about 10 or 12 feet from a boring mill. At the time of my injury I was about 10 or 12 feet in a northerly direction from that boring mill. I was facing towards the boring mill, with my right eye exposed to said boring mill. I had never worked in this driving-box space before. The boring mill was not in operation, but was idle, when I was carried there. The last time I noticed that boring mill was possibly a minute or a couple of minutes before I was hurt, and it was then idle. It was not running. When struck I was in a stooping position; the driving box in front of me. I had my air hammer in my right hand and my left hand over the barrel of it. At the moment I was struck, as well as my recollection serves me, I was trying to get control of this air throttle on the hammer. It was very stiff and would not work. When I first took hold of this hammer, I called Mr. Hege's attention to it, stating to him about the spring being very stiff. He said, 'That spring is too rigid and stiff, and the way we control it is we have to put our finger on it and push it and work with the right hand.' My best recollection is that at the time I was struck I had cramped my finger trying to get control of the hammer." The defendant objected to the witness testifying as to the defective condition of the air hammer, on the ground that there was no allegation in the complaint of any defect in the air hammer. The objection was overruled, and the defendant excepted. "When I was first struck by the chip, it was like a man being shot. It dazed me; but I threw my hands up immediately to my eye to hold it apart, as it burned like fire. The brass chip went in the center of my eye, or very close to the center of it. I was facing the direction of the boring mill with my right eye exposed. It became necessary for a man to be standing like I was. Certainly a man could twist, wrestle, and pull one of those driving boxes around, and his back would be towards the boring mill, if he desired to do so. I could not have got help to move that driving box, as help was scarce."

C. S. Carver testified as follows: "I am a machinist. Have been a machinist 12 years. I was working for defendant at Spencer the day Pritchett was hurt. I had been keying up some brass. I was 35 or 40 feet from Pritchett. This boring mill was on a line with him and me, and I could see both Pritchett and the boring mill at the same time. I was watching Pritchett at the time he was hurt and was the first man to get to him. I was watching him at the moment he was hurt. At that moment he was sitting down looking at his hammer. There was no chisel in it. I looked at him to see what he was doing. He was looking at his hammer. He had his throttle in his right hand and end of barrel in his left hand. No chisel was in his hammer at the time he threw his hand to right eye. Pritchett was facing the boring mill in a northeast direction with his right eye more exposed to the boring mill. Up to one minute before he was injured, the boring mill was not in operation. I saw defendant's apprentice boy, Kizziah, walk up to the boring mill and start it. I do not think the boring mill made more than two or three revolutions before Pritchett was hurt. That boring mill makes about 50 or 60 revolutions per minute. Pritchett was injured possibly 30 seconds after Kizziah started the boring mill. A piece of brass entered his eye near the center, and was taken out by Daniels about two minutes thereafter. I got to him in several seconds after he was hurt, as soon as I could run to him. He was holding his right eye open with his hands, and said he was blind. The boring mill was still in operation when I got to where Pritchett was hurt and the cuttings still flying. They will fly 120 degrees in a circular bed. Most of them go to the northwest. At the time I went to catch Pritchett those cuttings were flying so that they could hit me. There was no shield between this driving-box space and that boring mill. Pritchett was facing towards the boring mill when hurt. When the brass cutting hit him, he dropped his hammer and staggered back. When I got to Pritchett, the boy had not shut off the boring mill, and the cuttings were still flying to him. That shield protects the driving-box space to some extent, but not enough to where he was standing. It does not protect where he was standing, but the other side. I worked in the machine shops at Rocky Mount, N. C., Waycross, Ga., two machine shops on the C. and O., Richmond, Va., and Huntington, W. Va., and American Locomotive Works, where boring mills are used like defendant's at Spencer. And I have been through and observed 10 or 15 more shops where boring mills are used. Some shops have sheet-iron shields, some have bags; but in those shops canvas shields are mostly in general use as a precaution to protect the employees from brass cuttings that fly from such boring mills. It was the custom for those shields to be placed between the operator, wherever the operator might be at work, and the boring mill. Some have two shields; some are V-shape to come around the mill. Those safety shields that were in general use around machine shops of such kind were six or eight feet square, on racks, with canvas backs tacked around them. Such a shield costs $2. If one of these shields had been placed between that boring mill and the driving-box space, it would have provided protection and safety to employes working within the zone of the cuttings that flew from that boring mill. Such a shield would not have interfered with the efficiency of any of defendant's machinery or hindered any of its employes. Defendant worked men in that driving-box space every day, and kept a man operating the boring mill pretty much all the time. Plaintiff's eye just after it was struck looked like it had been burned. That cutting was hot when it went in and his eye turned white. The kind of cuttings from the boring mill depend upon how the tools are ground, how much feed you have, how much cutting you have, and upon how deep the cuttings are you are taking. Cuttings from boring mills are hot. Cuttings from air hammers are cold on account of lack of friction. There was no shield between the driving-box space and that boring mill when Pritchett was hurt. In these machine shops it is customary to shield these boring mills with canvas shields. That is the proper kind of shield and answers the purpose. Yes, if defendant had had that kind of shield there the day Pritchett was hurt, and had had it large enough to come around the boring mill, it would have been the proper kind. Apparently plaintiff was looking down at the moment he was hurt. I could not see his eyeball."

J. B. Donovan testified as follows: "Am a machinist at Spencer. I was working for Southern Railway Company in June, 1910, about 25 or 30 feet from where plaintiff was when he was injured. I did not see him at the time he was injured. Have operated this boring mill something like 3½ years. Cannot tell whether the boring mill is in the same condition now as it was then. I saw that boring mill during June, 1910. There has been no change in that mill that I know of since I worked it. It is the same mill. When I worked it, it would throw brass, I would say, a little over a quarter of a circle of the machine. That is, you would get 10 feet from the machine and they would go 10 feet. At the time I operated it, it would throw shavings in the same portion of the driving-box space where plaintiff was working. It is the general custom for the men to move round the boring mill in chipping it."

W. P. Neister testified as follows: "I have been working as a machinist for defendant at Spencer 9 or 10 years. To my personal knowledge, that boring mill is located now where it has been for 3 or 4 years; so has also the driving-box space been located in the same place for the past 4 years. I do not remember any alterations prior to time Pritchett was hurt. I worked 30 or 40 feet from that boring mill. I have observed it.

Every few minutes I was looking in that direction and often passed there. It was the same boring mill 3 or 4 years ago, as far as I know, without any change. During that time I have seen it throwing off brass cuttings, before Pritchett was hurt. It would throw the biggest majority of the brass shavings in a northwesterly direction, but they did not all go in that direction. The rest would go north and possibly to the northeast, slightly. I did not see the driving box Pritchett was working on when hurt, to recognize it. But I have been pointed out the place, and I know where the driving box was when he was hurt, and I have heard witnesses to-day describe where he was. And, from where the witnesses say Pritchett was at the time he was injured, he was in the zone of those flying shavings at the time he was hurt, according to my knowledge and honest belief. There was no shield between this driving-box space and the boring mill the day Pritchett was hurt. It was customary for defendant to work employes throughout the day in this driving-box job space. I operated the boring mill in March or April, 1910. At that time, using the same right-hand head, it scattered cuttings quite a good bit in the space where Pritchett occupied, in the lower end of the driving-box space."

I. N. Ayers testified as follows: "I have been a machinist for 13 years. Was working for defendant in June, 1910, when plaintiff was hurt. I was 25 or 30 feet from where plaintiff was working. I have seen that boring mill throw brass before Pritchett was hurt. I had been working there 12 months before Pritchett was hurt. The boring mill would throw brass about a quarter circle of the boring mill. I think the boring mill would throw brass clippings where Pritchett was. During those 12 months Foreman Daniels would pass that driving-box space about 50 times a day while that boring mill was in operation."

J. F. Perkinson testified as follows: "I am working for defendant, and I was working for it as a machinist at Spencer in June, 1910, and about 30 feet from where plaintiff was hurt. Did not see plaintiff when he was hurt. I had been working in those shops about 10 months prior to the time plaintiff was hurt. During that time I had seen that boring mill in operation every day. The tool has something to do with where the cuttings are thrown from that boring mill. You can place a tool so that it will throw them in almost any direction. If you are using the head spoken of this morning, the biggest portion of the cuttings would go in a northwesterly direction. This boring mill would usually throw part of its brass cuttings to where Pritchett was when he was hurt. I do not know that there was a screen out there. I did not see one that day. A screen in the northwest direction would catch part of those shavings, but not all. They will fly in every direction. The biggest portion of them will go in a north-west direction; but you cannot tell where the other shavings are going to fly. They scatter in every direction."

C. S. Flood testified as follows: "I am a machinist. I was working for defendant at Spencer last June, about 30 feet from where plaintiff was when he was hurt. Before Pritchett was hurt I worked in the driving-box space where plaintiff was hurt. When I worked in that driving-box space a couple of days before Pritchett was injured, they had a tool on the boring mill exactly like the one and shaped like the one they were using when Pritchett was hurt; and it then threw cuttings to the place where Pritchett was hurt. I have had experience in five or six machine shops of this kind where boring mills are generally used: American Locomotive Works, Pennsylvania Railway at Baltimore, S. A. L. at Waycross, Ga., A. C. L. at Rocky Mount, N. C., at Pittsburg, etc. And have had observations in others. The general custom of all machine shops is to have this canvas screen to protect the boring mills to keep the cuttings off of the men. I did not see such screen there the day Pritchett was hurt. The cuttings from the boring mill were hot because of the friction. The hammer would throw cold cuttings. Pritchett's eye was all inflamed and looked like a white blister hanging on his eye."

The defendant offered evidence tending to establish the following facts: (1) That the danger from chips was northwest from the boring mill and that it had a shield there. (2) That a shield was unnecessary between the boring mill and the driving-box space. (3) That the plaintiff could perform the work assigned to him with his back to the boring mill, and that he unnecessarily exposed himself to danger. (4) That, in the position of the plaintiff's head at the time he was stricken, a chip from the boring mill could not enter his eye, without striking some object, and rebounding, and therefore that plaintiff was accidentally injured. (5) That the chip which entered the plaintiff's eye came from the hammer he was using, and not from the boring mill.

The evidence as to damages is not stated, as there is no exception in regard thereto.

The defendant excepted to rulings of his honor on the evidence. (1) For that the court permitted the plaintiff to testify about the defective condition of the air hammer. (2) For that the court permitted the plaintiff to testify that he would have completed his job upon which he was at work within 1½ minutes. (3) For that the court permitted the plaintiff to testify that the Shop Foreman Daniels told him a man was disabled or sick or out, and they were behind on the job and that they were in a hurry. (4) For that the court permitted the witness

J. P. Donovan to testify that, when he operated the boring mill 3½ years prior to the accident, at that time it threw chippings in that driving-box space. (5) For that the court permitted the witness J. P. Donovan to testify that, when he worked in the driving-box space 4 or 5 feet east of the steel column, the boring mill threw cuttings on witness' hands and in his face. (6) For that the court permitted I. N. Ayers, plaintiff's witness, to testify that he was standing 25 or 30 feet beyond where plaintiff was working, and that the boring mill threw brass cuttings where he was standing. (7) For that the court permitted C. S. Flood to testify that, a couple of days prior to the injury of the plaintiff, he was working in the driving-box space northeast, more north than east, from the boring mill, and that it threw brass cuttings where he was.

There was a motion to nonsuit, which was overruled, and defendant excepted.

The jury returned the following verdict:

(1) Was the plaintiff injured by the negligence of the defendant, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

(2) Was the plaintiff's injury caused by his own contributory negligence, as alleged in the answer? Answer: No.

(3) What damages, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: $5,500.

Judgment was rendered thereon, and defendant excepted and appealed.

Linn & Linn, for appellant. Edwin C. Gregory, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). There is no error in the rulings on the evidence.

[1] The defendant alleges in its answer that the chip which entered the eye of the plaintiff came from the hammer he was using, and it was competent, for the purpose of meeting this contention, to show that, on account of the condition of the hammer, the plaintiff was not striking with it at the time he was injured.

[2] The evidence that the plaintiff would have completed his job upon which he was at work within 1½ minutes is of little importance, but is relevant to the inquiry. The plaintiff testified that the boring mill was not in operation when he began to work, and that the chip entered his eye almost instantly, and it was proper for the jury to have before them the length of time he would be engaged at work, in determining whether his conduct was negligent.

If the boring mill was not in operation, and he could complete his job in two minutes, the jury might say it was not imprudent to work with his face to the mill, and that he ought to have taken greater precautions for his safety if required to remain longer.

[3] What the foreman said as he directed him to do the work, and evidence that the boring mill had thrown chips in the driving-box space before the day of the injury to the plaintiff, were properly admitted.

[4, 5] The burden was on the plaintiff to prove that the place where he was at work was unsafe, and that the defendant knew it to be so, or that it could have discovered it by the exercise of ordinary care (Hudson v. Railroad, 104 N. C. 491, 10 S. E. 669; Neison v. Tob. Co., 144 N. C. 420, 57 S. E. 127; Blevens v. Cotton Mills, 150 N. C. 499, 64 S. E. 428), and evidence that a condition has existed for a long time is evidence of knowledge (Cotton v. Manf. Co., 142 N. C. 531, 55 S. E. 358; Cotton v. Railroad, 149 N. C. 227, 62 S. E. 1093).

[6] There are several assignments of error to the refusal to give certain special instructions, all of which, we think, were covered by the charge; but, if not, they could not be ground for a new trial on this record.

At the close of the evidence, at 5 o'clock p. m., the judge adjourned court until 9 o'clock next morning. Upon the opening of court next morning, plaintiff tendered in writing his prayers for instructions, duly signed by his counsel. Counsel for defendant tendered in writing prayers for instructions, but which were not signed.

[7] After the court had given to the jury the general charge, and while the court was reading to the jury the plaintiff's prayers for instruction, defendant's counsel signed the prayers which it had tendered unsigned as aforesaid, and handed them to the court. The court then read defendant's said prayers numbered 1, 2, 7, 9, and 11. The court did not give defendant's other prayers except as contained in the court's general charge to the jury.

The statute (Rev. § 538) is imperative that counsel must sign prayers for special instructions, and that, upon failure to do so, the judge may disregard them, and the judge need not put his refusal of the instructions on the ground that they were asked too late. As was said by the present Chief Justice in Posey v. Patton, 109 N. C. 457, 14 S. E. 64: "The law does that."

That the instructions were not presented in apt time when signed and finally handed up, after the argument closed and the charge concluded, is well settled.

In Craddock v. Barnes, 142 N. C. 93, 54 S. E. 1004, it was held that prayers for instructions in due form ought to be considered, if requested before the argument begins, and Justice Walker there says: "The time within which instructions should be requested must be left to the sound discretion of the court, as in the case of many other matters of mere practice or procedure, and we will be slow to review or interfere with the exercise of that discretion; but the presiding judge should, and we are sure he always will, so order his discretion as to afford counsel a reasonable time to prepare and present their prayers. Counsel should perform this duty to their clients seasonably and with a proper regard for the right of the trial judge to require that he should have reasonably sufficient time to write his charge and to consider the prayers for special instructions; and what time is required by each must be determined by the nature and exigencies of each case."

In Biggs v. Gurganus, 152 N. C. 176, 67 S. E. 501, the question is again considered, and Justice Brown cites with approval Craddock v. Barnes, supra, and says: "It is well settled that special instructions must be in writing and handed up before argument commences."

The question remaining is the refusal of the motion to nonsuit, and this involves the consideration of the duty which the defendant owed to the plaintiff, and whether the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, shows a breach of that duty, causing his injury.

[8] In all courts where the common law is administered, it is held that one cannot recover damages upon proof of negligence alone, and that he must proceed further and show that the negligence of which he complains was the real proximate cause of his injury. He cannot recover because a place where employes work is dangerous, unless he was injured by the unsafe place. He cannot say, "There was an unsafe place in the shop where I was working, and, while it is true I was not working at that place, I fell in another part of the shop and broke my leg," and therefore ask for damages.

The counsel in this case do not contend otherwise; but the difficulty arises in the application of the rule.

[9, 10] "We have repeatedly decided that an employer of labor is required to provide for his employes a reasonably safe place to work." House v. Railroad, 152 N. C. 398, 67 S. E. 981. And "It is accepted law in North Carolina that an employer of labor to assist in the operation of railways, mills, and other plants where the machinery is more or less complicated, and more especially when driven by mechanical power, is required to provide for his employes, in the exercise of proper care, a reasonably safe place, and to supply them with machinery, implements, and appliances reasonably safe and suitable for the work in which they are engaged, and such as are approved and in general use in plants and places of like kind." Hicks v. Mfg. Co., 138 N. C. 325, 50 S. E. 705. And "the duty of providing a reasonably safe place in which to work is one of the primary or absolute duties of the master; and, when the master delegates the discharge of such duty to a servant, he represents the master, and the latter will be held responsible for the manner in which the duty is discharged." Shives v. Cotton Mills, 151 N. C. 293, 66 S. E. 143.

The relative duties of the employer and employé, and the doctrine of contributory negligence and assumption of risk, as applied to the conduct of the employé, are well stated by Justice Hoke in Pressly v. Yarn Mills, 138 N. C. 416, 51 S. E. 72, in which he says: "It is suggested that, if a negligent failure to furnish a shifter is declared to be the proximate cause of the injury on the part of the employer, by that same token the employé, working on when aware of the defect, is also negligent, and such negligence should be held to be concurrent, and to hold otherwise would require the master to take more care of the servant than the servant takes care of himself. This position finds support in some of the decided cases; but the court does not think it is in accord with the better considered adjudications on the subject. The position had its origin in some of the older decisions rendered when the employment of labor was much more restricted and the implements and appliances were comparatively simple and attended with little danger. At that time it was considered of little consequence what the employé assumed, and as matter of fact he assumed the risk of almost everything that happened to him. As business enterprises, however, were enlarged, and extended, and machinery became more complicated, and larger numbers of men were being employed in its operation, it was found that the position here contended for was not a proper one by which to determine the relative rights and duties of employer and employé in regard to defective machinery and appliances. It was based upon an entirely erroneous conception, that there was a perfect equality of position between the two in respect to such defective appliances; but nothing is further from the fact, and for the reason, chiefly, that the employer controls the conditions in which the employés do their work. His duty to furnish machinery and appliances reasonably safe and suitable, such as are approved and in general use, in the exercise of a reasonable care, is absolute. As a rule, he buys the machinery from the manufacturer or dealers, who are experts, and can change when he desires; he selects and employs a superintendent and skilled labor, and has the time and opportunity to inform himself as to the character of the machinery he buys and the hazards incident to its use; and, accordingly, the principle which holds the employé to an equality of obligation and responsibility in the respect suggested is unsound and unjust and has been rejected in the more recent and better considered cases."

[11] Negligence is the failure to perform a duty imposed by law. It is the failure to exercise that care which a man of ordinary prudence would have exercised under existing circumstances, and, where conditions change, the degree of care required changes with them.

In former days, tools were simple, and the mechanic and his tools were inseparable. He used them daily, and by use became familiar with their qualities, and the dangers incident to his employment, and there was less reason for holding the employer to a high degree of care than now, when complicated machinery, selected by the employer, is used, and when the employé is practically separated from his tools.

There are also in large shops, where many machines are in operation, as in the one where the plaintiff was working, dangers that are not traceable to any particular machine, but are incident to the business. These cannot generally be made the basis of a cause of action; but the knowledge that they exist imposes upon the employer the duty of exercising greater care.

[12] Applying these principles, there was no error in denying the motion to nonsuit.

There was evidence that the plaintiff was employed on the day of his injury; that he had not, before this, seen the place where he was required to work; that, when he began to work, the boring mill was not in operation; that there was much noise in the shop from machines; that it was necessary for him to face the boring mill in the performance of his duty; that, as he began to work, the boring mill, which was boring brass, started, and a brass chip struck him in the eye; that he was not using the hammer at that time; that chips from the boring mill are hot, and those from the hammer cold; that his eye was blistered; that the chip taken from the eye was from the boring mill; that the boring mill was throwing chips in the space where he was working; that the boring mill had thrown chips into this place where employés were required to work several years; that shields around boring mills were in general use; that they were movable and should be placed between the mill and the employé; that there was no shield between the mill and the plaintiff; and that if one had been there he would not have been injured.

[13] There was much evidence to the contrary; but, on a motion to nonsuit, the law requires us to accept as true those facts which the evidence tends to prove, and we therefore hold that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, which was the direct cause of the plaintiff's injuries.

[14] There was a conflict of evidence as to contributory negligence, and it was submitted to the jury, under proper instructions.

In our opinion, there was no aspect of the case in which the issue of assumption of risk arose. The doctrine is very generally applied that the duty to provide a safe place to work is an absolute duty, which cannot be delegated, and that the breach of this duty is negligence.

[15] It also accepted law that the risks assumed by the employé are the ordinary risks of the employment, and that he does not assume the risk of the employer's negligence.

It would seem to follow that when the jury answers the first issue, "Yes," and thereby establishes the negligence of the employer, and that this negligence was the real proximate cause of the injury, there can be no assumption of risk which will prevent a recovery.

[16] It is, however, permissible to consider the knowledge of the employé, his familiarity with conditions, and other circumstances, on the issue of contributory negligence.

Upon an examination of the whole record, we find no error.

No error.

YOUNG et al. v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§§ 1050, 1058*)—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Any error in admitting or excluding evidence was not prejudicial to defendant, where the same witness had, before exception thereto, testified to the same effect.

2. CARRIERS (§ 133*)—FREIGHT—ACTION FOR INJURY—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for damages for injury to fruit trees en route, plaintiff testified that the orders for both shipments were obtained by salaried traveling men, and that one shipment was sold for a certain price and was not delivered, and that plaintiff told defendant's agent, on November 2d or 3d, that if he did not receive the shipment promptly and in good condition he would refuse it, and also testified that plaintiff's customers were to receive the shipments at destination on November 2d. Held, that the evidence was admissible on defendant's claim that plaintiff was negligent in not being ready to receive the trees at destination, especially in view of defendant having introduced an order for trees from one of plaintiff's customers requiring them to be delivered at such destination in October, November, or December with notice by mail of the date of delivery.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 583, 587, 606; Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 137*)—FREIGHT—ACTIONS FOR INJURIES—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action against a railroad company for injury to trees en route, the court instructed that, if plaintiff called for the trees at destination within a reasonable time and made a reasonable effort to receive them if they reached there within a reasonable time, he was not required to stay until they arrived, unless he had notice as to when they would arrive; but if he made reasonable effort to get them, and if they did not arrive within a reasonable time and were damaged for that reason, he would be entitled to recover damages, "but otherwise he would not be." Held, that by the quoted phrase the court gave the converse of the affirmative part of the instruction, and sufficiently charged as to plaintiff's duty to use reasonable efforts to receive the goods even if they did not arrive within a reasonable time.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Dec. Dig. § 137.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 233*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SPECIAL ISSUES—RELATION.

In an action for damages for injury to fruit trees en route, caused by delay in delivery, etc., the court instructed that, if the jury answered the special issue as to whether defendant failed to transport the property within a reasonable time in the affirmative, they should then proceed to the next special issue, "Was the property * * * injured by reason of the failure of the defendant to transport within a reasonable time," and, if they answered that, "Yes," they should ascertain what damage, if any, plaintiff had sustained; but, if they answered the first issue, "No," they should return a verdict for defendant, and the same rule applies as to the other issues. Held, that the instruction was not objectionable, being merely an explanation of the relation of the special issues to each other.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 233.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1067*)—HARMLESS ERROR—FAILURE TO INSTRUCT—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

In an action against a railroad company for injury to trees by delay in delivery, defendant's counsel objected, in the jury's presence, to evidence offered by plaintiff as to the damages, and stated that the rule as to damages was the difference between the market value of the goods when delivered to the company and their actual value as damaged by its negligence, and the court stated that it so understood the rule as to damages, when plaintiff's counsel stated that he would agree that that was the rule, and the court said that it should be so understood and the argument proceeded. Held that, since the parties agreed as to the measure of damages in the jury's presence, the court's failure to charge on the measure of damages was not reversible error, as the jury could not have been misled thereby.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4229; Dec. Dig. § 1067.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Allen, Judge.

Action by John A. Young and another against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action to recover damages for loss and injury to certain fruit trees and nursery stock, shipped over the line of the defendant and of connecting carriers. There were two shipments, one to Williamsburg, Va., and the other to Tappahannock, Va. On the 23d of October, 1907, the plaintiffs delivered to the defendant three boxes of trees and other nursery stock, consigned to Jno. A. Young's agent, to be shipped by freight to Williamsburg, Va., a station on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad about 50 miles east of Richmond. The plaintiff did not pay the freight charges for transportation, but guaranteed it. The trees arrived at Williamsburg on the 6th of November, 14 days after the date of the bill of lading. The plaintiff's agent, having called for the trees at the station of the Chesapeake & Ohio

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

Railroad in Williamsburg on the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th and 5th of November, refused the shipment on the ground that they had been too long en route and were damaged. Freight delivered at Greensboro to the Southern Railway Company for shipment to Williamsburg, Va., goes via Danville and Richmond over the Southern Railway Company. At Richmond it is transferred to the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad and goes over that road to Williamsburg. There is a car of freight from Greensboro to Richmond each day; but, if freight is delivered at the station at Greensboro too late to take that train, it remains until the next day before it is forwarded. Danville is an intermediate point between Greensboro and Richmond, and freight for Williamsburg would have to be transferred at Danville. It would also have to be transferred at Richmond from the Southern Railway Company to the Chesapeake & Ohio. The plaintiff had sold these trees for $908.08 and sued for that amount.

On the 25th of October, plaintiffs delivered to the defendant certain fruit trees and nursery stock consigned to Jno. A. Young's agent for shipment by freight over its own and connecting lines to Tappahannock, Va., a town on the Rappahannock river, not on a railroad line. The trees arrived at Tappahannock on the 12th day of November, 18 days after the date of the bill of lading. The plaintiff's agent called for them and accepted them, but found they were damaged so that about one-fourth were unfit for delivery. Plaintiff had sold the whole shipment for $287.17 and sued for $108.15 as the amount of his loss on account of the damaged trees. Freight from Greensboro for Tappahannock goes over the Southern Railway via Danville to Richmond. There it is transferred to the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad and is carried over that road to Fredericksburg, from there to Tappahannock. The freight is carried by boat, which runs twice a week.

In making each of said shipments, the plaintiffs, in order to secure prompt service and delivery of the said freight so delivered to the defendant for shipment, paid to the defendant a higher rate of freight than it was necessary to pay if the plaintiffs had been willing to contract for the delivery of the freight to the defendant railway company marked, "Released." By reason of the delay on the part of the defendants in the Tappahannock shipment, plaintiffs were put to an additional expense in delivering the goods of $108.52. The shipment to Williamsburg was never delivered to the plaintiff, although the agents waited for it at Williamsburg until the 5th of November, at which time the defendant's agents would not advise them when the trees would arrive, and they had no reason to expect that they would arrive on any certain subsequent date. The plaintiff, having other engagements to meet other shipments in that territory, left Williamsburg on the 5th of November. When the trees did arrive, they were of no value whatsoever to the plaintiff, who was forced to fill his orders at Williamsburg by an extra order sent by express. Freight shipped from Greensboro to Williamsburg was routed to Richmond, Va., 180 or 190 miles from Greensboro. A through car of freight from Greensboro to Richmond is made up each day, and freight loaded one day in Greensboro ought to reach Richmond the evening of the next day. The railroad company required the plaintiff to guarantee the payment of the freight on each of these shipments.

The following verdict was returned by the jury:

(1) Did the defendant fail to transport the property of the plaintiff from Greensboro to Williamsburg, Va., within a reasonable time? Answer: Yes.

(2) Was the property of the plaintiff injured by reason of said failure of the defendant to transport within a reasonable time? Answer: Yes.

(3) What damage, if any, has plaintiff sustained? Answer: $908.08 without interest.

(4) Did the defendant fail to transport the property of the plaintiff from Greensboro to Tappahannock, Va., within a reasonable time? Answer: Yes.

(5) Was the property of the plaintiff injured by reason of the failure of the defendant to transport said property within a reasonable time? Answer: Yes.

(6) What damages, if any, has plaintiff sustained? Answer: $108.02 without interest.

Wilson & Ferguson, for appellant. Justice & Broadhurst, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. [1] There are 14 assignments of error, 6 of which relate to the rulings on the evidence, and of these, with possibly one exception, the same witness had, before the exception was taken, testified to the fact admitted or excluded, and therefore, if error was committed, which we do not find to be so, the defendant was not prejudiced thereby.

[2] The assignment of error which may be an exception is to a part of the evidence of one of the plaintiffs, John A. Young. He testified, among other things, in reference to the Williamsburg shipment: That he had orders from customers for both shipments; that the orders were obtained by traveling men on salary with their expenses paid; that W. J. Thompson had interest in the money collected in both cases; that the goods shipped to Williamsburg had been sold for $908.08; that the interest would run from November 2, 1907; that none of the Williamsburg shipment was delivered; that he had a conversation with Mr. Devlin, the agent of the defendant, about the shipment to Williamsburg, and told him that it had not arrived and asked him to look it up, and that if he did not get it promptly in good condition that he would refuse the shipment, and he replied that he would have it looked up at once; that that was on the 2d or 3d day of November, 1907, and was then asked the following question: "Q. What date were your customers to be there to receive these goods? A. At Williamsburg on November 2d." We think this evidence was competent to meet one of the contentions of the defendant, that the plaintiffs were negligent in not being ready to receive the trees at Williamsburg, and particularly so as it introduced one of the orders for trees of a customer of the plaintiffs requiring the trees to be delivered at Williamsburg in October, November, or December, 1907, and notice to be given by mail of date of delivery.

"(1) If the plaintiff called for them, called for them within a reasonable time, and made a reasonable effort to receive them if they reached there within a reasonable time, then he was not required to stay there until they did come, unless he had some notice as to when they would arrive; but if he made a reasonable effort to get them, and they did not arrive within a reasonable time, and they were lost to him on that account, then he would be entitled to recover damages, but otherwise he would not be.

"(2) So if you answer the first issue and the fourth issue, that is, the issue as to the reasonable time, if you answer that, 'Yes,' you will go to the next issue, 'Was the property of the plaintiff injured by reason of said failure of the defendant to transport within a reasonable time?' And if you answer that, 'Yes,' you will go to the last issue and answer, 'What damages, if any, has the plaintiff sustained?' If you answer the first issue, 'No,' you need not go any further, but return your verdict, and the same rule applies to the fourth, fifth, and sixth issues, that is, as to the Tappahannock shipment."

The criticism of the first part of the charge set out, as shown in the brief of the appellant, is: "That his honor should have charged the jury that, even if the goods did not arrive within a reasonable time, it was the duty of the plaintiff to remain at Williamsburg a reasonable length of time, or to have made arrangements with some other person to receive and examine the goods when they did arrive, in order to mitigate, if possible, the damages. He should have further given to the jury the converse of the proposition, and stated that if the plaintiff did not call for the goods within a reasonable time, and did not make a reasonable effort to receive them if they had reached there within a reasonable time, he would not be entitled to recover damages."

We think the converse of the affirmative charge was given in the language, "but otherwise he would not be," which can only mean that, if the plaintiff did not call for the trees within a reasonable time and did not make a reasonable effort to receive them, the defendant would not be liable, and the charge also presents the view of the defendant that it was the duty of the plaintiff to use reasonable effort to receive the trees.

We can see no possible objection to the other portion of the charge. It is no more than an explanation to the jury of the relation of the issues to each other.

[5] The remaining assignments are to the failure to state to the jury any rule as to the measure of damages, and this would be fatal and would entitle the defendant to a new trial, if it did not appear from the record that there was no controversy between the parties as to the true rule, and that they agreed in the presence of the jury, and with the sanction of the court, as to what it was.

The record states that during the trial, in the presence of the jury, when the plaintiff was offering evidence as to damages, the counsel for the defendant objected to the evidence and stated the rule as to damages to be the difference in value between the price at which the goods were sold, or rather the market price of the goods when delivered to defendant, and the actual value at the time they were alleged by plaintiff to have been damaged by the negligence of the defendant. The court stated that it so understood the rule as to damages, and thereupon the counsel for the plaintiff said he would agree that that was the rule, and the court said, "Let that be understood," and the argument was conducted accordingly.

The jury could not have been misled when the agreement was made before them, and the court said, "Let that be understood as the rule of damages."

Upon an examination of the record, we find no error.

No error.

RED SPRINGS HOTEL CO. v. TOWN OF RED SPRINGS et al.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 918*)—BONDS —STATUTES—REFERENDUM.

Under Priv. Acts 1911, c. 170, authorizing a city to issue bonds for waterworks and sewerage system, and declaring in its preamble that such improvements were a necessary public expense, which had also been declared by the municipal authorities, bonds issued for that purpose were not invalid, because not authorized by a referendum vote.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 907*)—BONDS —STATUTES—INTEREST.

Priv. Acts 1911, c. 170, providing for the issuance of waterworks and sewerage bonds by a city to bear interest at a rate "not more than six per cent.," and giving the board of public works and board of commissioners power to fix the rate when the bonds are sold, not exceeding 6 per cent., was not objectionable for failure to definitely fix such rate.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1895; Dec. Dig. § 907.*]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 931*)—BONDS—INSUFFICIENCY OF TAX LEVY TO PAY.

That the special tax rate prescribed by Priv. Acts 1911, c. 170, for the payment of municipal bonds authorized thereby, would be insufficient to pay the annual interest on the bonds, and to provide a sinking fund therefor, did not invalidate the issue.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 931*)—BONDS—STATUTES.

That Priv. Acts 1911, c. 170, authorizing a city to issue bonds for sewerage and waterworks, left the division of the proceeds of the sale of the bonds between the two works to the discretion of the municipal authorities was not a valid objection to the validity of the bonds.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 907*)—BONDS—STATUTES—REPEAL.

Priv. Acts 1911, c. 170, authorizing a specified city to issue bonds to pay for sewerage and waterworks, was not affected by a subsequent general act (Pub. Laws 1911, c. 86), intended to give all cities and towns without further legislation power to issue bonds for purposes therein named, when approved by a majority of the qualified voters; the Legislature being authorized to require the referendum vote, or to dispense with it, in so far as the issuing bonds for necessary expenses is concerned, in its discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, Robeson County; Carter, Judge.

Action by the Red Springs Hotel Company against the Town of Red Springs and others, to enjoin a bond issue. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This is a controversy, without action, submitted to the court under the provisions of section 803 of the Revisal of 1905.

The board of commissioners of the town of Red Springs having declared by resolution that a system of waterworks and sewerage was an absolute and imperative public necessity for the town, an act was duly introduced in the Legislature of North Carolina, session of 1911, authorizing said town to issue bonds to the amount of $35,000, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent., and maturing not later than 30 years from date of issue, and authorizing the levy of a special tax of 35 cents on the $100 valuation of property, and $1.05 on each taxable poll, to pay interest and provide a sinking fund for the retirement of said bonds at maturity.

This act was passed by the General Assembly of North Carolina, and appears as chapter 170, Private Acts of North Carolina, session of 1911. A board of public works for the town of Red Springs was created by said act to handle the funds and to perform certain other duties therein specified.

The board of public works of said town first advertised the issue at 5½ per cent. interest, and bonds bearing interest at this rate were advertised and sold. The purchaser failed to comply with his bid, and thereupon bonds bearing interest at 6 per cent. have been advertised and contracted to be sold. It is admitted that, unless the defendants are restrained, they will proceed to sell the bonds and levy the special tax, as provided by said act of 1911.

The plaintiff is a corporation owning property in the town, and brought this action to restrain the issue of the bonds and the collection of the tax.

The cause was heard before his honor, Judge Frank Carter, at November term, 1911, of the superior court of Robeson county, and from a judgment in favor of the defendants the plaintiff excepted and appealed to this court.

McIntyre, Lawrence & Proctor, for appellant. McLean, Varner & McLean, for appellees.

BROWN, J. The plaintiff bases its claim for injunctive relief upon five propositions:

(1) That chapter 170 of the Private Acts of North Carolina, session of 1911, was not enacted by the General Assembly in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution of North Carolina; and hence the town of Red Springs has no legal authority to issue said bonds, or to collect any tax whatever on account thereof. This contention cannot be sustained. A transcript of the entries upon the journals of both houses of the General Assembly are set out in the record, and show that the ayes and noes were duly called and entered, and the bill enacted into law in strict accordance with the Constitution.

[1] (2) That the town of Red Springs has no power to issue said bonds or to collect any tax whatever on account thereof, for that said bonds were not authorized by a vote of the qualified voters. The purpose of the bonds is to secure for the municipality a system of waterworks and sewerage. This is declared by the Legislature in the preamble to the act to be a necessary expense, as well as by the municipal authorities. The question has also been repeatedly decided by this court adversely to plaintiff's contention. Fawcett v. Mt. Airy, 134 N. C. 125, 45 S. E. 1029, 63 L. R. A. 870, 101 Am. St. Rep. 825; Davis v. Fremont, 135 N. C. 538, 47 S. E. 671; Hightower v. Raleigh, 150 N. C. 569, 65 S. E. 279; Water Co. v. Trustees, 151 N. C. 175, 65 S. E. 927; Bradshaw v. High Point, 151 N. C. 517, 66 S. E. 601; Underwood v. Asheboro, 152 N. C. 641, 68 S. E. 147.

[2] (3) That chapter 170 of the Private Acts of North Carolina, session 1911, does not definitely fix the rate of interest to be borne by said bonds, but leaves the rate of interest to the discretion of the board of commissioners and board of public works of said town; and hence said act is null and void, and no authority is conferred upon the town of Red Springs to issue said bonds, or to levy any tax on account thereof. This contention cannot be sustained. The purpose of the Legislature in providing that the bonds should bear interest at a rate of "not more than six per cent. (6%)" was to give the town authorities discretion to sell the bonds to bear a rate of interest most advantageous to the town, not exceeding, in any event, 6 per cent. By section 5 of the act above referred to, discretion is given to the board of public works and board of commissioners of the town to fix the rate when the bonds are sold, not exceeding 6 per cent. The point is expressly decided in Lumberton v. Nuveen, 144 N. C. 303, 56 S. E. 940.

[3] (4) That the rate of tax to be levied to pay principal and interest on said bonds upon the valuation of property in the town of Red Springs as now constituted is not a sufficient special tax to provide for the payment of principal and interest at maturity, and for that the defendants have no power to levy any larger tax than 35 cents on the $100 valuation of property and $1.05 on each taxable poll; this being the rate of special tax provided in the act authorizing the issue of said bonds. The same point was presented and decided by this court in Lumberton v. Nuveen, 144 N. C. 303, 56 S. E. 940, wherein it is said: "It is contended that the rate of taxation levied by the plaintiff's commissioners in their orders will be insufficient to pay the annual interest and to provide a sinking fund. This cannot invalidate the legality of the bond issue." Underwood v. Asheboro, supra; Jones v. New Bern, 152 N. C. 64, 67 S. E. 173. In the latter case this court said: "The alleged failure to provide a sinking fund for payment of principal or special tax for payment of interest does not affect the legality of the bonds, but only the means and methods of payment." The Legislature can and doubtless will, if necessary, authorize an increase in the tax rate; or that may be unnecessary, owing to the growth of the town and increase in taxable property. It is well known that Red Springs is a growing town, and inhabited by a remarkably thrifty, industrious, and high-class citizenship. Doubtless in a short time a fair valuation of the property at the rate authorized by the Legislature will yield ample income to meet the provision for both interest and sinking fund.

[4, 5] (5) That bonds for the creation of a system of waterworks and bonds for the creation of a system of sewerage are to be issued for two distinct and separate objects; and for that bonds to provide funds for both purposes cannot be issued in one series, and part of the proceeds used for waterworks and another part for sewerage; and for that two purposes are joined in one issue of bonds, and that this cannot be done, especially in view of the fact that there is no method or proportion to be followed in the division of the funds between the two objects. Of necessity, the division of the proceeds of the sale of the bonds between sewerage and waterworks must be left to the discretion of the municipal authorities, as the one may cost more than the other, and the exact cost of each could not well be determined by the Legislature. The point is decided in the Nuveen Case, supra. Our judgment is that the bonds are a valid obligation of the defendant town.

Our attention has been called to act of the General Assembly of 1911 (Public Laws, c. 86). That act is a public law, intended to give all cities and towns, without further legislation, power to issue bonds for the purposes therein named, when approved by a majority of the qualified voters. It was ratified March 4, 1911, and the act amending the Red Springs charter was ratified February 27, 1911. The latter is a private act and well within the power of the General Assembly to enact. We have held that in respect to issuing bonds for necessary expenses the General Assembly may require the approval of a majority of the qualified voters, and also it may, by special acts, as in this case, not require it.

We are of opinion that the act of assembly (chapter 86, Public Laws 1911) does not affect the powers conferred by the amendment to the charter of Red Springs (Private Acts 1911, c. 170).

The judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 318*)—INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR—CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT—CONTROL OR INTERFERENCE OF EMPLOYER.

A contractor for the construction of a mill according to plans and specifications prepared by the employer, who furnishes labor and materials and exercises control as to the method of the work, but who is to increase his force to complete the work within a certain time if required by the engineer of the employer on penalty of forfeiture of his contract, whose compensation is determined by estimates made by the engineer, and who is required to do the work in full accordance with the directions and instructions of the engineer on penalty of a forfeiture of his contract, is an independent contractor, for whose negligence, resulting in the death of an employé, the principal employer is not liable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rockingham County; W. J. Adams, Judge.

Action by W. A. Hopper, personal representative of a decedent, against S. S. Ordway & Sons and the Avalon Mills. Verdict for plaintiff only against Ordway & Sons, discharged bankrupts, but without judgment, and plaintiff appeals. No error.

This is an action to recover damages for the death of the plaintiff's intestate, caused, as the plaintiff alleges, by the negligence of the defendants. The plaintiff was aiding in building the foundation of the mill of the defendant, Avalon Mills, at the time of his injury, and there is ample evidence of negligence. The defendant Avalon Mills denies negligence, and alleges that the work was being done by the defendants Ordway & Sons, as independent contractors, and the defendant's counsel say that the only question presented by the 11 assignments of error is whether or no S. S. Ordway & Sons are independent contractors.

There are three paper writings, which constitute the contract between the defendants. The first is entitled, "Specifications for Constructing the Masonry Abutment and Head Gates for the Avalon Mills at Mayodan, N. C.," and all specifications relate wholly to the material to be used, except the fourth, seventh, eighth, and ninth, which are as follows:

"(4) Mortar shall be composed of two parts clean sharp sand and one part of Rosendale cement of such brand as the engineer may approve, and mixed and used in such manner as he may direct."

"(7) Coping and arch masonry, should any be required, is not to be included in this work, but may be furnished by the company and set in place by the contractor at a fair price to be determined by the engineer."

"(8) The work shall be begun within ten

(10) days from the time of award of the contract, and be finished and completed within four (4) months thereafter. Should the contractor not prosecute the work with such vigor as to indicate the completion of the work within the time specified, he must increase the force and equipment to such extent as the engineer may deem necessary to complete the work within the prescribed time, or suffer the penalty of a forfeiture of his contract and all the moneys that may be due him upon the work at such time as the right may be exercised by the company, party of the second part, viz., the Avalon Mills.

"(9) At the end of each thirty (30) days after the work is begun, the engineer shall measure up all the finished work, and make due and proper safe allowance for unfinished work, and render an estimate of the amount due the contractor for such work, which amounts shall be paid to him, less ten (10) per cent., which shall be held until the final completion of the work by the contractors."

The second is entitled, "Specifications for Constructing the Head Race or Canal for the Avalon Mills Company, at Mayodan, N. C.," and contains detailed statements as to how the work shall be done, and, among others, the following provisions: "Should the contractor not prosecute the work with such vigor as to indicate the completion of the work within the time specified, he must increase the force and equipment to such an extent as the engineer may deem necessary to complete the work within the prescribed time, or suffer the penalty of a forfeiture of his contract and all his money that may be due him upon the work at such time as this right may be exercised by the company, party of the second part, viz., the Avalon Mills. * * * The entire work shall be done in full accordance with the directions and instructions of the engineer or his assistant, and a failure on the part of the contractor to observe and well and truly carry out the work in accordance with the instructions of the engineer or his assistant, shall be deemed sufficient cause for the exercise of his forfeiture clause set forth in section eight (8) by the said Avalon Mills."

The third is entitled, "Specifications to Accompany Plans of Dam, Bulkhead Gates and Spillway for the Avalon Mills, all made for same by C. R. Makepeace & Co., Mill Engineer, Providence, R. I., Aug. 5, 1899," and, after specifying how the work shall be done, says: "In the foregoing specifications it is intended to enumerate all of the leading particulars in the erection and finishing of all this work, and it is understood by the contractor that the same is to be finished complete to the intent and meaning of these specifications and the plans and details, and all materials and workmanship connected with this work must be entirely satisfactory to C. R. Makepeace & Co., or the engineer or superintendent in charge of the work. It is understood by the contractor that should any difference of opinion arise, respecting said workmanship, work or materials, or any other matter whatsoever relative to the erection and finishing of this work, between the contractor and owners, such difference shall be submitted to C. R. Makepeace, and his decision thereon shall be final and conclusive between both parties, and it is so understood and agreed by said parties."

It was in evidence that one of the workmen went to Avalon, where the work was being done, upon a telegram sent by the superintendent of the defendant mills; but the superintendent testified that he sent the telegram at the request of Ordway & Sons, who needed a mason, and because they were not acquainted at the place where the mason lived.

The plaintiff contended that, upon the face of the papers, Ordway & Sons were not independent contractors, and requested the judge to so charge the jury, and, upon his refusal to do so, excepted.

There was a verdict against Ordway & Sons, but no judgment upon the verdict because of their discharge in bankruptcy.

There is no claim that Ordway & Sons were not responsible parties at the time the contracts were made.

The plaintiff excepted and appealed.

C. O. McMichael and H. R. Scott, for appellant. Johnston, Ivie & Dalton and Manly, Hendren & Womble, for appellee S. S. Ordway & Sons.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] The case of Denny v. Burlington, 155 N. C. 33, 70 S. E. 1085, is decisive of this controversy, and upon that authority, in the absence of other evidence, his honor might have held as matter of law, upon the papers in evidence, that the relation of independent contractor was established.

In the Denny Case, the city of Burlington entered into a contract for the construction of a system for water and sewerage, in which the details as to material, the work to be performed, and the time of performance were set out with particularity, and it was also provided that the materials furnished and the labor done should be done "in accordance with the specifications and plans, and the instructions to bidders and the proposal and such detailed directions, drawings, etc., that may be given by the engineer from time to time during the construction, and in full compliance with this agreement," and that, "to prevent all dispute and litigation, it is agreed by and between the parties to this contract that the engineer shall in all cases determine the quality and quantity of the several kinds of work which are to be paid for under this contract, and his decisions shall be final and conclusive, and he shall determine all questions in relation to lines, levels and dimensions of the work and as to the interpretations of the plans and specifications. The committee, through the engineer, shall have the right to make any alterations in the plans or quantity of the work herein contemplated, and it is expressly agreed and understood that such alterations, additions, modifications or omissions shall not in any way violate this contract, and the contractor hereby agrees not to claim or bring suit for any damages, whether loss of profit or otherwise. * * * Whenever the contractor is not on any part of the work where it is desired by the engineer to give instructions, the superintendent or foreman, who may be in charge of that particular part of the work, shall receive and obey said instructions from the engineer. * * * But no work other than that included in the contract, shall be done by the contractor without a written order from the engineer. * * * The contractor further agrees that if the work to be done under this contract shall be abandoned, or if the contract shall be assigned by said contractor, otherwise than herein provided, or if at any time the engineer shall be of the opinion, and shall so certify in writing to said committee, that the said work is unnecessarily or unreasonably delayed, or that the said contractor is willfully violating any of the terms or conditions of this contract, or is not executing this contract in good faith, or is not making such progress in the executing of said work as to indicate its completion within the time specified, said committee shall have the right to notify said contractor to discontinue all work or any part thereof under this contract, and upon such notification said contractor shall discontinue said work, or such parts thereof as said committee may designate; and said committee shall thereupon have the power to employ by contract, or otherwise, and in such manner and at such prices as it may determine, any persons, etc., which it may deem necessary to work at and be used to complete the work herein described, or such part of it as said committee may have designated." The engineer was appointed by the defendant, and it was held that the person with whom the contract was made was an independent contractor.

It will be observed that not only were the materials to be furnished and the labor to be done, subject to the supervision of the engineer of the defendant, but in accordance with his instructions, and that the defendant reserved the right of inspection and the right to terminate the contract. There are also other provisions extending the authority of the defendant beyond the powers conferred on the Avalon Mills in this case.

The citation from A. & E. Enc. vol. 16, p. 190, that "the fact that the employer may at any time terminate the employment, though strong evidence that the employé is a mere servant, is not conclusive in that regard," is not, in our opinion, applicable to the contract under consideration, because under that contract there is no absolute right to terminate the contract at any time, but to put an end to it, if the contractor is not performing. It according to the stipulations, which is reasonable and necessary.

[2] The same author, on pages 188 and 189, states with accuracy the prevailing rule as to the right to exercise supervision. He says: "A reservation of the employer of the right by himself or his agent to supervise the work, for the purpose merely of determining whether it is being done in conformity to the contract, does not affect the independence of the relation. The fact that the work is to be supervised by an architect representing the owner is also immaterial if this involves merely his approval or disapproval of the results of the work, and not directions as to the mode of arriving at such results. And it has been held that a provision that the work shall be done under the direction and to the satisfaction of a representative of the employer does not make the employé a mere servant, but that such a provision is merely to secure a satisfactory performance of the work in compliance with the contract. Nor is it material that the contract provides that the employer shall, during the progress of the work, define and direct the scope thereof."

His honor, instead of deciding the question as matter of law, submitted it to the jury in a charge, which is full, clear, and accurate, and which might be copied as a correct summary of the law, in determining when one is an independent contractor, and, the jury having decided against the plaintiff, there is nothing, upon the appeal, of which he can complain. It is to be regretted that he has a barren recovery for a death caused by negligence; but this consideration will not justify fixing responsibility on a party who is not liable.

We find no error.

No error.

Action by Vaughan & Barnes and Moseley Bros. against J. R. Davenport. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Action dismissed.

Aycock & Winston and F. G. James & Son, for appellant. Jacob Battle and Moore & Long, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. In 1909, the defendant entered into a contract with Moseley Bros. to deliver to them 100 bales of merchantable cotton at the warehouse in Pactolus, under the terms of the contract which is set out in the record. Thereafter Moseley Bros. transferred and assigned the contract to Vaughan & Barnes. This action is brought by them jointly, to recover damages by reason of the failure of the defendant to comply with this contract.

The plaintiffs put in evidence a letter from Vaughan & Barnes, dated November 22, 1909, in which they notified the defendant that they had sold said cotton to Messrs. Hogan & Co., cotton buyers and exporters, and added, "We want to know by return mail what you propose to do in order that we may be able to tell the buyer here when he may expect delivery of this 100 bales of cotton in question." There was no evidence offered to show that the cotton had been resold to the plaintiffs.

The motion of the defendant for nonsuit should have been granted, on the ground that "the evidence disclosed that the plaintiffs were not the owners of the claim sued on." Chapman v. McLawhorn, 150 N. C. 166, 63 S. E. 721, and numerous cases there cited. Rev. 400 is explicit: "Every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest." The plaintiff's evidence showed that the right to demand this cotton, or damages for its nondelivery, had passed to Hogan & Co. by their assignment, prior to the date when it was deliverable. The plaintiffs are neither legal nor equitable owners of the contract; nor are they trustees of an express trust. They have "sawed the limb off between themselves and the tree."

Action dismissed.

1. PARTNERSHIP (§ 75*)—MUTUAL RIGHTS—INTEREST ON PROFITS AND ADVANCEMENTS.

Where one member of a firm had possession of all its moneys, but did not agree to pay interest thereon, another member whose land was used by it was not, until dissolution, entitled to interest either upon the amount due him for rent or the undivided profits; the rule being particularly applicable in the case of profits which cannot be ascertained until after dissolution.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pender County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by J. B. Moore against J. A. Westbrook. There was a judgment for plaintiff to which each party excepted, and from which they prosecuted separate appeals. Affirmed on both appeals.

The summons in this action was issued on the 23d day of August, 1907.

The plaintiff filed his complaint on the 18th day of December, 1907, in which he alleged:

(1) That he and the defendant and one S. W. Troublefield on or about the ——— day of ———, A. D. 1892, formed a copartnership for the purpose of growing truck and other produce for market, the agreement being that the said J. B. Moore was to furnish the land for said copartnership at and for the price of $7 per acre per year, and to pay one-third of the expenses and to receive one-third of the profits, and the said J. A. Westbrook was to pay one-third of the expenses and receive one-third of the profits, and the said S. W. Troublefield was to be paid the sum of $16.50 as a salary for his time not taken by the firm of J. A. Westbrook & Co., one-third of said salary to go as his part of the expenses of said firm, and to receive one-third of the profits, said firm to operate under the firm name of Westbrook, Moore & Co., which said firm continued in active business up to and including the year 1899, when it ceased active business.

(2) That during all the years the said firm was actively engaged in said business the defendant kept the books of account of the said firm, and received all the moneys coming to said firm, and now has them in his possession.

(3) That from the time of the organization of said firm, and for each year it did business, the said firm was prosperous and made a considerable profit from said business, having used 17½ acres of land furnished by the plaintiff at the rate of $7 per acre, and said firm has never paid the plaintiff the rent due for the said land.

(4) That during all the years the said firm did business, and up to the present the defendant has had the use of the money belonging to the said firm, and has used the same for his profit and gain, and, though the said firm ceased active business in the year 1899, the affairs of the said firm have not been settled up between the partners, though all the debts have long since been paid, except the rent money due this plaintiff, and this plaintiff has demanded of the defendant a settlement of the said firm's affairs and a payment to him of his share of the profits of the said business, but the defendant has failed and refused to settle with the plaintiff, though he has repeatedly promised to do so.

(5). That the plaintiff verily believes that his share of the profits of the said business for the said years amounts to the sum of $2,700, if not more, the exact amount thereof this plaintiff cannot say, for the reason that the books of account of said business and the money is now and always has been in the hands of the defendant, and this plaintiff has not had access to the same.

The defendant answered, admitting the partnership on the terms alleged, and its dissolution in 1899, and denying any liability for rents, or that there were any profits made by the partnership. At January special term, 1910, an order of reference was made, the defendant not excepting thereto, and to which the plaintiff excepted, reserving the right to have the issues of fact tried by a jury.

The referee filed his report on the 23d day of September, 1910, as follows:

"(1) That the plaintiff, J. B. Moore, the defendant, J. A. Westbrook, and one S. W. Troublefield did, in the early part of the year 1892, form and enter into a copartnership for the purpose of growing truck and other produce for market on the terms and conditions set out in the first paragraph of the complaint and admitted in the answer.

"(2) That, pursuant to said copartnership agreement, work was begun about February, 1892, the several parties complying with their respective parts of the partnership contract set up in the first paragraph of the complaint and admitted in the answer.

"(3) That the copartnership began to ship strawberries in the spring of 1893, and continued in business without interruption until the close of the strawberry season in 1899, to wit, on or about the 1st of June, 1899.

"(4) That beginning with the year 1893 the partners met from time to time after the close of the shipping seasons, and went over the business for the past year.

"(5) That at these several meetings all the parties were present with their books, papers, and records, at which times they ascertained the net results of the respective years in dollars and cents, showing profits or loss, as the case might be, and how much.

"(6) That, according to the terms of the agreement between the copartners, Mr. J. A. Westbrook, the defendant, was to receive the moneys derived from the sale of produce, and did receive them, and Mr. Troublefield and Moore to keep the expense account.

"(7) That at these annual meetings every item of expense connected with the conduct of the business was considered and added together, and the sum total was deducted from the total receipts, showing the net profit or loss, as the case happened to be.

"(8) That after deducting the total expenses incurred in the conduct of the business, the copartners, operating under the firm name of Westbrook, Moore & Co., made the following profits for the respective years:

1893 .....	$428 00
1894 .....	546 00
1895 .....	486 00
1896 .....	552 87
1899 .....	195 87

Making a total of.....$2,206 74

"But that no money was paid to plaintiff on account of said profits except $14.70.

"(9) That after considering all expenses and receipts for the years 1897 and 1898 combined, the copartnership lost during these two years about $657.81.

"(10) That the plaintiff, J. B. Moore, was entitled to one-third of the profits, and was chargeable with one-third of the loss of said copartnership.

"(11) That no final settlement or accounting has been had among said copartners."

Conclusions of Law.

Upon the foregoing "findings of fact," the referee draws the following conclusions of law:

"(1) That the contract made and entered into by the plaintiff, J. B. Moore, the defendant, J. A. Westbrook, and one S. W. Troublefield, as set forth in the first allegation of the complaint, was a partnership contract.

"(2) That such a contract is lawful, and contains nothing illegal, immoral, oppressive or contrary to public policy, and that said contract was binding upon all parties thereto.

"(3) That the defendant, J. A. Westbrook, stood in a fiduciary capacity with respect to his copartners, plaintiff, J. B. Moore, and S. W. Troublefield, which relationship imposed upon him the burden of a strict accounting to his copartners, plaintiff, J. B. Moore, and S. W. Troublefield, for all funds coming into his hands in such capacity.

"(4) So that the referee recommends that the plaintiff recover judgment against the defendant for $735.58, being one-third of the total amount of profits made by the copartnership during its existence, less $219.27, being the plaintiff's share of the loss for the years 1897 and 1898, and $9.80, being two-thirds of the check for $14.70 not heretofore accounted for. That is to say, that plaintiff is entitled to recover judgment against the defendant for the net sum of $506.51, together with the costs of this action.

"(5) Considering this case in the light of all circumstances, the referee recommends that the plaintiff should not recover any interest on the amount due, except from the date of summons, August 23, 1907.

"Respectfully submitted, this the 23d day of September, A. D. 1910.

"R. W. Herring, Referee."

Both parties filed exceptions to the report, and the plaintiff demanded a jury trial.

The exceptions of the defendant were as follows:

As to findings of fact:

"(1) To finding of fact No. 6, for that it appears from the plaintiff's own evidence that plaintiff, Moore, and one S. W. Troublefield, received some of the moneys derived from the sale of produce by said firm.

"(2) To finding of fact No. 8, for that there is no competent evidence upon which to base said finding.

"(3) To finding of fact No. 11, for that the testimony of the plaintiff and the witness Troublefield shows a settlement to have been made with the defendant.

"(4) To the above referred to finding of fact No. 8, for that the same is so vague and indefinite as to amount to no finding in law, in so far as it is attempted to find that any profits were made by the said firm."

As to conclusions of law:

"(1) To conclusion of law No. 4, if the same shall be considered by the court to be a conclusion of law, for that the same is based upon findings of fact without competent evidence to support such findings, and which finding is so vague and indefinite as to amount to no finding.

"(2) To conclusion of law No. 5, in so far as the same may be considered as a conclusion of law by the court, and in so far as it may involve any conclusion that there is any amount due from the defendant to the plaintiff."

At March term, 1911, an amendment to the complaint was allowed, alleging, in addition to the matters set out in the original complaint, that he had made advances to the partnership amounting to about $1,500, and that the defendant was liable for one-third thereof and interest.

The defendant answered the amendment, denying that the advancements were made, and pleading the three-year statute of limitations thereto. He also asked to be allowed to plead the statute of limitations as to the claim for rents, but his honor would not permit him to do so, because the claim for rents was in the original complaint, and the defendant excepted. Evidence as to the advancements made by the plaintiff was offered by both parties before the referee, and he made his finding thereon. The case was tried before the jury upon the evidence taken before the referee. The defendant offered additional evidence, not introduced before the referee, on the claim for advancements, and, upon the refusal of his honor to allow it, excepted.

The jury returned the following verdict:

"Second. Should the said J. A. Westbrook have turned over to the plaintiff his one-third part of said profits on the 1st day of June of the year they were made, and as they were earned, and did he fail to do so, and used the plaintiff's one-third of said profits as his own? Answer: Yes.

"Third. Has the defendant paid to the plaintiff any part of said net profit, and, if so, when, and in what amount? Answer: No.

"Fourth. Did the plaintiff advance to the said firm the items as set out and claimed by him to have been advanced in plaintiff's fourth exception, during the years mentioned in said exception, aggregating the sum of $1,559.04, or any part thereof, and, if so, which items, if he did not advance them all? Answer: Yes.

"Fifth. Did the defendant, Westbrook, pay to the plaintiff any other sums of money on account of the said copartnership other than the credit mentioned in the fourth exception, amounting to the sum of $916.32, and, if so, what sums were so paid, and the dates of payment? Answer: No.

"Sixth. Did the defendant keep the money of the said firm with his own, and use it as his own, except that part paid out by him for said firm? Answer: Yes.

"Seventh. Did the defendant Westbrook ever pay to the plaintiff any money on account of his share in the profit of said firm; if so, when, and what amount? Answer: No.

"Eighth. Should the plaintiff recover interest on the amounts advanced by him to the firm, and not repaid to him, from the 1st day of June of each year that they were advanced, until repaid, and, if not, then from what date should the plaintiff recover interest? Answer: No; from the time the firm ceased to do business.

"Ninth. Should the plaintiff recover interest on his share of the profits of said firm from the 1st day of June of each year when they were earned, until paid, and, if not, then from what date should the plaintiff recover interest? Answer: No; from time firm ceased to do business.

"Tenth. What amount of yearly rent is the plaintiff entitled to recover of the defendant, if any, for the years 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, 1896, 1897, 1898, and 1899? Answer: \$40.83 $\frac{1}{2}$ .

"Eleventh. Is the plaintiff entitled to interest on the rent money due him from the 1st day of June of each year that the rents became due, and, if not, from what date should the plaintiff recover interest on the rents? Answer: No; from time firm ceased to do business.

"Twelfth. Were the copartners to meet on or about the 1st day of January each year after the shipping season, and have a settlement with each other, and divide the profits, as claimed by the plaintiff in his fifth exception? Answer: Yes."

It was agreed that the judge might pass upon the issues of fact raised by the plea of the statute of limitations to the amendment of complaint. The court then found as a fact from the said evidence and the pleadings that the plaintiff's claim for his advances was barred by the statute of limitations, to which finding of the court the plaintiff excepted. There was no evidence that the partnership owed any debts at the time of the dissolution in 1899, except the debts between the partners, or that there was anything to be done, except to settle. The plaintiff demanded settlement of the defendant from time to time, and the defendant denied any liability. His honor rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for his part of the profits and rents, with interest thereon from January 1, 1900, and denied his motion for judgment for advances made, holding that this claim was barred by the statute of limitations.

The plaintiff excepted: (1) Because his honor held that the claim for advances was barred by the statute of limitations. (2) Because the court erred in refusing to give judgment for the plaintiff for interest on his rents and profits from the year they became due or were earned.

The defendant excepted: (1) For error in refusal of the court to overrule finding of fact No. 8, as found by the referee, and conclusions of law Nos. 4 and 5, as found by the referee, first exception, for that no competent evidence was introduced upon which to base the said finding of fact and said conclusions of law. (2) That the court committed error in submitting to the jury each and all of the issues which appear in the record. (3) That the court erred in submitting to the jury the evidence taken before the referee, and in submitting the cause to the jury upon such evidence. (4) That the court erred in refusing to permit the defendant to plead the statute of limitations as to the amounts alleged to be due as rents. (5) That the court erred in refusing to allow the defendant's motion to set aside the verdict. (7) That the court erred in refusing to grant the defendant a new trial. (8) That the court erred in signing the judgment which appears of record.

B. K. Bryan, J. T. Bland, E. L. Larkins, and John D. Kerr, for plaintiff. Robert Ruark, for defendant.

Plaintiff's Appeal.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). The exceptions of the plaintiff cannot be allowed.

[1] As to the claim for interest, it is alleged in the complaint that the partnership "continued in active business up to and including the year 1899, when it ceased active business," and the judgment appealed from, based on the findings of the jury, allows interest from the 1st day of January, 1900, which according to the complaint was the time of the dissolution. There is no claim that the defendant agreed to pay interest. "A partner is not entitled to interest on capital which he contributes to the firm, although his contribution is greatly in excess of that of his copartners, unless they have agreed he may have interest." 30 Cyc. p. 693. The cases cited in the note fully sus-tain the text. Sheppard v. Smith, 20 Ala. 750; Carpenter v. Hathaway, 87 Cal. 439, 25 Pac. 549; Tutt v. Land, 50 Ga. 350; Thompson v. Noble, 108 Mich. 25, 65 N. W. 563; Lamb v. Rowan, 83 Miss. 53, 35 South. 427, 690; Smith v. Smith, 18 R. I. 722, 29 Atl. 584, 30 Atl. 602; Hart v. Hart, 117 Wis. 663, 94 N. W. 890; Rodgers v. Clement, 162 N. Y. 422, 56 N. E. 901, 76 Am. St. Rep. 342. In the last case the court says: "If the moneys advanced by the plaintiff to the firm were contributions of capital or additions to plaintiff's capital, then he was not entitled to interest on the same, since he must rely upon the profits of the business to compensate him for the investment, unless there was a special agreement between the partners that interest should be allowed." The reason applies with greater force to the claim for interest on profits, which cannot be ascertained until after the dissolution.

The question was considered by Chief Justice Ruffin in Holden v. Peace, 39 N. C. 228, 45 Am. Dec. 514. He says: "The general rule for interest on accounts in ordinary dealings is that it is chargeable only after an account has been rendered, so that the parties can see which is the debtor and what he has to pay, unless it be agreed otherwise, or the course of business shows it to have been otherwise understood. This applies still more forcibly, as between partners, because their accounts cannot be fully made up between them without, in truth, taking all the accounts of the firm—in other words, without a dissolution—and it is impossible to tell before what either would be bound to pay or entitled to receive. Therefore, if the parties mean that interest should be charged on the accounts of the partners for dealings in the shop and money withdrawn for personal expenses or other things from year to year, the course is to come to an agreement to that effect, and then for balances appearing upon the individual accounts annually or oftener, according to the agreement to that effect, charges of interest are made from time to time, or, if omitted, will be allowed in making the final settlement. If there be no agreement upon the subject, it must be understood that the parties, especially when they have no separate property, were aware that each must draw from the firm the means of supporting himself and his family, and that an exact equality could not be expected in those matters, and, therefore, that it was not intended that interest should be charged during the partnership."

[2] The exception to the ruling that the claim for amounts advanced by the plaintiff is barred by the statute of limitations is equally untenable. It does not appear that there were any debts to be paid or collected at the time of the dissolution of the partnership, and nothing remained to be done except to settle. The relationship between the parties then became adverse, and the right of action accrued to the plaintiff. The case of Murray v. Penny, 108 N. C. 324, 12 S. E. 957, seems to be directly in point. In that case the partnership between the plaintiff and defendant was formed in 1884, and dissolved in 1885. The action was commenced in 1890 to recover $400, which the plaintiff alleged to be due him on a fair accounting, and the defendant relied on the limitation of three years as a defense. It was held that the plaintiff's cause of action was barred, and the court said: "Unless there is some agreement, express or implied, fixing a period for accounting beyond the time of dissolution, or circumstances that render an accounting impossible, the statute begins to run from the time the partnership is in fact dissolved. Wood on Lim. § 210. During the existence of the partnership, the partners mutually sustain the relation of trustee and cestui que trust. Where there are debts still due the firm, and after dissolution one of the partners is to collect them, or other circumstances showing that a settlement is impossible, the relation of trust between the partners may continue till some act puts them in adversary position to each other. Nothing of that kind is in evidence. There is nothing to show that any debts were outstanding and uncollected, or that any trust remained to be executed. On the contrary, it appears that an immediate settlement was possible, and that both partners agreed that it should be made at once."

[3] We have passed on the exception of the plaintiff as to the statute of limitations, but it is doubtful if he can raise the question on this record, as the plea of the statute by the defendant casts the burden on the plaintiff to prove that his cause of action is not barred (Hussey v. Kirkman, 95 N. C. 64), and, a jury trial being waived on this issue, the judge, without any exception to evidence, has found the fact against the plaintiff.

We find no error.

No error.

Defendant's Appeal.

[4] The first exception of the defendant is to the refusal of the court to overrule a finding of fact made by the referee. The exception is not based upon the ground that there was no evidence to support the finding, but that there was no competent evidence, and a proper consideration of it would require us to go through the entire record, and pass on the admissibility of evidence, when there is no assignment of error that incompetent evidence had been admitted. This we are not required to do. If the appellant desired to preserve the exception, it was his duty to enter his exception to the evidence before the referee, and to except also to the finding of fact, and to have both exceptions reviewed by the judge, and then, on appeal, to embrace in his assignments of error the exceptions to the evidence.

[5] We find, however, on an examination of the evidence of the plaintiff that he testified to facts justifying the finding, and the rule is well settled that we cannot review the action of the judge when there is any evidence.

[6] It was the duty of the judge to submit the issues to the jury upon demand of the plaintiff, as he had not waived his right to a jury trial, and the exception of the defendant to such action cannot be sustained. The fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh assignments of error are to rulings within the discretion of the judge, and the eighth assignment is formal for the purpose of preserving the other exceptions.

[7, 8] The third assignment would not be free from difficulty if it had not been held that the claim of the plaintiff for advances made to the firm was barred by the statute of limitations, but, with this decision in favor of the defendant, he cannot complain that he was not allowed to offer evidence in addition to that introduced before the referee on the claim. The general rule is undoubtedly, as his honor held, that upon the coming in of a report under a compulsory reference the issues are to be determined by the jury on the evidence before the referee, but if an amendment is allowed, after the report is filed, containing an additional charge, the parties ought to be allowed to offer evidence as to such charge because it was not embraced in the reference. The defendant has not, however, suffered any injury by the refusal to allow him to introduce the evidence, as there is no recovery against him on the additional matter contained in the amendment.

We find no error of which the defendant can complain.

JOHNSON v. MUTUAL BENEFIT LIFE INS. CO. et al.

'Appeal of FAGG.

INSURANCE (§ 122*)—INSURABLE INTEREST—ASSIGNMENT OF POLICY INTEREST.

An assignment of a policy of life insurance, payable to insured, on which premiums have been paid, made to secure a loan in good faith, and not as a cover for a wagering transaction, or a mere speculation, to a person who has no insurable interest in the life of the insured, is valid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. §§ 166, 167; Dec. Dig. § 122.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Stokes County; Adams, Judge.

Action by John W. Johnson against the Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company, in which A. J. Fagg, administrator of Virgil L. Eaton, deceased, was made a party defendant on the company's payment of the fund in controversy into court. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Fagg appeals. No error.

J. W. Hall and Watson, Buxton & Watson, for appellant. J. D. Humphreys and Manly, Hendren & Womble, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This is an action by the plaintiff to recover from the defendant insurance company the amount of a certain insurance policy, issued to Virgil L. Eaton on his life, and assigned by Eaton to the plaintiff.

The defendant company at no time contested its liability on this policy, and has at all times expressed its willingness and desire to pay the amount due thereon to the person entitled to receive it, and in its answer it expressed its willingness to pay, and recognized that the amount of the policy was due to some one, but relied upon the fact that the administrator of Virgil L. Eaton was contesting the right of the plaintiff to receive the proceeds of the policy, under the assignment, and was claiming that it should be paid to him, and asked that it be allowed to pay into court the amount due on said policy, and that the court should order the said sum to be paid to the party entitled thereto. In consequence of this answer, and in accordance with its prayer, the administrator was made a party defendant, and the insurance company paid the sum due under the policy into the office of the clerk of the superior court of Stokes county, to abide the judgment of the court. The administrator of Eaton, the original beneficiary, filed an answer, in which he set up two defenses: First, that his intestate had borrowed of the plaintiff the sum of $100, and as security for said loan had transferred and assigned the said policy to the plaintiff as collateral security; second, that the assignment of the policy by Eaton to the plaintiff was void as a wagering transaction, for that the plaintiff had no insurable interest in the life of Eaton. The contest is therefore between the plaintiff, who is the assignee of the policy, and the administrator of Eaton.

The jury, in response to the issues submitted to them, found that the plaintiff had nothing to do with the taking out of the policy by Eaton, and that the assignment of the policy was made in good faith, and not as a cloak or cover for a wagering transaction or speculation on the life of Eaton. The evidence was to the effect that the plaintiff knew nothing about Eaton taking out the policy until after it was issued, and the first premium paid, and that Eaton became dissatisfied, and endeavored to dispose of the policy to other persons, before coming to the plaintiff, but finally sold and assigned the policy to the plaintiff, in accordance with the assignment as set out in the record. In fact, there was no dispute or evidence to the contrary, and as a result thereof the court charged the jury, if they believed the evidence, to answer the first issue, "No." The second issue, as to the good faith of the assignment, was answered by the jury, under the charge of the court, in favor of the plaintiff. There was no evidence offered to support the contention of the administrator that the policy had been assigned as security for a debt.

The exceptions of the administrator are to the charge of the judge, and, as we understand, they raise this single question: Can a person take out a policy of insurance on his own life, making the policy payable to himself, and pay the first or subsequent premiums, and then in good faith, and not as a cloak or cover for a wagering transaction, or as a mere speculation, and for a valuable consideration, assign the policy to a person having no insurable interest in the life of the person insured; and can such person recover upon the policy under such an assignment, or does the simple fact that the assignee had no insurable interest in the life of the assignor invalidate the assignment and prevent a recovery by the assignee?

The defendant, administrator of Virgil L. Eaton, appealed from the judgment upon the verdict.

It is impossible to distinguish this case from Hardy v. Insurance Co., 152 N. C. 286, 67 S. E. 767, and again reported in 154 N. C. 430, 70 S. E. 823, and our decision, therefore, must be against the plaintiff and in affirmance of the judgment below, unless we overrule those cases, as requested to do by the plaintiff's counsel in their brief. They are recognized by them to be decisively against the contention of the defendant that plaintiff, as assignee, cannot recover on the policy.

In Hardy v. Insurance Co., 152 N. C. 286, 67 S. E. 767, Justice Hoke, who wrote the opinion for the court, says, after a most learned and exhaustive discussion of the question, that the great weight of authority sustains the legality of such an assignment, when it is found, as a fact, that the policy was valid at its inception; and, further, that the assignment was made in good faith, and not as a mere cloak or cover for a wagering transaction. He quotes with approval what is stated upon the subject in that reliable treatise and standard authority, Vance on Insurance (page 14 et seq.), as follows: "On principle and according to the clear weight of authority, an assignment of a life policy to one having no insurable interest therein is perfectly valid, if made in good faith, and not as a cover for fraudulent speculation in life." And referring to the opinions in Warnock v. Davis, 104 U. S. 775 [26 L. Ed. 924], and Cammack v. Lewis, 82 U. S. [115 Wall.] 643 [21 L. Ed. 244], and to the subject generally, the author says: "These confusing influences have further been aided and abetted by a catch phrase, which, however, does not state the issue fairly, to the effect that the law will not allow a person to procure by assignment insurance that he could not procure directly. A fair statement of the issue is found in the postulate that the law will allow the insured to designate a beneficiary under the policy as well by assignment as by original nomination. The true principle governing the question may be derived from the statement of some generally accepted rules of law: (1) A person insuring his own life may designate any person whatever as beneficiary, irrespective of insurable interest in that beneficiary. (2) The law requires an insurable interest only at the inception of the policy, as evidence of good faith. The presence of such interest at any subsequent period is wholly immaterial. (3) Life insurance, though based on the theory of indemnity at its inception, is not a contract of indemnity, but chiefly of investment. As a chose in action, it has, at any time after its issue, a recognized value, termed the reserved value. Hence we conclude that a policy of life insurance, validly issued to one having an insurable interest, becomes in his hands a valuable chose in action, which should be assignable as any other property right, unless such assignment be opposed to some clear rule of public policy. This, we think, correctly states the true doctrine."

That decision was approved, when the same case afterwards came to this court by appeal, in a lucid opinion by Justice Allen (154 N. C. 430, 70 S. E. 828), so that the law, as applicable to the facts found by the jury, must now be considered as thoroughly settled in this state, whatever may be the views of other courts.

There was no error in the ruling of Judge W. J. Adams, and it will be so certified, that the judgment in favor of the plaintiff may be enforced.

No error.

Evidence, in an action by a principal against his agents to recover an amount realized on a sale of stock for plaintiff, which they had converted and embezzled, held insufficient to establish any fraudulent conduct of the agents in their dealings with the stock.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanly County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by R. W. Osborne against S. J. Durham and another. Judgment for plaintiff against defendant Durham, and plaintiff appeals. No error.

R. L. Smith and J. R. Price, for appellant. F. I. Osborne, for appellees.

WALKER, J. Action to recover the sum of $1,200, alleged to be due by the defendants, as agents of the plaintiff, on account of a certain stock transaction.

In the year 1905, the plaintiff subscribed for 60 shares of the capital stock of the Vermont Mills, each share being of the par value of $100, on which he paid $1,200 in cash and consequently owed $4,800. The plaintiff was an officer in the Vermont Mills, but desired to remove from Bessemer City, where the mills were located. He wished to sell out his interest in the stock, and requested S. J. Durham, one of the defendants in this case, who was treasurer of the mills, to make the sale for him, and Durham agreed to do so. S. J. Wilkins, the other defendant, had charge of the certificates of stock belonging to the plaintiff. The plaintiff authorized S. J. Wilkins to sell the stock for him, and S. J. Wilkins did sell it to one Coble. Wilkins, in payment for the stock, did not receive any money from Coble, but two notes, one for $500 and one for $400, on the Odell Mills. He further received an order for $300 on the Vermont, Southern & Whetstone Mills, and another order for $300 to pay up the assessment due on the stock. After receiving these orders, he canceled the notes due by the plaintiff, and took the $500 and the $400 notes with the orders and presented them to S. J. Durham, who was the treasurer of the Vermont Mills. Durham asked for indulgence from Wilkins as to the payment, and Wilkins wrote to the plaintiff on October 18, 1906, asking the plaintiff to make a draft of $1,200 on the Vermont Mills through the First National Bank at Gastonia at 10 days sight, and stating that Durham had promised to pay the same. The plaintiff drew the draft, which was not paid at the end of 10 days, because of the insolvent condition of the Vermont Mills, and Durham sent his individual note for $1,200, payable in 60 days, which the plaintiff accepted.

All three of the mills, together with the Odell Mills, failed shortly after the sending of the note, and their affairs were placed in the hands of a receiver. Durham failed, too, about the same time, inasmuch as he was interested in all of them. The plaintiff claims the right to recover $1,200 for the following reasons: (1) That defendants disobeyed his instructions, express or implied, and sold the stock on credit; whereas, they should have sold it for cash, and by reason of their conduct in the transaction they are liable to him for its value. (2) That they made false and fraudulent representations to him as to the manner in which they had disposed of the stock, and he was led to believe by them that they had received cash for the same. (3) That they fraudulently converted the stock or the proceeds of it, and are thereby liable to him for the value thereof. Defendants denied their liability upon any of the said grounds, and averred that, on the contrary, they had acted, not only prudently, but wisely, as it turned out, and that plaintiff had been greatly benefited by what they had done in his behalf. The court, at the close of the testimony, overruled defendants' motion for a nonsuit, and instructed the jury to answer the first two issues, "Yes," and the fourth issue, "No," according to the agreement of the parties, and upon the evidence to answer the third and fifth issues, "No," and the sixth issue, "Yes, S. J. Durham, in the sum of $1,200, with interest from November 17, 1906." The jury thereupon returned the following verdict: (1) Did the defendants, or either of them, agree with the plaintiff to sell for him his 12 shares of stock in the Vermont Mills, Incorporated, at the price of $1,200, and remit the same to him? Answer: Yes. (2) Did defendants, or either of them, under said agreement, sell plaintiff's 12 shares of stock in the Vermont Mills, Incorporated, at the price of $1,200? Answer: Yes. (3) Have the defendants, or either of them, received $1,200 on account of said 12 shares of stock? Answer: No. (4) Have the defendants, or either of them, remitted or paid to the plaintiff the sum of $1,200 on account of said 12 shares of stock? Answer: No. (5) Have the defendants, or either of them, and, if so, which one, embezzled, converted, or fraudulently applied or misapplied the proceeds from the sale of the plaintiff's stock? Answer: No. (6) In what amount, if any, are the defendants, or either of them, indebted to the plaintiff? Answer: Yes, S. J. Durham, in the sum of $1,200 and interest from November 17, 1906. Judgment was entered upon the verdict in favor of the defendants, and plaintiff appealed.

The material issues seem to be the third and fifth. As to the third issue, all the evidence goes to show that Coble did not pay any money at all for this stock—that is, that the defendants did not receive any money from him—so there could be but one answer to this question. Coble was a witness for the plaintiff and testified that he had paid for the stock as stated above.

As to the fifth issue, it is specifically charged, in the eleventh paragraph of the complaint, that these defendants received $1,200 as the proceeds of the sale of the stock, and this fifth issue is directed to that paragraph in the complaint and the answer to it, denying the same. The proceeds were alleged to have been received in cash, and, inasmuch as no money was received, it could not have been fraudulently appropriated or embezzled; but giving to the fifth issue its broadest meaning, so that it will embody the question as to whether or not the defendants converted or fraudulently applied or misapplied any proceeds, whether money or not, realized from the sale of the plaintiff's stock, the defendants then contend that there was no evidence of such fraudulent conversion. The proceeds were two notes due by the Odell Mills and the orders set forth in the above statement of facts. These notes were carried to Durham, who was the treasurer of the mills, by Wilkins, and so were the orders, and Durham did not pay them, because the Vermont Mills did not have the money at that time with which to make the payment.

It is true that the sale, as contemplated by Osborne, the plaintiff, evidently was to be a cash transaction, and he undoubtedly thought so at the time; but Wilkins could not obtain the cash, and, as appears from the evidence, sold the stock in the manner which seemed to him best. There is no charge in the complaint, nor is there any issue with reference to such a charge, that Wilkins fraudulently disposed of the stock for his own benefit. The charge is that he, with the other defendant, converted, embezzled, or fraudulently applied the proceeds from the sale of the stock. There does not seem to be the slightest evidence that they made any such conversion or were guilty of any kind of fraudulent conduct.

The plaintiff, however, insists that he is entitled to a judgment against Wilkins, as well as Durham, for the $1,200. He did recover a judgment against Durham for $1,200 on the note which Durham gave him for his stock. The defendant Wilkins sent the paper to the plaintiff for $1,200, but did not receive any $1,200, and he had due authority to sell for the plaintiff, and received what, at the time, he thought was worth $1,200, and presented the claims to the proper party in order to collect them. They turned out to be of no value. If the plaintiff should be entitled to recover anything from Wilkins, it would be, at most, the value of his stock, that Wilkins disposed of for him; and, from all the evidence, that turned out to be thoroughly worthless, as the Vermont Mills was at that time an insolvent institution. Neither one of these defendants realized a dollar in the transaction, and, as will appear by the entire evidence, were acting in the matter solely for the accommodation of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff was the gainer in the end, for he was indebted to the Vermont Mills in the sum of $4,800, for his unpaid subscription to the stock, and, had it not been surrendered and canceled, the receiver could and would have obtained judgment against him to the full amount of the notes, for the benefit of the creditors of the Vermont Mills. By the transaction, these notes were canceled, and the plaintiff ceased to be the debtor of the Vermont Mills, and Coble took his place and became responsible for the debt which plaintiff had owed for the stock.

[1] Considering the whole case, we can find no evidence of any fraudulent conduct of the defendants in their dealings with the plaintiff's stock. The undisputed facts show that the defendants were not acting for themselves, with the view of benefiting by the transaction; but finding that they could not sell the stock for cash, and perhaps suspecting what subsequent events proved to be true, that the Vermont Mills were on the verge of insolvency, they did the best they could do to save the plaintiff, their principal, from the wreck, so that he would not suffer any pecuniary loss by the failure of the mills, and disposed of the stock to Coble. It was not very long before the wisdom of their course was justified by the real facts in the case. Durham came to the plaintiff's rescue, as far as he could do so, and gave his own note for the $1,200, which the plaintiff accepted. Misfortune overtook the defendant Durham, when the mills failed, as he was largely interested in them and lost heavily, and he was unable to pay the note. Plaintiff has a judgment against him for the debt, and that is all to which he is entitled, notwithstanding the allegations of fraud, which have not been established.

[2] There is another reason why the plaintiff is not entitled to recover anything more than the judgment of the court allows him. In the first place, the fact that Durham and Wilkins, his agents, had notified the plaintiff to draw on the Vermont Mills for the $1,200, which he did, the nonpayment of the draft, and the taking of Durham's note, were all circumstances reasonably calculated to put a prudent man upon notice that the sale had not been made for cash, and to stimulate inquiry. It is a fact established in the case that Durham and Wilkins did not sell for cash, and Durham virtually so stated in his letter to plaintiff of November 17, 1906. But, after the latter had become fully acquainted with the fact that the Vermont Mills was his debtor, he agreed to accept Durham's note and to prove his claim against the insolvent mills, and thus to get payment for his stock. This is shown by his letters of February 11, 12, and 16, 1907, to Durham. These letters, which speak for themselves, are as follows:

Letter of February 11th, Osborne to Durham: "I was under the impression that I held no claims against the Vermont Mills, but as you say in your letter, dated 4th inst., that I have a claim, since I hold a note against you, I have no objection to you taking said claim in your hands and collecting what you can and crediting same on your note. If you wish me to file a claim against the mills, please notify me, and I will do so at once, and collect what I can and credit same on your note."

Letter of February 12th, Durham to Osborne: "Your letter received. On receipt of your special delivery letter, I certified and filed your claim as your attorney. I so understood your request. If the mill does not pay you in full, my note stands for balance, as you state in your letter. Please let me know if I did as you wish in filing your claim."

Letter of February 16th, Osborne to Durham: "Replying to your letter of recent date, will say that it is satisfactory to me your putting in the claim as you have. I hope things will come out O. K. in our favor."

In the letter of February 16th, he requests Durham to advance him $75 or $100, which he will credit on his note.

[3] This part of the correspondence, with other facts and circumstances, show a complete ratification which, under the law, requires no new consideration.

[4] An act may be ratified by any words or conduct, indicating an intention on the part of the person in question to adopt the act as his own.

[5] If ratification is made with knowledge of the facts, it invests principal and agent, as a rule, with the same rights and duties as if the transaction had been previously authorized, and, when it takes place, the agent is absolved from all responsibility on account of the unauthorized act or conduct, whether he exceeded or departed from his instructions, or was a mere volunteer. Tiffany on Agency, pp. 60, 86, 87.

We will not again consider the fact that the stock was really valueless at the time it was sold to Coble. It was not only worthless, but its continued ownership would have subjected the plaintiff to a heavy loss, and, even if the defendants violated instructions, he has lost nothing by their delinquency.

Our conclusion is that, in any view of the facts, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover any more than he did, and a substantial instruction of the court to this effect was correct.

No error.

Brown and Walker, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cabarrus County; Biggs, Judge.

Action by Robert F. Phifer against the Commissioners of Cabarrus County. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Montgomery & Crowell, for appellant. L. T. Hartsell and H. S. Williams, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This proceeding was begun before the clerk to assess the damages caused to plaintiff's lands by opening a public road through them, and was tried on appeal in the superior court.

The plaintiff owned about 60 acres of land about three-fourths of a mile from the town of Concord. There were already two public roads through it before the defendant built this road. There is no exception except to the refusal of two prayers to instruct the jury and one for an instruction given—all three in reference to the nature of the special benefits to which his honor told the jury that they must restrict the deductions to be made from the damages which they might find the plaintiff's land had sustained. The jury found in response to the only issue submitted that the damages sustained to the land by reason of the road being laid out over it were not greater than the benefits which the plaintiff had received therefrom.

In Miller v. Asheville, 112 N. C. 768, 16 S. E. 764, the court said: "All the landowner can claim is that his property shall not be taken for public use without compensation. Compensation is had when the balance is struck between the damages and benefits conferred on him by the act complained of. To that, and that alone, he has a constitutional and vested right. The Legislature in conferring upon the corporation the exercise of the right of eminent domain can in its discretion require all the benefits or a specified part of them or forbid any of them to be assessed as offsets against the damages. This is a matter which rests in its grace, in which neither party has a vested right, and as to which the Legislature can change its mind always before rights are settled and vested by a verdict and judgment." But in Bost v. Cabarrus, 152 N. C. 536, 67 S. E. 1066, the court held that the statute now before the court was different from that in Miller v. Asheville, and that the general rule in condemnation proceedings applied. The judge therefore properly charged the jury that they should "deduct from the damages only those benefits which are special to the owner, and not such as he shares in common with other persons in similar circumstances." But, in fact, there was no evidence of benefits to the land which was common to others similarly situated. There were no others similarly situated.

[1] The first prayer for instruction was: "The jury in considering the special benefits are not permitted to consider the evidence that the land is near town, and may be cut into small lots of 100 feet front and sold, because that is not evidence of special or peculiar benefits contemplated by the statute which is not common to others similarly situated." This was properly refused. This was a special benefit to this particular land, not common to the neighborhood, because the road made a front on each side which would enable the plaintiff to sell lots, a benefit which would not accrue to land in the neighborhood off the road. Besides, evidence to the above effect had been introduced by both parties without objection.

The second prayer was to instruct the jury "that the fact that said property could be cut into lots and sold is what the law calls speculative benefits, which may or may not accrue to the owner, and the jury will not consider any speculative benefits or damages in this case."

[2] The last paragraph of the prayer was correct, but the court was not required to give it, since the instruction asked as a whole was faulty. The fact that property could be cut into lots and sold was in evidence and a proper matter for consideration by the jury in estimating the benefits accruing to the plaintiff. This was not speculative, but practical.

[3] The last exception is because the judge in arraying the contentions of the parties recited a contention of defendant's counsel which he had made to the jury without objection on the part of the plaintiff. It is too late to object to it after verdict. State v. Tyson, 133 N. C. 692, 45 S. E. 838; State v. Davis, 134 N. C. 635, 46 S. E. 722.

No error.

BROWN, J. (dissenting). I am of opinion that the benefits permitted to be considered by the jury as inuring to plaintiff's land are entirely too remote and speculative. His land is occupied by the plaintiff as a residence, and is situated some three-fourths of a mile beyond the boundaries of Concord, and is on two public roads. The third road that has been cut through it takes six acres of it. The possibility of the plaintiff being able to cut up his property and sell it off in town lots is problematical and entirely too remote to be considered.

Again, I think, the benefits that should be considered are those which naturally accrue to the land in the condition it is in and the uses to which the owner puts it. I don't think the plaintiff should be compelled to sell his home in order to endeavor to realize these highly uncertain profits from sale of town lots.

WALKER, J., concurs in this opinion.

STATE v. SMITH.

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 189*)—CONVICTION OF LOWER DEGREE OF OFFENSE—RAPE—ASSAULT.

Revisal 1905, § 1427, gives justices of the peace exclusive jurisdiction of assaults, batteries, etc., where the punishment cannot exceed a $50 fine or 30 days imprisonment, etc., and gives the superior courts jurisdiction, if a justice does not take cognizance of an offense within one year. Section 3620, as amended by Laws 1911, c. 193, provides that punishment for certain assaults, etc., shall not exceed the punishment above prescribed, except as to assaults with intent to rape, and assaults upon a female by a male over 18 years old. Section 3268 authorizes conviction of an assault under an indictment for rape. Section 3269 permits conviction under any indictment of a lesser degree of the offense charged. Held, that one more than 18 years old, who is indicted for assault with intent to ravish, can be convicted of aggravated assault, without averment in the indictment as to his age.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 330*)—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden is on a defendant to show that a justice of the peace took cognizance of the assault involved, ousting the superior court's jurisdiction; that being a matter of defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 330.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 90*)—JURISDICTION—ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

It is only where there is a conviction of a simple assault, under an indictment which upon its face shows jurisdiction in the superior court, and the further allegation or finding that one year since the commission of the offense had not elapsed, that the jurisdiction of the superior court is ousted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Habeas corpus by Turner Smith. The writ was dismissed, and relator remanded, and he appeals. Affirmed.

J. C. L. Harris, Chas. M. Harris, and Aycock & Winston, for appellant. Attorney General Bickett and G. L. Jones, for the State.

WALKER, J. The defendant was indicted in the superior court for an assault with intent to commit rape, and was convicted by the jury, not of the felony charged in the indictment, but of an assault and battery upon a woman; he being, at the time of the assault, over the age of 18 years.

The indictment alleged that "the defendant, with force and arms, at and in the county aforesaid, in and upon one Lillian Whitson, then and there being, did make an assault, and her, the said Lillian Whitson, then and there, did beat, wound, and ill treat, with intent, her the said Lillian Whitson, violently and against her will, then and there, feloniously to ravish and carnally know, and other wrongs to the said Lillian Whitson then and there did, against the form of the statutes in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state." Upon the verdict, the court below rendered judgment that the defendant be imprisoned in the common jail of Wake county for the term of two years, and assigned to work on the public roads of said county; his earnings during said term, as allowed by the commissioners of the county, to be applied to the payment of the costs. The defendant did not appeal from that judgment, but submitted thereto, and, having served for 30 days on the roads and performed the judgment to that extent, he applied by petition for the writ of habeas corpus to Hon. W. R. Allen, one of the justices of this court, and alleged that the sentence of the court was excessive, upon the ground that the indictment failed to allege that, at the time of the assault, he was more than 18 years old, and that therefore the Laws of 1911, ch. 193, do not apply, as that was an essential averment to be made, in order to warrant the punishment inflicted; the finding of the jury as to his age not being allowed by law to aid the indictment in that respect.

Judge Allen, at the hearing of the petition, dismissed the proceeding and remanded the defendant, holding that it was not necessary for the indictment to allege that the defendant, at the time he committed the assault, was over the age of 18 years, and in this conclusion we unhesitatingly concur, although it may require a very careful and minute examination of our statutes, and the authorities bearing upon the subject, in order to clearly demonstrate the fallacy of the defendant's position.

The defendant was indicted, as we have seen, for an assault with intent to commit rape, and by the verdict was convicted of an assault upon a woman; he being then over the age of 18 years. The allegations of the bill gave the court jurisdiction to try the case, and to pronounce such a judgment as was authorized by law. As Judge Ashe observed, and subsequently repeated, in State v. Moore, 82 N. C. 660: "This kind of litigation would not recur if the Legislature would take the subject in hand, and free it of its many complexities and ambiguities. A statute or statutes intended to prevent or to cheapen litigation, or to speed the trial of cases, or to more adequately prevent crimes, should not defeat the purpose of the enactment by vague and ambiguous terms. There have been many cases brought to this court to ascertain what the Legislature meant in its attempt to carry out the following constitutional provision [article 4, § 27]: 'The several justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction under such regulations as the General Assembly shall prescribe, of all criminal matters arising within their counties where the punishment cannot exceed a fine of fifty dollars, or imprisonment for thirty days.'" The statutes relating to this subject have not been so codified in the Revisal as to remove the doubts and uncertainties suggested by this court in its former decisions, although it has been said that certain statutes which were in pari materia should be construed together, so as to ascertain the true legislative intention. But let us look at the statutes pertinent to this question. Revisal 1905, § 1427, provides that justices of the peace shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all assaults, batteries, affrays, when no deadly weapon is used and no serious damage is done, and of all criminal matters arising in their counties, where the punishment, prescribed by law, shall not exceed a fine of $50 or 30 days imprisonment, with a proviso preserving the jurisdiction of the superior courts when the offense is committed within a mile of the place where the court is held, and during its session. It further provides that the section shall not be construed to prevent superior courts from assuming jurisdiction of offenses whereof original jurisdiction is given to justices of the peace, if some justice of the peace, within 12 months after the commission of the offense, shall not have taken official cognizance of the same.

Revisal, § 3620, as amended by Laws of 1911, c. 193, provides as follows: "In all cases of an assault, with or without intent to kill or injure, the person convicted shall be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the court: Provided, that where no deadly weapon has been used and no serious damage done, the punishment in assaults, assaults and batteries, and affrays, shall not exceed a fine of fifty dollars or imprisonment for thirty days; but this proviso shall not apply to cases of assault with intent to kill, or with intent to commit rape; or to cases of assault or assault and battery by any man or boy over eighteen years of age on any female person." It was argued by the learned counsel for defendant that it is necessary to consider the statutes above mentioned, and as explained by Revisal, § 3266, which is as follows: "On the trial of any person for rape, or any felony whatsoever, when the crime charged shall include an assault against the person, it shall be lawful for the jury to acquit of the felony and to find a verdict of guilty of assault against the person indicted, if the evidence shall warrant such finding; and when such verdict shall be found the court shall have power to imprison the person so found guilty of an assault, for any term now allowed by law, in cases of conviction when (if) the indictment was (had been) originally for an assault of a like character."

[1] Discarding all superfluities and rejecting nice distinctions and subtle refinements, and stripping these statutes to the bone, even to the marrow, the real intention of the Legislature is laid perfectly bare, and its meaning becomes apparent. It all, therefore, results in this: That a man who is indicted for an assault with intent to ravish, and is convicted of a simple assault and battery upon a woman, without the alleged intent, he being over the age of 18 years, can be punished at the discretion of the court, without any allegation in the bill as to his age, and cannot shield himself behind the statute conferring jurisdiction on a magistrate of simple assaults, nor limit the punishment, under the first proviso of Revisal, § 3620, to a fine of $50 or imprisonment for 30 days, upon conviction in the superior court, where, by the statute, it has acquired jurisdiction. It has been held uniformly that, where an exception, or even a proviso, to the enacting clause of a statute creating an offense is descriptive thereof, it is necessary to negative, in an indictment thereunder, the existence of the facts contained in the exception or proviso, though the burden of proof to establish them may rest upon the defendant. State v. Blackley, 138 N. C. 620, 50 S. E. 310. "Where the words contained in a proviso or exception are descriptive of the offense and a part of its definition, it is necessary, in stating the crime charged, that they should be negatived in the indictment, and where the statute does not otherwise provide, and the qualifying facts do not relate to the defendant personally, and are not peculiarly within his knowledge, the allegation, being a part of the crime, must be proved by the state beyond a reasonable doubt." State v. Connor, 142 N. C. 700, 55 S. E. 787. Joyce on Indictments, § 279, where the law is thus stated: "The general rule as to exceptions, provisos, and the like, is that where the exception or proviso forms a portion of the description of the offense, so that the ingredients thereof cannot be accurately and definitely stated, if the exception is omitted, then it is necessary to negative the exception or proviso. But where the exception is separable from the description, and is not an ingredient thereof, it need not be noticed in the accusation; for it is a matter of defense. But where there is an exception, so incorporated with the enacting clause that the one cannot be read without the other, then it is held that the exception must be negatived."

But this case does not fall within that principle. The third proviso was not intended to create a separate and distinct offense in law, to be known as an assault and battery by a man, or a boy over 18 years old, upon a woman; but it merely excepted that case from the operation of the first proviso, by which the punishment for a simple assault was limited to a fine of $50 or imprisonment for 30 days. It related solely to the degree of punishment for an assault committed upon a woman by a man, or by a boy over 18 years of age. It was always a crime for a man, or a boy over 18 years of age, to assault a woman, and the object of section 3820 was to provide that such an offense should be subject to the same punishment, at the discretion of the court, as any other assault, with or without intent to kill or injure, or to commit a rape, and not to deprive the court of the discretion, given by the first clause, in those cases where the assault was committed with a deadly weapon, or with intent to kill or to commit a rape, or where it was upon a woman by a man, or a boy over 18 years of age. This indictment for an assault with intent to commit rape includes, necessarily, an assault by a man upon a woman, without any regard to the age of the man, and it was not necessary to allege that the defendant was over the age of 18 years. It was for the purpose of providing for just such a case as this one that the Legislature passed the act of 1885, c. 68, to the effect that on the trial of any person for rape, or any felony whatsoever, when the crime charged shall include an assault against the person, the jury may acquit of the felony and find a verdict for the assault against the person indicted, if the evidence warrants such finding; and the statute further provides that, where the conviction is for the inferior offense, the court shall have the power to imprison the person so found guilty of an assault for any time now allowed by law, where in cases of conviction the like punishment might be imposed, if the indictment had been originally for an assault of a like character. The Legislature did not mean to create separate and distinct criminal offenses, such as assault with a deadly weapon, assault with serious damage, assault upon a woman when the man is over 18 years of age, or any other kind of assault which is aggravated in its circumstances or of serious and lasting damage in its consequences. There is but one offense—the crime of assault—and the varying degrees of aggravation were mentioned only for the purpose of graduating the punishment. To hold otherwise would defeat the manifest intention of the Legislature. It must be observed that the language of the statute is that, if the indictment is for rape, or any felony whatsoever, "and the crime charged shall include an assault against the person," the jury "may find a verdict against the defendant for assault." It does not describe the kind of assault, but refers to an assault generally, and without regard to its degree of punishment under the law. If the assault is of that kind, which, if committed with intent to ravish or to commit any other felony, would subject him to punishment for the offense so charged, if convicted of the same, then, subject to the rule already stated, he can be punished at the discretion of the court, if convicted of the assault only. Can it be doubted that this assault is of that kind, unless it is held that a man, or boy over 18 years old, cannot be convicted of an assault with intent to ravish, or to commit any other felony? It is best, and certainly safe, that the court should require the jury, under a special issue submitted, to find the facts necessary to determine the grade of punishment, and we strongly commend this practice to the judges. There are one or more cases in which this same suggestion has been made.

The recent decisions in State v. Shuford, 152 N. C. 809, 67 S. E. 923, and Ex parte Holley, 154 N. C. 163, 69 S. E. 872, illustrate the view we have taken. In the last-cited case it was held, as it was in the Shuford Case, that, while the statute graded the punishment of larceny according to the value of the stolen goods, it did not create any new offense, and the value of the property taken was not an essential element of the crime, but the provision was inserted in the statute only for the purpose of ameliorating the punishment, if it is shown on the trial by the defendant, or if it otherwise appears, that the goods are of less value than $20. And so in this case the age of the man is mentioned merely to aggravate the offense and to increase the maximum of punishment. A male infant under the age of 14 years is presumed, at common law, incapable to commit a rape; but a boy 14 years old could, at common law, commit an unlawful assault upon a woman. If he is indicted for the crime, is it necessary to state his age? The courts of all jurisdictions have answered that question in the negative. The matter contained in the last proviso was not intended to be, and is not, descriptive of the offense, as in State v. Connor, 142 N. C. 702, 55 S. E. 787, and State v. Burton, 138 N. C. 576, 50 S. E. 214, but it was intended to leave it to the judge, upon conviction of an assault, to say what the sentence shall be.

The authorities to the effect that it is not necessary to allege the age in the indictment, even where the age of capacity is raised by statute from 14 years—the common-law limit—to 16 years or more, are very numerous; the age being held to be a matter of defense. "The office of a proviso generally is, either to except something from the enacting clause, to qualify or restrain its generality, or to exclude some possible ground of misinterpretation of its extending to cases not intended to be brought within its purview." Potter's Dwarries on Statutes, page 118; State v. Goulden, 134 N. C. 743, 47 S. E. 450; Huddleston v. Francis, 124 Ill. 195, 16 N. E. 243; and Sutton v. People, 145 Ill. 279, 34 N. E. 420, and authorities cited. In that case it is said: "At common law, a boy under 14 years of age was conclusively presumed incapable of committing a rape, and that strictness is adhered to in some jurisdictions in this country; but it has never been held that, in charging the crime as defined at common law, it was necessary to aver that the accused was, at the time, of the age of 14 years or upwards"—citing 2 Wharton on Criminal Law, § 1458; Commonwealth v. Scannel, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 547; People v. Ah Yek, 29 Cal. 575; Word v. State, 12 Tex. App. 174; Cornelius v. State, 13 Tex. App. 349. In Rex v. Jarvis, 1 East, 443, Lord Mansfield said: "It is a known distinction that what comes by way of proviso in a statute must be insisted on, by way of defense, by the party accused; but, where exceptions are in the enacting part of the law, it must appear in the charge that the defendant does not fall within any of them." It must be borne in mind that the proviso to Revisal, § 3620, inserted by the act of 1911, c. 193, does not refer directly to the enacting clause of the statute, but to a former proviso in the section, which withdrew certain assaults, simple in their character, from the operation of the enacting clause; and the proviso of 1911 was merely passed to prevent assaults by a man, or a boy over 18 years of age, upon a woman, from being included in the first proviso of the section. It was clearly the purpose of the Legislature to clarify the meaning of the section, and it was not intended to create or define any new offense, but the new clause related exclusively to the degree of punishment for such aggravated assault, it still being an assault as formerly; and by the terms of the last proviso it was placed in the same class with all other assaults, attended with circumstances enhancing defendant's guilt, and calling for a greater penalty. The case of State v. Knighten, 39 Ore. 63, 64 Pac. 866, 87 Am. St. Rep. 647, is so much in point and bears such a close resemblance to the case at bar, that we are permitted to quote liberally from it:

"The statute provides that, 'if any person over the age of sixteen years shall carnally know any female child under the age of sixteen years,' etc., he shall be deemed guilty of rape. It is argued that under this statute the age of the defendant is an essential ingredient of the crime, and must be averred in the indictment. But, as we understand the statute, its only effect is to raise the age of capacity of the male from 14, as it was at common law, to 16 years. At common law, a boy under 14 years of age was presumed to be physically incapable of committing the crime of rape, but (as we have seen) it was never held that it was necessary to allege the age of the defendant in an indictment for that crime. 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (1st Ed.) 315; Commonwealth v. Scannel, 11 Cush. [Mass.] 547; Sutton v. People, 145 Ill. 279, 34 N. E. 420; State v. Ward, 35 Minn. 182, 28 N. W. 192. Nor is it necessary under the statute. If the defendant was below the requisite age, it is a matter of defense. Mr. Bishop says the age of the defendant need not be set out, 'though the statutory words are "any person of the age of fourteen years and upwards, who shall have carnal knowledge." If he is below 14, it is simply matter for defense.' Bishop, Stat. Crimes (2d Ed.) § 482. The statute of California provided that 'any person of the age of fourteen years and upward, who shall have carnal knowledge of any female child under the age of ten years, either with or without her consent, shall be adjudged guilty of the crime of rape;' and in People v. Ah Yek, 29 Cal. 576, it was held that an indictment, silent as to the age of the defendant, was good. Mr. Justice Sawyer, speaking for the court, said: 'It does not appear upon the face of the indictment that defendant was under 14 years of age, and we see no better reason for averring that he is over 14 than in any other criminal case for averring that the party charged is of such an age as to render him capable in law of committing the crime. His capacity to commit the crime is as much an element in the crime in one case as in the other.' See, also, People v. Wessel, 98 Cal. 352, 33 Pac. 216. The statute of Vermont also made it an offense, punishable the same as rape, for a person over the age of 16 years to carnally know a female person under the age of 14 years, with or without her consent; and in State v. Sullivan, 68 Vt. 540, 35 Atl. 479, it was held that it was not necessary to allege in the indictment the age of the defendant, but that, if he was under 16 years of age, it was a mere matter of defense. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the indictment is sufficient."

There are numerous authorities sustaining that view of the law, and several of them are reviewed in the case already cited. State v. McNair, 93 N. C. 628, has some bearing upon the question, although not directly in point. It recognizes that the age of the defendant in such cases as this is a matter for proof by him, if not descriptive of the offense, as in State v. Connor, supra.

But Revisal, § 3269, provides that "upon the trial of any indictment, the prisoner may be convicted of the crime charged therein, or of a less degree of the same crime." This language is broad enough to cover the case. Under that section, when the charge is of an assault with intent to ravish, the prisoner may be convicted of an assault upon a woman, and if it is found that he was over 18 years of age at the time the offense was committed he may be punished, as for an aggravated assault, under Revisal, §§ 3268, 3620, whether his age is stated in the indictment or not. State v. West, 39 Minn. 321, 40 N. W. 249; State v. Baldridge, 105 Mo. 319, 16 S. W. 890; Bolling v. State, 98 Ala. 80, 12 South. 782; Storrs v. State, 129 Ala. 101, 29 South. 778. It has frequently been held by courts in states having statutes substantially like ours that, upon the indictment for an assault with intent to kill, or to commit rape, the defendant may be convicted of an aggravated assault, under a statute creating that as a distinct offense, although it is not by that name alleged in the indictment; it being considered within the description of the other crime, which is properly averred. Pittman v. State, 25 Fla. 648, 6 South. 437; State v. Robinson, 31 S. C. 453, 10 S. E. 101. In the case of State v. Sullivan, 68 Vt. 540, 35 Atl. 479, the court held that it was unnecessary to allege the age of the defendant to be over 16 years, as provided by the statute of that state, and that, under an indictment, not alleging such age, for an assault with intent, forcibly and against her consent, to ravish a child less than 14 years old, a conviction, upon evidence, for an assault under the statute, which provides for the punishment of one over 16 years of age, who carnally knows a female under 14 years of age, even with her consent, was proper. See, also, Commonwealth v. Scannel, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 547; Bishop, St. Cr. (2d Ed.) § 482; Wilkinson v. Dutton, 113 E. C. L. (3 Best & S.) 821. Several of the states have passed statutes creating a separate and distinct offense by the name of "assault by an adult upon a female," and some of these courts have held that it is necessary, for that reason, that the fact of being an adult should be alleged in the indictment; it being a necessary ingredient of the offense. Blackburn v. State, 39 Tex. 153. But courts hold, in regard to facts similar to those in this case, and this seems to be the better accepted doctrine, that there is a presumption of capacity (capax doli), or that a defendant is an adult, or of sufficient age to know right from wrong, and it is incumbent upon him to show the contrary, or, at least, that he is under that age, say between 7 and 14 years, when the burden may shift to the state to prove that he actually had the capacity to know the true quality and nature of his act; that is, whether it is forbidden by morality and law, or not. This is not like the cases of State v. Lanier, 88 N. C. 658, and State v. Wilson, 101 N. C. 730, 7 S. E. 872, in which it was held that an indictment for embezzlement must negative the fact of defendant being an apprentice, or under the age of 16 years. Those exceptions are contained in the body of the enactment, and are descriptive of the offense.

[2] Defendant's counsel argued that, under our numerous decisions in regard to the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace in criminal matters, it was held to be necessary that the indictment should allege the facts and circumstances showing jurisdiction in the court, as that an assault was committed with a deadly weapon, or with intent to commit a rape, or more than 12 months before the finding of the bill, but that, where there is a conviction of a simple assault, even under a bill alleging the use of a deadly weapon, or that serious damage was done, the punishment is limited to $50 fine or 30 days imprisonment. The conviction in this case, though, was not for a simple assault, but for a very aggravated one. The defendant can gain nothing by this argument. If a simple assault was charged in the bill, the superior court had jurisdiction, for it may be that no "justice of the peace had proceeded to take official cognizance of the crime within 12 months after its commission," in which case the superior court could retain jurisdiction, as the burden is upon the defendant to show the fact that jurisdiction had been taken by a magistrate within said time; it being matter of defense. Pell's Revisal 1908, § 1427, and cases in notes.

[3] So when the indictment charged an assault with a deadly weapon, describing the same, or with serious damage, with proper averments as to the extent of the damage, the superior court can punish, upon conviction of a simple assault, nothing more appearing; and it is only where there is a conviction of a simple assault, under an indictment which upon its face shows jurisdiction in the superior court, and the further allegation or finding that the 12 months since the commission of the offense had not elapsed, that the jurisdiction of the superior court is ousted. Pell's Revisal, supra. But we do not understand how the decisions upon those questions can help the defendant, as, upon a bill charging an offense clearly within the jurisdiction of the court, he has been convicted of an aggravated assault. We have not laid any stress upon the provision as to offenses committed within one mile of the place where the court is held, and during its session, as it was not of sufficient consequence to require more than passing notice.

In no view of the case was there any error committed by Associate Justice Allen, when he refused to discharge the prisoner, but remanded him, as set forth in his order.

No error.

ZACHARY v. NORTH CAROLINA R. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 9, 1911.)

1. COMMERCE (§ 27*)—CARRIERS—RAILROADS—INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

A railroad corporation whose tracks lay wholly within a certain state did not, by leasing its tracks to a railroad corporation engaged in interstate commerce, itself engage in interstate commerce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Cent. Dig. § 25; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 259*)—OPERATION—LEASES—LIABILITY OF LESSOR.

The lessor of a railroad is responsible for all negligence of its lessee in the conduct of the business of the road, regardless of whether such acts occur in intrastate or interstate commerce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 802-816; Dec. Dig. § 259.*]

3. COMMERCE (§ 27*)—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY.

A fireman, whose run was wholly within the state, having oiled and prepared his engine, which was not then attached to any train, was killed while crossing the tracks to his boarding house for a personal purpose. His engine was to have hauled some freight, which was interstate commerce, but the road upon which it operated was not an interstate carrier, though the lessee of the road was engaged in such commerce. Held, that the federal employer's liability act (Act April 22, 1908, c. 149, § 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1171]), which applies only to a carrier by railroad while engaged in interstate commerce, and only to an employé suffering injury while employed in such commerce, did not apply, for the fireman was not then engaged in interstate commerce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Commerce, Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

4. RAILROADS (§ 282*)—INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRACKS—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE.

In an action for the death of a locomotive fireman, killed while crossing the tracks in a railroad yard, going from his engine to his boarding house by the usual path, evidence of negligence creating a liability for his death held sufficient to go to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

5. RAILROADS (§ 282*)—INJURY TO LICENSEE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where a fireman, after cleaning and oiling his engine, which was not yet attached to the train, left it, and in crossing the tracks to his boarding house was struck and killed by a switch engine, moving, tender forward, without any light or flagman, and another engine nearby was making a very loud noise, and the night was very dark, the fireman was not, as a matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence; it being the custom of the employés to cross the tracks as he did.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 282.*]

6. TRIAL (§§ 159, 168*)—TAKING CASE FROM JURY—NONSUIT.

Where, in an action for the death of one killed by a train, it appears from the evidence of the plaintiff that his intestate was guilty of contributory negligence, the court may grant a nonsuit, or direct a verdict for defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. §§ 159, 168.*]

7. RAILROADS (§ 282*)—INJURIES TO PERSONS ON TRACKS—LOOK AND LISTEN RULE.

While a railroad employé must use reasonable care in crossing the railroad tracks, his failure to look and listen before crossing such tracks, in the performance of his duty, is not, as a matter of law, contributory negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Daniels, Judge.

Action by James A. Zachary, as administrator of Herbert H. Burgess, deceased, against the North Carolina Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The action was for damages for the negligent killing of Herbert H. Burgess, a fireman in the employment of the Southern Railway Company, the lessee of the defendant, at Selma, N. C., April 29, 1909.

These issues were submitted to the jury:

"(1) Was the intestate of the plaintiff killed by the negligence of the lessee of the defendant as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Did the intestate of the plaintiff contribute to his death by his own negligence? Answer: No.

"(3) What amount, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: $2,000."

Wilson & Ferguson and John K. Graves, for appellant. John A. Barringer, G. S. Bradshaw, and Thomas H. Calvert, for appellee.

BROWN, J. There are 23 assignments of error in the record; none of them relating to the reception or rejection of evidence. These assignments present for consideration the three principal contentions of the defendant: (1) That the act of Congress of April 22, 1908, known as the federal employer's liability act, applies, and that the cause should have been determined under the provisions of that act. (2) That there is no sufficient evidence of negligence. (3) That, in any view of the evidence, the intestate was guilty of such contributory negligence as, under the law of this state, bars recovery.

Does the federal act apply?

Plaintiff's intestate was fireman of engine 862, which was standing at the time of the occurrence on the cinder track at Selma, N. C. He had been oiling his engine and preparing it to take a train from Selma to Greensboro, which was made up at Selma. He started across the tracks to go to his boarding house before leaving, and was struck and killed by a local switch engine, which at the time was backing down the main line for the purpose of cutting out two cars, which had come in from Pinners Point, Va., on train 72, for transportation to Greensboro, N. C. Train 72 is known as the Pinners Point train, via Selma, to Goldsboro, N. C. Engine 862 was not attached to any cars at the time, but was being prepared to haul a train from Selma to Greensboro, composed of miscellaneous cars. All cars brought in from Pinners Point, Va., by train 72, for points west of Selma, are included in this train. We are of opinion that the federal act does not apply, and that the case was properly tried under the state law. The act applies only to a carrier by railroad while engaging in interstate commerce, and only to an employé "suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce."

[1] The point was not discussed on the argument or in the briefs, but it occurs to us that the North Carolina Railroad is not an interstate railroad; nor is that corporation itself engaged in interstate commerce. Its tracks and property lie wholly within the state of North Carolina, extending from Goldsboro to Charlotte. It is true the tracks and property are leased to the Southern Railway Company, a corporation of another state, that is engaged in both inter and intra state commerce, but that does not necessarily make the North Carolina Railroad Company an interstate carrier, within the meaning of the act of Congress, any more than A. would be made a wholesale grocery merchant, because he had leased his warehouse to B., who conducted such business in it, and had assumed responsibility for B.'s debts. The corporation, known as the North Carolina Railroad Company, is in existence, has its officers and directors, receives its annual rents from its lessee, the Southern Railway Company, and distributes them among its stockholders; but it is not an interstate carrier, within the meaning of the federal act.

[2] It is also true that this court has held, in Logan v. Railroad, 116 N. C. 941, 21 S. E. 959, that this lessor is responsible for all acts of negligence of its lessee occurring in the conduct of business on the lessor's road; it matters not what kind of commerce the lessee is engaged in at the time. But that is because a railroad corporation cannot escape its responsibility by leasing its road. It is still liable for its lessee's acts, of commission and omission, whether they occur in interstate or intrastate commerce, although the lessor is not actually engaged in either.

[3] We do not think the federal act applies, for the reason that the deceased at the time when killed was not employed by the Southern Railway, the lessee, in interstate commerce. At the time he was killed, the deceased was not engaged in an act of any kind of commerce. He was on his way to his boarding house for a purpose entirely personal to himself, and not on the carrier's business. The deceased had oiled and prepared his engine to make the run from Selma to Greensboro, points within this state. The engine was stationary and had not been attached to any cars. The deceased was on his way to his boarding house, and was killed by a local switch engine, which was then unattached to any cars, but going for two cars from Pinners Point, Va., for the purpose of attaching them to the train that engine 862 was expected to pull. So far as the evidence shows, the deceased nor his engine had ever been engaged in any other work, except this local run from Selma to Greensboro. If the contention of the defendant can be maintained, then it follows that all employes of railways that do an interstate business are necessarily employed in interstate commerce. The ticket seller, who sells a ticket to a traveler going beyond the state, the car cleaner who cleans the car he is to travel in, the man who loads the engine tender with coal which is to pull him, and the gatekeeper who examines his ticket and passes him onto his car, are all employed in interstate commerce.

The employer's liability act of 1906 (Act June 11, 1906, c. 3073, 34 Stat. 232 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1148]) was declared repugnant to the Constitution, because by its terms it embraced all employes of a railroad, interstate and intrastate, and that the two were so interblended in the statute that they were incapable of separation. Employer's Liability Cases, 207 U. S. 463, 28 Sup. Ct. 141, 52 L. Ed. 297. If the contention of the learned counsel for defendant be well founded, then the subsequent act of 1908 would apply to all employes of a railway engaged in both kinds of commerce, however remotely they are connected with it. This would accomplish the very end which it would seem could not be accomplished by the federal Congress under the first act. This contention would extend the power of Congress to almost every conceivable subject of railway transportation however inherently local, and would destroy the authority of the states over matters which, from the beginning, have been under their control.

[4, 5] Was the evidence of negligence sufficient to justify the court in submitting the matter to the jury? We think it was. The evidence offered by plaintiff tends to prove that the deceased was compelled to cross the several tracks of the railroad to go from his engine to his residence; that it was customary for all employes to pass to and fro over these tracks; that it was dark at the time, and the switching engine was running backwards, tender foremost, from 15 to 20 miles an hour. Two witnesses testify that there was no light whatever on the end of the tender that was moving forward, nor any flagman there. This is ample evidence of negligence to go to the jury. Ray v. Railroad, 141 N. C. 84, 53 S. E. 622; Smith v. Railroad, 132 N. C. 819, 44 S. E. 663; Purnell v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 832, 29 S. E. 953. Was the plaintiff's intestate, in any view of the evidence, guilty of such contributory negligence as bars recovery? We think not, and that his honor properly submitted that matter to the consideration of the jury.

If nothing appeared in evidence, except the testimony of Oliver, the engineer of the switching engine that killed the intestate, it may be that the court might well have sustained the defendant's contention. But there are many facts and circumstances in evidence which tend to exculpate the intestate, and to explain his conduct. The intestate was evidently in a hurry to go to his residence and return to his engine; he was compelled to cross six tracks; there was no other way; it was the universal custom for the employes to cross these tracks, passing to and fro from their places of residence on the south side; the big freight engine 719 was standing on a track about eight feet from the main line, with its blower on, making a very loud noise, so that the bell of the switching engine could not be heard by the intestate, who at the time came from behind No. 719, and started to step on main track, and was killed by the switch engine. The engineer of that engine says that the intestate did not look, and that if he had looked he could have seen the switch engine. That is the construction put by the engineer upon intestate's conduct from the engineer's point of view; but, under all the circumstances, taking the evidence as a whole, it ought not to be held to be conclusive. The intestate could not well hear the ringing bell or the approach of the switch engine because of the blowing off of 719. It was dark, and possibly he could not see the switch engine. He had the right to rely upon the invariable requirements that an approaching engine will display a headlight at night. Had there been a headlight, he would probably have seen it before he stepped upon the track. The absence of it may have misled him, and lured him to his death.

[7] While an employe must exercise reasonable care, the rule that one who crosses a railroad track must, as a matter of law, look and listen before doing so does not apply in all its strictness to one who is employed in a railroad yard, and whose duties make it necessary for him to go frequently upon the tracks. Wolf v. Railroad, 54 N. C. 571, 70 S. E. 993; Sherrill v. Railroad, 140 N. C. 255, 52 S. E. 940; Weiss v. Bethlehem Iron Co., 88 Fed. 23, 31 C. C. A. 363; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Jackson, 78 Ark. 100, 93 S. W. 746, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Peterson, 156 Ind. 364, 59 N. E. 1044; Shoner v. Pennsylvania Co., 130 Ind. 170, 23 N. E. 616, 29 N. E. 775; McMarshall v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 80 Iowa, 757, 45 N. W. 1065, 20 Am. St. Rep. 445; Jordan v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 58 Minn. 8, 59 N. W. 633, 40 Am. St. Rep. 486. It is well said by Mr. Justice Manning, in his clear and well-considered opinion in Farris v. Southern Ry., 151 N. C. 483, 66 S. E. 457: "While we are in no wise inclined to relieve the person crossing the tracks of a railroad from the imperative duty of observing the measure of caution so well established for his safety by the well-considered decisions of this and other courts, yet 'it cannot always be said that he is guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, because he did not continue to look and listen at all times continuously for approaching trains, where he was misled by the company, or his attention was rightfully directed to something else as well' (3 Elliott on Railroads, § 1166a), or that he failed to look in opposite directions at the same moment of time."

Taking into consideration the whole evidence, and weighing the conditions and circumstances surrounding the intestate, we are of opinion that his honor properly submitted the question of contributory negligence to the jury, and overruled the motion to nonsuit. The charge is a full and clear presentation of both sides of the controversy, and we find no error in it of which the defendant can justly complain.

No error.

ELLETT v. ELLETT.

1. DIVORCE (§ 129*)—ACTIONS.—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Plaintiff in divorce need not prove adultery by clear, cogent, and convincing evidence; a preponderance of the evidence being sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 411-441; Dec. Dig. § 129.*]

2. EVIDENCE (§ 596*)—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—CIVIL ACTIONS.

While in criminal cases the state must prove the material facts beyond a reasonable doubt, or to the jury's satisfaction, in civil cases the party having the burden of proof need only prove the material facts by a preponderance of the evidence, except in cases of an equitable nature, in which the facts would have formerly been found by the chancellor, such as where it is sought to reform a written instrument, or prove the terms of a lost will, etc., when the evidence must be clear, strong and convincing.

3. DIVORCE (§ 54*)—GROUNDS—ADULTERY—DEFENSE.

The fact that a husband willfully abandoned his wife would not justify her adultery, so as to prevent him from procuring a divorce; she being entitled under the statute to alimony and a limited divorce, if abandoned.

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 278*)—SEPARATION AGREEMENTS—VALIDITY.

A separation agreement is not of itself void, because against public policy; the law now recognizing the validity of such agreements under certain conditions, as shown by Code, § 1831 (now Revisal 1905, § 2116), providing that every woman living separate from her husband, under a deed of separation, shall be held a free trader.

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE (§ 283*)—ACTIONS FOR SUPPORT—ABANDONED WIFE.

Under Code, § 1292 (now Revisal 1905, § 1567), providing that, if any husband separate himself from his wife, and fail to provide her with necessary subsistence, she may apply to the judge of the superior court to have a reasonable subsistence secured for her and her children from the husband's estate, an abandoned wife may sue her husband to compel the support of herself and her children, without asking for a divorce.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Husband and Wife, Cent. Dig. §§ 1062-1073; Dec. Dig. § 283.*]

Hoke, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rockingham County; Adams, Judge.

Action by F. M. Ellett against Elizabeth B. Ellett. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

F. L. Fuller, C. O. McMichael, A. D. Ivie, and W. P. Bynum, for appellant. A. L. Brooks, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This is an action for an absolute divorce, brought by the husband against the wife.

[1, 2] The seventh issue was as follows: "(7) Did the defendant commit adultery with one George B. Gatling, as alleged in the complaint?" On this issue, the judge charged: "The plaintiff must show such adulterous intercourse by evidence which is clear, cogent, and convincing. If you find from the evidence, which is clear, cogent, and convincing, that the defendant committed adultery with George B. Gatling, your answer to the seventh issue will be, 'Yes.' If not, your answer to the seventh issue will be, 'No.'" The exception of the plaintiff to this charge must be sustained. In criminal cases the burden is upon the plaintiff to prove the charge "beyond a reasonable doubt," or "to the satisfaction of the jury." But in civil cases the rule is that the party upon whom lies the burden of proof is called upon to establish his allegation merely "by the preponderance of the evidence." There are some exceptions to this in matters of an equitable nature, as to which the evidence must be "clear, strong, and convincing." For instance, when a party asserts and endeavors to prove by parol that a deed which is absolute on its face was in fact a mortgage. 8 Encyc. Ev. 714; Watkins v. Williams, 123 N. C. 174, 31 S. E. 388; Porter v. White, 128 N. C. 45, 38 S. E. 24, and cases cited therein. The same rule as to intensity of proof applies, also, where a party seeks the reformation of a written instrument. Ely v. Early, 94 N. C. 1; Kornegay v. Everett, 99 N. C. 30, 5 S. E. 418; Hemphill v. Hemphill, 99 N. C. 436, 6 S. E. 201; Warehouse Co. v. Ozment, 132 N. C. 846, 44 S. E. 681. Also the same intensity of proof is required to prove the terms of a lost will, and there are a few other instances. But they are all cases in which formerly the facts would have been found by the chancellor. Such intensity of proof is not required as to the issues in divorce, which is an action at law. Certainly it has never been required in this state.

It is true that in Kinney v. Kinney, 149 N. C. 321, 63 S. E. 97, the judge charged the jury that the evidence of adultery must be "strong, convincing, and conclusive," but, notwithstanding this erroneous charge, the jury found the issue "Yes," and therefore there was no appeal by the plaintiff which would have presented the question as to the correctness of that part of the charge.

[3] The plaintiff contends, however, that, inasmuch as the jury found "Yes," in response to the eighth issue, "Did the plaintiff, before the time of the alleged adultery, maliciously turn the defendant out of doors?" that the error in the instruction as to the intensity of the proof on the seventh issue was harmless error. But this proposition is neither good law nor good morals. There is no legal or moral reason why a woman who has been abandoned by her husband, shall be privileged to commit adultery any more than if she were a widow or a single woman. It is true that, prior to the act of 1872 (now Rev. § 1561 [2]), such was deemed the law in this state (Moss v. Moss, 24 N. C. 55), and that the same was practically reiterated after that act in Tew v. Tew, 80 N. C. 316, 30 Am. Rep. 84, but, as was strongly intimated in Steele v. Steele, 104 N. C. 636, 10 S. E. 707, the latter decision cannot be sustained, "and was evidently tinged by the restrictive ideas of the older law." The court further says in the latter case that the reason of the former law was that the wife, having no property (which at that time all belonged to the husband, as the law was formerly), might be forced, and probably would be, to form a new connection, in order to obtain a support, "but now, under our statutes of 1869, 1874, and 1879 she can compel her husband to provide her adequate support, both for herself and her children." Steele v. Steele in effect overruled Tew v. Tew on that point.

[4, §] Nor is an agreement for separation, as formerly, ipso facto void, because "against law and public policy." As Smith, C. J., pointed out in Sparks v. Sparks, 94 N. C. 532, the law now recognizes the validity, under certain conditions, of such a deed by providing in Code, § 1831 (now Rev. 2116), "that every woman living separate from her husband * * * under a deed of separation, executed by said husband and wife and registered, * * * shall be deemed and held * * * a free trader," etc. Sparks v. Sparks, supra, has been cited as authority in Smith v. King, 107 N. C. 273, 12 S. E. 57; Cram v. Cram, 116 N. C. 294, 21 S. E. 197. Besides, under Code, § 1292 (now Rev. 1567), the wife, who has been abandoned or deserted by her husband, can sue for a support for herself and children, without asking for a divorce. Cram v. Cram, 116 N. C. 283, 21 S. E. 197; Skittletharpe v. Skittletharpe, 130 N. C. 72, 40 S. E. 851; Bidwell v. Bidwell, 139 N. C. 409, 52 S. E. 55, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 324, 111 Am. St. Rep. 797. Our older authorities, therefore, which made the adultery of the wife, committed after desertion or abandonment by her husband, no ground for divorce, are without the reason which gave support to such rulings. They have now as little support in law as they ever had in morals.

The remedy which the statute gives to a wife, abandoned or deserted by her husband, is alimony and divorce a mensa et thoro. It does not privilege either one to commit adultery. If she does, the husband is entitled to a divorce. This was the ecclesiastical law. Nelson on Divorce, § 430. His wrong does not authorize her to commit a greater one. She can go back to live with him after his desertion; but he cannot be required to live with her after her adultery. The American decisions are conflicting, being based upon statutes of varying tenor.

Besides, in this case, the husband placed the wife in a sanitarium for the cure of her habit of drunkenness, and paid her, or for her benefit, regularly $50 per month for her support under the agreement of separation. He also paid her $400 per year rent for a home worth $5,000, which he had given her, and supported the children himself. She was not therefore subjected to temptation by the necessity of procuring a support, which was the reason for the rulings of the court in Tew v. Tew, 80 N. C. 316, 30 Am. Rep. 84, and cases prior thereto.

It may be that on another trial the jury will again find the wife was not guilty, but the plaintiff is entitled to a new trial, to the end that the issue may be submitted under proper instructions as to the intensity of proof required to establish the charge. Error.

ALLEN, J., concurs in result.

HOKE, J. (concurring in the result). I concur in the decision awarding a new trial in this case for the error in the charge of the court on the degree of proof required to establish the seventh issue, and it may be that there are no facts amounting to legal evidence tending to show that plaintiff maliciously turned defendant out of doors. I do not agree to the position, however, nor do I think that it has the support of any authoritative decision, that a husband, who has wrongfully abandoned his wife, may successfully maintain an action for divorce a vinculo on account of her adultery. Under a long line of well-considered precedents, relief in such case was denied, not because the act of the wife was justifiable—it was never so regarded—but because the husband, on account of his own conduct in wrongfully withdrawing his association and protection from the wife, was not in a position to ask relief from the court. Neither the moral nor the legal aspect of this position is changed, because the wife may, under certain conditions, now obtain alimony. The doctrine and the principle upon which it rests lie deeper, and, in my opinion, should now and always prevail.

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by Savannah Sexton, administratrix of U. E. Sexton, deceased, against the Greensboro Life Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

Civil action to recover on a policy of life insurance issued by the defendant on the life of U. E. Sexton. The policy is for $1,000, numbered 742, with an accident clause requiring the insurer to pay double the amount in the event of death by external, violent, and accidental means. The insured was killed in a railway wreck December 15, 1909.

These issues were submitted to the jury, to which defendant excepted, and tendered other issues:

"(1) Did the defendant issue and deliver to the plaintiff's intestate the policy No. 742 sued on? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Is U. E. Sexton dead, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(3) Did the plaintiff's intestate pay or cause to be paid the annual premiums required, and within the time stipulated by the policy? Answer: Yes.

"(4) Did said policy lapse, as alleged in the answer? Answer: No.

"(5) What sum, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover of the defendant? Answer: $2,000, less $60, with interest from date of note."

The following issues were tendered by the defendant:

"(1) Did the defendant issue and deliver to the plaintiff the policy No. 742 sued on?

"(2) Did the plaintiff's intestate die on the 15th day of December, 1909, as alleged in the complaint?

"(3) Did the defendant accept, in settlement of the premium of $34.57, due August 1, 1909, a cash payment and the intestate's note for $18.17, dated August, 1909, and due November 1, 1909?

"(4) If such note was given, was it paid at maturity?

"(5) What sum, if anything, is the plaintiff entitled to recover?"

The court rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed.

Walser & Walser and King & Kimball, for appellant. E. E. Raper and McCrary & McCrary, for appellee.

BROWN, J. In respect to the issues, we are of opinion that under those submitted by the court every defense can be presented; but, as the case is to be tried again, it is well to say that those tendered by the defendant present rather more directly to the minds of the jury the real fact in controversy.

The controversy is over the payment of the premium, due August 1, 1909, of $34.57. If that was paid, the plaintiff is entitled to recover. If it was not paid, or payment waived, plaintiff is not entitled to recover. The evidence shows that on September 2, 1909, the insured paid in cash on this premium $16.40, and gave his note for $18.17, of which the following is a copy, dated the day the premium became due: "$18.17. August 1, 1909. Ninety days after date, for value received, I promise to pay to the order of Greensboro Life Insurance Company eighteen and 17/100 dollars, without discount or defalcation, with interest at 6 per cent. per annum, at ——— being the premium due August 1, 1909, on policy No. 742 in said company. Should this note with interest not be paid when due, said policy shall immediately become null and void without notice, subject to the non-forfeiture provisions contained in the policy, and in that event any money paid on account of premium for which this note is given shall become the property of the company. U. E. Sexton. [Signature of Person Insured.] Denton, N. C."

His honor charged the jury, as copied from the record: "Now, as I told you, by consent you will answer the first and second issues, 'Yes.' Now, as to the third issue, 'Did the defendant accept, in settlement of the premium of $34.57, due August 1, 1909, a cash payment and the intestate's note for $18.17, dated August, 1909, and due November 1, 1909?' the only premium that is in controversy is the premium that was payable on the 1st of August, 1909. Now, you find the facts from the evidence, and if you find from the evidence that the intestate, U. E. Sexton, paid the premium by giving his note and cash accompanying the note, and that the company accepted that as a payment on the premium, not conditionally, but accepted it as a payment of the annual premium, then it would be your duty to answer that issue, 'Yes'; but if you find from the evidence that the note and part of the premium, due the 1st of August, 1909, was not accepted and treated by the company as a payment, and you find that that note was never paid at all after the death of the intestate, or before his death, why, you should answer that issue, 'No.'"

[1, 2] There are two objections to that charge, both of which must be sustained. There was no such issue submitted to the jury as the one recited in the charge as the third issue; that is, the third issue tendered by the defendant, and which was refused. There must be some mistake in printing this record, or in copying the charge of his honor, for the record does not disclose that the third issue tendered by defendant was ever substituted for the other. But the chief and most important exception is that there is no evidence that the defendant accepted the note as a payment of the premium. It is merely an extension of the time of payment. In express terms, the note on its face declares that the policy is void, if the note is not paid when due. This note is similar to the one construed in Ferebee v. Insurance Co., 68 N. C. 11. Cooley says: "It is commonly stipulated by insurance companies that if a note is accepted for a premium a failure to pay the note at maturity shall terminate the insurance. When the policy, or the policy and the note, contained a stipulation to this effect, a failure to pay at maturity a note given for a premium will work a forfeiture of insurance." Cooley's Briefs on Insurance, vol. 3, p. 2269, and cases cited; Pitt v. Insurance Co., 100 Mass. 500.

[3] The plaintiff was permitted to introduce this receipt in evidence, as Exhibit C: "Greensboro Life Insurance Company. Greensboro, N. C., Sept. 13, 1909. Received from the holder of policy No. 742 issued by this company on the life of Ulysses E. Sexton $34.57, being the annual premium due August 1, 1909. Premiums are payable at the home office, but may be paid to an authorized agent in exchange for an official receipt countersigned by that agent. Otherwise no receipt will be binding. Julian Price, Secretary. Countersigned by C. Scarborough." On the reverse side of the said Exhibit C is the indorsement: "Pay to the order of Shuford National Bank, Newton, N. C. [Signed] Greensboro Life Insurance Company. W. E. Allen, President." The defendant in apt time objected to the introduction of the paper writing, called "Exhibit C," purporting to be a receipt for premium on said policy, for that the said receipt was never delivered to the plaintiff's intestate, but was produced by the defendant at the trial, in open court, in response to notice, having been retained by the defendant and attached to the intestate's note for above premium. Objection overruled; exception by defendant. The exception must be sustained. This receipt was pinned to the aforesaid note, evidently ready for delivery whenever the note should be paid. It was in defendant's possession, and produced in court by it, by order of the judge, and was introduced by plaintiff as evidence of payment of the premium. Had the receipt been in the plaintiff's possession, it would be very strong evidence of payment, but, as it was in defendant's possession, and had never been delivered, it is no evidence of payment, and the introduction of it as evidence by the plaintiff, under the circumstances, was inadmissible.

EARNHARDT et al. v. BOARD OF COM'RS OF TOWN OF LEXINGTON.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 377*)—PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS—CHANGE IN GRADE OF STREET—LIABILITY TO ABUTTING OWNERS.

An abutting owner may not recover damages for diminution in the value of his property caused by a duly authorized change of grade in the street which has been established, unless the municipal authorities proceed or have the work done in a negligent manner.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 32*)—LIMITATIONS APPLICABLE—INJURIES TO ABUTTING PROPERTY.

An action by an abutting owner for damages for the negligent construction of a street improvement by municipal authorities accrues at the time the work is negligently done and the abutting property is thereby sensibly impaired; and an action for the recovery of the damages in one suit is barred in three years by Revisal 1906, § 395, subd. 5.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Cent. Dig. § 143; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by M. C. and L. A. Earnhardt against the Board of Commissioners of the Town of Lexington. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Plaintiff alleged that defendant had changed the grade of a public street in front of his home, and in doing this and in the construction of the sidewalk had so done the work that, whenever there was a hard or beating rain, a lot of water was collected and thrown in bulk upon his premises and the residence thereon, causing serious damage to his property and the family residents thereon. Defendant denied the wrong, and plead the three-year statute of limitations thereto, in case same should be established. At the close of plaintiff's evidence, and again at close of entire testimony, there was motion of nonsuit. Last motion sustained.

McCrary & McCrary, for appellants. E. E. Raper, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] It is well recognized with us that an abutting owner may not as a rule recover damages for diminution in the value of his property, caused by a duly authorized change of grade in a street, which has been already established. Dorsey v. Henderson, 148 N. C. 423, 62 S. E. 547; Wolfe v. Pearson, 114 N. C. 621, 19 S. E. 264. The position is allowed to prevail on the supposition that the municipal authorities shall not proceed or have the work done in an "unskillful or negligent manner," and, where it is shown that there has been a breach of duty in this respect, an action lies. This principle announced in Meares v. Wilmington, 31 N. C. 78, 49 Am. Dec. 412, has been upheld in numerous cases in our court (Jones v. Henderson, 147 N. C. 120, 60 S. E. 894; Wright v. Wilmington, 92 N. C. 156, etc.), and was approved and applied in the recent case of Harper v. Lenoir, 152 N. C. 723, 68 S. E. 223.

[2] On a perusal of the record, we are inclined to the opinion that there was evidence to show in this instance a negligent construction of the sidewalk, causing unnecessary damage to plaintiff's premises, but this view cannot avail plaintiff, for the reason that on the face of the complaint and the uncontroverted facts it appears that plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the three-year statute of limitations, and, the statute having been duly pleaded, the order of nonsuit should in any event be considered and treated as harmless error. Oldham v. Rieger, 145 N. C. 254, 58 N. E. 1091; Cherry v. Canal Co., 140 N. C. 422, 53 S. E. 138, 111 Am. St. Rep. 850. In Harper's case it was held that the measure of damages, in actions of this character, was ordinarily the impaired market value of the property, and that on action brought recovery should be had for the entire wrong, past, present, and perspective. Speaking to this question and the principle upon which it was properly made to rest, the court said: "And having been caused by a change of grade done, as a rule, under statutory authority and considered of a permanent nature, under our decisions there may, and ordinarily must, be but one recovery for the entire wrong. This general principle is well stated by Justice Avery in Ridley v. Railroad, 118 N. C. 998, 24 S. E. 731, 32 L. R. A. 708, as follows: "But even where the injury complained of, either by the servient owner or an adjacent proprietor, is due to the negligent construction of such public works as railways, which it is the policy of the law to encourage, if the injury is permanent and affects the value of the estate, a recovery may be had at law of the entire damages in one action"—citing Smith v. Railroad, 23 W. Va. 453; Troy v. Railroad, 3 Foster (N. H.) 83, 55 Am. Dec. 177; Railroad v. Maher, 91 Ill. 312; Blizer v. Railroad, 70 Iowa, 146, 30 N. W. 172; Fowle v. Railroad, 112 Mass. 334, 338, 17 Am. Rep. 106; s. c., 107 Mass. 352; Railroad v. Esterle, 18 Bush (Ky.) 667; Railroad v. Combs, 10 Bush (Ky.) 382, 383, 19 Am. Rep. 67; Stodghill v. Railroad, 53 Iowa, 341, 5 N. W. 495; Cadle v. Railroad, 44 Iowa, 11—and is said by Mr. Elliott, in his work on Roads and Streets, to obtain very generally in determining the damages recoverable on a change of grade by the authorities. On this subject the author said: "Sec. 488. All Damages Are Recoverable in One Action.—The change of grade is a permanent matter, and all resulting injury must be recovered for in one action, for the property owner cannot maintain successive actions as each fresh annoyance or injury occurs. The reason for this rule is not far to seek. What is done under color of legislative authority and is of a permanent nature works an injury as soon as it is done, if not done as the statute requires, and the injury which then accrues is, in legal contemplation, all that can accrue, for the complainant is not confined to a recovery for past or present damages, but may also recover prospective damages resulting from the wrong. It is evident that a different rule would lead to a multiplicity of actions, and produce injustice and confusion. It is in strict harmony with the rule which prevails, and has long prevailed, in cases where property is seized under the right of eminent domain."

It will be noted that this principle of awarding permanent damages for a certain class of injuries made obligatory as to railroads (Revisal, § 394), is placed upon the ground that the work complained of is of a permanent nature, done by virtue of statutory authority and for the public benefit, and is thus differentiated from nuisances maintained by private persons, individual or corporate, and causing recurrent damages, as in Roberts v. Baldwin, 151 N. C. 407, 66 S. E. 346, and Spillman v. Navigation Co., 74 N. C. 675, and, further, that an action of this kind is not held to have necessarily accrued only when there has been actual physical interference or invasion of a claimant's property, the correct position when section 394, subsec. 2, or section 395, subsec. 3, applies (Stack v. Railroad, 139 N. C. 366, 51 S. E. 1024). But, as shown in the Harper Case, the cause of action is for negligence, subject to the limitation established in section 395, subsec. 5, and is properly held to accrue at the time the work is negligently done and the value of claimant's property thereby sensibly impaired. This action was commenced on September 1, 1909. On the allegations of the complaint and the uncontroverted facts, the work was done and substantial injury caused by the negligent construction commenced in 1904. The plaintiff's cause of action is therefore clearly barred by lapse of time, and, the statute having been properly pleaded and insisted on, the results of the trial should not be disturbed.

There is no reversible error, and the judgment of nonsuit affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rowan County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by E. A. Goodman and another against John D. Hellig, administrator, and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Civil action to recover damages for breach of covenant against incumbrances contained in a deed from A. S. Hellig to W. J. and Julia Crowell, and a deed from B. H. Hamilton, grantee of Crowell, to plaintiffs. The covenants are practically the same in both deeds. The incumbrance is charged in these words: "But such portion of said land was, at the time of the execution of said deeds, and has been ever since, owned by the North Carolina Railroad Company as a right of way." The defendants' demurrer sets out six grounds. It is necessary to consider only one, viz.: "That plaintiff's complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in that, as a question of law, the use and occupation of a portion of the lands described in the complaint, as a right of way, by the North Carolina Railroad Company under its charter, pursuant to the acts of the Legislature of 1849 (Pub. Laws 1848-49, c. 82), was constructive notice of said company's right of way, and does not constitute a breach of warranty or covenant on the part of defendants. That, as a matter of law, the right of way alleged to be claimed by the North Carolina Railroad Company does not constitute any valid incumbrance upon the title of plaintiffs, nor any breach of the covenants of warranty and seisin, as alleged by the plaintiffs." The demurrer was sustained by his honor, Judge Lyon, at May term, 1911, superior court of Rowan county, and plaintiffs appealed.

J. L. Rendleman and Jerome & Price, for appellants. John S. Henderson, R. Lee Wright, and P. S. Carlton, for appellees.

BROWN, J. [1] We take judicial notice of the fact that the North Carolina Railroad is a great public highway, running from Goldsboro to Charlotte, through Rowan county. It belongs to a quasi public corporation, chartered in 1849 by an act of the General Assembly that gives the corporation full power of eminent domain, and provides that where land is not condemned for a right of way within a certain time the corporation acquires 100 feet on each side of the center of the track. The road has been in actual operation since 1853. It was admitted upon the argument that the road is now being double-tracked, and the injury set up in the complaint is the construction of a "fill" upon a small part of the right of way upon which the additional track is laid. Plaintiffs claim that the boundaries of the deed take in some part of the right of way.

[2] We are of opinion with his honor that the demurrer should be sustained. The railroad corporation has not acquired the fee simple to the land covered by its right of way, but only an easement in it. If the railroad should be discontinued, the land would revert to the owner of the fee, relieved of the burden of the easement, and the owner would then have an absolute title without incumbrance. While this easement may be in one sense an incumbrance or burden upon the fee, it is in this particular case such an incumbrance as a purchaser has knowledge of, and is bound to take into consideration before purchasing. The railroad right of way is a great public highway, of which all persons must take notice, and, as said by Kennedy, J., in Patterson v. Arthurs, 9 Watts (Pa.) 152: "It is fair to presume that every purchaser, before he closes his contract for his purchase of land, has seen it and made himself acquainted with its locality and the state and condition of it, and consequently, if there be a public road or highway open or in use upon it, he must be taken to have seen it, and to have fixed in his own mind the price he was willing to give for the land with reference to the road."

In Hymes v. Estey, 116 N. Y. 505, 22 N. E. 1087, 15 Am. St. Rep. 421, Justice Bradley says: "It must be deemed the settled doctrine in this state that the fact that part of the land conveyed with covenant of warranty was at the time of conveyance a highway, and used as such, is not a breach of the covenant. This is so for the reason that the grantee must be presumed to have known of the existence of the public easement, and purchased upon a consideration in reference to the situation in that respect." To same effect are Whitbeck v. Cook, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 483, 8 Am. Dec. 272; Huyck v. Andrews, 113 N. Y. 85, 20 N. E. 581, 3 L. R. A. 789, 10 Am. St. Rep. 432; Wilson v. Cochran, 46 Pa. 229; Jordan v. Eve, 72 Va. (31 Grat.) 1; Pomeroy v. Railroad Co., 25 Wis. 644; Pick v. Hydraulic Co., 27 Wis. 443; Trice v. Kayton, 84 Va. 219, 220, 4 S. E. 377, 10 Am. St. Rep. 886, citing and approving Jordan v. Eve; Des Vergers v. Willis, 56 Ga. 515, 21 Am. Rep. 289.

In Kutz v. McCune, 22 Wis. 628, 99 Am. Dec. 85, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin says: "That such a right does not constitute a breach of the covenant of seisin, see Rawle on Covenants, 83, 142. It may have been an incumbrance. But there is a principle, recognized by adjudged cases, and resting upon sound reason and policy, which holds that purchasers of property obviously and notoriously subjected at the time to some right of easement or servitude affecting its physical condition take it subject to such right, without any express exceptions in the conveyance, and that the vendors are not liable on their covenants by reason of its existence. This principle has been applied in the case of a highway opened and in use upon the land at the time of the conveyance. Rawle on Covenants, 141 et seq."

There are a few adjudications looking to the contrary, especially in Indiana, where the rule is different. But the great weight of authority, we think, concurs with our own precedents. The point was considered in Ex parte Alexander, 122 N. C. 727, 30 S. E. 386, and this court held that: "The fact that a railroad was in actual operation over a tract of land at the time of the sale of the land was sufficient notice to the purchaser of the occupant's equity or easement, and made it his duty to inquire for information."

While the point was not squarely presented or decided in the more recent case of Tlse v. Whitaker, 144 N. C. 515, 57 S. E. 212, Mr. Justice Hoke recognizes the rule as we have here laid it down, and refers to it in these words: "The weight of authority is to the effect that, when the existence of a public right of way over land is fully known at the time of the purchase and acceptance of a deed for the land, its existence is no breach of the covenant of warranty, and there are well-considered decisions to the effect that such an easement is not a breach of the covenant against incumbrances. The parties are taken to have contracted with reference to the existence of a burden of which they are fully aware."

When the plaintiffs purchased the land, they knew of the existence of the railroad and its right of way running over a portion of the land, and they are conclusively presumed to have purchased with reference to it.

The action cannot be maintained. The judgment sustaining the demurrer is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Lyon, Judge.

Creditors' suit by Fulp & Linville and others, on behalf of themselves and all creditors of the Kernersville Light & Power Company, in which the Greensboro Supply Company was made a party plaintiff by order of court and referee. From a judgment foreclosing a mechanic's lien as against the property sold by the Greensboro Supply Company under a conditional sale contract, it appeals. Modified and affirmed.

T. C. Hoyle and F. P. Hobgood, Jr., for appellant. D. H. Blair, for Fulp & Linville and Kernersville Mfg. Co. Manly, Hendren & Womble, for Crawford Plumbing & Mill Supply Co.

CLARK, C. J. This was a creditors' bill, brought by the plaintiffs Fulp & Linville, on behalf of themselves and all other creditors of the Kernersville Light & Power Company, which had built a power plant, intending to furnish that town with electric power. It bought from the Greensboro Supply Company certain property, among which was a dynamo, boiler, and engine, and the necessary pipes to connect said boiler and engine with the plant. The contract under which this property was bought was dated June 21, 1909, and title was retained by the Greensboro Supply Company till full payment. This contract was not recorded, however, till September 7, 1909. On August 10, 1909, the Greensboro Supply Company sold the defendant a deep well pump, and other fixtures, retaining title thereto, but this contract was not recorded till October 27, 1909. From July 3 to September 10, 1908, the Kernersville Furniture Manufacturing Company and Fulp & Fulp furnished material, which was used in the construction of the building, to an amount less than $200 to each, and attempted to docket that lien in the clerk's office, but the appellants claim that they failed to do so, because the claims upon which the lien was based were not itemized and set out in detail upon the lien docket of the clerk. From July 5 to September 4, 1909, Fulp & Linville also furnished materials which were used in constructing the building of defendant company, and the Crawford Plumbing Company furnished labor which was performed upon the said building, each in an amount of less than $200, and docketed their liens in the clerk's office within the time required within the statute. On September 9, 1909, W. H. Clinard obtained judgments before a justice against the defendant, aggregating $677.82, which he docketed on the same day in the office of the clerk of the superior court. These judgments were, on January 24, 1910, transferred to the plaintiff Mary Lou Sapp.

The appeal of the Greensboro Supply Company presents three grounds of exception:

[1] (1) "That the mechanic lienors, Fulp & Linville, Kernersville Furniture Manufacturing Company, Fulp & Fulp, and the Crawford Plumbing Company cannot enforce their liens in this action in the superior court, because each of the amounts is less than $200." But the superior court, having taken charge of the entire property, under its general jurisdiction, by means of a creditors' bill, has jurisdiction to collect and dispose of all the assets, and to determine the liens and priorities, and to make application accordingly of the funds, irrespective of the amount of any claim. Albright v. Albright, 88 N. C. 238; Long v. Bank, 85 N. C. 356. If any creditor in such case should institute an independent action, he would be enjoined and forced to seek his remedy in the creditors' bill. Dobson v. Simonton, 93 N. C. 270. The very purpose of the creditors' bill is to "discharge a multiplicity of suits and prevent a costly scramble among creditors." Wadsworth v. Davis, 63 N. C. 253.

[2] (2) "That the mechanic lienors, the Kernersville Furniture Manufacturing Company and Fulp & Fulp, even if the superior court had jurisdiction in this action, failed to file a valid lien, because the notice of lien filed does not specify in detail the materials furnished and the time thereof." The purpose of the statute is to give public notice of the plaintiff's claim, the amount of it, the material supplied, or the labor done, and when done, on what property, specified with such detail as will give reasonable notice to all persons of the character of the claim and the property on which the lien attached. Cook v. Cobb, 101 N. C. 70, 7 S. E. 700. The notice of lien here filed by these parties is not recorded as fully as it might be, but we think is in substantial compliance with Rev. 2026. Cameron v. Lumber Co., 118 N. C. 266, 24 S. E. 7. It is true the clerk recorded the notice, giving each bill with its date and amount, which together made the amount of the lienors' claim, without specifying the articles and the price of each. Rev. 915 (21) requires that the clerk shall keep "a lien docket which shall contain a record of all notices of lien filed in his office properly indexed showing the names of the lienor and lienee." The part of the notice which the clerk did enter on his docket in each of these instances shows the names of the lienor and the lienee, the amount claimed by each, an accurate description of the property by metes and bounds, the dates between which the material was furnished, and refers to "the schedule of prices and material" attached to the notice, and asks that it "be taken as a part of this notice of lien." The appellants admit that this schedule contained a full, itemized statement in detail of the material furnished, and that it went into the construction of the building.

[3] (3) The last objection of the supply company is that the appellant, having retained title to the boiler, engine, pump, dynamo, etc., by a written instrument, duly recorded, is entitled to possession of said articles freed from the liens of any one. But for the reservation of title, the above articles were clearly fixtures, and consequently realty. Horne v. Smith, 105 N. C. 322, 11 S. E. 373, 18 Am. St. Rep. 903. But, by virtue of the agreement of the parties, and the retention of the title, they remained personalty as between the parties. But as to these liens the retention of title was not operative, because the contract was not recorded till the work and labor was done and the material furnished out of which these liens arose. Clark v. Hill, 117 N. C. 11, 23 S. E. 91, 53 Am. St. Rep. 574. There being no retention of title recorded, the parties furnishing material and labor had a right to rely upon the apparent character of such property as realty. The liens of the appellees are valid for the furnishing of any material prior to the date when the conditional sale of the articles furnished by the Greensboro Supply Company was recorded.

The judgment of Clinard was a lien on the realty from the date of its docketing, September 9, 1909. It is therefore not a lien upon the boiler, engine, etc., as to which the contract retaining title was docketed, September 7, 1909. As thus modified, the judgment in the appeal by the Greensboro Supply Company is affirmed.

Modified and affirmed.

Appeal of BALTIMORE SUPPLY CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 22, 1911.)

MECHANICS' LIENS (§ 31*)—RIGHT TO LIEN —“MATERIALS.”

Electrical appliances furnished to a light and power plant are not “materials,” within Revisal 1905, § 2016, giving a lien for materials furnished in the erection and repair of buildings, where none of the appliances ever became any part of the plant, and where transformers and wires supplied were merely strung on electric light poles.

Walker, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Lyon, Judge.

Consolidated actions by Fulp & Linville and others, on behalf of themselves and all other creditors of the Kernersville Light & Power Company and by the Baltimore Supply Company, to foreclose a lien against the Kernersville Light & Power Company. From a judgment refusing to foreclose the lien, the Baltimore Supply Company appeals. Affirmed.

L. M. Swink, for appellant. T. C. Hoyle and F. P. Hobgood, Jr., for Greensboro Supply Co.

CLARK, C. J. The Baltimore Supply Company furnished the defendant for its light and power plant material consisting of insulators, wires, cross-arms, transformers, locust pins, oak brackets, and other electrical supplies and equipments. The wires furnished were attached to the dynamo, but were blown down, disconnected, rolled up, and are now in the possession of the receiver in this action, which is a creditors' bill. The appellant properly itemized its claim and filed the same, but the appellee denies that the materials are such as entitle the Baltimore Supply Company to obtain a lien under the statute, because the materials sold were not put in the plant of the Light & Power Company, so as to lose their identity, but were articles which did not become a part of the building or realty, and hence were not “materials furnished,” in contemplation of Rev. 2016.

The referee found as a fact that the transformers and wire were strung on the electric light poles, and that the oak brackets, locust pins, cross-arms, and other items are not shown to have become any part of the building, and held that such material did not come within the meaning and intent of the statute. This finding of fact and conclusion of law were approved by the judge. In this we find no error. James v. Lumber Co., 122 N. C. 157, 29 S. E. 358; Electric Co. v. Power Co., 122 N. C. 599, 30 S. E. 314. Both these cases, it is true, were under Code 1255, now Rev. 1131. The word “material” has been stricken out of this last section, but the construction placed upon it while it was in that section is applicable to the same word in Rev. 2016.

In James v. Lumber Co., supra, it was said in the concurring opinion: “This is the test: Where the material furnished to keep the business going is something that is consumed in the use, as coal, for instance, or labor performed, or a tort committed, which is intangible and unmortgageable, or is such material as goes into and makes part of the realty, or the product, in such a way as to be indistinguishable from the mass, as timber put into a building, or cotton that is manufactured, these things come within the purview of the remedy provided by the Code (section 1255); but, where the subject-matter for which the debt is incurred keeps its identity, as an engine, even though built into the wall, this section does not apply, because the party had his remedy by retaining title or taking a mortgage on the property sold.”

In Electric Co. v. Power Co., 122 N. C. 599, 30 S. E. 314, the above was approved; the court saying that articles, perfect in themselves, and not put into a building so as to lose their identity, would not constitute “material” upon which the seller would have priority over mortgage bonds, since the seller could “protect himself by retaining ti-tie, as by conditional sale, or by taking a mortgage on the property sold."

The reasoning in the above cases, though upon a different section of the Revisal, applies to this. In Pipe & Foundry Co. v. Howland, 111 N. C. 615, 16 S. E. 857, relied on by the appellant, the point decided was that the property of a corporation, chartered for supplying water to a city, is subject to a lien for materials furnished. It was admitted that the claim was sufficient in its form and in its nature to make it a lien, and the question whether the "materials furnished" were such for which a lien would lie was not before the court.

The judgment is affirmed.

on the basis of experience, and as insolvency was not specified as a ground for refusal of credit, clause 12 must be taken to refer wholly to the remedy, and not to be in conflict with other portions of the policy, so as to except losses because of insolvency of customers.

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by the Lexington Grocery Company against the Philadelphia Casualty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

The plaintiff is a corporation, doing business as a wholesale grocer at Lexington, N. C., and the defendant is a corporation which issues credit bonds upon certain conditions, and in consideration of premiums paid.

On or about the 22d day of January, 1908, the plaintiff made application to the defendant to issue for its benefit a credit bond, and in said application it is provided: "Experience shall be the basis for credit under the bond as specified on Schedule A, with a single account limit not exceeding $2,000, shall be covered by said bond." The premium was paid, and on the 27th day of January, 1908, said bond was issued in accordance with the application, and contains the following stipulations, among others, not necessary to be stated:

"First. If between the date of the execution of this bond and the 22d day of January, 1909, on goods usually dealt in and at the time of shipment and delivery solely owned by the indemnified and shipped bona fide and in the regular course of business since the 23d day of February, 1908, the company receives preliminary notices of loss as required by this bond and Schedule A upon which claim the actual loss sustained by the indemnified thereon as covered by this bond and Schedule A is in excess of $1,000 hereinafter called the initial loss, on sales and shipments not exceeding $400,000, or, if such sales and shipments as aforesaid exceed such sum, a proportionally increased initial loss, the company agrees to pay such excess loss not exceeding the amount of this bond, provided:

"(a) That such losses shall have been sustained on claims against debtors, each of whom is covered by Schedule A attached hereto, signed by the president and secretary and countersigned by the actuary and one of the registrars of the company, and which is made a part hereof: Provided further, that when a mercantile agency is designated in the application as a basis for some or all of the credits to be covered by this bond, that the last book printed by such agency prior to the shipment of the goods shall be the basis for covering such shipments from and including the first of the month appearing on such book.

"(b) That only claims on which losses occur, which exist (1) against a debtor who has effected a general compromise with his creditors; (2) against a debtor by or against whom a petition to be declared a bankrupt or insolvent has been filed under the federal bankruptcy law, or under some insolvency or assignment law of any of the United States or any territory thereof; (3) against a debtor against whom an execution in favor of the indemnified or some other creditor has been returned unsatisfied; (4) against a debtor whose stock in trade has been sold in judicial proceedings; (5) against a debtor against whom, upon the ground of insolvency, a writ of attachment or replevin or other process has been issued; (6) against a debtor who, upon the ground of insolvency, has transferred his stock in trade to a trustee or assignee under some assignment law for the benefit of his creditors; (7) against a debtor who has died, leaving his estate insufficient to pay his debts in full, and such fact is certified to by the executor or administrator or any court having jurisdiction thereof, and such certificate or a copy thereof is attached to the preliminary notice of loss; (8) against a debtor who being a corporation, firm or individual for whom a receiver has been appointed upon the ground of insolvency; (9) against a debtor where the legal proceedings show that, to defraud his creditors or avoid the payments of his debts, he has sold out or transferred his stock in trade; (10) against a debtor who has given a chattel mortgage for the benefit of his creditors; (11) against a debtor who has been found to be insolvent through judicial proceedings; (12) where a claim does not exceed $150 and none of the above state of facts have arisen, but the designated mercantile agency, a collection agency, or a practicing attorney in or near the place where the debtor did business reports, in writing, as to each of such claims, and such report is attached to the preliminary notice of loss, that the debtor has absconded, leaving no assets applicable to the payment of his debts, or that such claim is uncollectible and the issue of an execution would be useless, and that during a period of at least thirty days prior to the making of such report diligent efforts have been made to collect such claim or claims, and any claim which is more than three months overdue prior to commencement of said bond, and any claim that has been placed in the hands of such mercantile agency, collection agency, or attorney prior to the execution of said bond shall not be covered by this (12th) clause, but shall, so far as the same are covered by this bond and riders attached hereto, be included in the calculation of losses, provided the insolvency and one of the foregoing facts as enumerated in this subsection 'b' occurs between the date of the execution and the termination of this bond.

"Second. Said Schedule A shall describe the class of customers to be covered by this bond and the limit of credit to be extended to each of such customers."

Schedule A is as follows:

"CC. Customers to whom the indemnified has shipped goods within twelve (12) months prior to shipping the first item of the goods, wholly or partly included in the account upon which the loss was incurred, shall be considered old customers, and customers to whom the indemnified has shipped no goods within said twelve (12) months, or to whom the indemnified never sold any goods, shall be considered new customers.

"KK. Subject to the terms and conditions of the attached bond and this rider, old customers of the indemnified shall be covered for goods shipped during the term of the attached bond for an amount not exceeding the highest indebtedness such customer owed to the indemnified at one time, for goods shipped by the indemnified to such customer within twelve (12) months prior to shipping the first item of the goods wholly or partly included in the account upon which the loss was incurred, not exceeding, however, the amount paid upon such highest indebtedness during said period, but in no event exceeding $2,000 to one customer.

"LL. New customers of the indemnified shall be covered for an amount not exceeding fifty per cent. (50%) of the first bill, but the gross amount of such first bill shall not exceed $1,000 and such customer shall be considered an old customer as to goods shipped after the first bill has been paid, and shall then be covered accordingly.

"RR. As a condition precedent to having any claim for excess loss under the attached bond and this rider, by reason of any loss or losses on such old or new customers, the indemnified shall attach to the preliminary notice of each loss, if an old customer, a copy of the account upon which the loss was incurred, and a copy of the account, with debits and credits, showing the highest prior indebtedness within said twelve (12) months, and if a new customer, a memorandum must be attached to the preliminary notice of the loss, stating that such customer was a new customer, or else such loss or losses shall be excluded from the calculation of losses.

"The words 'and the aggregate of all such claims filed does not exceed one-half of the initial loss,' in lines 51 and 52 of the attached bond, have been made void.

"The words beginning with the word 'there' in line 70, and ending with the word 'and' in line 82, have been made void.

"O. Outstandings on the books of the indemnified against solvent debtors on January 23, 1908, shipped since October 1, 1907, shall be covered upon the same conditions and shall be included in the same manner as if the goods had been shipped since the execution of the bond. Subject to the terms and conditions of the attached bond."

This action is to recover on said bond for losses which the plaintiff alleges it has sustained.

An account between the parties was stated by a referee, and upon his report being filed judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $3,693.38, and the defendant excepted and appealed.

The exceptions present one question, and that is whether accounts, made after the execution of the bond, by persons who were then insolvent, are covered by the bond, if based on the past experience of the plaintiff with the persons making the accounts; and the defendant relies particularly on the proviso to clause 12 of subsection "b" of the bond, which reads as follows: "Provided the insolvency and one of the foregoing facts in this subsection 'b' occurs between the date of the execution and the termination of this bond." The referee and his honor held that such accounts were covered by the bond, and defendant excepted.

Walser & Walser, for appellant. E. E. Raper and McCrary & McCrary, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. [1, 2] The application bond and Schedule A constitute the contract between the plaintiff and defendant, and it is a contract of insurance. Shakman v. Credit System Co., 92 Wis. 374, 66 N. W. 528, 32 L. R. A. 383, 53 Am. St. Rep. 920.

[3] Speaking of such contracts, Lacombe, Circuit Judge, says in Tebbetts v. Guarantee Co., 73 Fed. 96, 19 C. C. A. 282: "Insurance against mercantile losses is a new branch of the business of underwriting, and but few cases dealing with policies of that character have as yet found their way into the courts. The necessarily nice adjustments of the respective proportions of loss to be borne by insurer and insured, the somewhat intricate provisions which are required in order to make such business successful, and the lack of experience in formulating the stipulations to be entered into by both the parties to such a contract have naturally tended to make the forms of policy crude and difficult of interpretation." And he quotes the rule of construction of ambiguous clauses laid down by him in Guaranty Co. v. Wood, 68 Fed. 529, 15 C. C. A. 563: "As that contract is a voluminous document, prepared by the company, any ambiguity in its phraseology should be resolved against the draftsman. * * * If the particular clause requiring interpretation cannot be brought into harmony with the rest of the contract, and the instrument considered as a whole is ambiguous touching the precise loss which the policy covers, that meaning is to be given to it which is most favorable to the insured."

Frost on Guar. Ins. (page 572) also says, as to the rule of construction, that: "All conditions limiting liability are to be strictly construed. In the interpretation of conditions, they are to be construed liberally in favor of the insured, and strictly against the insurer. The policy should be interpreted in such a way as to accomplish the general purpose had in view, and at the same time give effect to all of its conditions, according to their fair and reasonable meaning."

The contract before us is based on experience, not on rating, and this means "the plaintiff's experience with the several customers. In other words, the defendant was willing to insure the credit of each of plaintiff's customers to an amount that plaintiff's experience with such customers indicated would be a reasonably safe credit." Steinwender v. Casualty Co., 141 App. Div. 432, 126 N. Y. Supp. 271; Casualty Co. v. Cannon, 133 Ky. 748, 118 S. W. 1004.

It is also expressly stipulated in the bond that Schedule A shall describe the class of customers to be covered by the bond, and if we turn to Schedule A we find three classes of debtors, which may be termed old customers, new customers, and those who are solvent, owing outstandings. The fact that nothing is said in this schedule about insolvency at the time of the execution of the bond, when defining old and new customers, and that it is expressly provided that as to outstandings only those of debtors who were solvent when the bond was executed are insured, indicates clearly that it was the purpose of the defendant to insure the debts of old and new customers, created after the execution of the bond, although insolvent, provided the credit extended was based on experience.

If we were to construe the proviso to clause 12 of subsection "b" as the defendant contends, and hold that claims against debtors who were insolvent at the time the bond was executed, although based on experience, are not protected by the bond, we would change the entire contract between the parties, and say that experience is not the basis of credit under the bond, but solvency.

It is argued that the construction contended for by the plaintiff is unreasonable, and that it cannot be supposed that the defendant would permit sales to insolvent persons, and insure them. It would be sufficient answer to say that it has done so; but if the contract is examined it will be found that the rights of the defendant are carefully safeguarded.

The plaintiff did not have an unlimited discretion in making sales. Claims against old customers were not insured beyond the highest amount paid by them on indebtedness created within 12 months prior to the execution of the bond, and in no event in excess of $2,000, and the indemnity as to the new customers does not exceed 50 per cent. of the first bill, which could not exceed $1,000, and after the first bill new customers were classed as old customers.

The experience of wholesale and retail dealers has doubtless shown that it is reasonably safe to sell to men who are not solvent, but who have good character and good habits, and who are accustomed to pay, and for this reason experience, and not solvency, has been adopted as the standard. This being the plain purpose of the contract, if the proviso relied on by the defendant is repugnant to it, it would be our duty to reject it; but we do not think the repugnancy exists.

[4] Subsections "a" and "b" are provisos to the first stipulation or agreement in the bond; and subsection "a" provides that the debtors included in the bond are those covered by Schedule A, while subsection "b" enumerates the evidences of liability by the defendant.

Clause 12 of subsection "b" is obscure, and it is difficult to ascertain its meaning. Some word is evidently omitted before the word "shall," and the test of insolvency is to be applied to some claim. It cannot be applied to the claims of $150 first mentioned in the clause, because it says that, in addition to insolvency, one of the foregoing facts enumerated in subsection "b" must exist; and it is provided as to the claims first mentioned that it is not necessary for any of the foregoing facts to exist, and it cannot be applied to all the claims covered by the bond, because that would give it an effect which would withdraw claims covered by Schedule A, and would make solvency the test.

If we bear in mind the purpose of the contract, and that experience is the basis of credit, that the claims to be insured are those covered by Schedule A, and that subsection "b" is intended to furnish the evidences of liability, and read clause 12 in the light of these facts, we think the purpose of the clause was to provide evidences of liability that would be satisfactory for small claims that did not exceed $150, and that these small claims are divided into three classes, and that the proviso applies only to those three months overdue, or such as had been placed in the hands of a mercantile agency prior to the execution of the bond. As thus construed, the clause reads as follows:

"(12) Where a claim does not exceed $150, and none of the above state of facts have arisen, but the designated mercantile agency, a collection agency, or a practicing attorney, in or near the place where the debtor did business, reports in writing as to each of such claims, and such report is attached to the preliminary proof of loss, that the debtor has absconded, leaving no assets applicable to the payment of his debts, or that such claim is uncollectible, and the issue of an execution would be useless, and that during a period of at least thirty days prior to the making of such report diligent efforts have been made to collect such claim or claims, they shall, so far as they are covered by this bond and riders attached hereto, be included in the calculation of loss, and also any such claim which is more than three months overdue prior to the commencement of this bond, or that has been placed in the hands of such mercantile agency, collection agency, or attorney prior to the execution of this bond, shall also be included, provided the insolvency and one of the foregoing facts from 1 to 11 inclusive, as enumerated in this subsection 'b,' occurs between the date of the execution and the termination of this bond."

In our opinion, there is no error.

Affirmed.

REA v. REA.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 6. 1911.)

For majority opinion, see 72 S. E. 573.

BROWN, J. (concurring). I have heretofore always concurred in the decisions of this court in respect to the powers of feme covert. These cases began with Harris v. Jenkins, 72 N. C. 183, and ended, I believe, with Bank v. Benbow, 150 N. C. 781, 64 S. E. 891. By the Martin act (introduced by Senator J. C. Martin in the General Assembly of 1911) the wives have been emancipated and are placed on an equal footing with their single sisters, except that in order to convey their real estate they must still have the written assent of their husbands. I see no especial reason now for withholding from them the privilege of conferring gifts upon their husbands without the supervision and sanction of a justice of the peace or other judicial officer.

I think the opinion of the Chief Justice is a fair construction of Revisal, § 2107, and also of the Constitution, and I give it my approval.

WALKER, J. (concurring). The transaction in this case was a gift, which excludes the idea of any contract between the husband and wife, and for this reason there is no law forbidding it, in substance or in form. If it had been an executed contract of sale, I think in that form it also would have been valid, and in neither case does Revisal, § 2107, apply. The law in regard to a married woman's dealings with reference to her separate property, up to its present stage of development, I think, may be stated thus:

1. She may will her property without the consent of her husband, and as if she were a feme sole (Const. art. 10, § 6), and in this way she may deprive him of his estate by the curtesy (Tiddy v. Graves, 126 N. C. 620, 36 S. E. 127; Id., 127 N. C. 502, 37 S. E. 513; Ex parte Watts, 130 N. C. 237, 41 S. E. 289; Hallyburton v. Slagle, 132 N. C. 947, 44 S. E. 655; Watts v. Griffin, 137 N. C. 572, 50 S. E. 218).

2. She may convey her real property, with the written consent of her husband, evidenced by her privy examination.

3. She may dispose of her personal property by gift or otherwise, without the assent of her husband, and as if she were unmarried. Vann v. Edwards, 135 N. C. 661, 47 S. E. 784, 67 L. R. A. 461; Act of 1911, c. 109.

4. By virtue of the Martin act (Public Laws 1911, c. 109), she may now contract and deal, so as to affect her real or personal property, in the same manner and with the same effect as if she were unmarried, unless the contract belongs to the class of those described in Revisal, § 2107, or unless it is a conveyance of her real property, when the formalities required by the existing law, for its validity, must be observed; those two cases being expressly excepted in the act of 1911. But Revisal, § 2107, does not embrace gifts or sales of personal property by the wife to the husband, as the general right to make these, as if she were unmarried, is given by the Constitution, and cannot be restricted or impaired by legislation.

Section 2107, which is still in force, applies, therefore, only to her executory contracts, and she cannot enter into any such contract with her husband which will affect or change any part of her real estate, or the accruing income thereof, for a longer period than three years from the making of the contract, or which will impair or change the body or capital of her personal estate, or the accruing income thereof, for a like period; the Constitution not having removed her common-law disability as to executory contracts, and the act of 1911 having expressly excepted section 2107 from its operation. Kearney v. Vann, 154 N. C. 311, 70 S. E. 747.

Subject to the views herein stated, I assent to the conclusion reached by the Chief Justice in the opinion delivered by him for the court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rowan County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by Ola Walker, administrator of Odell Walker, deceased, against the Cannon Manufacturing Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. No error.

The action is brought to recover damages for the death of Odell Walker, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant. These issues were submitted:

"(1) Was the death of plaintiff's intestate caused by the negligence of the defendant, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Did plaintiff's intestate contribute to his own injury and death by his own negligence, as alleged in the answer? Answer: No.

"(3) Did plaintiff's intestate voluntarily assume the risks and dangers incident to and attendant upon the operation of the machinery, as alleged in the answer? Answer: No.

"(4) What damage, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: $4,951.40."

The defendant appealed from the judgment rendered.

Davis & Davis, for appellant. Theo. F. Kluttz & Son and R. Lee Wright, for appellee.

BROWN, J. There are a very large number of exceptions in the record that are made the basis of 25 assignments of error. It is impossible to discuss these assignments seriatim, without going over much ground that has heretofore been covered by adjudications of this court, as well as unduly lengthening this opinion. Sixteen assignments of error relate to the admission of evidence. Upon a careful examination of them, we find no substantial error, at least nothing that would justify us in granting a new trial.

[1] The principal contention of the learned counsel for the defendant is based upon his seventeenth and eighteenth assignments of error, presenting the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence of negligence. The evidence introduced by the plaintiff, taken in its most favorable light, as it must be considered upon a motion to nonsuit, tends to prove that her intestate, Odell Walker, was employed by defendant in its manufacturing establishment at Kannapolis, and at time of his injury was operating a rip saw, used for splitting boards, as well as sawing them up in short pieces. The saw was operated by a belt, which ran from the pulley operating the saw to another pulley, so that the belting was nearly horizontal with the saw, and did not run perpendicularly to a pulley above or below the saw. The machine was operated by electric power overhead. There is evidence that this machine was very old, antiquated, "wobbly," and out of repair; that the table upon which the saw operated was of a disused and antiquated pattern; that the saw should have been operated on an adjustable table.

But the principal ground of negligence is that the belting was not cased, and, instead of running perpendicularly above or below to reach the power, it was horizontal, and so placed that a plank was very liable to fall on it from the saw table, or elsewhere, and be hurled against the operator; and plaintiff avers that her intestate was killed by a plank falling on this belt, and striking him on the head with such force as to crush his skull and produce death.

There is evidence that rip saws in general use are now run by a countershaft, and that, if the power is above, the countershaft is below, and, if power is beneath, the countershaft is underneath; that the saw always extends beyond the table, with countershaft hung above the ceiling. One belt runs the main-line pulley over countershaft; on that countershaft the pulley belt runs to that third pulley underneath the saw table. If the power is underneath the house, the countershaft is beneath also.

There is also some evidence to the effect that, this being a horizontal belt, running somewhat on a level with the saw, the belt should be cased, so as to avoid the danger of objects falling on it, and injuring the operator by being hurled against him.

[2] It is now familiar learning that the employer of labor must furnish a reasonably safe place in which to do the work assigned, as reasonably safe as the nature of the business will admit. It is equally as well settled that, where the employees are engaged in the operation of mills and other plants having machinery more or less complicated, and usually driven by mechanical power, in such case a standard of duty has been fixed, and the employer is required to provide methods, implements, and appliances, such as are known, approved, and in general use. Bradley v. Railroad Co., 144 N. C. 558, 57 S. E. 222; Hicks v. Manufacturing Co., 138 N. C. 319, 50 S. E. 703; Horne v. Power Co., 141 N. C. 50, 53 S. E. 858; Fearington v. Tobacco Co., 141 N. C. 80, 53 S. E. 662; Avery v. West, 146 N. C. 592, 60 S. E. 646; Shaw v. Manufacturing Co., 146 N. C. 235, 59 S. E. 676; Phillips v. Iron Works, 146 N. C. 209, 59 S. E. 660.

[3] There is abundant evidence in the record that the machine used in this case was of "ancient lineage," possibly belonging to the antebellum days; that it was sadly out of order, "wobbly," and dangerous to operate. In his able argument, counsel for de-defendant did not undertake to defend the character of his machine, but contends with much ingenuity that the condition of the machine did not cause the injury; that the injury was the result of an accident, unaccounted for in the evidence.

[4, 5] The evidence shows that, according to present usage, the belt should have been placed in a perpendicular position, or else, as it was nearly on a line with the saw, casing should have been put around it, to prevent objects falling on it from being hurled against the operator. In answer to which it is contended there is no evidence that the plank which crushed the intestate's skull was thrown from the belt. This is undoubtedly a debatable question, as no witness saw it on the rapidly moving belt, or strike the intestate. Yet that the plank struck the intestate must be admitted; that it struck his head with crushing force is demonstrated; that it could not have acquired such momentum from the ordinary passing of it over a rip saw is evident. It is a fair inference that it must have been thrown from the belt, as it is hard to account for its force in any other manner. This is not a necessary inference, but a legitimate one, from the circumstances of the case, and the jury seem to have taken that view. We think upon the question of proximate cause, as well as negligence, his honor's charge is a fair and clear presentation of the case to the jury.

[6] We do not think the assignments of error in respect to the charge upon the second issue can be sustained. The negligence set up in the answer is that, while the intestate was sawing a board on the said table, and before the board had gone through the saw, he put another board into the saw, and negligently and recklessly sawed said second board, and shoved it forward until it knocked the first board, which he was sawing, onto the saw, causing it to be caught in the saw and thrown back, striking him in the head, and in this way was guilty of negligence which directly contributed to bring about the injury complained of. His honor charged upon this phase of the case that, if the jury believes the evidence of the defendant's witness Lyerly, that he instructed and warned the plaintiff's intestate not to put a second board into the saw until after he had completely sawed the first board, upon the ground that it was dangerous to do so, and that, if the jury should find from the greater weight of the evidence that the plaintiff's intestate was injured in this manner, the plaintiff cannot recover in this case, and the jury will answer the second issue, "Yes." We do not see how the question of contributory negligence could have been put more fairly or clearly to the jury.

[7] Upon the third issue of assumption of risk, his honor submitted the matter to the jury in as favorable a view for defendant as it could expect under the adjudications of this court, when he charged: "That if the jury finds from the greater weight of the evidence that the condition of the machine at which the plaintiff's intestate (Odell Walker) was working at the time he was hurt was so defective and dangerous that only a reckless man would have worked at it, and that the probabilities of the plaintiff's intestate (Odell Walker) of getting hurt were greater than the probabilities of his safety, the jury are instructed to answer the third issue, 'Yes.'"

[8] The evidence that the intestate negligently continued to work on in the presence of a known and obvious danger, which should have deterred a man of ordinary prudence, is not so striking as to warrant the conclusion, as matter of law, that the intestate assumed the risk to such extent as to bar recovery.

Upon a careful review of the entire record, we find no error that justifies us in directing another trial.

No error.

1. DIVORCE (§ 210*)—TEMPORARY ALIMONY—VALIDITY OF ORDER.

Under Revisal 1905, § 1562, prescribing the grounds for divorce from bed and board, under section 1563 requiring an affidavit to be filed with the complaint, showing that the grounds relied on existed, to plaintiff's knowledge, at least six months before filing of the complaint, and under section 1566, authorizing alimony pendente lite when it appears that defendant is attempting and about to remove from the state, and is about to dispose of his property, whereby plaintiff may be deprived of alimony, if the judge finds the facts, alleged by a wife, suing for divorce, on application for alimony under section 1566, to be true and sufficient to entitle her to divorce, if established at the trial, an action may be instituted, and an order for alimony properly made, before such six-month period has elapsed.

2. DIVORCE (§ 90*)—PLEADING—REQUISITES.

While generally a party to a divorce suit, in pleading under oath as to facts necessary or naturally within his personal knowledge, should do so in positive terms, yet an allegation in a complaint for divorce that plaintiff is informed and believes that defendant is about to remove from the state, and to dispose of his property, whereby plaintiff may be deprived of her alimony, is not insufficient for failing to set out the facts upon which plaintiff's belief could properly be made to rest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Dec. Dig. § 90.*]

3. DIVORCE (§ 27*)—DIVORCE FROM BED AND BOARD—GROUNDS—CRUELTY.

Under Revisal 1905, § 1562, authorizing divorce from bed and board for indignities rendering one's condition intolerable, a wife, free from blame, is entitled to a divorce for a long course of neglect, cruelty and humiliating insult.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Divorce, Cent. Dig. §§ 62-83; Dec. Dig. § 27.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Union County; Justice, Judge.

Action by Chloe Sanders against R. M. Sanders. From an order allowing alimony pendente lite, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Civil action to obtain a divorce from bed and board, instituted by the wife against the husband, heard on motion for alimony pendente lite. The court, having duly considered the case on the complaint, properly verified, with affidavits supplementary thereto, and a verified answer, used as an affidavit by defendant, made full and extended findings of fact sufficient to sustain an order for alimony, and to justify a divorce a mensa, if established at the hearing, and thereupon made an order allowing alimony pendente lite, and defendant excepted and appealed.

Redwine & Sikes, for appellant. Stack & Parker, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] It was chiefly objected to the validity of his honor's order "that it was based mainly upon illegal evidence, in that the court considered alleged facts within six months of the institution of the suit." In our view, there are facts, found by his honor anterior to the six months, and on relevant testimony, amply sufficient to justify the order allowing plaintiff alimony; but, apart from this, the ordinary jurisdictional affidavit of plaintiff, annexed to the complaint, contains the additional averment "that plaintiff is informed and believes that defendant is attempting and about to remove from the state, and is about to dispose of his property and remove the same from the state, whereby plaintiff may be disappointed of her alimony," and under our statute (Revisal, §§ 1562, 1563, 1566), and authoritative interpretations of it, as in Scoggins v. Scoggins, 85 N. C. 348, Id., 80 N. C. 319, Gaylord v. Gaylord, 57 N. C. 74. Where this is made to appear, and the judge finds facts to be true and sufficient to entitle plaintiff to divorce, if established at the trial, the action may be instituted, and an order for alimony properly made, before the six months have elapsed. In Scoggins' Case, supra, the judge quotes with approval from Gaylord's Case, as follows: "The act certainly requires that in ordinary cases the facts upon which the petitioner founds her claim to relief shall have existed, to her knowledge, at least six months prior to the filing of the petition, and the seventh section of the act expressly enacts that she shall so state and swear. But the eighth section makes an exception to this whenever 'the husband is then removing or about to remove his effects from the state.' In such a case, the wife may exhibit her petition at any time, and if she shall state and swear 'that she doth verily believe that she is entitled to alimony, and that by delaying her suit she will be disappointed of the same, by the removal of her husband's property and effects from the state,' any judge may thereupon make an order of sequestration, or otherwise, as the purpose of justice may seem to require." And in the conclusion of the opinion the judge adds: "There is nothing in this or any other section of the act which indicates a necessity that she should file another bill, or a supplemental bill, after the expiration of six months from the time when the facts which entitled her to relief occurred."

[2] Defendant contends, also, that this additional allegation referred to is insufficient, because made upon information and belief; and, further, because the same is too general in its terms, and should set out the facts upon which plaintiff's belief could properly be made to rest. Neither of these objections may be sustained. It is a general rule of pleading, and one particularly insistent in divorce causes, that when litigants are required to make averment or answer under oath, as to facts necessary or naturally within their personal knowledge, they should do so in positive terms. Avery v. Stewart, 136 N. C. 432, 433, 48 S. E. 775, 68 L. R. A. 776; but the principle does not apply to an allegation of this character. Under the facts shown forth in evidence, this plaintiff would not likely have opportunity to know of her husband's plans and purposes as to a removal of his property, and her allegation concerning it are almost necessarily made on information and belief, and should therefore be held in proper form. See citation from Gaylord v. Gaylord, supra. And in reference to a fuller statement of the facts, when an allegation of this character becomes essential, before an order is passed, depriving defendant of his property, the facts upon which plaintiff's belief is formed should always be in evidence so that the court may intelligently pass upon the questions involved; but it is sufficient when, as in this case, such facts are made to appear in the supplementary or additional affidavits of plaintiff. As a part of the jurisdictional affidavit, it is better, if made in general terms, following, as it does, the language of the statute (Revisal § 1563).

[3] Defendant objected further "that many of the allegations of fact alleged in the complaint as to the conduct of the defendant toward the plaintiff were unexplained, and in particular as to what prompted or caused them, and did not set forth the conduct of the plaintiff at that particular time, as required by law." There are decisions in this state to the effect that when divorce is sought from bed and board, on the ground of cruel and barbarous treatment, alleging specific acts of cruelty and violence, etc., that the entire occurrence should be set forth showing particularly circumstances of provocation, if any existed. Martin v. Martin, 130 N. C. 28, 40 S. E. 822; O'Connor v. O'Connor, 109 N. C. 142, 18 S. E. 887; Jackson v. Jackson, 105 N. C. 438, 11 S. E. 173. But the facts as found by the court do not bring this case within this principle. As the cause will not unlikely come before the jury, we do not deem it necessary or desirable to make a detailed or extended reference to the testimony; the relevant and essential facts are for them entirely unaffected by these preliminary findings. But the facts in evidence, as disclosed by this action of the court, will establish that the plaintiff in her married life has been free from blame, and that by a long course of neglect, cruelty, and humiliating insult, repeated and persisted in on the part of defendant, plaintiff's cause has been brought well within the provisions of our statute, on which she chiefly relies (section 1562, subsec. 4): "If he shall offer such indignities to her person as to render her condition intolerable and life burdensome."

Speaking to this question, in Taylor v. Taylor, 76 N. C. 436, a case not unlike the present in its general aspects, the court said: "The decisions of the court in Coble v. Coble [55 N. C. 392], and Erwin v. Erwin [57 N. C. 82], have not been controverted, and must be taken to have settled the meaning of the words 'indignities to the person,' as used in the statute. Insulting and disgraceful language by itself, addressed to the wife by the husband, may not be an 'indignity to the person' in a legal sense, and so slight personal violence, without injury to the body or health, of itself, will not justify a divorce; but both combined, and frequently repeated, would indicate such a degree of depravity and loss of self-command as much more readily to induce a court to believe there was danger of bodily harm, and such a just apprehension of personal injury as to render cohabitation unsafe. No undeviating rule has been as yet agreed upon by the courts, or probably can be, which will apply to all cases in determining what indignities are grounds of divorce, because they render the condition of the party injured intolerable. The station in life, the temperament, state of health, habits, and feelings of different persons are so unlike that treatment which would send the broken heart of one to the grave would make no sensible impression upon another." And further: "We may assume then that the Legislature purposely omitted to specify the particular acts of indignity for which divorces may in all cases be obtained. The matter is left at large under general words, thus leaving the courts to deal with each particular case, and to determine it upon its own peculiar circumstances, so as to carry into effect the purpose and remedial object of the statute."

Applying the principle, there is no error in the order allowing plaintiff her alimony, and the judgment below is affirmed.

Affirmed.

A tenant by the year entitled to hold the premises until a designated future date may recover damages for the act of the landlord in removing the roof from the building prior to such date and thereby making it necessary for the tenant to vacate, but a tenant from month to month or a tenant at will, who refuses to quit after due notice, cannot recover because the landlord takes possession of the premises.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Laurens County; C. C. Featherstone, Special Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by the Laurens Telephone Company against the Enterprise Bank and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John Gary Evans, Cannon & Blackwell, and Richey & Richey, for appellant. Dial & Todd and Nicholls & Nicholls, for respondents.

WOODS, J. On May 3, 1907, the Enterprise Bank purchased from E. W. Martin and Mrs. Essie Martin, his wife, a corner lot in the city of Laurens, on which was situated a two-story frame building. The Laurens Telephone Company, plaintiff in this action, occupied two rooms in the second floor of this building as a telephone exchange. Shortly after the purchase Mr. Dial, the president of the bank, notified Mr. Richey, the manager of the telephone company, that the bank intended to erect a new banking house on the lot, that the building then standing would soon be torn down, and that the telephone company would be required to move its offices. Plaintiff, however, continued to occupy the rooms until the morning of August 6, 1907, when E. L. Hertzog, a contractor, acting under the written authority of Mr. Dial and E. W. Martin, entered upon the premises with a force of hands, and began to tear off the roof of the building. Thereupon the plaintiff moved its property out. This action is brought by the telephone company to recover of the defendants actual and punitive damages for the alleged unlawful, willful, and malicious ejection on the morning of August 6th. The plaintiff alleges that it was a tenant of the premises from year to year, that the term under which it was then holding possession did not expire until January 1, 1908, and that the action of the defendants in forcibly ejecting its operators and agents was wrongful and malicious. The defendants in their answer allege that plaintiff was a tenant from month to month, and that it had received ample notice to vacate from both defendants Martin and Dial, but refused to do so. They further deny that the ejection was malicious, and allege that the telephone company by its board of directors had expressly waived any right it may have had to occupy the premises longer. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendants, assigning error in the admission of testimony, in the charge of the circuit judge, and the refusal of the motion for a new trial.

The undisputed facts bearing on the character of the plaintiff's possession are these: The upper floor of the building was leased by the telephone company on January 1, 1901, for a term of five years, from J. M. Robertson, who then owned the property. Upon his death in 1904 the building passed to Reuben Robertson, his son, who died in April, 1906, leaving all his estate to his two granddaughters, Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Harris. The latter afterwards transferred her interest to E. W. Martin, who, with his wife, conveyed to the defendant bank. During the continuance of the lease plaintiff paid its monthly rent first to J. M. Robertson and then to Reuben Robertson. At the expiration of the lease on January 1, 1906, there was no written contract of renewal, but plaintiff paid the same monthly rent to Reuben Robertson, and after his death to E. W. Martin as the agent for his wife and her sister. Martin testified that he and Mr. Richey could not agree on the rent for 1907; that he told Mr. Richey that he had plans to sell or improve the property; that for the year 1907 he could rent the property only by the month; that he told the defendant bank when he sold to it in May, 1907, that the telephone company was a tenant from month to month; that on May 5, 1907, he notified Mr. Richey of his sale to the bank and of the necessity of surrender of possession, so that the building could be removed to make place for the new bank building; and that at Mr. Richey's request he allowed him until June 15th to vacate. There was other testimony on behalf of the defendants tending to show that the tenancy of 1907 was from month to month, and that after June 15, 1907, it became a tenancy at will under an arrangement that the plaintiff should not be required to vacate until the contractor for the new bank building was ready to commence work. There was also testimony that the board of directors of the plaintiff company had passed a resolution not to claim the property for the year, and to vacate it as soon as other property could be obtained, and that the new location for the telephone exchange had been rented from July 1, 1907.

On behalf of the plaintiff, the testimony of Mr. Richey, the manager, was that he had not agreed to hold as tenant from month to month, and that he claimed under the law and his contract with the owners to have a right to the property for the entire year 1907; that he did not agree to vacate on June 15th, or on any other definite date; that he had waived the plaintiff's right to hold until January, 1908, only to the extent that he agreed to vacate when he had installed a new switchboard in the new location of the telephone exchange; that he had not been able to get the new location ready and install the new switchboard when the defendants began to take the roof away against his protest and his claim of right to hold the property.

The evidence is very voluminous, but the above statement is sufficient to indicate that the issue of both fact and law was sharply made as to the nature of the plaintiff's tenancy. We take up the grounds of appeal in the order in which they were argued by counsel for plaintiff.

[1] 1. The plaintiff proved beyond dispute that it had suffered actual loss of several hundred dollars from the sudden interruption of its business by having to remove its exchange without preparation. If this necessity was forced upon it by any wrongful action of the defendants, then damages would have followed as a matter of course. But the jury on this issue found in favor of the defendants, and it would not therefore have affected the result to allow the plaintiff to introduce evidence that its business at this particular time would have been unusually large because a strike by the employees of the telegraph company at Laurens would have made the public more dependent on the telephone company for quick communication. The exception, therefore, alleging error in the exclusion of such evidence, is of no consequence, unless there was error on other points requiring a new trial.

[2] 2. The evidence to the effect that the management of the bank and the telephone company were on amicable terms, that the bank had allowed the telephone company to overdraw its accounts, that Mr. Dial the president of the bank had been informed by Martin from whom the bank purchased that the plaintiff was renting by the month, that Mr. Dial had no ill will towards the plaintiff, that he took the advice of counsel, and acted thereon in the belief that he was within his legal rights, was all competent as tending to disprove the charge that the defendants acted willfully and maliciously in taking the roof off the building, and thus forcing the plaintiff to vacate.

[3] 3. Mr. Richey being the representative of the company through whom its contracts were made, the testimony of the witness Brooks that he had admitted that the tenancy was from month to month was clearly competent. Southern Ry. v. Howell, 79 S. C. 281, 60 S. E. 677.

[4] 4. In view of the issue of fact as to the character of the holding of the telephone company which so plainly appears from the above statement of the evidence adduced, there was no error in this instruction to the jury: "Now, gentlemen, the pivotal question in this case, the crux of this case, is simply this: How was the Laurens Telephone Company there? Was it rightfully and legally in possession of the premises, and did it have a right to stay there?" Nearly all the testimony was directed to this issue. Certainly in view of the positive and strong testimony of a tenancy from month to month followed by a tenancy at will, there was not the least ground for the plaintiff to contend that the question of the character of its possession was not a difficult and perplexing one. Under the law as established in this state and charged by the presiding judge, this was without doubt also the pivotal question. The charge was, in substance, that if the jury found that the plaintiff was a tenant by the year entitled to hold until January 1, 1908, then the act of the defendants in taking off the roof of the building in August, 1907, thus making it necessary for plaintiff to vacate, was wrongful and the plaintiff should recover damages; on the other hand, if they found that the plaintiff was a tenant from month to month, or a tenant at will, and refused to quit after due notice, then the defendant bank as the owner of the property had a right to go upon the premises and take possession if it could do so without committing a breach of the peace or a trespass upon the tenant's person or personal property, and the plaintiff should not recover. The principle of law so charged was laid down in Willoughby v. Atlantic C. L. Ry. Co., 32 S. C. 410, 11 S. E. 339, and Rush v. Aiken Mfg. Co., 58 S. C. 145, 36 S. E. 497, 79 Am. St. Rep. 836. The case of Wright v. Willoughby, 79 S. C. 438, 60 S. E. 971, relied on by appellant, was not a case of tenancy, and has no application.

[6] 5. The eighth exception was as follows: "The plaintiff requested the presiding judge to charge the jury as follows: 'If A. enters upon real property and takes possession thereof as the tenant of B. under a contract or lease for a definite term of years, at a specified rent to be paid monthly, and B. or his grantee allows A. to remain in possession of said property after the termination of the lease without any agreement as to how long he shall remain in possession, and collects the usual rent, A. thereby becomes a tenant from year to year, and would have the legal right to the possession of the premises until the end of the calendar year.' It is respectfully submitted that his honor erred in modifying plaintiff's first request to charge, which modification was as follows: 'I charge you that is the law in the absence of any change of contract. The law presumes that in the absence of testimony. But, after all the facts are out, presumptions disappear, and it is a question of fact for you to say whether or not plaintiff was a tenant from year to year, or a tenant at will. With that modification, I charge you that is a sound proposition of law.' The error being that the plaintiff had the right to have the first request to charge charged without modification." In Hillhouse v. Jennings, 60 S. C. 392, 39 S. E. 596, one of the propositions laid down by Mr. Justice Gary for the court was: "A parol lease under which the tenant enters upon the premises shall after the term of 12 months from the time of entering upon the premises, have the effect of an estate at will only." But, as held in Hellams v. Patton, 44 S. C. 454, 22 S. E. 608, and Matthews v. Hipp, 66 S. C. 162, 44 S. E. 577, such a tenancy at will may be converted into a tenancy for the year by acts of the parties indicating that intention. The direct issue of fact as to the nature of the tenancy was properly submitted to the jury under a statement of the law required by these cases.

[8] 6. Exception is taken to this definition of tenancy at will given to the jury: "Now what is a tenancy at will about which I have been speaking? It is where one person rents from another without any definite time being fixed for the duration of the possession, where the tenant has not the right under his contract to stay for any definite or certain length of time, where he is there at the will of the landlord, where the landlord has the right to sever the relation of landlord and tenant by giving reasonable notice to quit. And in that connection I want to read you from the Encyclopedia of Law. I read from page 670. Now, I am talking about a tenancy at will, not a tenancy from year to year: 'A tenancy at will is where one person lets land to another to hold at the will of the lessor.' In other words, Mr. Foreman, you rent there to your fellow juror. You rent him a farm. He holds that as long as you want him to hold it, holds it at your will, no definite time is fixed." The context makes perfectly clear the meaning of the instruction to be that, to constitute tenancy at will, there must not only be tenancy for an indefinite time, but it must be understood to be subject to the will of the landlord. There is therefore no ground for criticism of the instruction on the ground that the statute provides that a tenancy "shall be understood to be for one year unless it is stipulated to be for a shorter term."

[7] 7. The contention that there was error in instructing the jury that a tenant at will is entitled to reasonable notice to quit cannot avail the plaintiff, because the instruction was favorable to it.

[8] Nor can it avail the plaintiff that the circuit judge instructed the jury that there must be a reasonable notice not less than 30 days in order to terminate a tenancy from month to month, for the requirement of not less than 30 days notice prevented the jury from considering less notice sufficient, while they were left at liberty to consider that notice insufficient.

[9] 8. Since there was undisputed evidence of actual loss suffered by the plaintiff and the jury refused to find actual damages, and thus found that the defendant bank had acted within its legal rights, the exception as to the charge on punitive damages becomes unimportant.

[10] Error is charged in the first three sentences of the following extract from the charge: "If the jury believe that the defendants took legal counsel and honestly submitted all the facts to a competent and safe attorney, and that they acted under advice of counsel, that is a circumstance which may be considered by you in determining whether or not punitive damages should be awarded. In other words, if all the facts and circumstances in this case show you that the defendants honestly believed that they were acting within their legal rights, and that they did not act in a willful and high-handed manner, and did not consciously, knowingly invade the rights of the plaintiff, punitive damages cannot be awarded. In this connection, I charge you, gentlemen, as I charged you awhile ago, every man is presumed to know the law, but such presumption is only for certain purposes, and such rule has no application when you come to determine whether or not a man is liable for punitive damages. Before punitive damages could be awarded, a man must consciously, knowingly, violate the law. Now, gentlemen, I think you understand that. The law does not allow any man to take law into his own hands, and if he knows that he is doing wrong, and in utter disregard for his neighbor he willfully and wantonly and in a high-handed manner invades the rights of his neighbor, the law says it is your duty to award punitive damages." The specifications of error are: "(a) That acts committed by one person in utter disregard of the rights of another under advice of counsel are acts from which jury may find actual and punitive damages. (b) The rule is that every man is presumed to know the law, and said rule is applicable when the jury comes to the consideration of the question whether or not a man is liable for punitive damages." The rule that the advice of counsel may be taken into consideration on the question whether one party has willfully violated the rights of another was laid down in Baker v. Hornick, 57 S. C. 213, 35 S. E. 524.

The statement of the instruction that the presumption of knowledge of the law "has no application when you come to determine whether or not a man is liable for punitive damages" we do not think is accurate. True, there is no such conclusive legal presumption as obtains in the administration of the criminal law; but every man is allowed to order his life and conduct his affairs on the presumption that all others know and will obey the law, and not invade his legal rights. In an action of tort this presumption may be weak or strong, according to the clearness or obscurity of the law or other circumstances, and may be so weighed by the jury on the issue of willfulness. Furthermore, the defendant may completely rebut the presumption and completely meet the charge of willfulness by evidence convincing to the jury that he made an honest mistake as to the law and his rights thereunder.

[11] The instruction on this subject was made immaterial, however, by the holding of the jury that the defendants had not violated the law.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

3. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 68*)—OPERATION—DELAY IN DELIVERY OF MESSAGE—MENTAL ANGUISH—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

To recover damages for mental anguish, the anguish must be the direct and proximate result of a telegraph company's failure to deliver the message; and hence, where a telegraph company delayed the delivery of a message, announcing to a daughter the death of her father, it was not liable, where, had the message been delivered at the earliest possible moment, the daughter would not have been able to attend the funeral.

4. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 68*)—OPERATION—DELAY IN TRANSMISSION OF MESSAGE—MENTAL ANGUISH—RIGHT TO RECOVER.

Prior to Act March 2, 1909 (26 St. at Large, p. 84), amending Civ. Code 1902, § 2223, one whose name was not connected with a telegraph message could not recover damages for mental anguish, occasioned by delay in transmission, in the absence of proof that the company's agent had notice that such party would be injured by delay.

5. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 68*)—OPERATION—DELAY IN DELIVERY OF MESSAGE—MENTAL ANGUISH—PERSONS ENTITLED.

Where a husband, as a nominal party, joined with his wife in an action against a telegraph company for damages for mental suffering, he cannot recover; there being no allegations showing that he sustained any damage peculiar to himself.

6. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES (§ 29*)—OPERATION—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Act March 2, 1909 (26 St. at Large, p. 84), entitled "An act to amend section 2223, volume 1, Code of Laws of South Carolina (1902) so as to further define and extend the liability of telegraph companies in cases of mental anguish or suffering," changed the section so as to allow recovery without regard to relationship, or whether messages afforded notice of the relationship, or that mental anguish would result from the failure to deliver the same, and added a provision that, when a telegram shows on its face it relates to death, the party suffering mental anguish, by reason of the failure of the telegraph company to deliver it, may recover damages, without being required to prove that the company had notice of his or her relation to it, provided that this act shall not affect cases now pending in the courts. Held, that as this act created new liabilities and extended existing liabilities, it was not retrospective, for a statute should not be construed as retrospective, unless so required by express words or necessary implication.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Darlington County; J. W. De Vore, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by Isom Harrelson and Thettus Harrelson, his wife, against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Geo. H. Fearons, Willcox & Willcox, and S. W. McLemore, for appellant. Geo. W. Brown, for respondents.

JONES, C. J. This action was brought on August 1, 1909, to recover damages for mental anguish, caused to plaintiff Thettus Harrelson by the alleged negligent and willful failure of defendant to promptly deliver a telegram, filed by J. E. Parker in defendant's office at Chadbourn, N. C., May 1, 1909, for transmission to plaintiff Isom Harrelson, at Hartsville, S. C., reading as follows: "Come at once, old man Van Merritt is dead." Van Merritt was the father of Thettus Harrelson, the wife of Isom Harrelson. At the close of all the testimony, defendant moved for direction of verdict in its favor, on the grounds: (1) That there was no evidence of negligence; (2) no evidence of willfulness; (3) no evidence of damages proximately caused by any negligence or willfulness of defendant; (4) no evidence of notice to defendant that Thettus Harrelson, the real party plaintiff, would sustain damages as the result of delay in delivering the message. The motion was refused, and verdict and judgment were for plaintiffs in the sum of $400.

The complaint alleged that the message was filed at the Chadbourn office at 6:30 p. m., May 1, 1909, which was denied by defendant. The only evidence of the time of filing that can be discovered in the testimony for plaintiff is that Van Merritt died on the evening of May 1st, and that thereafter, on that day, J. E. Parker, living five miles from Chadbourn, filed the message, and that the message was received at the Hartsville, S. C., office at 8:20 p. m. of that day. Hence there is a complete failure of any evidence tending to show any negligence in the transmission of the message from Chadbourn to Hartsville.

[1] According to the undisputed testimony for the defendant, the office hours at the Hartsville office were from 8 o'clock a. m. to 8 o'clock p. m., and there was no testimony that these hours were not reasonable. The rule has been frequently declared that telegrams are accepted for transmission, subject to the reasonable regulations of the telegraph company, and that such company is not guilty of negligence in not delivering messages out of its reasonable office hours, in the absence of a special undertaking to the contrary. Harrison v. Telegraph Co., 71 S. C. 886, 51 S. E. 119; Bonner v. Telegraph Co., 71 S. C. 304, 51 S. E. 117; Roberts v. Telegraph Co., 73 S. C. 520, 53 S. E. 985; 114 Am. St. Rep. 100.

[2] There was no evidence tending to show that defendant had waived the regulation as to office hours. The isolated instance shown, of a delivery of a telegram to Robert C. Carter, in May, 1908, at 9:30 p. m., does not tend to show such waiver. Bonner v. Telegraph Co., 71 S. C. 309, 51 S. E. 117. Nor does the fact that the operator at Hartsville made some effort (the extent of which was disputed) to deliver the message in person, the regular messenger having been discharged at 8 p. m., tend to show waiver of the rule.

[3] The message was delivered next morning about 9 a. m.; but, even if the delay of one hour after office hours of opening was some evidence of negligence, still, according to the undisputed evidence, if the message had been delivered immediately on the opening of the office at 8 o'clock a. m., it would have been impossible for plaintiff to go to Chadbourn earlier than she did, as the first train for that point left Hartsville at about 6:30 a. m. on May 2d; hence the deprivation of seeing her father's face before burial, and attending his funeral, was not the proximate result of any neglect of duty by defendant's agent. In order to recover damages for mental anguish, the suffering must be the direct and proximate result of a negligent or willful breach of duty in transmitting or delivering a message. Arial v. Telegraph Co., 70 S. C. 418, 50 S. E. 6. The only inference possible to be drawn from the testimony is that plaintiff sustained no damages as the proximate result of a breach of duty by defendant; and hence a verdict for defendant should have been directed.

[4] In view of the foregoing, it is not important to consider the point that there was no evidence of notice to defendant that plaintiff Thettus Harrelson would sustain damages as a result of failure to transmit and deliver promptly, but we will not decline to notice the question. It is true that Mrs. Harrelson's name was not connected with the message, and there was no evidence of notice to defendant's agent that she would be affected by delay in delivery. Hence, under the law as it stood previous to the act of March 2, 1909 (26 St. at Large, p. 84), amending section 2223, vol. 1, Code of Laws, it is clear that Mrs. Harrelson could not recover. Capers v. Telegraph Co., 71 S. C. 29, 50 S. E. 537; Rogers v. Telegraph Co., 72 S. C. 290, 51 S. E. 773.

[5] The plaintiff Isom Harrelson is made a party merely as the husband of Mrs. Harrelson, as required by the Code in certain actions by a married woman, and his rights with respect to the message are not to be considered, as there are no allegations in the complaint that he has sustained any damage in connection with its transmission and delivery.

[6] Appellant contends that, since the acts with reference to the transmission and delivery of the message occurred previous to the adoption of the statute of 1909, the case is not affected by the statute, which is prospective only. Respondent contends that the statute relates merely to the remedy and the rules of evidence, and is retrospective as to all accrued causes of action, except cases pending in the courts at the adoption of the statute. The terms of the statute (section 2223), as amended in 1909 (the amendatory matter in italics), are as follows:

Sec. 2223: "All telegraph companies doing business in this state shall be liable in damages for mental anguish or suffering even in the absence of bodily injury, for negligence in receiving, transmitting or delivering messages, without regard to relationship by blood or marriage, or whether such messages afforded notice of such relationship or otherwise, or that injury or damage would result if such anguish or suffering resulted as a matter of fact. Nothing contained in this section shall abridge the rights or remedies now provided by law against telegraph companies, and the rights and remedies provided for by this section shall be in addition to those now existing. In all actions under this section the jury may award such damages as they conclude resulted from negligence, wantonness, willfulness, or recklessness of said telegraph companies: Provided, that when a telegram shows on its face that it relates to recklessness or death, the real party for whose benefit the telegram was sent and who suffered mental anguish by reason of the negligence or willfulness of the telegraph company, may recover damages as hereinbefore provided, without being required to allege or prove that the telegraph company had notice or knowledge at the time the message was sent of his or her relation to it, or of the extent or scope of his or her damage: Provided, that nothing contained in this act shall affect cases now pending in the courts."

"Recklessness or death" above was probably intended for "sickness or death," but that is not a matter of concern now. The title of the amending statute discloses a purpose to define and extend the liability of telegraph companies, etc. The body of the act creates a new liability or enlarges the existing liability of telegraph companies, and should not be regarded as intended to be retroactive, unless it clearly appears that such was the intention. The rule is that a statute must not be construed as retroactive, unless so required by express words or necessary implication. Curtis v. Renneker, 34 S. C. 468, 13 S. E. 664; Mutual Inv. Co. v. Logan, 55 S. C. 295, 33 S. E. 372; Vesta Mills v. Charleston, 60 S. C. 1, 38 S. E. 228. Construed by this rule, we do not think the statute was intended to be retroactive, and is not applicable to the present case.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed.

HOLLADAY et al. v. HODGE.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 25, 1911.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 96*)—PLEADING—AMENDMENT.

In an action before a justice by an infant by his guardian ad litem to recover wages, the court, after sustaining a demurrer to the complaint for failure to show emancipation, had power to allow plaintiff to file an amendment making the guardian ad litem a party individually, and alleging that she was the mother of the infant and that his father was dead.

2. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 96*)—PLEADING—AMENDMENT—SERVICE OF AMENDED PLEADING.

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 174*)—APPEAL—AMENDMENT OF PLEADING.

Where an infant, whose father was dead, sued in a justice court for wages by his mother as his guardian ad litem, and she was a party in her individual capacity and acquiesced in a judgment for the infant, an amendment on appeal, further alleging that she, as mother, made no claim to the amount, and that it belonged to the plaintiff, was immaterial.

Action by Joseph Holladay, by Minnie Simpson, his guardian ad litem, and Minnie Simpson, against Joseph N. Hodge. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

L. D. Jennings, for appellant. Chariton Du Rant, for respondents.

JONES, C. J. Joseph Holladay, by his guardian ad litem, Minnie Simpson, brought this action in a magistrate court to recover wages for his services as a farm laborer in the employ of defendant. Defendant interposed a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, "In that it appears from the complaint that the plaintiff is a minor, and it does not appear that the parent or parents having neglected or refused to supply the plaintiff with a home and living, nor does it appear that the plaintiff was forced to earn his own living, nor does it appear that the parents, either by word or act, have waived their rights to the plaintiff's earnings, nor does it appear that the parent or parents consented to the plaintiff making his own agreement and collecting his own wages, nor does it appear that the parents of the plaintiff relinquished any right to the services of the plaintiff." The magistrate sustained the demurrer, but upon motion of plaintiff's attorney allowed the complaint to be amended by making Minnie Simpson a party plaintiff, with an allegation that she is mother of Joseph Holladay and that his father is dead. The trial was postponed at defendant's request, who claimed to be taken by surprise by the amendment and wished a postponement to prepare for trial. When the case was called for trial on September 4, 1908, defendant objected to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground that the amended complaint had not been served upon him. This objection was overruled by the magistrate, whereupon defendant refused to answer and withdrew. After testimony in support of the allegations of the amended complaint, the magistrate rendered judgment for the plaintiff for $48, directing that the money be paid to Minnie Simpson, mother of plaintiff, for his benefit. Defendant appealed from the judgment of the magistrate on the grounds that it was improper to allow the amendment, as there was nothing to show that Minnie Simpson had any interest in the controversy, or that she was a necessary or proper party, and that the magistrate was without jurisdiction because the amended complaint had not been served upon defendant. On the hearing of the appeal in the circuit court Judge Klugh allowed the complaint to be amended so as to allege further "that the mother, Minnie Simpson, makes no claim to the amount due by defendant, and that same belongs to the plaintiff." Thereupon defendant moved for leave to answer the complaint as thus amended, which was refused by Judge Klugh on the ground that defendant's willful default deprived him of the right to further delay, that the last amendment was really immaterial, and its denial by defendant would not avail him. Holding that substantial justice had been done, Judge Klugh affirmed the judgment of the magistrate.

We find nothing in the exceptions warranting reversal.

[1, 2] That the magistrate had power to allow the amendment after demurrer, and that it was not necessary that the amended complaint should be served upon defendant to give jurisdiction to proceed with the trial, has been settled in the case of Holladay v. Hodge, 84 S. C. 109, 65 S. E. 1019.

[3] Since Minnie Simpson, the mother, was a party to the case before the magistrate after the amendment in that court and acquiesced in the judgment rendered, the amendment allowed in the circuit court was immaterial.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

1. REPLEVIN (§ 12*)—NATURE OF ACTION.

A counterclaim is not available in an action to recover personal property, unless there are exceptional circumstances requiring equitable relief.

2. SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM (§ 13*)—NATURE OF ACTION—EQUITABLE RELIEF.

Where a complaint alleged ownership of all the timber on a tract of land, that defendant threatened to and was about to remove and dispose of timber cut and lying on the land, by floating it down a river, and that plaintiff, being without an adequate remedy at law, prayed an injunction to restrain such removal, but did not allege that defendant had wrongfully taken or detained the logs, such action was not to recover specific personal property, but was for equitable relief; and hence it was error to sustain a demurrer to a counterclaim interposed thereto, on the theory that a counterclaim is not available in replevin.

3. INJUNCTION (§ 241*)—NATURE OF CLAIM—DAMAGES.

In a suit for injunctive relief, defendant may not plead as a counterclaim damages recoverable on the bond.

4. INJUNCTION (§ 252*)—WRONGFUL ISSUANCE—DAMAGES—BOND.

Recovery on an injunction bond for the wrongful issuance of a writ, authorized by Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 243, is ordinarily limited to the damages resulting from the injunction.

6. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT (§ 15*)—RIGHT TO RELIEF—DISCRETION.

7. REPLEVIN (§ 89*)—DISCONTINUANCE—RETURN OF PROPERTY.

Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 299, provides that if property sued for in replevin has been delivered to the plaintiff, and defendant claims a return thereof, judgment for defendant may be for a return of the property, or for the value thereof, if a return cannot be had, with damages for taking and withholding the same. Held that, where plaintiff in replevin had seized the property from defendant's possession, it could not discontinue the action without restoring the status.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Darlington County; J. W. De Vore, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by the Pee Dee River Lumber Company against W. D. Fountain. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed in part, and reversed in part.

W. F. Dargan, for appellant. E. O. Woods, for respondent.

JONES, C. J. The plaintiff, a corporation organized under the laws of Delaware, brought this suit upon a complaint, alleging two causes of action: First, for recovery of possession of about 200 logs of ash, cypress, and cottonwood belonging to plaintiff, of the alleged value of $400, cut and lying upon a described tract of land in Darlington county, on the Great Pee Dee river; second, alleging plaintiff's ownership of all the timber upon the said tract of land; that defendant threatens to remove, and is about to remove and dispose of, the timber cut and lying thereon, which is movable by floating down the Great Pee Dee river; and that, as plaintiff is without adequate remedy at law, injunction is sought to restrain removal of the timber. The prayer of the complaint is for delivery of the property described in the first cause of action, and payment of $100 damages for detention, and for injunction restraining disposal of any of the property referred to in either of the causes of action. A bond in the sum of $800 was executed for the prosecution of the action, for delivery of the property and the wrongful detention, for the return of the property, if return be adjudged, and for payment of whatever sum may be recovered in the action against plaintiff. The property was seized by the sheriff, and the defendant did not replevy the same.

On January 29, 1908, Judge Watts granted a temporary restraining order, enjoining defendant from disposing of the timber on said premises, and, in pursuance of that order, an injunction bond in the sum of $250, to pay damages sustained by defendant, if the court should finally decide that plaintiff was not entitled to injunction.

Using defendant's attorney's statement of the pleadings:

In his answer to plaintiff's first cause of action, the defendant denied the title of the plaintiff to the 200 logs, of the alleged value of $400, and alleged that he was the owner of the same, and that his ownership was well known to the plaintiff; that the value thereof was $800, instead of $400; that by reason of the seizing and withholding of the same he was damaged $800, and demanded a return of the property.

Further answering, the defendant alleged that there were, under plaintiff's deed of purchase, some 360 logs near the Pee Dee river, cut by the defendant, that were expressly excepted, and the title thereto did not pass under said deed of purchase, but these logs were recognized by the plaintiff and the sellers as the property of this defendant; that the value of said logs was $2,800; that they were seized by the plaintiff and withheld from the defendant, to his damage, $2,800.

Further answering plaintiff's second cause of action, the defendant denied plaintiff's title to the property described, alleging ownership to the same in himself, under a contract to cut on shares, entered in 1898, nearly nine years previous to plaintiff's deed of purchase, under which he was placed in possession and control of the entire property; that he had been in entire control of the said property ever since; that under said contract he had, at great cost and expense, deadened trees, cut canals, opened floatroads, and was actively engaged in preparing and marketing the timber aforesaid upon the terms aforesaid; that large numbers of trees had been deadened preparatory to cutting; that a large number had been cut, and were ready to ship and float to market; that, before the contract or agreement to purchase was entered into by the plaintiff for the purchase of said timber, and before the plaintiff had acquired any rights thereto, it was notified by this defendant of his contract with the owners, and was informed of the work done and expense incurred by him under his said contract; that defendant's share in the said timber, under the contract aforesaid, is reasonably worth $15,000; and that by reason of the taking and detention of said timber, and the forcible interference with the defendant's rights on the premises by the plaintiff, he has been damaged in the said sum of $15,000.

Further answering, the defendant, in the sixth paragraph of his answer, recites the expenses mentioned by him in the fifth paragraph of his answer, and his interest in the timber, and alleges the same as a counterclaim against the plaintiff.

The plaintiff demurred to defendant's original answer to his first cause of action and the counterclaim set up by the defendant to plaintiff's second cause of action. The defendant then amended his answer to the plaintiff's first cause of action, and the plaintiff replied to the defendant's amended answer, denying any knowledge or notice of the alleged contract of the defendant with George W. Hopkins, and also any knowledge or notice at any time of any contract to cut said timber between the defendant and any other person, and alleging that if there was such a contract the plaintiff was a purchaser for value, without notice.

The case being called for trial at the fall term of 1910, before his honor, Judge De Vore and a jury, the plaintiff interposed his demurrer to so much of the answer as sets up a counterclaim to the second cause of action, which was sustained by the court. The plaintiff then elected to take a voluntary nonsuit on the legal claim, which was allowed by the court, and so ordered. Defendant appeals from the order sustaining the demurrer to defendant's counterclaim, to plaintiff's second cause of action, and from the order allowing plaintiff to take voluntary nonsuit.

[1] The ground upon which the demurrer was made and sustained was that a counterclaim cannot be interposed in an action for recovery of specific personal property, nor in an action for injunction. Counsel for appellant concedes that counterclaim is not available in an action to recover personal property, unless there are exceptional circumstances requiring equitable relief, as shown in Williams v. Irby, 15 S. C. 462, Ludden & Bates v. Hornsby, 45 S. C. 111, 22 S. E. 781, and Badham v. Badham, 54 S. C. 404, 32 S. E. 444, but contends that the second cause of action was not for the recovery of personal property.

[2] We think the appellant correct in this, as an inspection of the complaint will show. While the second cause of action alleges plaintiff's ownership of certain logs, it is not alleged that defendant has wrongfully taken or detained the same, but that he has undertaken to remove the timber, and threatens to sell and dispose of the same; and with respect to the second cause of action there is no demand for a delivery of the timber. Hence it was error to sustain the demurrer on that ground.

[3] It appears, however, that matters alleged as a counterclaim to the second cause of action are matters which, in contemplation of law, are protected through the injunction bond, and therefore are not properly pleadable as a counterclaim. Section 243 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "When no provision is made by statute as to security upon an injunction, the court or judge shall require a written undertaking on the part of the plaintiff, with or without sureties, to the effect that the plaintiff will pay to the party enjoined such damages, not exceeding an amount to be specified, as he may sustain by reason of the injunction, if the court shall finally decide that the plaintiff was not entitled thereto. The damages may be ascertained by a reference or otherwise as the court shall direct."

[4, 5] The injunction bond thus required ordinarily limits defendant's recovery for damages resulting from the injunction, and such damages may be ascertained as the court shall direct. The rule may be different, if the injunction is sued out maliciously. 10 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 1119, and cases cited. The bond as given may be insufficient protection to defendant, but the remedy was a timely application to have the amount of the bond increased. We therefore sustain the action of the circuit court with respect to the demurrer, in so far as it rejects the matter pleaded in its aspect as a counterclaim. There was error in the order, in so far as it allowed plaintiff to take a nonsuit, because of the peculiar situation.

[6] It is now settled that motions to discontinue, in cases at law or equity, are addressed to the discretion of the court, and will be refused when a discontinuance would work prejudice to the defendant. State v. Southern Ry., 82 S. C. 14, 62 S. E. 1116.

[7] The plaintiff has seized property from the possession of defendant, and could not discontinue the action without restoring the status. The defendant alleges that the property taken from him greatly exceeds the value as alleged in the complaint. Section 299 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "If the property have been delivered to the plaintiff, and the defendant claim a return thereof, judgment for the defendant may be for a return of the property or the value thereof, in case a return cannot be had, and damages for taking and withholding the same." It is not sufficient to say that plaintiff has given a bond. If the property belonged to defendant, he was entitled to its return, or its value only in case a return could not be had, and could not be deprived of his rights in this regard by a discontinuance. The law is thus stated in 34 Cyc. 407, and supported by citation of cases:

"In an action of replevin, both parties are regarded as equally actors; and where the plaintiff in replevying has been put in possession of the property under his writ he cannot be permitted to escape liability to defendant by suffering a nonsuit, or dismissing his action, without the consent of the latter. After the property had been seized and delivered to plaintiff, defendant becomes the virtual plaintiff in the case. Plaintiff cannot and does not thereby deprive defendant of his right to establish his title and right to possession, and obtain a judgment for the return of the property, or its value, and damages for the taking and withholding of the property. If the rule were otherwise, plaintiff, under color of legal process, would perpetrate a fraud on the law, and be allowed to keep property, the title to which was prima facie in defendant, from whom it was taken at the beginning of the suit."

The judgment of the circuit court, in so far as it sustains plaintiff's demurrer to the counterclaim of defendant, is affirmed, but, in so far as it allows plaintiff to discontinue the action, it is reversed.

JONES, C. J. This is a suit in equity, by the plaintiffs, as minority stockholders in the corporation called "Ware Shoals Manufacturing Company," against the corporation itself and the other defendants above named, as majority stockholders, seeking specific performance of a contract partly oral and partly in writing, alleged to have been made by the defendants, and praying an injunction against the continuance of certain acts on the part of the defendants charged to be in violation of such agreement and of the rights of the plaintiffs as stockholders. The complaint also seeks an accounting by the individual defendants for certain moneys belonging to said corporation alleged to have been illegally and wrongfully expended in breach of such agreement and in disregard of the rights of the plaintiffs as minority stockholders; and there is a prayer for alternative relief by the cancellation of the alleged contract, in case the same cannot be enforced according to its terms as averred by the plaintiffs, and for a restoration of the status of the plaintiffs as stockholders as same is claimed to have existed prior to the making of the said contract under which the individual defendants became stockholders therein. It is further charged in the complaint that, by reason of the alleged wrongful, willful, and malicious acts of the individual defendants in violation of said contract, the value of the shares of stock held by the plaintiffs and other minority stockholders has been greatly impaired, to their damage $100,000, for which amount judgment is also prayed against the said defendants individually. By consent of parties, all of the issues both of law and of fact were committed for determination by a referee, who took the testimony offered on behalf of the plaintiffs and thereafter made his report recommending the granting of a motion for the dismissal of the complaint, which motion was made by the defendants at the conclusion of the plaintiffs' case and without entering upon the evidence of the defense. Upon exceptions duly taken by the plaintiffs to the said report and recommendation of the referee, the cause came on for hearing by the circuit court, whereupon a decree was made affirming the findings and conclusions of the referee and overruling the exceptions in all particulars. From this decree the plaintiffs have now appealed to this court.

It appears that on June 30, 1905, the plaintiffs were stockholders in the said Ware Shoals Manufacturing Company, a corporation then duly organized with the plaintiff N. B. Dial as president and treasurer, having an authorized capital stock of $500,000, of which about $255,000 had been subscribed and about $215,000 thereof had been paid in cash and property, and shares of stock to the amount last named had been issued and were then held by various shareowners, including the plaintiffs. On the day last mentioned, an agreement in writing was entered into between the defendant B. Riegel and the defendant Ware Shoals Manufacturing Company, by which it was stipulated that the said B. D. Riegel would take and pay for the unsold portion of the capital stock of the defendant company, amounting in par value to $285,000, upon condition that such subscription should not be binding until and unless, at the next annual meeting of stockholders, the number of the directors of the corporation should be fixed at nine and the defendant B. D. Riegel should be permitted to name five of that number. On the same day, an agreement in writing, expressed to be upon valuable consideration, was made between the plaintiff N. B. Dial and the defendant Benjamin D. Riegel, by which it was contracted that the former would use his best endeavors to procure the ratification forthwith of the above-mentioned written agreement by the directors of the Ware Shoals Manufacturing Company, and, at the next annual meeting of the corporation, would procure the election of five directors to be named by B. D. Riegel, who with four others to be named by other stockholders would constitute the board of directors, and that N. B. Dial would sell at par to the defendant N. B. Riegel sufficient stock in the corporation to make up the total amount of $255,000 of stock thereof, in case the corporation itself should be unable to sell him stock to that amount at least. It was thereby further provided that such persons as should be designated by defendant B. D. Riegel should be elected treasurer of the corporation; and it was also thereby stipulated that the plaintiff N. B. Dial would cause the by-laws of the defendant corporation to be so amended at the said annual meeting of the stockholders as to provide, among other things, for a board of nine directors, who should manage and control the affairs of the corporation, and who should have power to borrow money for the benefit of the company as they might deem advisable and should elect the president and fix his salary. The written agreement in question contains no other provisions having any bearing upon the issues of the cause; there being no reference therein to the filling of the office of president other than such as is contained in the provision last above stated.

It appears from the evidence that the above agreements were carried at the annual stockholders' meeting of the defendant company, held on July 22, 1905, the contract made by the company, through its president, with B. D. Riegel, as already recited, was ratified and accepted in all its terms, provisions, and conditions, and nine directors of said company were unanimously elected to serve for one year, among them being six of the individual defendants in this action. Thereafter, in pursuance of this contract and agreement, Benjamin D. Riegel and his co-defendants became owners by purchase of a majority of the stock in the defendant corporation; and, at the annual meeting of the stockholders held in 1906, the same directors were unanimously re-elected. During each of the years 1905 and 1906, the plaintiff N. B. Dial was elected by the directors to the position of president of the corporation, and he continued to serve as president during those years. Although there appear in the record no resolutions or other official action by the directors fixing the salary of the president during these years, it appears to have been the understanding that the salary of the president during that time should be the sum of $3,000 per annum, payable in monthly installments, and the plaintiff Dial received payment of such salary.

At the meeting of the stockholders held on the 22d day of July, 1907, the same directors were unanimously re-elected, and, at the meeting of the directors held the same day, as appears by the minutes offered in evidence, the plaintiff, N. B. Dial was re-elected president for one year. Thereupon the president having by request temporarily retired from the meeting, the defendant B. D. Riegel was appointed a committee to confer with the president, Dial, and to fix the amount of salary of the latter. Being unable to come to an agreement with the plaintiff Dial, who refused to accept an annual salary of $1,200 proposed, a further meeting of the directors was held on the same day, at which a proposition on behalf of the plaintiff Dial to fix his salary at $2,500 was rejected by a vote of a majority of the directors, whereupon Mr. Dial tendered his resignation as president, which was accepted, and a new president was elected by the directors in his stead, on the same day, to serve without salary.

The foregoing are conceded facts bearing upon the issues here presented; but there are certain allegations of fact by the plaintiffs which are controverted by the defendants, and it is necessary to consider the testimony bearing upon these questions.

It is averred in the complaint, as a part of the contract by which the defendant Benjamin D. Riegel and his associates became the owners of the majority of the stock in the corporation, it was verbally agreed by defendant that the plaintiff N. B. Dial should be retained in the office of president of the corporation and be annually re-elected for that office, at a salary of $3,000 per annum, for a period of time "as long as he could and would give to the duties of the office proper attention"; and plaintiffs ask that specific performance of this contract shall be adjudged by the court, it being alleged to be for the best interest of the plaintiffs and other stockholders that the same should be specifically enforced.

Without stopping to consider whether this alleged verbal contract comes within the provisions of the statute of frauds by which certain contracts are required to be in writing and signed by the party to be charged, and without passing upon the question so ably presented in argument as to whether, if such contract was originally within the terms of that statute, there has been such a part performance thereof as would suffice to render the statute inapplicable, it is only necessary to say that we have been unable to find any evidence in the record which would warrant this court in overruling the concurrent findings of the referee and the circuit court that no such parol contract has been established by the testimony. Viewing the evidence in the light most favorable to plaintiffs, and accepting as true all the statements under oath by the plaintiffs and their witnesses as to what was said by the defendants, or any of them, at or about the time of the execution of the written agreement already mentioned, with regard to the retention of Mr. Dial as president of the corporation, we are unable to discover anything said or done by any of the defendants which could import into the contract in question an agreement to retain Dial as president for any definite or indefinite term of years. It is not to be doubted that the defendant Benjamin D. Riegel did, at the time of the negotiations for the purchase of the stock, represent in general terms that it was the then intention of himself and his associates to keep Mr. Dial in the office of president, and it might possibly be inferred from his words and conduct that he then entertained the purpose of so retaining plaintiff for some indeterminate period of years. But there is absolutely no proof, even by the testimony of the plaintiff N. B. Dial himself, of any statement made or act done by any of the defendants from which could reasonably be deduced an agreement to continue Mr. Dial in the office of president of this corporation during the remainder of his life, or "so long as he would and could give to the duties of said office proper attention," or for any other period capable of being definitely determined. It is true that the plaintiff N. B. Dial does say that "they agreed to continue me as president, a lifetime position, and pay me $3,000, which was to be increased as the mill prospered"; but he does not undertake to say what was the language used or otherwise to state the terms in which such alleged agreement was phrased or to name the person by whom it was so agreed. It is evident from his testimony as a whole that he does not mean to say that any such agreement was in set terms so made, but that he merely intends to convey his general understanding of what were the intentions expressed by defendants with regard to the matter of his retention as president. The very action of plaintiff Dial in resigning his office of president when his salary was reduced by vote of the directors is inconsistent with his theory that he had a legal right to continue to hold said office and to demand the compensation originally stipulated; and this action on his part tends to show that, while he may then have regarded the defendants as being morally bound to retain him in office of president at a salary of $3,000 per annum, he could not at that time have considered them as being bound by contract to this duty.

Upon the whole evidence we are satisfied that some one or more of the defendants, in discussions had with some of the plaintiffs, expressed a general purpose to retain the plaintiff Dial in the presidency of this corporation for an undetermined period at an unfixed salary; but we are unable to discover any evidence in the record which would justify the conclusion that any contract upon consideration was made to keep him as such president for any period capable of definite determination.

Aside, therefore, from any question as to the lack of mutuality in any such contract as is claimed here to have been made and apart from any considerations as to the effect of the resignation by appellant Dial of his position as president, we must conclude that no agreement upon consideration has been established for the employment of said appellant for any term which can be rendered certain nor at any compensation definitely fixed. The exceptions, therefore, which complain of error in the circuit decree, in any particulars based upon the failure or refusal of the defendants to retain the plaintiff Dial in the office of president of the defendant corporation, cannot be sustained, and the same must be overruled.

Appellants further urge that there was error by the circuit court in failing to find that the individual defendants herein, as a part of the contract under which they purchased the stock in the defendant corporation, further contracted and agreed, verbally, to take the entire output of the mill of the defendant company, forever thereafter, at the prevailing market price; and that this contract was subsequently broken by the defendants, whereby the plaintiffs suffered damage by the impairment of the value of their stock resulting from such breach of contract on the part of the defendants. As is substantially found by the referee and confirmed by the circuit judge, the evidence wholly fails to establish any legal enforceable contract on the part of the individual defendants, or any of them, to take any definite portion or the whole output of the mill of the defendant company for any fixed or even indefinite time. The utmost that can reasonably be considered that the evidence shows is that the defendant B. D. Riegel, during the negotiations for the purchase by him of the controlling interest in the stock of the defendant company, represented that he and other individuals among his codefendants were in control of a corporation known as the "Riegel Sack Company," and that defendants would be in a position to market the output of the Ware Shoals Manufacturing Company by disposing of the same to the Riegel Sack Company at prevailing market prices, and thus save the commission otherwise likely to be incurred in selling the products of the defendant company through the agency of middlemen. It is manifest from the entire evidence that the statements of the individual defendants as to this matter were mere representations of the incidental benefits which were likely to accrue from their contemplated connection with the defendant company, and that such representations were not intended and could not reasonably have been understood as amounting to any contract, either by the individual defendants or by the Riegel Sack Company, to take such output of the defendant company at prevailing prices during all future time. It is evident that no such far-reaching contract could have been intended, as otherwise some action of the defendant corporation would have been taken in pursuance thereof, since it is hardly reasonable to suppose that a contract so unlimited in extent of time should have been left to the verbal understanding of one or two individuals without any minute or memorandum made thereof and without any action thereupon or reference thereto in any record of the proceedings of any meeting of stockholders or directors at the time when the written agreement already mentioned was adopted and confirmed. As the conclusion has been reached that there is an entire failure of evidence to show any such meeting of the minds of the parties or any such mutuality of agreement between them as to constitute a contract with reference to the taking by the individual defendants of the products of the defendant company at any stipulated price, there is no necessity for a consideration of the questions as to the applicability of the provisions of the statute of frauds or as to the effect of any alleged part performance of such supposed contract.

The same finding of fact must be made with regard to the verbal contract charged to have been made by the defendants to furnish money from time to time for the use of defendant company at low rates of interest. Accepting all the testimony upon this point, even in the view most favorable to the plaintiffs, it merely shows that one or more of the individual defendants, at the time they were seeking to purchase a controlling interest in the stock of the defendant company, colloquially represented that they were in a position to procure loans of money for the uses of the defendant company, at low rates of interest, and that, in the event of their obtaining control of a majority of the stock in said company, they would procure and furnish such money "at lowest market rates of interest" from time to time as same might be needed; but there is no testimony as to any definite statement of the rate of interest at which such money could be furnished by them, and no proof of any corporate action on the part of the defendant company in acceptance of any such proposition. It is true that it is testified by one of the plaintiffs that, at the time the matter was discussed and before the individual defendants became stockholders in defendant company, the statement was made by some unnamed one or more of the defendants that they could then "furnish money at 4 per cent., but it would fluctuate." There is no testimony in the case as to what was the "lowest market rate" at which money could have been furnished for the use of the defendant company at any particular time at which it was needed by said company, nor was any proof adduced that said company was compelled at any time to borrow money at any rate higher than the "lowest market rate" then prevailing.

In brief, there is no evidence to establish the making of any definite contract with defendant company to furnish money for its use at any fixed rate, nor is there any proof of any loss or damage resulting to any of the plaintiffs by impairment of the value of their stock or otherwise, caused by any breach of the alleged verbal contract of the individual defendants to furnish money for the corporate purposes of the defendant company.

In so far as concerns the other specifications of error in the findings with reference to the matter of alleged extravagance on the part of the individual defendants in their action as stockholders or directors in the erection of residences upon the corporate property and in the issuance and sale of preferred stock, a careful examination of the record fails to show any error in the circuit judgment dismissing the complaint in these particulars.

The conclusions already announced as to the matters of fact render it unnecessary to consider certain exceptions, ably argued both on behalf of the appellants and of the respondents, charging error of law by the circuit judge in the holding that an agreement between stockholders to elect from year to year a certain person, for an indefinite period at a fixed annual salary, would be void as contrary to public policy, and that such a contract must be held void in this case for the further reason that the same is in violation of the by-laws of the defendant company. Upon these exceptions, as well as upon all others which raise questions of law based upon a view of the evidence at variance with the facts as found by the circuit judgment and concurred in by this court, no opinion need now be expressed, since the questions thereby raised have become entirely speculative in consequence of the determinations reached as to the matters of fact.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

NEW TRIAL (§ 132*)—PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE—TIME FOR PRESENTATION.

At the September, 1910, term of the superior court a verdict was rendered. The losing party moved for a new trial; the rule nisi being made returnable in vacation on November 2d. An order was also granted, reciting that it was impossible to make out a complete brief of evidence before the adjournment of court, repeating the setting of the hearing, and declaring that the movant might amend the motion at any time before the final hearing, and that he should have until the hearing, whenever it might be, to prepare and present for approval a brief of the evidence. On the date fixed for a hearing counsel entered into a written consent to continue it to November 4th, and the judge passed an order setting the hearing for the agreed date, and allowing the movant until such date to make out and file a brief of the evidence. On the second day so fixed the judge, by agreement, passed an order declaring that the "motion for a new trial stands continued until" another named date in vacation (November 22d). On the last day so fixed counsel for respondent moved to dismiss the motion for a new trial, because no brief of the evidence was presented for approval on or before November 4th, and the order continuing the hearing from that date did not continue the time for presenting or filing a brief of the evidence. It was admitted that a brief of evidence had been agreed upon by counsel on Sunday, November 20th, but the agreement was dated November 3d, and an entry of filing thereon was dated November 4th. It did not appear that the brief was at any time presented to the judge for approval; nor was there any assignment of error based on a refusal to approve it. Held that, under such circumstances, the judgment of the presiding judge dismissing the motion will not be reversed.

Error from Superior Court, Pulaski County; J. H. Martin, Judge.

Action by T. H. Bridges against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

H. F. Lawson, for plaintiff in error. Graham & Graham, for defendant in error.

ATKINSON, J. T. H. Bridges instituted suit against the Southern Railway Company for damages on account of the loss of a trunk and its contents, alleged to be plaintiff's baggage while a passenger on the railroad of the defendant. A verdict having been rendered against the plaintiff, he moved for a new trial, which was overruled, and he accepted.

[1] 1. The plaintiff testified to the value of the trunk and its contents, and also, in substance, that he purchased a round-trip ticket from Hawkinsville, Ga., to Richmond, Va., to return by way of Norfolk, Va., by rail. The defendant's agent at Hawkinsville gave the plaintiff a check for his trunk to Richmond. He received his trunk at Richmond, and left there for Norfolk, over the Old Dominion Steamship Company's line, receiving from that company a check for his trunk from Richmond to Norfolk. The Southern Railway Company's line did not run into Norfolk. Upon his arrival at Norfolk, he received from a transfer company, in return for the steamship company's check, a transfer check. The trunk could not be found, and the transfer company then delivered to the plaintiff a check, purporting to be a Southern Railway Company's check for the transportation of the trunk from Norfolk to Hawkinsville. Upon his return to the latter place, the plaintiff presented the last-mentioned check to the local agent of the defendant at that place, and demanded his trunk. The trunk could not be found there, and the agent took the check and endeavored to trace the trunk, but failed to do so, and subsequently returned the check to the plaintiff. There was no evidence that the transfer company at Norfolk was the agent of the defendant company, which denied that the trunk was ever delivered to it, or its agent, after the plaintiff had received it at Richmond. The plaintiff testified that the agent of the transfer company was also the agent of the Southern Railway Company, but qualified this by saying that the only reason he had for saying so was because he issued this Southern Railway Company check. The only other testimony on this point was that the Southern Railway Company had an office in Norfolk. Under the facts stated, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

[2] 2. It was complained in the motion for new trial that the judge rejected evidence offered by the plaintiff to the effect that it was the universal custom in Norfolk for a person holding a check of one railway company to deliver it to the agent of another company and receive a check in return from the latter company; also that the court did not require the defendant company to produce, in response to a notice served upon it, the original ticket sold by defendant to the plaintiff. Relatively to the notice to produce, it was also urged that the response made by the defendant was insufficient, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment by default, under the statute, on account of the alleged insufficiency of the response. The defendant did not contend upon the trial that it had not sold the ticket, as claimed by defendant, and a sworn copy was actually introduced by the defendant, without objection upon the part of plaintiff. If the original ticket had been introduced, it would not have been sufficient to have made out the plaintiff's case. No motion was made by the plaintiff for a judgment by default on account of the failure to make proper response to the notice to produce. If a proper case had been presented for such a judgment, in order to take advantage of the right, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to move for a judgment. Morris v. Wofford, 114 Ga. 935, 41 S. E. 56; Mayor, etc., of Macon v. Humphries, 122 Ga. 800, 50 S. E. 986. The refusal of the judge to grant a new trial on account of alleged errors in refusing to admit evidence, or to require the defendant company to produce the original ticket, will not be disturbed.

[3, 4] 3. Error was assigned upon a charge of the court relating to the amount of damages recoverable in the case; but as, under the evidence, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover any sum, even if there had been error in the instruction, it would not have been harmful. Error was also assigned upon the failure of the judge to instruct the jury as to the "rule of law in reference as to how the existence of agency may be proven," and also because the judge failed to give in charge "any rule of law in reference to the probative value of the railway baggage check as evidence of the delivery of the baggage to the railway company, or as evidence of the existence of the agency on the part of the person delivering said check to the plaintiff." Under the facts recited in the first division of the opinion, there was no evidence sufficient to show that after the trunk went into the hands of the Old Dominion Steamship Company, a different carrier from the Southern Railway Company, it went out of the possession of that company; nor was there sufficient evidence of agency for the defendant, the Southern Railway Company, of any person who issued and received checks for the trunk after it went into the hands of the steamship company, and there was no error in failing to charge as complained of.

Error from Superior Court, Wilcox County; U. V. Whipple, Judge.

Action by O. T. Montfort, administrator, against W. M. Gorham and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

E. H. Williams and Hal Lawson, for plaintiffs in error. Haygood & Cutts, for defendants in error.

EVANS, P. J. O. T. Montfort, as administrator of M. A. Bentley, filed his petition against Walter M. Gorham and others, praying to enjoin the defendants from interfering with the possession of lot of land No. 33 in the twelfth district of originally Dooly, now Wilcox, county, and to cancel a certain deed as a cloud upon his title. It was alleged in the petition: That the plaintiff was in possession of the land, and claimed title thereto under a grant from the state to his intestate, dated May 20, 1846; that the title on which the defendants based a pretended claim began with what purported to have been a deed made by M. A. Bentley to Robert S. Waters, dated July 1, 1854, and they claimed to have mesne conveyances from Waters to themselves; that the deed purporting to have been made by M. A. Bentley to Robert S. Waters was a forgery; that it was never executed by M. A. Bentley, and never did purport to have been executed by him, but, on the contrary, was originally written as having been executed by M. A. Bentley, by a certain other person as his attorney in fact, but, if such other person ever wrote the deed, he had no power of attorney to execute it; and that some person claiming under the deed, knowing that no proof could be made of the power of attorney, struck from the deed the words "by his attorney in fact," and the name signed to the deed as attorney in fact, so as to leave the deed purporting to have been executed by M. A. Bentley. The defendants filed answers. All of them disclaimed title, except Gorham, who, as surviving partner of Henry Lewis & Co., claimed to have title to the land, and to have been in the continuous possession of it for about 15 years. They denied the plaintiff's title, and averred him to be a trespasser on the land. The plaintiff filed an affidavit of forgery relative to the deed attacked for forgery in his petition. On the trial the parties stipulated: That the land was originally granted by the state to M. A. Bentley on May 20, 1846, that the plaintiff was in possession at the time of bringing the suit, and that he should proceed by making out a prima facie case, and, after that was done, then, upon a tender in evidence by the defendants of the deed purporting to have been made by M. A. Bentley to Robert S. Waters on July 1, 1854, there should be a separate trial as to the issue of forgery, as provided under the law for the trial of forgery as a separate issue.

The plaintiff put in evidence his application for administration on the estate of M. A. Bentley, and letters of administration granted thereon of date of April 7, 1902. The defendants then tendered in evidence an original deed, the same purporting to have been made by Myron A. Bentley to Robert S. Waters, dated July 1, 1854, conveying the land in controversy, and purporting to have been executed in Clarke county, Ga., in the presence of H. H. Dean, J. P., and George K. Smith. Upon the coming in of this deed an issue of forgery was made up, and upon the issue the plaintiff read the testimony of Charles L. Bentley, taken by interrogatories, to the effect that he was a resident of Hall county, 48 years old, and was the son of O. S. Bentley, who died in 1889; that Myron A. Bentley and O. S. Bentley were brothers; that M. A. Bentley died in 1854; that upon inspection of the deed made by M. A. Bentley to Robert S. Waters, witnessed by George K. Smith and H. H. Dean, J. P., conveying land lot 33 in the Twelfth district of Dooly county, Ga., the witness declared the written parts of the same to be in the handwriting of his father, O. S. Bentley; that he had also examined other deeds purporting to have been made by M. A. Bentley, by his attorney in fact, O. S. Bentley, to Robert M. Braden, conveying different lots of land, and purporting to have been executed on August 11, 1854, and these deeds were in the handwriting of O. S. Bentley, and the signature to these deeds is the same signature as that on the deed from M. A. Bentley to Robert S. Waters; that he was interested in the recovery to the extent of one-sixth; that he had never paid any taxes on the land; and that Montfort was appointed administrator at the instance of his aunt, Mrs. Denison. M. B. Cannon testified that he saw the original deed purporting to be from Myron A. Bentley to Robert S. Waters; at the time he saw the deed it purported to have been signed by Myron A. Bentley, by his attorney in fact, O. S. Bentley; and that it had since been changed by being torn or mutilated. This deed was in the possession of the witness, who was attorney for Henry Lewis & Co. (the defendant in the present suit being the surviving partner of that firm), who claimed title under it, in a suit then pending in Wilcox superior court against A. J. Connor and Mrs. Sangster. A deed made by Myron A. Bentley, by his attorney in fact, O. S. Bentley, executed in Clarke county, Ga., July 1, 1854, conveying lot of land No. 36 in the Twelfth district of Dooley county to Robert S. Waters, said deed being witnessed by George K. Smith and H. H. Dean, J. P., duly recorded, and being upon the same blank and printed form as that of the deed upon which the issue of forgery is made, produced by the clerk of the superior court under a subpoena duces tecum, and identified by J. W. Haygood, was put in evidence.

The defendants offered J. L. Bankston, who testified: That he was an attorney at law, and the agent representing Henry Lewis & Co.; that to him was intrusted the sale of the lands belonging to them in Wilcox county; that some of the title papers of Lewis & Co. were incomplete, and among them was the title under which the land in controversy is claimed by Gorham as surviving partner of Lewis & Co.; that he examined through the old deed books of Wilcox county, trying to find a record of the power of attorney from M. A. Bentley to O. S. Bentley, and also made search in other places, but was unable to find the original or record of any power of attorney from M. A. Bentley to O. S. Bentley. J. W. Haygood, in behalf of the defendant, testified that in connection with the Bentley cases he had occasion to examine the records in Wilcox and Dooley counties, and had never seen the record of any power of attorney from M. A. Bentley to O. S. Bentley, and that he knew the signature of M. A. Bentley to the deed attacked was in the handwriting of O. S. Bentley. Eldridge Cutts, for the defendants, testified that he had never had occasion to examine the records in search of any power of attorney from M. A. Bentley, and that O. T. Montfort, the administrator, was in possession of the land a few months prior to the filing of the present suit.

Upon the conclusion of the evidence the court directed a verdict finding the deed attacked to be a forgery. A motion was made for a new trial, complaining of the rejection of certain testimony, and of the direction of a verdict on the issue of forgery. The motion was overruled.

[1] 1. The court rejected the following testimony of the defendants' counsel: "I was connected with the defense of this case at the first trial, after which my connection ceased. I was attorney for the defendants. In preparing the case for trial I made a search for the power of attorney authorizing O. S. Bentley, as attorney in fact for M. A. Bentley, to execute the deed now attacked as a forgery. I applied to the clerk of the superior court of Dooley county for a certified copy of such power of attorney from his records, and he failed to furnish such certified copy, stating by letter that he could find no such paper upon record." This testimony was ruled out, on the ground that it was hearsay. Manifestly it was hearsay, in the sense that it was oral testimony concerning the contents of a writing which was neither produced nor accounted for.

[2] 2. It is contended that it was error to direct a verdict, because the plaintiff failed to make out a prima facie right to sue; the contention being that the lapse of 48 years from the death of M. A. Bentley to the grant of the administration on his estate afforded a presumption of law that the estate had been lawfully administered, and therefore that the grant of letters of administration on M. A. Bentley's estate to the plaintiff was speculative and void. This point was raised in the case of Bullock v. Dunbar, 114 Ga. 754, 40 S. E. 783, where it was ruled: "The old doctrine that a defendant in possession should be protected against an action instituted by the administrator of him who died clothed with the legal title to the property in dispute, when it appeared that the administration was stale and had been obtained for fraudulent or speculative purposes, did not apply in any case where the defendant's possession had not been of sufficient duration to support a title in him by prescription. The provision in the limitation act of 1856, that 'a prescription does not run against an unrepresented estate until representation, provided the lapse does not exceed five years,' was curative of the evil which rendered it necessary before the passage of that act to invoke the doctrine referred to above." We are asked to review and overrule this case, but, upon consideration and examination, we adhere to this ruling, and decline to overrule it. There was no evidence that the defendants had been in possession of the land, so as to support a prescriptive title.

[3] 3. It is further contended that the evidence was insufficient to show the deed to be a forgery. Notwithstanding the deed purporting to have been made by M. A. Bentley to Robert S. Waters had never been recorded, it was stipulated between the parties that the collateral issue of its forgery should be tried separately from the main case. Civil Code 1910, § 4210, is designed to supply a statutory remedy for determining the question as to whether a registered deed offered in evidence is or is not genuine. It has no application to an unregistered deed. Payne v. Ormond, 44 Ga. 515. Therefore we will consider the effect of the testimony independently of the statute. It is undisputed that the title to the land is in the plaintiff unless this deed is genuine. The plaintiff is in possession of the land. The defendant, some time prior to the present suit, had a litigation with a third person over the very same land, and in that litigation he based his claim of title upon this same deed, which at that time did not purport to have been executed personally by M. A. Bentley, but did purport to have been executed by O. S. Bentley as attorney in fact for M. A. Bentley. When introduced in evidence in the present suit, the deed was found to have been altered, so as to make it appear to have been the personal deed of M. A. Bentley. No explanation is offered as to how, or by whom, the alteration was made, although the deed appears all the while to have been in the custody of the party who claims under it. The nature of the alteration shows that it was designedly done. As it did not appear that the deed was in the control or possession of any person other than the defendants, and as it did appear that they made fruitless effort to discover the power of attorney from M. A. Bentley to O. S. Bentley for the purpose of completing the deed as a muniment of title, and that they were claiming the land under the mutilated deed, and the nature of the mutilation being such as to entirely change its character, the conclusion is irresistible that the alteration was fraudulent, and with the intent to prejudice the rights of the true owner. No presumption of fact can arise in favor of a person out of possession of land that the deed was made pursuant to a valid power of attorney, simply because a long interval of time has elapsed since the date the deed is alleged to have been executed. On the contrary, the facts demanded an inference that the spoliation of the deed is attributable to the defendants, and the rule is that every inference is to be drawn against a party to a suit guilty of mutilating documentary evidence. Hays v. Bayliss, 82 Mo. 209; 1 Starkie on Ev. (3d Ed.) 564; 1 Wigmore on Ev. § 278. The fraudulent alteration of a deed by erasure, mutilation, or addition, with intent to prejudice the rights of another, will constitute forgery, if the alteration so made may have the effect intended. 13 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 1090. The deed in its present form purports to have been executed by M. A. Bentley. There is nothing upon its face to show the contrary. The proof is uncontradicted that it was never executed by M. A. Bentley, and we think the evidence demanded a finding that it be declared to be a forgery.

MERCK v. STATE

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 14, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 655*)—HOMICIDE (§ 309*)—INSTRUCTIONS—VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

Neither the evidence nor the statement of the accused made during the trial to the jury authorized an instruction upon the law of voluntary manslaughter. Accordingly the judge did not err in refusing to give in charge a written request, presented by counsel for the accused, defining the offense of voluntary manslaughter. Nor did the judge err in informing the solicitor general in the presence of the jury that he need not discuss the law of voluntary manslaughter to the jury, as no instruction would be given on that subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1520-1535; Dec. Dig. § 655; * Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 649-656; Dec. Dig. § 309.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 762*)—HOMICIDE—INSTRUCTIONS—INTIMATION OF OPINION OF JUDGE.

The jury was instructed by the judge that they could find but one of two verdicts, "either one for murder, or for justifiable homicide, whatever the evidence and the defendant's statement, under the rules of law that I have given you in charge, convinces you of." There was a proper charge given upon the subjects of reasonable doubt and of accidental killing, as well as insanity, and at the close of the charge, after instructing the jury as to the forms of the verdicts for murder and for murder with a recommendation for life imprisonment, the charge was closed with the following instruction: "If you believe the state has not made out a case of murder, or for any of the reasons that I have given you in charge that the defendant is guiltless of any offense, and should not be convicted, the form of your verdict would be: 'We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.'" The instruction first quoted in this headnote was not erroneous, "in that it was a direct intimation to the jury that murder had alone been proven under the evidence," because the court nowhere in its charge either explained or defined justifiable homicide to the jury." The theory of justifiable homicide was not presented, either by the evidence or the statement of the accused.

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. BUCHAN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 15, 1911.)

RAILROADS (§ 439*)—OPERATION—INJURIES TO ANIMALS ON TRACK—PLEADING.

Where, in an action for damages against a railway company for the killing of a mule, the only allegation of negligence was that the defendant, "through the negligent operation" of a certain train, struck and killed a mule, it was error to overrule a special demurrer to the petition, based on the ground that the petition did not allege with sufficient certainty in what way or manner the defendant was negligent in operating its train, or what specific acts of negligence of the defendant or its agents resulted in the killing of the mule.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Dec. Dig. § 439.*]

Error from Superior Court, Pulaski County; J. H. Martin, Judge.

Action by W. G. Buchan against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant brings error. Reversed.

W. G. Buchan brought suit against the Southern Railway Company to recover damages. Beside the formal allegations, the petition contained the following: "On March 8, 1909, said railway company, through the negligent operation of its trains, struck and killed a mule belonging to petitioner, at Meyer's Crossing, a crossing and flag station on said road, in said county, about six miles from Hawkinsville, on the branch line between Hawkinsville and Cochran. Said mule was medium size, gray mare mule, about eight years old, and worth $225. Petitioner has made demand on said road for payment, and the same has been refused, and petitioner has not received any compensation for the loss of said property." The petitioner therefore prayed judgment for $225 as damages, and that process issue. The defendant demurred to the petition, on the ground that the allegation that the defendant "killed the mule through the negligent operation of its trains," without stating whether it was a freight or a passenger train, and the particulars of the killing, was insufficient.

The plaintiff amended the petition by striking the word "train" and inserting, in lieu thereof, "the regular afternoon passenger train coming from Cochran to Hawkinsville, August 12, 1910." The defendant demurred to the petition as amended, on the ground that it did not allege with sufficient certainty in what way or manner the defendant was negligent or what specific acts of negligence of the defendant or its agents resulted in the killing of the mule. The demurrer was overruled, and exception was taken thereto pendente lite. After a trial resulting in a verdict for the plaintiff, the defendant moved for a new trial, which was overruled, and it excepted. Error was assigned on the exception pendente lite.

A. C. Pate and Graham & Graham, for plaintiff in error. Herbert L. Grice, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). The petition, as amended, alleged that the railroad company, "through the negligent operation" of its passenger train running between two named points on a certain day, struck and killed a mule belonging to the plaintiff at a certain crossing where there was a flag station. The entire allegation of negligence was contained in the words "through the negligent operation" of one of its trains. Under several former rulings of this court, such an allegation was subject to special demurrer, and the court erred in overruling the demurrer thereto. Macon, Dublin & Savannah R. Co. v. Stewart, 120 Ga. 890, 48 S. E. 354; Kemp v. Central Ry. Co., 122 Ga. 559, 50 S. E. 465 (4); Southern Ry. Co. v. Pope, 129 Ga. 842, 60 S. E. 157. The error was material, for it left the defendant without information as to the specific acts of negligence charged against it, and it did not afford sufficient information as a basis for preparing to meet the case brought against it. This being true, the verdict must be set aside, and it is unnecessary to discuss the details of rulings made in a trial thus improperly entered upon.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent, and HILL, J., not presiding.

ATKINSON, J., concurs in this decision, because concluded by former decisions. See special concurrence in Southern Ry. Co. v. Pope, 129 Ga. 842, 60 S. E. 157.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 954*)—NEW TRIAL—PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE—GROUNDS OF MOTION.

A ground of a motion for a new trial was without merit, which alleged that the court erred in making the following statement in the presence of the jury: "I will let it in to discriminate between murder and voluntary manslaughter"—it nowhere appearing in the motion to what the judge had reference.

A ground of a motion for a new trial, which did no more than complain that the court erred "in letting in evidence, over objection of defendant's counsel, the account of a scuffle over a jug of whisky, which took place at the home of the deceased about one hour before the killing," was without merit.

6. HOMICIDE (§ 309*)—INSTRUCTIONS—VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

In defining the offense of voluntary manslaughter, the judge, in the language of the Penal Code (section 65), instructed the jury that "provocation by words, threats, menaces and contemptuous gestures shall in no case be sufficient to free the person killing from the guilt and crime of murder." This charge was not erroneous, because the judge did not further instruct "the jury that such words, threats, menaces, and contemptuous gestures, if sufficient to cause defendant to fear that a felony was about to be committed upon his person." The ground of the motion is incomplete; and, besides, the doctrine of reasonable fear has no connection with the offense of voluntary manslaughter.

No provision is made for the caveat of a will offered for probate in common form. The application of the plaintiff in error was in the nature of a caveat to a will already probated in common form. It was defective as a technical motion to set aside the judgment of probate, as no illegality in the judgment was alleged; and it is not good as an application for the executor to prove the will in solemn form, in that there was no prayer for the executor to probate the will in solemn form, or for citation to the heirs of the testator. See, in this connection, Hooks v. Brown, 125 Ga. 122, 53 S. E. 583; Bullard v. Wynn, 184 Ga. 636, 68 S. E. 439; Civil Code 1910, § 3856 et seq.

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 497*)
—COMPENSATION—TEMPORARY ADMINISTRATORS—EXTRA COMPENSATION.

Section 4067 of the Civil Code of 1910, which provides that, "in other cases of extraordinary services [besides those previously enumerated], extra compensation may be allowed by the ordinary" to an administrator, applies to a temporary as well as a permanent administrator.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 497*)
—COMPENSATION—"EXTRAORDINARY SERVICES."

"Extraordinary services," for which extra compensation may be allowed to an administrator, are services rendered by him while administrator, and in the discharge of his duties as such.

(a) They do not include voluntary services rendered by a person in procuring a cemetery lot and rendering assistance in connection with the funeral of a decedent, though the person so acting is afterward appointed temporary administrator of such decedent; nor do they include an application by him to be appointed permanent administrator, which is successfully resisted by an heir of the intestate, and which results in the appointment of the latter.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

W. D. Fields was appointed temporary administrator. G. W. Case filed a caveat. From an order as to compensation of the temporary administrator, he appealed to the superior court, and from the judgment of the superior court, he brings error. Reversed.

Hines & Jordan, for plaintiff in error.
Bell & Ellis, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. A person took out temporary letters of administration on the estate of a deceased woman, and on the same day applied for permanent letters. A caveat was filed by one who claimed to be an heir, and to have been selected by a majority of the heirs to administer the estate. The caveator was appointed. The temporary administrator then filed a petition to be allowed compensation, alleging that, when the intestate died, it was not known that she had any relatives; that she left a house and lot and a small amount of money and personalty; and that he had performed unusual and extraordinary services. He prayed to be allowed suitable compensation therefor, and fees for the attorneys who had represented him. The ordinary allowed $75 as compensation for the administrator and $50 as attorney's fees. The case was appealed to the superior court, where it was submitted to the presiding judge without a jury. The judge awarded to the administrator $75 as compensation, but no attorney's fees. The permanent administrator excepted.

[1] 1. The case involves two questions: If it is necessary for a temporary administrator to render extraordinary services, can the ordinary allow him extra compensation above the usual commissions for receiving the estate, under Civil Code 1910, § 4067; or do the provisions of that section apply only to a permanent administrator? And, if such compensation can be allowed to a temporary administrator, was the basis of allowance in this case proper?

The Code nowhere provides for the compensation of a temporary administrator by name, save as he is classed with administrators generally. Section 4062 provides that as compensation for his services "the administrator" shall receive a commission of 2½ per cent. on all sums of money received by him and a like per cent. on all sums paid out by him. Section 4065 provides that no commissions shall be paid for delivering over any property in kind, but the ordinary may allow a reasonable compensation, not exceeding 3 per cent. of the appraised value. Section 4066 makes provision in regard to the allowance of traveling expenses and reasonable compensation, if an administrator is required, in the discharge of his duties, to travel out of his county. Section 4067 provides that, "in other cases of extraordinary services, extra compensation may be allowed by the ordinary." Section 4068 declares that, if a trust fund passes through the hands of several administrators, the fund shall not be diminished by charges of commissions by each successive administrator holding and receiving in the same right, but that commissions for receiving and those for paying out shall be paid to the trustee performing the service.

The general duty of a temporary administrator is to collect and preserve the estate. Sometimes extraordinary services may become necessary. Certainly the law does not contemplate that a temporary administrator shall serve without any compensation. But, as has been shown, no provision is made therefor, except in the general rules as to compensation of administrators. If it should become necessary in the discharge of his duty to travel out of the county and incur expenses, the law does not require him to pay the necessary expense from his own pocket, without reimbursement, or to let the estate go to waste. Nor is there any reason why the provision as to extra compensation should not apply to a temporary administrator as well as to a permanent one.

[2] 2. If a temporary administrator applies for extra compensation beyond the regular commissions, it must be on the basis of extraordinary services rendered by him while acting as administrator, and in the performance of his duties. The nature of the position and the duties of such an administrator must be borne in mind. It is not everything which he may do which will entitle him to extra compensation. Nor can he claim compensation for acts done before his appointment as temporary administrator. Funeral expenses to correspond with the circumstances of the deceased in life are a proper charge against the estate; but voluntary acts in assisting in the burial furnish no ground for allowing extra compensation to the person performing them, though he may afterward become the temporary administrator of the estate of the deceased. If he wishes to try to set up a charge for such services as extraordinary services of an administrator, he should become temporary administrator before rendering them. If he acts as a philanthropist or friend, he cannot claim extra compensation therefor as administrator, when later he becomes such. Neither can he claim extra compensation as temporary administrator on the ground that he has sought to be appointed permanent administrator and failed in the effort because an heir was appointed.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

An examination of the evidence shows that a large part of it deals with acts of the character above indicated. It seems apparent that they entered into the determination of the presiding judge. The estate is small. If any allowance is made, it should be on the basis of extraordinary services of the administrator. We think the case should be returned for a rehearing under the principles here announced.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent, and HILL, J., not presiding.

CENTRAL GEORGIA POWER CO. v.
MAYS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 15, 1911.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 222*)—PROCEEDINGS TO TAKE PROPERTY—INSTRUCTION.

On the hearing of a proceeding to condemn private property for public purposes as provided by statute, and to assess damages for same, it is error for the court to charge the jury that, "the right of enjoyment of private property being an absolute right of every citizen, every act of another which unlawfully interferes with such enjoyment is a cause of action." Such charge may mislead the jury into believing that the condemnation proceedings were unlawful and that they should assess damages accordingly.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 562-567; Dec. Dig. § 222.*]

2. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 201*)—COMPENSATION—STATUTORY PROVISION.

In condemnation proceedings authorized by the statute, the willingness or unwillingness of the property owner to part with his property is not a subject-matter of consideration. The statute (Civil Code 1910, § 5206 et seq.) provides how damages to private property condemned for public purposes may be assessed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Dec. Dig. § 201.*]

3. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 136*)—COMPENSATION—MEASURE.

In assessing damages, under the facts in this case, there are two elements to be considered: First, the market value of the property actually taken; and, second, the consequential damages which naturally and proximately arise to the remainder of the owner's property from the taking of that part which is taken and devoting it to public purposes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. §§ 363-366; Dec. Dig. § 136.*]

4. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 200*)—PROCEEDINGS TO TAKE PROPERTY—PRESUMPTIONS.

It cannot be assumed in condemnation proceedings that there will be negligent construction or operation, so as to cause damages in excess of that which would naturally and proximately result from the construction and operation of a transmission line across the property sought to be condemned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 540; Dec. Dig. § 200.*]

5. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 202*)—PROCEEDINGS TO TAKE PROPERTY—EVIDENCE AS TO VALUE.

It is not error for a court, in condemnation proceedings, to allow the plaintiff's witness on cross-examination to answer the question, "What was it [the land over which the plaintiff sought to construct its transmission line] worth for building purposes? For building purposes it might be worth more?" by saying, "It might, if any one wanted to use it"—the value of the land for building purposes being one element in ascertaining what the market value of said land was.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Cent. Dig. § 541; Dec. Dig. § 202.*]

6. EVIDENCE (§ 471*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES—FACTS ON WHICH OPINION IS BASED.

It is not error for the court to overrule an objection to the following question, propounded to and answered by the defendant in proceedings to condemn land for public purposes: "How much do you say the transmission line depreciates the market value of your land there?" Answer: "Ninety dollars an acre"—where the witness has already testified what the market value of the land was before and after the transmission line was built.

7. EVIDENCE (§ 497*)—OPINION EVIDENCE—EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES—FACTS ON WHICH OPINION IS BASED.

It is not error to allow plaintiff's witness in condemnation proceedings, on cross-examination, to answer the question, "Do you think that transmission line would have any effect on this property [the property of defendant in issue] for building purposes?" when taken in connection with the testimony of other witnesses, who testified as to the market value of the land before and after the transmission line was built.

Error from Superior Court, Butts County; R. T. Daniel, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the Central Georgia Power Company against R. W. Mays. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Walter T. Johnson, for plaintiff in error.
H. M. Fletcher, for defendant in error.

HILL, J. The Central Georgia Power Company, a corporation chartered under the laws of Georgia, sought to condemn certain lands in Butts county belonging to the defendant, R. W. Mays, under Civil Code 1910, § 5206 et seq., for the purpose of erecting, maintaining, repairing, and patrolling "a single line of towers, and wires strung upon the same, and from tower to tower, for the transmission of high and low voltage electric current, and also a telephone or telegraph line upon said towers, with all the necessary foundations, anchors, braces, cables, wires, appliances, and fixtures necessary to properly construct, support, protect, and operate the same upon and over and across" the land described in the notice, which was given by the Central Georgia Power Company to the defendant, Mays. Assessors were duly appointed, and they selected a third. The assessors awarded for "the rights of way and other interests and easements sought to be condemned" the sum of $10, and as consequential damages to the property not taken they awarded the sum of $25, and for the consequential benefits nothing. From this award the defendant, Mays, took an appeal to the superior court of Butts county. On the trial of the case in the superior court, the jury found for Mays the sum of $215, and judgment was had upon said verdict accordingly. Whereupon the plaintiff in error made a motion for a new trial upon the various grounds set forth therein, which was overruled by the court, and plaintiff in error (the condemnor) excepted.

[1] 1. In the view we take of this case, it will not be necessary to consider each ground of the motion for a new trial separately, inasmuch as the principles of law here ruled may be applied to the various grounds covered by the motion. One ground of the motion for a new trial is as follows: "Because the court erred in charging the jury as follows: 'The right of enjoyment of private property being an absolute right of every citizen, every act of another which unlawfully interferes with such enjoyment is a cause of action.'" We think this charge was calculated to mislead the jury. The condemnor in this case, as appears from the record, was proceeding under the statutes of this state to exercise the right of eminent domain in the assessment of damages to the right of way through the lands of the defendant in error. It was proceeding, as the record discloses, in an orderly and lawful manner, as authorized by Civil Code

1910, § 5206 et seq., to condemn a right of way through the defendant's land. It was not insisted that the plaintiff in error did not have the right under the law, or procedure, to condemn the right of way for purposes stated in the notice; and therefore, in the exercise of this lawful right and authority, the effort to condemn according to the statute could not properly be termed an unlawful interference with the enjoyment of the property by the owner; and the use of the language by the court to the jury to the effect that, "the right of enjoyment of private property being an absolute right of every citizen, every act of another which unlawfully interferes with such enjoyment is a cause of action," may have misled the jury into thinking that the entire proceedings were "unlawful," and that they should allow damages on the basis that the Central Georgia Power Company was "unlawfully" interfering with the defendant's property; whereas, the record shows it was proceeding in the way pointed out by the statute to condemn the right of way.

The principle here ruled is in entire accord with that laid down in the case of Atlanta Terra Cotta Company v. Georgia Ry. & Electric Co., 132 Ga. 537, 543, 64 S. E. 563, 565, where a similar charge to the one under review was in these words: "If the damages are only the imaginary or possible result of the tortious act, or other and contingent circumstances predominate largely in causing the injurious effect, such damages are too remote to be the basis of recovery against the wrongdoer." In that case the Georgia Railway & Electric Company was proceeding to condemn a right of way under the same statute that is here involved, and this court there held, with reference to that portion of the charge above quoted, that: "These charges embodied legal propositions relevant to a suit for a tort, but not to the determination of the amount to be awarded for the exercise of the power of eminent domain. If land is lawfully condemned for the right of way of a railroad, such condemnation and the taking and lawful use of the right of way under it did not constitute a tort." Atlanta Terra Cotta Co. v. Ga. Ry. & Elec. Co., 132 Ga. 537-543, 64 S. E. 563-566.

[2] 2-4. As the case is to go back for a second hearing, we desire to lay down briefly the rule for the measure of damages in condemnation proceedings like the one now before us. In condemnation proceedings authorized by the statute, the willingness or unwillingness of the property owner to part with his property is not a subject-matter of consideration. The law provides how the damages to private property taken for public purposes by corporations or persons authorized to take or damage such property shall be assessed. Civil Code 1910, § 5206 et seq.

[3] There are two elements of damages:

First, the market value of the property actually taken. In determining this, the nature and character of the property, its situation, its availability for different uses, and all the facts which may be disclosed by the evidence tending to throw light upon its market value may be taken into consideration, and from all of them the jury may arrive at what is the fair market value of the property taken. In the case of Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Postal Telegraph Co., 120 Ga. 281, 48 S. E. 20, this court held: "Where private property is taken for public use, as by condemnation by a railroad company, the owner is entitled to compensation for its whole value; not for any particular object, but for all purposes to which it may be appropriated." And see Harrison v. Young, 9 Ga. 359; Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 403, 25 L. Ed. 206. Lewis on Eminent Domain (3d Ed.) § 706, well states the rule as follows: "In estimating the value of property taken for public use, it is the market value of the property which is to be considered. The market value of property is the price which it will bring when it is offered for sale by one who desires, but is not obliged, to sell it, and is bought by one who is under no necessity of having it. In estimating its value, all the capabilities of the property, and all the uses to which it may be applied or for which it is adapted, are to be considered, and not merely the condition it is in at the time and the use to which it is then applied by the owner. * * * All the facts as to the condition of the property and its surroundings, its improvements and capabilities, may be shown and considered in estimating its value." "Generally speaking," says the same author, "the true rule seems to be to permit the proof of all the varied elements of value; that is, all the facts which the owner would properly and naturally press upon the attention of a buyer to whom he is negotiating a sale, and all other facts which would naturally influence a person of ordinary prudence desiring to purchase. In this estimation the owner is entitled to have the jury informed of all the capabilities of the property, as to the business or use, if any, to which it has been devoted, and of any and every use to which it may reasonably be adapted or applied. And this rule includes the adaptation and value of the property for any legitimate purpose or business, even though it has never been so used, and the owner has no present intention to devote it to such use."

[4] The second element for consideration is whether consequential damages will naturally and proximately arise to the remainder of the owner's property from the taking of that part which is taken, and the devoting of it to the purposes for which it is condemned, and including its maintenance and operation. The measure of such consequential damages is the diminution in the market value of the remainder of the property proximately arising from the causes just mentioned. Remote, or merely speculative or possible, damages are not allowed in considering the maintenance or operation of the line of towers and wires of the company. The jury are to consider their maintenance and operation in the usual and ordinary methods of so doing. They cannot assume, in a condemnation proceeding, that there will be negligent construction or operation, so as to cause damages in excess of that which would naturally and proximately arise from proper construction and operation. If the company be negligent in such matters, causing damages beyond those naturally arising from such construction and operation, this might give rise to a subsequent separate cause of action.

The principles herein announced, or several of them, were invoked by requests to charge. Some of these requests were not aptly worded, and in some instances the same principle was invoked in more than one request, so that, if given, there would have been a repetition of such principles in the charge, and in other instances they were covered by the general charge. We do not think, however, that the charge sufficiently covered the rulings here made, and we think that it was deficient in not giving distinctly the measure of consequential damages to the property not taken.

[5] 5. It was not error for the court to allow plaintiff's witness, on cross-examination, to answer the question: "What was it [the land of defendant over which the plaintiff sought to construct its transmission wire] worth for building purposes? For building purposes it might be worth more?" by saying, "It might, if any one wanted to use it." What the property was worth for building purposes was only one element of its value, and it could be shown what it was worth for any other legitimate purpose, and its fair market value would be arrived at by estimating what it was worth for all purposes to which it could be applied, or for which it was adapted.

[6] 6. It was not error for the court to overrule an objection to the following question, propounded to and answered by the defendant: "How much do you say the transmission line depreciates the market value of your land there? A. Ninety dollars an acre"—where it appears that the same witness had already testified that the fair market value of the land was $100 an acre without the transmission line, and $10 per acre with the transmission line on it. This was but another way of saying that the fair market value of the land before the condemnation proceedings were had was $100 per acre, but that the damage done by the transmission line was $90 per acre, which left it worth only $10 per acre. The answer, in view of all of the witness' testimony, was not a mere conclusion, but was based upon the witness' estimate of what the market value of the land was before the transmission line was built, and the fair market value of the same after the transmission line was built on the land.

[7] 7. It was not error to allow the plaintiff's witness, J. A. Kimbell, on cross-examination, to answer the question: "Do you think that transmission line would have any effect on this property [the property of the defendant in issue] for building purposes? A. I think it would"—when taken in connection with the testimony of other witnesses, who testified as to the market value of the land before and after the transmission line was built, for farming and building purposes.

The rulings hereinbefore made cover the remaining assignments of error, and it is not necessary to deal with each of them separately. We will not anticipate that the statements of the defendant which were set out in the seventh ground of the motion for a new trial, and which the court rebuked, though he did not grant a mistrial, will be made or permitted on another trial.

Error from Superior Court, Glynn County; L. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Leigh against the Aiken Canning Company and others. On the death of plaintiff, John C. Cadwalader, Jr., and others, as her executors, were substituted as plaintiffs. Judgment for defendant A. Fendig on his separate answer, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Geo. W. Owens and R. D. Meader, for plaintiffs in error. Harry F. Dunwoody, for defendant in error.

ATKINSON, J. Mrs. Leigh instituted suit against the Aiken Canning Company, a corporation, and J. W. Tatum, Albert Fendig, and J. B. Abrams. The individuals named were alleged to be stockholders and directors in the corporation. It was sought to hold them liable for a judgment obtained against the corporation, on the ground that, the corporation being insolvent, they, being officers in charge of the corporate affairs, and having notice of the plaintiff's debt, diverted its only assets from payment of the corporate debts to general creditors, including that to plaintiff, and applied them to the payment of alleged debts due to Tatum individually, and to others due to the National Bank of Brunswick, for which the bank held the individual notes of Tatum and Abrams. Out of this suit arose the questions decided in Tatum v. Leigh, 136 Ga. 791, 72 S. E. 236; Tatum having assigned error upon the judgment overruling his demurrer and striking certain portions of his plea. Fendig filed a separate answer, which was afterwards amended. He sought to avoid liability on the ground that he was not an officer of the corporation, and had not in any manner participated in the management of the corporate affairs or misapplied its assets. Upon the conclusion of the evidence on the trial of his plea the judge directed a verdict in his favor. The plaintiff made a motion for a new trial, and excepted to the judgment refusing it. While the case was pending in this court the plaintiff died, and her executors were made parties.

[1] 1. As an essential part of the plaintiff's case it was alleged that Fendig, and the other individual defendants, were officers of the corporation, and that all of them, knowing of the existence of plaintiff's debt, participated in the sale of the corporate assets and application of the proceeds of sale to individual debts due to Tatum, and also debts due to the bank, for which Tatum and Abrams were primarily liable. Such allegations were contained in two separate paragraphs of the petition. The answer by the defendant Fendig was that "for want of sufficient information and recollection" he was unable either to admit or deny the allegations of those paragraphs. It was urged that such allegations related to matters peculiarly within the knowledge of defendant, and his answer was so evasive as that under the rulings in the cases of Horne v. Peacock, 122 Ga. 45, 49 S. E. 722, and Raleigh Railroad Co. v. Pullman, 122 Ga. 707, 50 S. E. 1008, the allegations of the petition should be taken as true. While the cases cited related to pleadings somewhat similar to those under consideration, they are not identical and controlling. Civ. Code, § 5539, provides: "All such petitions shall set forth the cause of action in orderly and distinct paragraphs, numbered consecutively; and any averment distinctly and plainly made therein, which is not denied by the defendant's answer, shall be taken as prima facie true, unless the defendant states in his answer that he can neither admit nor deny such averment because of the want of sufficient information." This law does not force a defendant to either admit or deny an allegation unless he can do so truthfully; but, where for any cause he has not sufficient information to authorize him truthfully to admit or deny, it permits him to so state in his answer, and in that event the allegation made against him will not be taken as true. The fact that his want of information may be due to a want of recollection would be no reason for requiring him to admit or deny positively when he could not do so truthfully. The answer does not disclose any intent to evade, and is not of such character as that it should be treated as an admission.

[2] 2. On the trial the only evidence offered by plaintiff for the purpose of connecting Fendig with the corporation and the sale of its assets and the disposition of the proceeds was the answer to which reference has been made, which was relied upon by the plaintiff as an admission by the defendant. By an amendment to his answer Fendig denied more positively the allegation tending to connect him with the corporation and the transactions to which allusion has been made, and also testified in his own behalf. His testimony did not contain any admission that he was an officer of the corporation, or that he participated in the management of the corporate affairs, or the sale of its assets, or the application of the proceeds of the sale; but, on the contrary, it tended to support his answer, as amended. It was admitted that the directors' meeting at which the sale of the corporate assets was determined upon was had in his office, and at that time he was notified by Abrams and Tatum that one share of stock had been transferred to him; but in this connection Fendig testified that he never saw the certificate of stock, did not pay for it, was never informed that it had been given to him, and that he took no interest or part in the meeting, or any other meeting, nor did he in any wise participate in the sale of the property or applications of its proceeds. In order to hold Fendig liable, the burden was upon plaintiff to prove his connection with the corporation and participation in the management of the corporate action whereby it sold all of its assets and applied the proceeds of sale to the payment of the debt to Tatum, and the other corporate debts for which Tatum and Abrams were primarily liable, to the exclusion of the plaintiff, an outside general creditor. The evidence was not sufficient for this purpose; and accordingly, evidence having been introduced by both parties, there was no error in directing a verdict in favor of defendant.

[3] 3. One of the grounds of the motion for new trial was because of certain alleged newly discovered evidence, being the testimony of Tatum, who, it was alleged, would testify in contradiction to the testimony of Fendig, and whose testimony would tend to sustain the allegations of the plaintiff on the point that Fendig was a director, attended the directors' meetings of the corporation, and participated in the sale and disposition of the corporate assets. It was alleged in this connection that the answer of Fendig, to which reference was made in the second division of the opinion, amounted to admissions, and that the plaintiff had no ground for anticipating that Fendig would amend his answer, and that at the time of the trial Tatum was in Alabama, 300 miles or more away. It was also alleged in general terms that plaintiff or her counsel, by the exercise of diligence, could not have discovered this evidence before the trial. The character of this alleged newly discovered evidence is such that it ought, for the most part, appear from the records of the corporation, and certainly ought to have been within the knowledge of the secretary and treasurer, Abrams, as well as within the knowledge of the president, Tatum. It does not appear that the plaintiff prior to the trial sought information from either of these sources; nor does it appear upon what information upon this point the allegations were made when the petition was filed. The answer of the defendant was not such as to put the plaintiff off his guard, and, under the circumstances enumerated, the mere general allegation that the plaintiff's counsel exercised ordinary diligence, being itself a mere conclusion, was not sufficient to show an abuse of discretion in refusing to grant a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Civ. Code, § 6086.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent, and HILL, J., not presiding.

EARLY COUNTY v. BAKER COUNTY.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 15, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 80*)—DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENTAL POWERS—DELEGATION OF JUDICIAL POWERS.

The statute, making provision for the delineation of the disputed county line (Civil Code 1910, §§ 473, 474, 475), is not violative of the Constitution of Georgia, article 1, § 1, par. 23, because it is an attempt to confer judicial power upon the Secretary of State. The statute was not intended to provide a special court, in which the counties were invited to litigate over their territorial boundaries, but devised a process by which the state would be enabled to ascertain the true boundary between its political subdivisions. The function of the Secretary of State in this process was of a political, and not of a judicial, nature.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 143-147; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

Certified question from Court of Appeals.

Controversy between Early County and Baker County as to location of boundary. Heard on certified questions from the Court of Appeals as to constitutionality of Civ. Code 1910, §§ 473-475. Statute held constitutional.

Pope & Bennet and R. H. Sheffield, for plaintiff in error. A. S. Johnson and Benton Odom, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. The Court of Appeals certifies the following question of constitutional law: "Is the act of 1899 (Acts 1899, p. 24), contained in the Civil Code 1910, §§ 473, 474, 475, unconstitutional and void, for the reason that the statute in question is an attempt to confer upon the Secretary of State, who is a person discharging executive powers, the right to exercise a judicial function, in violation of article 1, § 1, par. 23, of the Constitution of the state of Georgia, which provides that 'The legislative, judicial, and executive powers shall remain forever separate and distinct, and no person discharging the duties of one shall at the same time exercise the functions of either of the others?'"

Counties are political subdivisions of the state, established as auxiliaries in the important business of local government. Public duties are required of them as part of the machinery of the state; and, in order that they may better perform such duties, they are vested with certain corporate powers. Their functions are wholly of a public nature, and at all times they are subject to the will of the Legislature, unless there is some constitutional restraint. Laramie County v. Albany County, 92 U. S. 307, 23 L. Ed. 553. It is essential to the existence of a county that its boundaries be defined. It rests with the Legislature of the state not only to originally define the boundaries, but also to provide means whereby the true localities of such boundaries on the ground may be finally determined. 11 Cyc. 346.

As the delineation of the boundaries in the establishment of a county is a political function of government, likewise the discovery of an original boundary line and its re-establishment as such is a political function. The Legislature may provide various means to find the location of a boundary which, from the lapse of time or other cause, may have become obscure or uncertain. It may provide for a survey, and may stipulate that such survey shall be final and conclusive as to the true location. Or a commission may be appointed to discover the boundary as originally located. If the Legislature adopts the course of locating the indistinct or uncertain boundary by a survey, it may provide for its verification by a second survey, or by a revision of it by civil engineers, or by a ministerial official. Should the Legislature enact that a disputed boundary line between counties should be ascertained by a survey made by the county surveyor of an adjoining county, and that such survey would be conclusive when approved by a civil engineer appointed by the Governor, could it be contended that it was intended to constitute the civil engineer a special court, and that his function in approving the survey was of a judicial nature, subject to review by the courts? Clearly not. Yet in the performance of the duty of verifying the accuracy of the survey, the engineer necessarily would have before him the notes of the surveyor and other data, to enable him to approve or disapprove the correctness of the survey. Carry the illustration a step further. Would it make any essential difference in the nature and character of the engineer's function if he was authorized to acquire information from any available source in arriving at his conclusion? We do not think so, because, it being competent for the Legislature to provide for the re-establishment of the uncertain line by survey, in the first instance, as a ministerial act, its revision is none the less a ministerial act, because the revisory engineer may search out information in determining the correctness of the survey submitted to him.

The statute respecting the settlement of disputed county lines provides that, when the grand jury of either county shall present that the disputed line requires to be marked out and defined, the clerk of the superior court shall certify the presentment to the Governor, who shall appoint a suitable and competent surveyor, who does not reside in either county, to survey, mark out, and define the boundary line in dispute, and return a plat of his survey to the Secretary of State's office. Within 30 days of the filing of the plat, the authorities of either county, dissatisfied therewith, may file a written protest or exception to the same. Upon the filing of a protest, the Secretary of State shall notify the ordinary or county commissioners of the respective counties of the time when he will hear the contest, and upon the hearing "he shall determine from the law and evidence the true boundary line in dispute between the respective counties." "Upon such decision being made by the Secretary of State, or in case no protest or exceptions are filed within the thirty days aforesaid, he shall cause the survey and plat to be recorded in a book to be kept for that purpose; whereupon the same shall be final and conclusive as to the boundary line in dispute." Civil Code 1910, §§ 472-476. The statute did not contemplate a lawsuit between the counties; it devised a process by which the line, as originally fixed by the Legislature in the formation of the counties, shall be ascertained and made certain. Counties have no territorial rights as against the state, and the statutory plan was not to settle a private dispute between the counties, but to afford means to the state in the delineation of the boundaries between its political subdivisions. If the decision of the Secretary of State is to have the ordinary force and effect of a judgment rendered in a judicial proceeding, then territorial rights would become vested, and the Legislature could not make a change, so as to disturb or alter the divisional line as adjudged by the Secretary of State. Whereas all the authorities concur that, unless the Constitution of a state otherwise prescribes, the Legislature has the power to diminish or enlarge the area of a county, or change its boundary lines, whenever the public convenience or necessity requires. Laramie County v. Albany County, supra. "While the departments of government must be kept separate and distinct, it is impossible to draw a mathematical line by which every action can be exactly classified; and there are some matters which do not inherently and essentially appertain to one department of government, rather than to another. As a part of this ground has been considered the impossibility of conducting a government at all, without permitting executive officers to exercise some discretion, or Legislatures or courts to do some things incidental to their general purpose, but which in a literal sense are not strictly the enacting of laws or the rendering of judgments." Southern Ry. Co. v. Melton, 133 Ga. 282, 65 S. E. 665. The scope of the legislation is to ascertain the location of a line which the Legislature had previously established, and the means provided to accomplish this end did not contemplate an invitation to counties to engage in a lawsuit over the state's territory. The Legislature in its wisdom might have enacted that a survey of the disputed line should be had, and a report thereof made to its next session, when, upon the basis of that report, as well as other accessible data, it would by enactment finally locate the uncertain or disputed line. In such a case, it could hardly be said that the Legislature was usurping judicial functions, merely because it reserved the right, through committee or otherwise, to hear evidence as to the true location of the line. If the Legislature may by direct enactment, where not restrained by the Constitution, locate the disputed line, then it may provide machinery whereby the administrative branch of the government may carry out the legislative act, by ascertaining the facts upon which the enactment is to operate. And this is practically what was done by the act under review.

The act of 1897 (Civil Code 1910, § 501) provided for the filing, hearing, and determining of contests in elections held for the removal of county sites, and conferred upon the Secretary of State the power and made it his duty to hear and determine such contest on evidence previously taken under the terms of the act; and it was held that the duty of hearing and passing upon the questions raised in such a contest by the Secretary of State pertained largely to matters of a political nature, and properly exercisable by an executive officer of the government, and was not opposed to paragraph 23, § 1, art. 1, of the Constitution. Bowen v. Clifton, 105 Ga. 459, 31 S. E. 147. The principle involved in this decision is applicable to the question in hand. For the reasons given, we do not think the act offends the cited paragraph of the Constitution. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent, and HILL, J., not presiding.

DANNENBERG CO. v. ADLER-MAY CO.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 15, 1911.)

GARNISHMENT (§ 187*)—DEFAULT JUDGMENT AGAINST GARNISHEE—SETTING ASIDE—GROUNDS.

On November 13, 1909, a summons of garnishment, based on a pending suit, was served, commanding the garnishee to answer to the term of the superior court which would meet on January 3, 1910. On the latter date, a second summons in the same case was served on the garnishee, returnable to the March term of the court. This was accompanied by a written notice from the plaintiff, relieving the garnishee from answering the first summons, and directing it to make answer to the second. On January 17th, the garnishee filed an answer, reciting that a summons of garnishment had been served on it, and denying indebtedness. To this a traverse was filed, but no exception taken on the ground of the time when it was made. At a later term, a verdict and judgment by default were taken against the garnishee, based upon the second summons. At the same term when this was done, a motion was made to set aside the verdict and judgment, alleging that the answer which it filed was made to the second summons. Held, that there was no error in granting the motion and setting aside the verdict and judgment.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

Garnishment proceedings by the Dannenberg Company against the Adler-May Company. To an order setting aside a default judgment against the garnishee, the plaintiff excepts. Affirmed.

Frank L. Neufville and Hardeman, Jones, Callaway & Johnston, for plaintiff in error. David Eichberg, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. A judgment was entered in the superior court against a garnishee as being in default in not answering a summons of garnishment. At the same term of the court, a motion was made to set aside this judgment, on the ground that the garnishee had in fact filed an answer to the second summons. The court sustained the motion, and the plaintiff excepted.

A summons of garnishment had been served on the garnishee in November, 1909, returnable to the January term of the superior court. Another summons of garnishment in the same case was served on the same garnishee on January 3, 1910, returnable to the March term of court. Attached to the second summons was a notice from the plaintiff, relieving the garnishee from answering the first summons, and requesting it to answer the second. On January 17th, the garnishee filed an answer of not indebted. It recited that a summons of garnishment had been served upon it, but did not specify whether the recital referred to the first summons or the second. Inasmuch as the garnishee had been relieved from answering the first summons, and the only summons to which it was required to make answer was the second one, the court was authorized to hold that the answer was to the second summons. It is true that such answer was prematurely filed; but it was not void. If exception had been taken to it, on the ground that it was filed before the term of court to which the summons was returnable, it could have been amended. Burrus v. Moore, 63 Ga. 405; Plant v. Mutual Life Insurance Co., 92 Ga. 636, 19 S. E.

719. Treating the answer as filed to the second summons, though inadvertently filed too early—which is more rational than to suppose that the garnishee insisted on answering the summons which they had been given notice need not be answered, and refused to answer one which they had been notified must be answered—the garnishee was not in default, and no judgment by default could properly be entered against it until some disposition had been made of the answer. Apparently the traverse is still pending. The court did not err in setting aside the verdict and judgment which was rendered against the garnishee for failure to answer the second summons.

Even where a garnishee is in default, and a judgment is rendered against it, upon motion during the same term, setting forth good and sufficient reasons for not answering in due time, and denying indebtedness to defendant, the court is not without discretionary power to set aside the judgment and relieve the garnishee from having an injustice done to it. Brian v. Banks, 38 Ga. 300; Wiley v. Whiteley, 38 Ga. 605; Russell v. Freedman's Savings Bank, 50 Ga. 575; Atlanta Journal v. Brunswick Publishing Co., 111 Ga. 718, 36 S. E. 929. It has been said, however, that this is not an arbitrary power, and that after the second term the court can only allow an answer to be filed by the garnishee upon showing some reason legally sufficient to excuse a previous failure to do so. Jones v. Bibb Brick Co., 120 Ga. 321, 48 S. E. 23.

An alleged statement of facts not being set forth in the bill of exceptions, nor made a part of the same as an exhibit thereto and properly authenticated, what purports to be an agreed statement of facts, sent up as a part of the record, but not approved by the judge and ordered filed as such, cannot be considered by this court. *Robinson v. #### WOODS v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 14, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS—INSTRUCTIONS ALREADY GIVEN.

Where, in the trial of one accused of murder, the presiding judge charged fully the law of reasonable doubt, as applicable to the case, it forming no ground for reversal that the court refused to charge further, on request, that if the jury had a reasonable doubt as to whether the killing was voluntary or accidental they should accept the theory of accident and acquit the defendant.

2. INSTRUCTIONS—INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

Under the evidence, there was no error in not charging on the subject of involuntary manslaughter.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 1111, 1170*)—WRIT OF ERROR—RECORD—CONFLICT—NEW TRIAL—EFFECT—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where complaint is made in a motion for a new trial that a named witness for the defendant was not permitted to testify to certain facts, and in the brief of evidence it appears that the witness did testify to such facts, and both the motion for a new trial and the brief of evidence are duly approved by the presiding judge, this court cannot hold that the brief of evidence is incorrect, but must reconcile the two statements, on the theory that, while at one time the court made the ruling stated in the motion for a new trial, at some stage of the examination the testimony was admitted. Under such facts the ruling will not require a new trial, even if the evidence was admissible. Roberts v. Tift, 136 Ga. 901, 906, 72 S. E. 234.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2895, 3147; Dec. Dig. §§ 1111, 1170.*]

Statements made by a slayer in his own favor, a considerable length of time after the homicide occurred and at a different place, and forming no part of the res gestae, were properly excluded from evidence.

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*)—WRIT OF ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where a witness for the state had testified that after the homicide the accused, his father, and the witness were together, and the accused was telling the witness how the homicide occurred, it will not require a new trial that the court permitted the witness to further state that the father of the accused, in the presence of the latter, laughed and said that the accused had shot the whole top of the decedent's head off.

6. ABANDONMENT OF ERROR—BIAS OF JURORS.

The ground of the motion for a new trial complaining that one of the jurors was biased was abandoned.

PRICE v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 14, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 918*)—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—TIME FOR ARGUMENT BY COUNSEL.

Under rule 5 of the superior courts (Civ. Code 1910, § 6264), counsel may only demand a reasonable and proper extension of time for argument. Where, in addition to the two hours allowed by the rule for argument, counsel demanded another hour, and the court announced that he would allow only half of the additional time requested, with the remark that the case could be properly argued within that time, and that in the circuit over which he presided there were good lawyers who rarely spoke over 40 minutes, and where after the opening argument of defendant's counsel the court notified counsel that he would allow the full time requested, and the full time was actually consumed in the argument, it is no ground for new trial that the extension of time requested was refused in the first instance, and afterwards granted under the circumstances narrated.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 918.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 919*)—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL.

Where the Solicitor General assigned as a reason for speaking briefly in opening the case to the jury that he was indisposed, and counsel for the defendant in his argument made during the solicitor's absence from the courtroom asserted that in his opinion the real reason was that the solicitor did not believe the defendant to be guilty, a new trial will not be granted because the court allowed counsel for the state in the concluding argument to argue that the solicitor was sick, and that the deduction of counsel for the defendant was unwarranted.

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 386*)—EVIDENCE—RES GESTÆ.

In determining who was the aggressor in a conflict terminating in the death of one of the parties, the conduct of the parties, including their declarations immediately preceding the homicide, are parts of the res gestæ. Where a homicide occurred at a railroad junction point, it is competent to prove by the station agent that the decedent alighted from one train and inquired about a connection of the other train just prior to the fatal encounter, as tending to explain the presence and purpose of the decedent at the place of the homicide.

4. IMPEACHMENT OF WITNESSES—INSTRUCTIONS.

The charge on the subject of impeachment of witnesses was substantially like that approved in Powell v. State, 101 Ga. 9, 29 S. E. 309, 65 Am. St. Rep. 277.

5. HOMICIDE (§ 112*)—JUSTIFICATION—SELF-DEFENSE.

One cannot create an emergency which renders it necessary for another to defend himself, and then take advantage of the effort of such other person to do so. The facts authorized an instruction to this effect, and the legal principle was not incorrectly stated in the charge complained of.

6. HOMICIDE (§ 308*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

The summary of the court concretely applying the law to the case, though containing a slight verbal inaccuracy, was not calculated to mislead the jury, to the prejudice of the accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

7. HOMICIDE (§ 309*)—INSTRUCTIONS—VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

The statute defining voluntary manslaughter contains the declaration that "provocation by words, threats, menaces, or contemptuous gestures shall in no case be sufficient to free the person killing from the guilt and crime of murder." The reading by the court of the entire code section definitive of voluntary manslaughter (Penal Code § 65), containing the quoted language, while charging on the subject of voluntary manslaughter, is not subject to the criticism that by so doing the court entrenched upon the law of justifiable homicide, in that the reading of the section tended to convey to the jury the implication that they could not consider threats, accompanied by menaces, as defined in Cumming v. State, 99 Ga. 662, 27 S. E. 177, as sufficient cause to arouse the fears of a reasonable man that his life is in danger, or that a felony is about to be perpetrated upon him.

8. CHARGE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

The charge was not subject to the criticisms made on it, and the verdict is supported by the evidence.

Error from Superior Court, Worth County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

Buster Price was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

Perry, Foy & Monk, J. H. Cooke, J. W. Walters & Son, and Jno. R. Cooper, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Wooten, Sol. Gen., F. A. Hooper, and T. S. Felder, Atty. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, P. J. Buster Price was convicted of the murder of A. E. Massey, and recommended to mercy. He excepts to the overruling of his motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] 1, 2. Complaint is made that the court refused to allow counsel for the accused additional time to that prescribed by the rule of court for the argument of the case, and that the court allowed counsel who concluded the argument for the state to make an improper reply to the argument of defendant's counsel. The nature of the complaints and the ruling thereon are sufficiently stated in the first and second headnotes.

[3] 3. The homicide occurred at a junction of two railroads. The decedent arrived on one train, and immediately inquired of the station agent concerning a connection on the other road, and was referred to the engineer of the latter road. This occurred shortly before the homicide. Objection was made to this testimony on the ground that it was hearsay and irrelevant. As bearing on the conflicting contentions as to who was the aggressor in the transaction wherein the deceased lost his life, his conduct just prior to the homicide was relevant. His inquiry of the station agent as to the schedule of the connecting train just before the homicide was a circumstance tending to elucidate his conduct and was a part of the res gestæ. Mayer v. Power, 79 Ga. 631, 4 S. E. 681.

[4] 4. Impeachment of a witness by proof of previous contradictory statements involves two propositions, viz., whether the witness made the alleged contradictory statement, and, if he made the contradictory statement, its effect on his present testimony. The charge complained of was substantially the same as that criticised in Powell v. State, 101 Ga. 9, 29 S. E. 309, 65 Am. St. Rep. 277, and was not subject to the criticism that the jury was limited to the determination of the factum of the making of the alleged contradictory statement, nor that it was equivalent to a peremptory instruction that, if the testimony of the attacking witness is believed, the witness attacked is successfully impeached.

[5] 5. The court charged: "In addition to that, gentlemen, I charge you this: That the party who sets up self-defense to justify himself in taking human life, under the law of justifiable homicide, must be without fault at the particular time and in the particular act. One cannot by his own act or conduct create a necessity in another to defend himself, and then justify himself in killing the party who attempts to defend himself against the necessity of the defendant's own creation. But, of course, that does not mean that he must be without any fault whatever during the entire transaction, but without fault at the time of the killing." The evidence authorized an inference that the accused provoked the difficulty and brought about the emergency which he contends for as affording a justification for the homicide. One cannot create an emergency which rendered it necessary for another to defend himself, and then take advantage of the effort of such other person to do so. Pryer v. State, 128 Ga. 28, 57 S. E. 93. This excerpt from the charge is in harmony with this principle of law.

[6] 6. Exception is taken to this portion of the court's charge: "Applying the general principles that the court has given you, the court now charges you this: That if you believe from the evidence in this case beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant, Buster Price, in Worth county, at or about the date alleged in this bill of indictment, or at any time previous to the finding and returning of this bill of indictment into this court, when actuated by malice, either express or implied, on account of any approbrious words used to him by the deceased, or on account of other cause, with a pistol, shot and killed the deceased, in the manner and under the circumstances alleged in this bill of indictment, then the offense of murder would be made out, and you would be authorized in convicting him." Its vice is said to consist in stating an erroneous deduction from the stated hypothesis; that the use of the words "on account of other cause" deprived the accused of any defense. The criticism is clearly without merit. The instruction was to the effect that if the defendant killed the deceased in the manner and under the circumstances alleged in the bill of indictment, actuated by malice, which had just been defined as that deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow creature, the jury would be authorized to convict him. The use of the words "on account of other cause" at most could amount only to a verbal inaccuracy, and in connection with their context could not have misled the jury as to the meaning and intent of the court's instruction.

[7] 7. In his instruction on the law of voluntary manslaughter, the court defined that grade of homicide in the language of Pen. Code 1910, § 65. Exception is taken to that part of the code section which declares that "provocation by words, threats, menaces, or contemptuous gestures shall in no case be sufficient to free the person killing from the guilt and crime of murder," as containing an implication that words and menaces are insufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man that a felony is intended to be committed on his person, so as to justify a killing. We think this exception is entirely without merit. Surely it cannot be said that it is error to define manslaughter in the words of the statute. It is claimed that the statutory declaration, that provocation by words, threats, menaces, etc., shall not free the slayer from the guilt and crime of murder, militates against the code sections which justify a homicide by one who slays his antagonist under the influence of a reasonable fear that a felony is about to be perpetrated upon his person. The two principles of law are quite distinct. One who slays a person for no other reason than he is provoked by words, threats, menaces, or contemptuous gestures of the person slain is guilty of murder. Verbal threats or grimaces do not excuse a killing. On the other hand, the law justifies the taking of human life by a person under the influence of a reasonable fear that a felony is about to be inflicted upon his person, to prevent which he kills his adversary. A "menace" as defined in Cumming v. State, 99 Ga. 662, 27 S. E. 177, may be sufficient to arouse such fear. As there defined, a "menace" is "any overt act of a threatening character, short of an actual assault." Provocation caused by a menace neither mitigates nor excuses a homicide. But the fear of a reasonable man, engendered by the overt menacing act, that a felony is about to be committed on him, may be sufficient to acquit the slayer of blame for the homicide. The language excepted to in no way qualifies the law of justifiable homicide, and is not calculated to mislead the jury into such erroneous impression. The doctrine of the Cumming Case is that the court should not instruct the jury that a menace, as there defined, will in no case be sufficient to arouse the fears of a reasonable man that his life or person is in peril of a felonious assault. It is a misapplication of its principle to apply it to an exception like the one under consideration.

[8] 8. The issues made by the evidence were clearly submitted, and the charge was not open to the criticisms made on it. The evidence authorized the verdict, which has the approval of the trial judge, and no sufficient reason is made to appear for the granting of a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent, and HILL, J., not presiding.

FUTCH et al. v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 14, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. HOMICIDE (§ 300*)—INSTRUCTIONS—VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

Where, on the trial of one indicted for murder, the evidence authorized instructions on the subject of voluntary manslaughter, it was not error for the court to charge in the language of section 65 of the Penal Code of 1910.

2. HOMICIDE (§ 300*)—CRIMINAL LAW (§ 825*)—INSTRUCTIONS—JUSTIFICATION—REQUESTS FOR INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the court in dealing with the subject of justifiable homicide correctly charged the law touching the right to defend one's person against another who manifestly intends or endeavors, by violence or surprise, to commit a felony upon him, and also the law applicable where the circumstances are sufficient to justify the fears of a reasonable man that such a felony is about to be committed, it does not furnish a ground for reversal that the court did not particularize certain circumstances which the jury might consider in that connection, such as threats and menaces.

(a) If the defendants desired a charge to the effect that evidence of threats and menaces might be considered in connection with other evidence bearing on the subject of reasonable fears, they should then have made a proper request therefor, if the facts warranted the giving of it.

3. HOMICIDE (§ 234*)—MURDER—PARTIES.

Where two persons are jointly indicted for murder, each may be convicted upon evidence showing that he was either the actual perpetrator of the crime, or was present, aiding and abetting the other in its commission.

(a) Mere presence and participation in the general transaction in which a homicide is committed is not conclusive evidence of consent and concurrence in the perpetration of the crime by a defendant sought to be held responsible for the homicide as aiding and abetting the actual perpetrator, unless such defendant participated in the felonious design of the person killing.

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 822*)—INSTRUCTIONS—PARTIES TO OFFENSE.

When the charge is considered all together, it is not so in conflict with these principles as to require a reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1990-1995; Dec. Dig. § 822.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 188*)—EVIDENCE—CHARACTER OF DECEDENT.

On the trial of one indicted for murder, the testimony of a witness that the deceased was in the habit of carrying concealed weapons was properly excluded; there being no evidence that the accused had any knowledge of that fact. Warrick v. State, 125 Ga. 133, 53 S. E. 1027.

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 729*)—TRIAL—REMARKS OF COUNSEL.

While a female witness for the state in a murder case was on the stand, she testified that she was engaged to be married to the person who was killed. For the purpose of impeaching her, she was asked certain questions. She stated that she did not know that she had said that she would like to cut the rope to break the neck of the defendant who shot the deceased, though she might have done so, but that she had said she could pull the rope to break the necks of the defendants (two being indicted). Counsel for the accused announced that the counsel for the state could examine the witness. He remarked in the presence of the jury, "I agree with you." Counsel for defendants moved for a mistrial. Counsel for the state at once withdrew the remark, and stated that he had no unkind feeling toward the defendants, and did not desire to prejudice the case, and earnestly trusted that the jury would not feel that he meant to influence or prejudice them in the slightest degree. The court overruled the motion for a mistrial. Held, that this was not error, although the court did not reprimand counsel or give special instructions to the jury on the subject.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1692; Dec. Dig. § 729.*]

7. REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL—NO ERROR.

None of the other grounds of the motion for a new trial are such as to require special discussion or a reversal.

8. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL.

The verdict was supported by the evidence, and there was no error in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Tattnall County; W. W. Sheppard, Judge.

P. C. Futch and another were convicted of murder, and bring error. Affirmed.

Way & Burkhalter, Hines & Jordan, and Jno. R. Cooper, for plaintiffs in error. N. J. Norman, Sol. Gen., H. H. Elders, and T. S. Felder, Atty. Gen., for the State.

LUMPKIN, J. P. C. Futch and Wallace Futch were jointly indicted for the murder of John B. Deal. They were convicted, and recommended to be imprisoned for life. After the refusal of a new trial they excepted.

[1] The headnotes state the rulings, and most of them require no elaboration. Pen. Code 1910, § 65, contains a statement as to the law of voluntary manslaughter, which has been the codified law since the original Code of 1863, and has been adopted and readopted by the Legislature. We cannot hold that it is either erroneous or misleading. In dealing with the subject of provocation which will reduce a homicide from murder to voluntary manslaughter, it states, among other things, that "provocation by words, threats, menaces or contemptuous gestures, shall in no case be sufficient to free the person killing from the guilt and crime of murder." In other sections of the Code are contained statements as to the law of justifiable homicide in killing one who manifestly intends by violence or surprise to commit a felony upon the person of another, and of justification where the circumstances are such as to excite the fears of a reasonable man that such a felony is about to be committed. Pen. Code 1910, §§ 70, 71. The court gave all of these principles in charge, reading section 65 in its entirety when he came to charge on the subject, not of justification, but of reduction of a homicide from murder to voluntary manslaughter. This was not confusing or calculated to mislead the jury. Price v. State, 72 S. E. 908, this day decided.

[2] The court, in the proper connection, having charged the law touching acting under circumstances sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man, a reversal will not be granted because he did not specifically refer to threats and menaces in that connection. If the defendants desired a charge to the effect that the jury might consider evidence of threats and menaces, in connection with the other evidence bearing on the subject of acting under the fears of a reasonable man, they should have made a proper request therefor. Cumming v. State, 99 Ga. 662, 27 S. E. 177.

P. C. Futch fired the gun which killed Deal. Wallace Futch, his brother, was with him at the time, taking part in the fight. The evidence for the state tended to show that each of them entertained revengeful feelings toward Deal; that he and Wallace Futch had had a difficulty very shortly before the homicide; that the two brothers went to a church where they expected to find Deal, carrying a gun with them; and that they attacked and killed him without justification. There was also evidence that they afterward denied having been present, or having done the killing. They contended that Deal was the aggressor; that P. C. Futch knocked him down with a gun; that Deal grabbed it, and P. C. Futch called to his brother to "take him loose, he is cutting me"; and that Wallace Futch grabbed Deal by the back of the neck, and gave him "a sling," and, when he got Deal loose from the gun, P. C. Futch shot. In his statement Wallace Futch denied that he knew that his brother carried the gun in the buggy in which they drove to the church.

[3, 4] It was contended that the court erred in charging that if the jury believed from the evidence that P. C. Futch, without just cause, fired the shot that caused the homicide, and that Wallace Futch "was present, aiding and abetting in the act, then the act of the defendant, P. C. Futch, would be the act of the other defendant, Wallace Futch, and the latter would be guilty of whatever offense P. C. Futch may have committed, if any." Considering the excerpts from the charge on this subject to which exceptions were taken in connection with their context and with other portions of the charge, we think that the jury could not have been misled as to the meaning of the court, and that, in effect, they were informed that if P. C. Futch committed a crime in killing Deal by shooting him, and Wallace Futch was present, aiding and abetting in the commission of such crime, he would also be guilty. In the same context with one of the charges to which exception was taken, the court said: "Where two or more persons are jointly indicted for a crime, and one perpetrates the act, and the other is present, aiding and abetting in the commission of the act charged in the indictment, the act of one is the act of the other." The act charged in the indictment was the unlawful killing of Deal by shooting him with a gun. So that the charge amounted to saying that, if one unlawfully fired the shot and killed the deceased, and the other was present, aiding and abetting him in doing so, the latter would also be guilty. It was not the mere presence of Wallace Futch or his aiding or abetting his brother in the quarrel or even in the fight to which the presiding judge referred, but presence and aiding and abetting in a felonious homicide by shooting the deceased. The court charged in regard to the defense of one brother by another, and also that, if the defendants attacked the deceased with no intention to kill him, but only to assault and beat him, and in the struggle between them and the deceased P. C. Futch suddenly formed the intention to kill the deceased, and Wallace did not share in this intention to kill, and did not fire the fatal shot, that would acquit Wallace Futch, unless they found that he was guilty of some lower grade of offense covered by the indictment.

Counsel for the plaintiffs in error relied on Brown v. State, 28 Ga. 199. In that case the defendant was indicted for murder as principal in the second degree, and was tried separately and convicted of manslaughter. From the opinion it would appear that this court thought that there was evidence from which it might be inferred that the defendant on trial intended to engage only in an assault and battery, but the other accused assaulted and killed the deceased with a deadly weapon, though his intention to do so was unknown to the defendant on trial. 28 Ga. 214. The court charged that presence and participation in the act committed was evidence from which the jury might infer "consent and concurrence." This language was criticised, but was not held to be cause for a new trial; and, the defendant having been convicted of voluntary manslaughter, the judgment was affirmed (pages 213, 214). If the contention on behalf of the defendants in the present case were accepted and carried to its logical conclusion, it would seem that the defendant in that case should not have been convicted of voluntary manslaughter on the hypothesis stated, and there should have been a reversal.

The Brown Case was cited in Brooks v. State, 128 Ga. 261, 57 S. E. 483, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 889. There the defendant was indicted for murder as principal in the second degree, and was tried separately and convicted. There was no controversy that the deceased was killed by a blow inflicted by the son of the defendant. There was evidence that a drunken debauch was in progress at a house near the residence of the defendant; that the deceased and a companion were knocking at the door for admittance; that the defendant ordered them to leave, and, when the deceased cursed her, threw a chip or rock at him, and later fired a pistol in the air, in order to frighten him; and that her son ran from the house, and, without a word, struck the deceased a mortal blow with a stick. The presiding judge charged that presence alone was insufficient to establish the defendant's guilt as a principal in the second degree, but the evidence must go further, and show that she aided and abetted her son in doing the act. He was requested to give in charge certain instructions defining the meaning of abetting and stating what would constitute it, but declined to do so. It was said that the case was a close one, and that the failure to give the requests was cause for a new trial.

The case of Kimball v. State, 112 Ga. 541, 37 S. E. 886, was also cited. In that case a person was indicted as a principal in the second degree for assault with intent to murder. If one kills by the use of a deadly weapon in the way in which it is ordinarily employed, the intent to kill may be inferred from the actual killing. Where there is an assault but no homicide, the intent to murder is an essential ingredient of the crime of assault with intent to murder which must appear from the evidence; and the murderous design is necessary to the conviction of one charged as a principal in the second degree. Section 42 of the Penal Code of 1910 defines a principal in the second degree to be "he who is present, aiding and abetting the act to be done." Conspirators may each be responsible for the act of the other in carrying out the common design, though the actual thing done was not agreed upon. On the other hand, there may be presence or even participation to some extent in the general transaction, without amounting to "aiding and abetting the act to be done." But if the act to be done is a felonious homicide by shooting with a gun, and there is presence and an aiding and abetting of that felony, the Code in terms applies. In this state, except where otherwise provided, a principal in the second degree receives the same punishment as a principal in the first degree; and it has been held that one may be indicted as a principal in the first degree and convicted as such, if the evidence shows that he was either the absolute perpetrator of the crime, or that he was present, aiding and abetting the other in its commission. McLeod v. State, 128 Ga. 17, 57 S. E. 83; Bradley v. State, 128 Ga. 20, 57 S. E. 237.

From what has been said we think it sufficiently appears that there was no such error as requires a reversal, if there was any inaccuracy in language at all.

[8] The remark of counsel for the state, made without due consideration, was withdrawn, and a full disclaimer of any desire to prejudice the case was made. The remark was only an expression of opinion, not a statement of facts outside of the evidence; and the refusal to grant a mistrial furnished no reason for a reversal, although the judge did not instruct the jury as to such remark, or reprimand counsel.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent, and HILL, J., not presiding.

MILLER et al. v. BUTLER et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 14, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

JUDICIAL SALES (§ 45*)—SUIT TO SET ASIDE —PARTIES DEFENDANT.

Where a consent decree was rendered, and under it the title to certain lands was determined, and a sale made in accordance therewith, in order for persons claiming as beneficiaries of a trust, and whose trustee was a party to said decree, to set aside the decree and recover the lands, it is necessary to make all parties to said decree who would be affected by setting it aside parties defendant to the proceeding instituted for that purpose. The mere allegation that one of them died before the decree was rendered, that his administrator was made a party and joined in the consent, and that such administrator had since died, is not alone sufficient to excuse the failure to have a representative of the estate present as a party defendant.

The court properly sustained the demurrer, on the ground that a representative of the estate of Willis Miller was a necessary party to the suit.

Error from Superior Court, Troup County; L. S. Roan, Judge.

Action by F. M. Miller and others against H. C. Butler and H. W. Miller. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

F. M. Miller and others filed an equitable petition in Troup superior court against H. C. Butler and H. W. Miller, trustee, in which they made substantially the following allegations: The plaintiffs, except two, who are minors, are the grandchildren of Willis Miller, deceased, and are the children of H. W. Miller and his wife, Mary Jane Miller, and the two minor plaintiffs are children of a deceased child of H. W. Miller and his said wife. Said Willis Miller died some time between December 1, 1887, and May, 1895, and E. T. Winn qualified as administrator upon his estate. Said Winn is now dead, and there is no administration upon the estate of Willis Miller. On December 1, 1887, Willis Miller executed and delivered a deed to H. W. Miller, trustee, and his wife, Mary Jane Miller, and all the children of H. W. Miller, covering, among other property, "land lot No. 187 in the 6th district of Troup county, also land lot No. 188 in said 6th district of Troup county, which was and is also known as the Hopson place, also fifty acres known as the Curtwright place. * * * All of said tracts containing 439 acres." Upon delivery of the deed to Miller, as trustee, Willis Miller put "the said H. W. Miller, as trustee, and his wife and children aforesaid in possession of said lands, and they accordingly went into possession thereof, and the said H. W. Miller, as trustee, remained in possession of said property until some time in 1895." The defendant Butler having begun to trespass on the Curtwright place under a pretended claim of title, and having an action pending against Willis Miller to recover an alleged indebtedness, Willis Miller and H. W. Miller, as trustee, brought an action against him to enjoin the trespass, recover damages therefor, cancel his pretended claim of title, and to enjoin further prosecution of his action against Willis Miller. A temporary restraining order was granted on the petition, and remained in force until the May term, 1895, of Troup superior court; no trial of the case being had; and H. W. Miller, as trustee, all this time remaining in possession of the property. Prior to said May term, 1895, Willis Miller died, and E. T. Winn was appointed administrator of his estate, and made a party to said case in place of Willis Miller.

On April 23, 1895, said action was settled by an agreement, then entered into, which was kept secret between the parties thereto, to wit, "the said Butler and H. W. Miller, as trustee, and his wife, Mary Miller. The said agreement provided that the said Butler should have a decree at the May term, 1895, settling in himself the title to the Hopson and Curtwright places, and also a decree against the estate of Willis Miller for between $2,000 and $3,000, which should be binding on the lands of Willis Miller," and that certain lands should be levied upon and sold under execution issued on the decree, and that Butler should buy them in at the sheriff's sale, and make an absolute deed to one of the places named to H. W. Miller and his wife. At the May term, 1895, a decree was taken in accordance with the agreement, upon which execution was issued, and "said old home place was levied on and sold by the sheriff under said execution, and deed to the same made by the sheriff of Troup county, and in accordance with said decree and said deed said Butler, in the year 1895, went into possession of all of said lands aforesaid, and has so remained ever since." The agreement referred to was kept secret, and plaintiffs knew nothing about its terms or purport until a short time ago, whereupon they employed counsel, and instructed them to bring this suit.

"Petitioners say that this decree and the contract upon which it was taken was and is a fraud upon them, and that said decree was obtained by fraud, and they ask the court to so decree, and that the same be not binding upon them." Owing to the fact that their trustee was their father, and having confidence in him, they made no inquiry until recently into his acts concerning the trust property. Some of plaintiffs are now minors, and others were until 1904 and 1906. They are informed Butler claims to have sold part or all of said lands to innocent purchasers. They prayed: That they recover the lands and mesne profits; that said decree be declared to be fraudulent; that whatever titles Butler may have to the land be canceled, and the record thereof canceled; that if any of the lands be decreed to be in the hands of innocent purchasers that they recover their value and mesne profits thereof; and for general relief. By amendment, it was alleged: "The administrator aforesaid was a friend of the parties to said suit aforesaid, took no interest in the same, and cared nothing about it, knowing that the estate of Willis Miller had no interest in the final result, whatever its termination; therefore he permitted the other parties to said suit to enter whatever decree they pleased, without inquiry as to their motives or agreements."

The defendant Butler filed general and special demurrers to the petition, upon the hearing of which the court passed the following order: "It appearing to the court by the petition of plaintiff that Willis Miller has no representative of his estate in this case, and the defendant having demurred to said petition, on the ground that there is no party representing the estate of Willis Miller in this case, that part of the demurrer raising this question is sustained, and it is ordered that said case be dismissed, unless petitioners amend their petition by making proper parties to said petition, in so far as the estate of Willis Miller is concerned, and serve the defendants with notice of said amendment 30 days before next term of this court. The other demurrers are not passed on." To this judgment the plaintiffs excepted, "in so far as the same sustains the demurrer of the defendant Butler, therein specified, and dismisses said case." They also excepted to the refusal of the judge to pass upon the other grounds of demurrer, but this contention was abandoned on the oral argument of the case in this court.

W. H. Terrell, for plaintiffs in error. F. M. Longley, for defendants in error.

HILL, J. (after stating the facts as above). Did the court below commit error in sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the case? We think not. The controlling question in this case is whether a representative of the estate of Willis Miller, deceased, should have been made a party to the suit in the court below. The trial judge, in sustaining the demurrer, thought that it was necessary to make a representative of this estate a party to the suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover the land in controversy, and so do we. E. T. Winn, the former administrator of the estate, was a party of record to the former suit, and was a party of record to the decree under which the land in controversy was sold. This decree, rendered in 1895, was the basis of the execution levied upon the land, and which was bought by the defendant Butler.

One of the prayers of the petition is that the decree rendered in 1895 be declared fraudulent and void. To do so would be to leave the case, pending in Troup superior court, as it stood prior to the decree. Under the allegations of the petition, the estate of Miller certainly had an interest in that suit. Whatever interest the estate of Miller had in the suit prior to the decree, it would still have, if the decree was set aside. It is not alleged in the petition that the estate is insolvent, or that there are no creditors or heirs, other than plaintiff. The burden is on the plaintiff to allege facts showing that the estate of Willis Miller has no such interest in the result of the suit as to make it necessary that his estate be represented therein. The decree of May, 1895, was rendered in a case to which H. W. Miller, as trustee of the plaintiffs, was a party, and by his consent. It is therefore binding on the plaintiffs until reversed or set aside, and until this be done the plaintiffs cannot obtain any of the relief they are seeking.

In order to set the decree aside, it is necessary that the parties thereto, or their representatives, be parties to the proceeding in which it is sought to have this done; and a representative of the estate of Willis Miller being a party to the decree, a representative of that estate must be a party to the present suit, which necessarily involves the setting aside of that decree as a condition precedent to any right on the part of the plaintiffs to obtain the relief sought by them. Bullard v. Wynn, 134 Ga. 636 (2), 68 S. E. 439. In the case of Henderson v. Napier, 107 Ga. 342, 33 S. E. 433, this court held: "Where equitable proceedings are instituted, which pray for relief touching rights and interests of the petitioners in certain specific property, and the petition discloses the fact that others are directly interested in the property, who are not made parties to the proceedings, and whose interests would be affected by the grant of the relief sought, such other persons are proper and necessary parties to the action." See, also, Bond v. Hunt, 135 Ga. 733, 70 S. E. 572. The decision in the case of Bledsoe v. Bledsoe, 29 Ga. 385, is not in conflict with the decision we now make. In that case the question was whether the plaintiffs could sue in their own name, or whether the property could only be recovered by an administrator de bonis non upon the estate of Morton Bledsoe.

But the question in this case is, not whether the plaintiffs can sue, but whether, if they do sue, the effect of the suit would be to injure others, who should be made parties to the suit. Undoubtedly the plaintiffs can bring suit to assert their legal or equitable rights, whatever they may be, but they cannot maintain a suit without the proper parties being made. To allow suitors to do so, would be to injure and damage those who have rights, as well as they. The estate of Willis Miller had rights in the suit, pending in the Troup superior court, which culminated in the decree of May, 1895, and to allow a subsequent suit, the effect of which, if successful, would be to set aside that decree, without making a representative of Willis Miller a party as such, would be to try a case without proper and necessary parties. We therefore think the judgment of the court below should be affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent.

JOHNSON v. NISBET.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

BILLS AND NOTES (§ 474*)—EVIDENCE (§ 397*) —ACTION ON NOTE—PLEADING—PAROL EVIDENCE.

In a suit upon a note for a certain sum of money payable at a definite time, a plea is demurrable which alleges that the note was given in pursuance of an oral agreement that the payee employed the maker to work for him the subsequent year, and advanced to him the money for which the note was given, with the understanding that he was to pay it in certain installments out of his wages, and that the payee refused to carry out his contract of employment, to the damage of the maker in a sum exceeding the amount of the note. Where a contract is entire, part of which is in writing and part in parol, the written part cannot be varied by parol evidence, in the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake.

Error from Superior Court, Douglas County; Price Edwards, Judge.

Action by J. L. Nisbet against H. G. Johnson and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named brings error. Affirmed.

Roberts & Hutcheson, for plaintiff in error. W. A. James and Shepard Bryan, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. J. L. Nisbet sued H. G. Johnson and Mrs. Jennie R. Johnson on a note, to the March term, 1910, of Douglas superior court, alleging that notice was given, on February 16, 1910, by the plaintiff to the defendants of the intention of the former to bring such suit. The note was for $150 principal. It was dated November 1, 1907, due July 1, 1908, payable to Adams, Wright & Co., provided for interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, and 10 per cent. attorney's fees if collected by law, and contained a waiver of homestead and exemption rights. On the back of the note was a transfer thereof to J. L. Nisbet, signed by Adams, Wright & Co., without date. The defendants filed a plea, which denied all the allegations of the petition, except the one stating that the note was due and that the defendants refused to pay the same, and denied that the plaintiff was a bona fide owner and holder of the note, and averred that, if he ever owned it, he procured it from the payees thereof after maturity, with full knowledge of "every defense hereafter set up by these defendants." The allegations of the fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh paragraphs of the answer are substantially as follows: On November 1, 1907, Adams, Wright & Co., the payees of the note sued on, employed the defendant to work for them as a traveling salesman for 1908, and "at said date said Adams, Wright & Co. advanced H. G. Johnson $150 in cash, to be paid back out of his salary for the year 1908," in monthly sums of $25 until the note was paid, such payments to begin January 30, 1908." As evidence of said contract of cash loan the note sued on was given, and the consideration of said note was the cash loan aforesaid and the contract of employment aforesaid for the year 1908. On the 28th day of December, 1907, said Adams, Wright & Co. notified the said H. G. Johnson that they would not employ him for the year 1908, and fully abandoned their contract aforesaid without any cause on the part of the said H. G. Johnson. The said H. G. Johnson was ready and willing to carry out the terms of said contract, and offered to do so. On account of said breach of contract and abandonment of same as aforesaid, this defendant "sustained damages as set forth in the answer. Said damages grew out of the said contract, the consideration of said note sued on." The eighth paragraph prayed that the damages referred to in the plea be set off against the note by way of recoupment, and that the defendant H. G. Johnson have judgment against the payees of the note for $1,020. The ninth paragraph of the plea alleged that Jennie R. Johnson was the wife of H. G. Johnson, and signed the note as surety for her husband. The tenth paragraph alleged that, if the plaintiff procured the note at all, he did so after it became due and with full notice of the defenses set up in the plea. The court, at the trial term of the case, on oral motion of the plaintiff, struck paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of the plea, and, upon proof of the notice of intention to sue being given 20 days before the last return day of the term to which suit was brought, directed a verdict in favor of the defendant Jennie R. Johnson, and a verdict in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant H. G. Johnson for the full amount, principal, interest, and attorney's fees, called for by the note. To the striking of the last three paragraphs of the plea, and to the direction of the verdict, H. G. Johnson excepted.

If the contract be treated as an entire and not a severable one, the agreement to pay in installments from the salary to be received was set out as being a vital integral part of it. Such a contract could not be proved by parol, in the face of the note which fixed the amount to be paid at the time of payment. If the contract was entire, it could not be dismembered, so that a recovery could be had for breach of such contract of employment, when the terms of the contract could not be proved by parol. In other words, it is not competent to recover damages for a breach of an entire contract by simply showing a part of it, when another part, which is alleged as being of the essence of the contract of employment, and not a mere incident or conditional term, could not be proved. There may be cases in which a contract is severable, so that if one term fails it does not destroy the contract; but if the allegations of the plea are to be treated as making an entire contract, the agreement as to the amount to be deducted from the salary each month and applied to the payment of the note is just as inherently a part of the contract as is the total amount to be paid each month. We do not think it such a case as can be treated as one of entire contract, and yet one in which such integral part of the agreement can be rejected and leave the rest to stand. When the plea is read together, we think there are such indications that the alleged contract of employment was in parol, and only the note was in writing, and the case should now be dealt with on the substantial question involved, rather than be sent back to have the same principle applied when it appears more plainly that the contract of employment was not in writing. Counsel for both parties put this construction on the pleadings, and argued the case on the basis that the contract of employment was in parol.

The rule is well recognized that if a part of the contract is reduced to writing (such as a note given in pursuance of a contract), and it is manifest that the writing was not intended to speak the whole contract, then parol evidence is admissible. Civil Code 1910, § 4268. But to bring a case within the rule admitting parol evidence to complete an entire agreement, of which the written contract is only a part, it is essential that the parol evidence be consistent with and not contradictory of the written instrument.

Forsyth Mfg. Co. v. Castlen, 112 Ga. 199, 37 S. E. 485, 81 Am. St. Rep. 28. The whole tenor of the plea is to change by parol an absolute unconditional promissory note into a conditional note, and this cannot be done in the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake. Hailey v. Evans, 60 Ga. 157; Sims v. Crawford, 58 Ga. 31. The payees of the note were not parties to the suit, and under no circumstances could the defendant recover against them in this action damages by way of recoupment. The allegation that the plaintiff is not a bona fide holder of the note only served to let in any defense which the maker might have against the note. And it is not permissible to change the terms of a note for a certain sum, payable at a definite time, by parol proof. There was no error in striking the plea and directing a verdict for the plaintiff.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent, and HILL, J., not presiding.

Error from Superior Court, Pulaski County; J. H. Martin, Judge.

Action by Emma Way against the Gulf Line Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Marion Turner, H. E. Coates, and J. H. Tipton, for plaintiff in error. M. S. Means and W. L. & Warren Grice, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. [1] Emma Way sued the Gulf Line Railway Company for damages for the homicide of her husband, Norman Way. The substance of the petition now material is: The deceased was killed by being run over by a passenger train of the defendant, a few hundred yards south of Powell's Still station, at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Prior to, and at the time of the homicide, it "was the general custom of pedestrians to walk along and near the track of defendant from Powell's Still to a point on the far side of Big creek." Decedent was walking from Powell's Still towards Big creek, "along the right of way of said company, and suddenly became ill and unable to go further, and sat down on the end of a cross-tie in a foot or so of the track, where he soon became very ill and was unconscious, and that, in this condition, the train of defendant came upon him and killed him. Under the circumstances, the killing of said Norman Way was gross negligence; for, before the engine reached him, there was a straight track for a distance of 30 rails of iron, and upgrade, which afforded ample opportunity to see him and bring the train to a full stop before reaching him. The train was not stopped until after it had struck and dragged the decedent the distance of 2½ rails. The whistle of the engine was not blown, nor the bell rung, and the failure of the engineer and fireman to do this was gross negligence. Deceased was not negligent, and in his condition could not, by the exercise of ordinary care, have avoided the consequences of the negligence of the defendant as aforesaid." A general demurrer to the petition was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

It is clear that the decedent was a trespasser upon defendant's railway track. The mere fact that "it was the general custom for pedestrians to walk along and near the track of defendant," where the homicide occurred, was not sufficient to show that the employes of the company in charge of the train were bound to anticipate that he or other persons might be upon the track at that place, so as to impose upon the employes a duty to take such precautions to prevent injury to persons who might be upon the track as would meet the requirements of ordinary care and diligence. Under the facts alleged, the general rule as to trespassers upon a railway track applies; that is, the duty of observing ordinary care and diligence for his protection does not devolve upon the agents of the company in charge of the train, until his presence upon the track becomes known to them. It was not alleged that such agents of the company knew of the presence of the decedent upon its track before he was run over, nor does it appear from the petition whether a few or many pedestrians were accustomed to walk along or near the defendant's track at the place of the homicide. Moreover, it appears from the petition that the defendant was "walking along the right of way of said company, and suddenly became ill and unable to go further, and sat down on the end of a cross-tie in a foot or so of the track, where he soon became very ill and was unconscious, and that, in this condition, the train of defendant came upon him and killed him." This is not a case, therefore, where the deceased suddenly became unconscious from illness, and was thereby caused to involuntarily fall upon the track, or where, while walking on the track, he suddenly became ill and unconscious, and while unconscious sat down on the track; but it is a case where the decedent, while walking along the right of way of the railway company, not necessarily on the track, suddenly became ill, and, being unable to go further, thereupon voluntarily went upon the track, and sat down on the end of a cross-tie, and subsequently became unconscious, thus showing that he was grossly negligent in voluntarily, and without even apparent necessity, placing himself in such a perilous position. It is therefore, for the reasons above stated, very clear to us that the court erred in not sustaining the general demurrer to the petition.

2. PLEADING (§ 362*)—STRIKING OUT MATTER.

In a suit of the character mentioned in the preceding headnote, it was error for the judge to refuse to strike so much of the pleas of the sureties on the second bond as sought to set up the invalidity of the bond, on the ground that it misrecited the date of the appointment of the guardian.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1147-1155; Dec. Dig. § 362.*]

3. PLEADING (§ 362*)—STRIKING OUT MATTER.

Where, in a suit on a guardian's bond against the principal and sureties, the sureties denied the amount of the liability alleged, the fact that upon the trial the amount of the devastavit committed by the guardian was agreed upon by the parties did not make it erroneous to refuse to strike from the answer the denial of such amount.

4. PLEADING (§ 362*)—STRIKING OUT MATTER.

Where a plaintiff brought suit on a guardian's bond, and in one paragraph of his petition alleged that the defendants were indebted to him in a certain amount, without more, and one of the defendants denied it, there was no merit in a motion to strike such responsive part of a paragraph of the answer, on the ground that "a simple denial of the indebtedness is not a legal defense to a suit on a bond."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Dec. Dig. § 362.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1078*)—REVIEW—ABANDONMENT OF ASSIGNMENTS.

Where a plaintiff causes to be certified exceptions pendente lite, assigning error upon numerous rulings of the court, and in the main bill of exceptions assigns error on the pendente lite exceptions and the overruling of a motion for new trial, and in his brief states that he "insists upon each and every assignment of error, but because of the fact that many of these are practically identical, and some overlap others, the errors complained of will be classified and insisted upon in the following questions," and following this statement are grouped the various legal propositions insisted upon, an assignment of error, not embraced in such legal propositions as stated, nor otherwise alluded to in the brief, will be treated as abandoned.

6. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§ 173*)—LIABILITIES ON BONDS—EXTENT OF LIABILITY.

Under the pleadings and evidence, if the plaintiff were entitled to recover at all, he was entitled to recover from each of the sureties on the second bond the full amount of the devastavit; and it was erroneous as to him to divide the devastavit and find in his favor only a part against the sureties on such bond, and a part against the sureties on the first bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Guardian and Ward, Dec. Dig. § 173.*]

7. GUARDIAN AND WARD (§§ 175, 182*)—LIABILITIES OF SURETIES—ACTIONS—PARTIES.

The second bond was given under an order granted by the ordinary in a proceeding for additional security, under Civil Code 1910, §§ 3049, 3050, and was merely cumulative to the first, and did not operate to discharge one of the sureties on the first bond under an order previously granted by the ordinary in a proceeding for a discharge under Civil Code 1910, § 3052. The sureties on both bonds were co-sureties in proportion to the amounts of the respective bonds; but the suit being at law, and the plaintiff not having elected to sue the sureties on the first bond, and no equitable reasons being alleged which would authorize the sureties on the second bond to require those on the first bond to be made parties, it was erroneous for the judge, over objection of one of the latter, to order that the one so objecting be made a party.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 973*)—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT—DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

While a trial judge may, within the restrictions prescribed by Civil Code 1910, § 5926, direct a verdict, this court will in no case reverse a judgment refusing to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 3846; Dec. Dig. § 973.*]

Error from Superior Court, Brooks County; G. A. Whittaker, Judge pro hac.

Action by C. H. Remington, Ordinary, for use, etc., against J. W. Hopson and others. From the judgment, plaintiff and defendants S. H. Rountree, as executor, and Mrs. Jessie B. Wilson bring separate writs of error. Judgment reversed on main bill of exceptions and cross-bill of exceptions filed by defendant Mrs. Jessie B. Wilson, and affirmed on the cross-bill of exceptions filed by defendant Rountree.

Stanley S. Bennet and L. W. Branch, for plaintiff. W. H. Griffin, H. A. Mathews, Edmondson & Edmondson, and J. D. Wade, for defendants.

ATKINSON, J. On January 4, 1892, J. W. Hopson was appointed guardian of the person and property of Willie Lee Hopson and Ralph B. Hopson, minor children of I. B. Hopson, deceased. As such guardian he executed bond. Subsequently, to wit, July 6, 1896, on application of Mrs. Jessie B. Wilson, formerly Hopson, the mother of the wards, who had signed as one of the sureties on the bond above mentioned, the guardian, by order of the ordinary, executed a second bond, with a different set of sureties. Afterwards, upon an alleged devastavit, the ordinary, disregarding the first bond, instituted suit against the principal and the sureties on the second bond only. No demurrer was filed, but the defendants Cicero N. Williams, Wesley W. Wade, A. J. Conoly, and Z. T. Knight, uniting in one answer, which was afterwards amended, and Mrs. Hannah Matthews, as executrix of S. M. Matthews, making a separate answer, which was afterwards amended, and S. H. Rountree, as executor of the will of Mitchell Brice, making a separate answer, which was afterwards amended, among other things, set up the existence of the first bond, and certain defenses which will be stated in this opinion, and prayed that the sureties on the first bond be made parties, etc. By order of the court the sureties on the first bond were made parties, and one of them, Mrs. Jessie B. Wilson, excepted pendente lite to the order making her a party. The plaintiff moved to strike certain portions of the several answers of the defendant sureties on the second bond, and excepted pendente lite to the order of refusal.

At the trial certain evidence was introduced, in addition to an agreed statement of facts. By the terms of the latter the amount of the devastavit was agreed upon. The verdict declared, among other things, for the plaintiff for that amount, but prorated it in such manner as to make it a finding against the sureties jointly on the first bond for a part thereof, and against the sureties on the second bond for the balance, thus failing to charge the sureties on either bond for the full amount of the devastavit. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, on the general grounds, which was refused, and he excepted. In the bill of exceptions, in addition to assigning error on the judgment refusing a new trial, error was also assigned by the plaintiff on his exceptions pendente lite to the judgment refusing to strike certain portions of the answers. The defendant Mrs. Jessie B. Wilson filed a cross-bill of exceptions, assigning error on her exceptions pendente lite to the order making her a party. S. H. Rountree, as executor of the estate of Mitchell Brice, filed a separate cross-bill of exceptions; but his only assignment of error was upon his exceptions pendente lite to the refusal of the judge to direct a verdict in his favor.

[1] 1. The main bill of exceptions assigned error on exceptions pendente lite filed by the plaintiff in the trial court, which complained of the refusal to strike certain parts of the answer of S. H. Rountree, as executor of the estate of Mitchell Brice, and also certain parts of the answers of Cicero M. Williams, Wesley W. Wade, A. J. Conoly, and Z. T. Knight, all of whom were sureties on the second bond, and also a part of the answer of Mrs. Hannah Matthews, as executrix of the will of S. M. Matthews, whose testator was also a surety on the second bond. The parts of the several answers referred to set up the existence of the first bond, and alleged that, if the sureties on the second bond were liable at all, they were not liable for the waste committed prior to the date of their bond, but only liable jointly and ratably with the sureties on the first bond for waste committed since the date of the second bond, and prayed that the sureties on the first bond be made parties to the action, so that the liabilities of all the sureties might be determined in one action, thus avoiding circuity of action and a multiplicity of suits. The ground to strike the parts of the answers above referred to was that, as a matter of law, the sureties on the first bond were not jointly liable with the sureties on the second bond, and that the sureties on the second bond were liable for past as well as future waste.

The first bond was for $40,000. The second, which was executed some three years later, was for $30,000. The two bonds were of character as will be indicated, and were executed under the circumstances following, that is to say: In 1893 Mrs. Hopson, the mother of the wards, who had signed as one of the sureties on the first bond, filed with the ordinary a petition alleging that John S. Hopson, one of the sureties and the largest property owner who had signed the bond, had died; that she was the mother of the two minors, and desired that the estate of her husband be protected by giving a solvent bond; that she was alarmed about the result of her suretyship, and thought herself in great danger of suffering therefrom. She prayed that the court of ordinary would pass an order requiring the guardian to relieve her from the bond, and also give new and additional security, so that she might be saved harmless. A rule nisi was issued, and at the October term an order was passed that Mrs. Hopson, who had become Mrs. Wilson by a second marriage, "be relieved as a security on J. W. Hopson's bond," and that the guardian be required to give additional security at the next term of court. This was a proceeding under section 3052 of the Civil Code of 1910. By that section it is provided, however, that "such discharged surety shall be relieved only from the time the new security shall be given," and that, "if new security is not given, and the guardian's trust is revoked, the discharged surety shall be bound for a true accounting of such guardian with the new guardian, or his ward if no other guardian is appointed." It appears that no bond was given, and no new guardian appointed. Thus the matter stood until 1896, when Mrs. Wilson again filed a petition in the court of ordinary. In this she recited the appointment of the guardian, his qualification, and the giving of the bond, and the filing of the former petition by her, and that the ordinary had passed an order discharging her as a surety from all further liability. She also alleged that J. S. Hopson, a surety on the bond, died leaving an insolvent estate, as she was informed, and that the guardian had received for his wards, otherwise than from the guardian estate, money amounting to $10,000. She charged that the security on the bond was insufficient, and prayed an order requiring the guardian "to give other and additional security, and on his failure to do so to revoke his letters of guardianship and appoint some other person in his place." Upon hearing this petition the ordinary passed an order requiring the guardian "to give other and sufficient security as guardian for Ralph and Willie Lee Hopson," and declared that on his failure to do so his letters of guardianship should be revoked. It was under this order that the second bond was given. The petition did not allege a failure to obey the former order and ask the removal of the guardian. On the contrary, she sought, for various reasons, not to relieve herself, but to secure the wards. From a consideration of the petition and order, the second proceeding was under Civil Code 1910, §§ 3049, 3050. It was not a proceeding merely to have an additional bond given on account of new property which had accrued to the wards; but, in view of the decrease in the security of the original bond and of the increase of property in the hands of the guardian, it was a proceeding to require new and additional security, as provided in the sections last cited. The second bond had the form of a guardian's bond given upon an appointment then made.

Under these circumstances, was the second bond cumulative, and were the sureties on it cosureties with those on the first bond, relatively to past as well as future waste, and were the sureties on the second bond entitled to have the liabilities between themselves and the sureties on the first bond adjusted and declared in this suit? Section 3049 of the Civil Code states that, upon ascertainment that the original bond is insufficient, "It shall be the duty of the ordinary to give to the guardian notice to come forward at the next term of the court and give additional security to said ordinary, or give a new bond with good securities." If new securities had been added to the first bond, it is clear that they would have been cosureties with those already on it. The fact that the additional security was given in the form of a new bond for the proper conduct and accounting of the guardian did not prevent the two bonds from being cumulative. Neither this statute nor section 3050 provides for discharging one set of sureties and substituting another, but for adding security to that which has already been given. The original bond remains of force, and the new bond is cumulative or additional security for the benefit of the wards. As between the obligees of the bonds and the sureties on them, all are liable for a devastavit to the extent of the bonds which they respectively signed for past as well as future waste. As among themselves, they occupy the position of co-sureties, and the liabilities of the sureties on the two bonds are in proportion to the size of such bonds. Huson v. Green, 88 Ga. 722, 16 S. E. 255; Stewart v. Johnson, 87 Ga. 97, 13 S. E. 258; Schouler on Domestic Relations, § 367; 4 Field's Briefs, § 54. Perhaps the plaintiff might have brought suit on both bonds, but he did not elect to do so, as did the plaintiff in the case of Sutton v. Williams, 77 Ga. 570, 1 S. E. 175, in which there was a discharge of a surety under section 3052. He sued only the last bond. While they were cumulative securities, he could not be compelled to sue on both at law, unless there were special equitable reasons which would require the bringing in of all the sureties, but he could proceed against the sureties on one bond. He has prayed no judgment against the sureties on the first bond. Can the defendants, who were sureties on the second bond, do so for him, and obtain a judgment, not for themselves alone, but for the plaintiff? If not, then the result of bringing in the sureties on the first bond would be, not the rendition of a judgment against them in favor of the plaintiff, but the entering of a judgment on the second bond, and a mere side adjudication that the defendants and the sureties on the first bond stood in a certain relationship. We do not think that the sureties on the first bond were necessary parties to the plaintiff's suit on the second bond, so that the sureties on it could compel the plaintiff to bring them in as codefendants and sue them at the same time. Indeed, the sureties on the second bond have not attempted to do so, but have simply prayed that the sureties on the first bond be brought into the action as parties, so as to save a multiplicity of suits. No sufficient reason for equitable relief is alleged by the sureties on the second bond, and they show no right to require them to be made parties. If there is any right of contribution between the sureties on the respective bonds, that can be determined in a proceeding at the proper time and in an appropriate way. This case is somewhat analogous to one where a plaintiff might bring suit upon a joint and several liability against some of the obligees, but might not care to proceed against all. Those sued could not compel him to bring in the others, nor could they themselves bring them into the plaintiff's suit, merely because there might be a right of contribution after a recovery by the plaintiff. McDougald v. Maddox, 17 Ga. 52; McDougald v. Maddox, 32 Ga. 63.

[2] 2. The main bill of exceptions also complained of the refusal of the judge to strike certain parts of the answers of the defendants named in the preceding division, which set up that the second bond was void because it contained a false recital as to the date of the appointment of the guardian; it being recited that he was appointed on the date of the execution of the bond, which was the 6th day of July, 1896; whereas, in fact, the appointment had been made more than four years previously, to wit, in 1892. The ground of the motion to strike was that the defendants, having signed the bond, were estopped from denying its recitals. On this point the answer of Mrs. Matthews went further than that of the other defendants, and alleged that the second bond was executed with the express understanding that Hopson on the date of that bond was appointed guardian, when in fact he had not been so appointed, and had not since that date been appointed, and therefore that no liability could have arisen on the bond against her. The second bond having been given as a cumulative bond, in the manner already recited, the sureties thereon were liable for any devastavit of the principal from the time of his appointment, and not merely from the time the bond was given. The fact that the bond misrecited the date of his appointment, stating it as of the date of the bond, did not change this or make the bond invalid. It was given by virtue of proceedings in court, under an order of court requiring it. In response to such order the principal and his sureties gave the bond, and satisfied the requirements of the court. By doing so, they saved the guardian from being deposed from office, and allowed him to proceed with his administration. If in so doing they erroneously recited the time of his appointment, this would not relieve them from the burden the statute imposed upon them. The judge accordingly erred in refusing to strike the part of the answer which set up the erroneous recital in the bond of the date of the appointment as a defense. What has been said applies to the plea of Mrs. Matthews, as well as to those of the other defendants.

[3] 3. Error was also assigned upon the refusal of the judge to strike a part of the answer of certain of the defendants which set up that in the proceeding by the ordinary in which the judgment had been rendered declaring a devastavit the ordinary did not examine the return of the accounts of the guardian and examine witnesses, as alleged, but that, if any such judgment was signed at the time, it was done without a trial, and without the introduction of evidence, and therefore that the judgment was void; also that, if the guardian owed the wards any sum at the date of the judgment, it was greatly less than declared by the ordinary. The ground of the motion to strike such part of the answers was that "the amount had been agreed upon by all parties," and the defense was "eliminated by consent." There was no merit in this motion.

[4] 4. Error was also assigned upon the refusal of the judge to strike the first paragraph of the answer of Mrs. Matthews, which merely denied that "she is indebted in any sum to the plaintiff in said case in manner and form as claimed." The ground of the motion to strike was because a simple denial of the indebtedness is not a legal defense to a suit on a bond. This answer was merely responsive to the allegations of a paragraph of the plaintiff's petition, which alleged that the defendants were indebted to him in a certain amount, without more. The motion to strike was without merit.

[5] 5. One of the exceptions pendente lite upon which error was assigned in the main bill of exceptions complained of the refusal of the judge to strike an amended plea filed by Wesley W. Wade and A. J. Conoly, setting up their discharge in bankruptcy. For reasons indicated in the fifth headnote, this assignment of error will be treated as abandoned.

[6] 6. The last assignment of error in the main bill of exceptions related to the order of the court overruling the motion for a new trial, which was based on the usual general grounds. The verdict which was rendered divided the liability to the plaintiff between the sureties on the two bonds, and also included matters which were not proper under the rulings heretofore made. Under the pleadings of the plaintiff, if he were entitled to recover at all, he was entitled to recover from each of the sureties on the second bond for the full amount of the devastavit, and it was erroneous as to the plaintiff to divide the devastavit, and find in his favor only a part against the sureties on that bond and a part against the sureties on the other bond.

[7] 7. When application was made by the defendant sureties on the second bond to have the sureties on the first bond made parties to the suit for the purposes mentioned in the first division of this opinion, Mrs. Jessie B. Wilson filed objections, setting up: (a) Nonliability to the plaintiffs; (b) that she was not a cosurety with the defendants on the second bond; and (c) that by the order of the ordinary dated July 6, 1896 (to which reference has been made in the first division of this opinion), the sureties on the second bond were given by the guardian as additional sureties, and therefore that she was released and discharged as a surety under authority of the order dated September 20, 1893 (which has also been referred to in the first division of the opinion). This objection was overruled, and Mrs. Wilson was made a party. Error was assigned upon this ruling in the cross-bill of exceptions. This assignment of error is controlled by the rulings announced in the first division. The second bond was not executed under the order of the ordinary passed in 1893, in a proceeding under section 3052 of the Civil Code, but under the subsequent order granted in 1896, in a different proceeding, under sections 3049 and 3050. Mrs. Wilson, therefore, was not discharged as a surety, but continued to be such; and, the second bond being merely cumulative to the first, her relation to the sureties on the second bond was that of a cosurety in proportion to the amount of the respective bonds. But as the plaintiff did not sue the sureties on the first bond, and no equitable reasons appeared which authorized the defendant sureties on the second bond to require the sureties on the first bond to be made parties to the suit, it was erroneous for the court to pass an order making them parties.

[8] 8. S. H. Rountree, as executor of the estate of Mitchell Brice, after all the evidence was submitted, moved the court to direct a verdict in his favor, and in a separate cross-bill of exceptions assigned error upon the refusal of the judge to direct such a verdict. While the trial judge may, within the restrictions prescribed by Civil Code 1910, § 5926, direct a verdict, this court will in no case reverse him for refusing to do so. Green v. Scurry, 134 Ga. 482, 68 S. E. 77, and cases cited in 13 Michie's Digest, 565, subsec. D.

Judgment reversed on the main bill of exceptions and the cross-bill of exceptions filed by Mrs. Wilson, and affirmed on the cross-bill of exceptions filed by Rountree, executor. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent, and HILL, J., not presiding.

STRICKLAND v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 15, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 48*)—DEFENSES—INSANITY.

If one voluntarily becomes intoxicated by the use of a drug, this will not excuse him for the commission of a crime. But if mania or insanity, though caused by the use of a drug, be permanent and fixed in character, so as to destroy the knowledge of right and wrong as to the act, the person laboring under such infirmity will not be responsible.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 486, 1169*)—EVIDENCE—EXPERT TESTIMONY—HARMLESS ERROR.

It was not relevant for the state's counsel to ask an expert witness for the accused whether, in his opinion, a physician, who treated the accused for insanity at an asylum and cured him, could tell what produced it, unless the evidence of the physician effecting the cure was introduced.

(a) The admission of such statement in evidence could not have affected the verdict, and furnishes no cause for a reversal.

3. HOMICIDE (§ 153*)—EVIDENCE—THREATS.

Conversations of the accused and another person, some days before the commission of the homicide, in which the former expressed angry and threatening sentiments toward the decedent, were admissible to show the state of mind of the accused toward the person whom he killed. There was no error in admitting in evidence the parts of the conversations which rendered the sayings of the accused intelligible and showed the circumstances under which they were made.

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 452*)—EVIDENCE—OPINION EVIDENCE—SANITY OF ACCUSED.

Where, on the trial of a person indicted for murder, the issue was one of sanity or insanity, and the sheriff of the county testified that, on the day the decedent died and the day after he was shot, the accused was placed in the charge of the witness and so remained in jail for two or three months, and that during such time the witness had conversations with the accused, and observed him constantly, with a view of ascertaining and determining his mental condition, and that from this the witness was in a position to give his opinion on the subject, the opinion of the witness, based on such facts, that the accused was insane during his incarceration, was admissible.

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 48, 1170*)—CAPACITY TO COMMIT CRIME—WRIT OF ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR.

Omitting cases of delusional insanity, where the question is one of general insanity, the test of criminal responsibility is whether the accused had sufficient reason to distinguish between right and wrong as to the act about to be committed.

(a) A very thorough investigation as to the conduct and condition of the accused before, at the time of, and after the commission of the homicide having been had, and the witness mentioned in the fourth headnote having given no facts from which irresponsibility for crime could be inferred, the rejection of his mere general opinion that the accused was insane while in jail will not, under the evidence, require a reversal.

6. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL.

The evidence sustained the verdict, and there was no error in overruling the motion for a new trial.

Error from Superior Court, Jeff Davis County; C. B. Conyers, Judge.

A. D. Strickland was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

J. M. Wilcox and W. W. Bennett, for plaintiff in error. J. H. Thomas, Sol. Gen., and T. S. Felder, Atty. Gen., for the State.

LUMPKIN, J. Strickland was convicted of murder, and sentenced to imprisonment for life. He moved for a new trial. The motion was overruled, and he excepted.

[1] 1. Voluntary drunkenness furnishes no excuse for crime. Penal Code 1910, § 89. The mere dulling of the sensibilities, excitement, or temporary frenzy of the drunken man, brought about by his voluntary act, will not excuse him. But if mania or insanity, "though produced by drunkenness, be permanent and fixed, so as to destroy all knowledge of right and wrong, then the person thus laboring under these infirmities would not be responsible." Beck v. State, 76 Ga. 452, 470. Whether one voluntarily intoxicates himself with alcoholic liquor, or with a drug, would make no difference in principle. The charge of the judge was substantially to this effect, and there was sufficient evidence to authorize it.

[2, 3] 2, 3. The headnotes sufficiently state the rulings.

[4] 4. The defendant introduced the sheriff as a witness. As set out in the motion for a new trial, he testified that on Sunday after the homicide (the decedent having been shot on Saturday afternoon, and having died on Sunday morning) the defendant was placed in his charge as a prisoner, and so remained for two or three months, and was kept in jail by him; that during that time the witness had frequent conversations with and constantly observed the defendant, with a view of ascertaining and determining the mental condition of the latter; and that, from these observations and conversations, he was in a position to give his opinion on that subject. The court refused to let him give his opinion. Counsel for defendant stated that he expected to prove by the witness that in his opinion the defendant was insane, and that such was his condition on the day after the homicide. Sanity or insanity is a proper subject for opinion evidence. In such a case "any witness may swear to his opinion or belief, giving his reasons therefor." Code 1910, § 5874. An expert witness may base his opinion on a hypothetical statement of facts, and may state his opinion, without giving reasons. That the statement of facts or reasons given by the sheriff as a basis for his opinion as a nonexpert witness was sufficient to authorize the admission of such opinion is decided by former rulings of this court. Withrow v. State, 136 Ga. 337, 71 S. E. 139 (1911); Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 324 (4), 336 et seq., 50 Am. Dec. 329; Choice v. State, 31 Ga. 424, 465, 466; Central R. & Banking Co. v. Kelly, 58 Ga. 107, 111; Taylor v. State, 83 Ga. 647, 10 S. E. 442; Herndon v. State, 111 Ga. 178, 36 S. E. 634.

In Bowden v. Achor, 95 Ga. 245, 22 S. E. 254, the abstract rule was announced that it was not admissible for a witness who is not an expert in such matters to testify to his opinion with reference to the mental capacity of another, without stating the facts upon which that opinion is based. No application of it was made, nor was it declared what was a sufficient statement of reasons to furnish a basis for admitting the opinion of a nonexpert. In Welch v. Stipe, 95 Ga. 762, 22 S. E. 670, the rule was again announced, and its application carried quite far, under the facts of the case. It was held that a mother could not testify that her deceased daughter was of unsound mind, although it appeared that the two had lived together during the entire lifetime of the daughter, about 40 years; "the mother herself not giving any reason whatever arising from their relationship or the long association between them, or stating any fact upon which her opinion as to the daughter's mental condition was based." In the opinion it was said that if the witness had detailed any of the peculiarities, mental or otherwise, and based the opinion which she did express upon such observation, it would have been admissible, and that if, without this, "she had stated the fact of such association, and distinctly referred her opinion to that for its basis, by saying that it was her opinion, derived from such association, that her daughter was of unsound mind, such opinion might have been competent."

In Graham v. State, 102 Ga. 650, 29 S. E. 582, an extraordinary motion for a new trial was made on the ground of newly discovered evidence, set forth in an affidavit stating that the accused "is of unsound mind"; that he was easily excited, and, when under such excitement, the witness "would not consider him responsible for his actions." The statement that the accused "is" of unsound mind was considered as referring to the time when the affidavit was made; the opinion of the witness that the accused was not "responsible for his acts" was held inadmissible; and the general opinion that the accused was of unsound mind was then considered on the assumption that it referred to the time of the homicide. It was said arguendo that this would not have been admissible in evidence without the reasons on which it was based, and finally it was held that, if such opinion would have been admissible in evidence, it was not of such weight as to require the grant of the extraordinary motion for a new trial.

These decisions, when considered in connection with the facts on which they were based and the exact points ruled, do not furnish any conflict with the decisions cited in support of the ruling now made. We hold that the sheriff's opinion was admissible in evidence. The opinion of a competent witness that the accused person is insane—of unsound mind—is admissible, along with the other evidence, in determining whether the insanity reaches the point of legal irresponsibility.

[5] Under the facts of this case, however, we do not think the exclusion of this evidence requires a new trial. Omitting cases of paranoia or delusional insanity, and dealing with general insanity, the test of criminal responsibility established in this state is whether the person had sufficient reason to distinguish between right and wrong, in relation to a particular act about to be committed. Roberts v. State, 3 Ga. 310; Carr v. State, 96 Ga. 285 (2), 22 S. E. 570; Flanagan v. State, 103 Ga. 619, 625, 30 S. E. 550; Taylor v. State, 105 Ga. 746, 775, 31 S. E.

764. Here a number of witnesses were examined as to the acts and conduct of the accused and his condition at the time of, before, and after the homicide. Physicians who examined him while in jail and the officer who arrested him were introduced on behalf of the accused. A very full examination of the question of insanity was had. While there was evidence tending to show unsoundness of mind, the jury did not believe it showed the accused to have been incapable of distinguishing right from wrong as to the act which he committed, at the time of its commission.

We think their finding was warranted. The sheriff detailed no facts showing an inability to distinguish between right and wrong. His mere general opinion that the accused was insane while in jail, not even going to the extent of giving an opinion that the accused could not distinguish right from wrong, could hardly have changed the verdict. In view of the entire evidence, this ruling does not require a reversal.

5. Nothing in the motion required a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent, and HILL, J., not presiding.

GABBETT v. HINMAN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 20*) — GROUNDS—MISTAKE—FRAUD.

If an owner of land agrees to sell a part of it, and such part is measured by her agent and the purchaser between certain fixed boundaries, and the purchaser undertakes to prepare a deed, and fraudulently makes the description cover the entire property, instead of the part sold, and the owner signs the deed under a mistake of fact as to what it includes, which is known to the purchaser, equity may reform the deed, so as to make it describe the land actually sold, if the plaintiff is not prevented from obtaining relief on account of laches.

(a) There was enough in the petition to set forth a case of the character indicated in the preceding headnote, and the petition was not subject to general demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reformation of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 79, 80; Dec. Dig. § 20.*]

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

Action by Sarah E. Gabbett against George B. Hinman. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

W. R. Hammond, for plaintiff in error. Tye, Peebles & Jordan, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. Sarah E. Gabbett filed her equitable petition against George B. Hinman, seeking to obtain reformation of a deed, or, if this were not granted, to recover a money verdict. The court dismissed the petition on general demurrer, and the plaintiff excepted.

Equity will not generally reform a written contract on the ground of mistake, unless it is shown to be the mistake of both parties; but it may rescind and cancel upon the ground of mistake of fact material to the contract, though the mistake be that of one party only. Civil Code 1910, § 4579. In Wyche v. Greene, 26 Ga. 415 (decided in 1858), it was held that what is a mistake on one side, and a fraud on the other, is as much the subject of correction as if it were a mistake on both sides. This decision was rendered before the adoption of the first Code in this state. But it has been held that the Code did not alter this rule. Shelton & Co. v. Ellis, 70 Ga. 297; Venable v. Burton, 129 Ga. 537, 59 S. E. 253; Central of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Gortatowsky, 123 Ga. 360, 51 S. E. 469; Bridwell v. Brown, 48 Ga. 179; Civil Code 1910, § 4114, par. 2. The mistake of one party only to a contract, without mistake or fraud of the other party in reference to the same matter, will not authorize reformation of a written contract. To reform the contract under such circumstances, so as to correct the mere error of one party, would be, in effect, to make a contract which the parties did not make for themselves. If land is sold by the entire tract or lot, and the quantity is specified as "more or less," this qualification will cover any deficiency not so gross as to justify the suspicion of willful deception or mistake amounting to fraud. Wylly v. Gazan, 69 Ga. 506; Kendall v. Wells, 126 Ga. 843, 55 S. E. 41.

Applying these principles to the plaintiff's equitable petition, we think it was error to dismiss it on general demurrer. Some of the allegations are not appropriate to a case for reformation, but there is enough to withstand a general demurrer. It was alleged, among other things, as follows: The plaintiff owned certain land lying between the line of the Hinman lot and the projection of Lowndes street. She sent a carpenter to build a fence on the dividing line between her land and the Hinman lot, but by mistake he built it 27 feet eastward from such line. An agent representing her negotiated a sale to Hinman of land fronting 175 feet on Currier street, at the rate of $10 per front foot, and her agent and Hinman together measured the frontage from the fence eastwardly to the boundary on that side, for the purpose of arriving at its length and the consequent amount of purchase money to be paid. The line so measured was 175 feet in length. "Your petitioner avers that this is the property shown to the said defendant by your petitioner's said agent, and measured off by him for said defendant, and which was paid for by the said defendant. * * * Her said agent, when he pointed out said property to the defendant, and when he and the defendant measured the same, told the defendant that the fence was the beginning point, and that the defendant understood distinctly from your petitioner's said agent at the time that the land he was buying from your petitioner began at the fence and extended eastward on the north side of Currier street, one hundred and seventy-five (175) feet, and the defendant acquiesced in said beginning point as being at the fence, and assisted your petitioner's said agent in measuring the same with the tape line, * * * and that the defendant then and there acquiesced in said line as measured by him and said Graves [the plaintiff's agent] as the front of the property being sold to him by said Graves for your petitioner, and the defendant undertook the preparation of the deed for your petitioner to sign, and that he had said deed artfully prepared, so as to cover twenty-seven (27) feet more ground than he bought, although said line was described as one hundred and seventy-five (175) feet, and your petitioner signed said deed in the form prepared by the defendant under the mistaken belief that it only covered the land between the fence and the eastern terminus, as described in said deed."

The plaintiff was old and in feeble health, and took no part personally in the measurement of the property, and was not present, but relied upon her agent. The defendant knew that the fence was not on the dividing line between the plaintiff's property and the adjoining property, but was 27 feet eastward therefrom, and concealed the fact from the plaintiff and her agent, and suffered and permitted the latter to begin the measurement at the fence; he knowing her condition, and that her agent was laboring under a mistake as to the proper location of the dividing line, and hoping and intending to get the advantage of her in the trade, and get 27 feet more frontage on Currier street than he was paying for. It was charged that the defendant knew, when the plaintiff signed the deed at his request, that it extended 27 feet west from the fence, and included a strip having that frontage on Currier street between the fence and the Hinman line, and that the plaintiff did not know it, and the defendant artfully and fraudulently concealed the facts from her and her agent, and thereby obtained a deed covering the extra 27 feet, for which he did not pay. The deed described the lot conveyed as extending from the Hinman line to the extension of Lowndes street, and fronting on Currier street 175 feet, more or less. The words "more or less" were inserted to cover any slight inaccuracy in the measurement made, because it was made with a cloth tape line, but not with any view of covering an excess of 27 feet.

If these allegations are true, the case falls within the ruling in the decisions above cited. There were expressions in the petition to the effect that the plaintiff and her selling agent thought the fence was on the Hinman line, and indicating an intent to sell her entire lot, but a mistake as to its frontage, taken advantage of by the defendant. If a deed described the land conveyed as bounded on one side by the land of a third person, the true boundary line between the land conveyed and the land of such third person must be taken as the boundary line of the land so conveyed, and not a conventional line agreed upon in parol by the parties at the time the deed was executed, if there be a variance between such two lines. The deed will control, unless it can be reformed. Hall v. Davis, 122 Ga. 252, 50 S. E. 106. On the trial the plaintiff may or may not be able to sustain her allegations above set out, but they must be treated as true on general demurrer.

It does not sufficiently appear on the face of the pleadings that plaintiff was guilty of such laches as to prevent her from obtaining equitable relief. If such be the fact, it can be determined on the trial. Civil Code 1910, §§ 4571, 4581.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent, and HILL, J., not presiding.

GLOVER v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 14, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 365*)—EVIDENCE—RES GESTÆ.

It is permissible to prove as part of the res gestæ that the accused successively fired upon two persons, although he was on trial for the murder of the person whom he wounded when he fired the first time.

2. HOMICIDE (§§ 203, 215, 216*)—EVIDENCE—DYING DECLARATIONS—CONSCIOUSNESS OF DYING CONDITION.

To render a dying declaration admissible in evidence, the circumstances attending the making of the statement must be such as to show that the declarant was in articulo mortis and conscious of his condition. The court did not err in excluding the alleged dying declaration, because the necessary preliminary proof was not made, and the expected answer contained no assertion as to who killed him, but that "he laid the killing on some one else."

3. WITNESSES (§ 388*)—IMPEACHMENT—CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS.

It is not competent to prove a statement by one of the parties who was shot, and who was sworn as a witness for the state, to the effect that he did not wish the defendant hurt for his act. Even if evidence of this character be admissible for the purpose of impeachment, it was not admissible in this case, as the necessary foundation for impeachment by contradictory statements was not laid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1233-1246; Dec. Dig. § 388.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 786*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—EFFECT OF DEFENDANT'S STATEMENT.

The practice of instructing the jury in the language of the Code section as to the effect to be given to the defendant's statement is to be commended.

5. HOMICIDE (§ 308*)—INSTRUCTIONS—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

The charge of the court to the effect that if a person shoots at another with malice, and by accident kills a third person, the crime is murder, was neither confusing nor inapplicable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 308.*]

6. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—NO ERROR.

Other assignments of error are without merit. The evidence supports the verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Crisp County; U. V. Whipple, Judge.

Kid Glover was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

Kid Glover was convicted of the murder of Charlie West and sentenced to be hanged. The killing occurred shortly after midnight at the home of one Willie Royal. The evidence for the state made substantially the following case: There was a "supper" in progress in the home of Willie Royal. The defendant, in company with one Isom Crumley, and armed with a shotgun and a pistol, came to the house about midnight. Crumley had in his pocket several loaded gun shells. Some time thereafter the deceased, Charlie West, began to curse in the house, and Sammy Royal asked him not to curse in the house. Charlie West then went out on the porch and again began to curse. Sammy Royal, Garfield Royal, Charlie West, and others were at that time on the porch and out in the yard at a fire in front of the house. Willie Royal came out of the house and told the deceased not to curse at his house; that he did not want to have any fuss, and would break up the frolic before he would have any fuss. They engaged in heated conversation, and the deceased struck Willie Royal with his pistol. Garfield Royal then grabbed Charlie West, the deceased, and at this time Kid Glover, who was standing about 10 feet from them toward the other end of the porch, shot the deceased. In the scuffle between the deceased and the Royals, the deceased's pistol fired, immediately before the defendant shot. The defendant then turned and shot Garfield Royal, who had jumped off the porch onto the ground. The defendant then got some shells from Isom Crumley, reloaded his gun, and threatened to shoot Willie Royal, declaring that he had come there, not to kill one, but to kill a "whole damn thousand," etc. The deceased was shot in the leg, and Garfield Royal in the arm; both wounds having been inflicted with a shotgun. The defendant contended that he did not shoot the deceased at all, but that he was shot by Garfield Royal; and that the only shot fired by the defendant was when he shot Garfield Royal, after the latter had shot Charlie West and jumped from the porch. The defendant made a motion for a new trial, complaining of the admission of certain evidence and of the court's charge. The motion for new trial was overruled.

J. W. Dennard and Pearson Ellis, for plaintiff in error. W. F. George, Sol. Gen., Crum & Jones, and T. S. Felder, Atty. Gen., for the State.

EVANS, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] 1. Complaint is made that the court should have restricted the evidence to the shooting of the decedent, and should have repelled testimony that immediately after the accused shot the deceased he also shot and wounded another person. The shooting of the deceased and the other person were part of the same transaction, and admissible under the rule of res gestæ. Indeed, the evidence authorized an inference that the accused really intended to shoot Garfield Royal in the first instance when he fatally wounded the decedent, and when Royal jumped from the veranda the accused fired upon him, inflicting a serious wound.

[2] 2. The deceased was shot in the leg with a shotgun. Soon after receiving his wound he was placed in a buggy for the purpose of being carried to a doctor. While en route he said, "I am in bad condition," and shortly thereafter he died from loss of blood before reaching the physician. A witness was asked, "What was the conversation that took place between him and Kid at that time?" referring to a conversation alleged to have taken place while the parties were in the buggy. Upon objection being made that the proper foundation had not been laid for the admissibility of any statement by the decedent as a dying declaration, counsel for the accused stated to the court that, while he could not prove the decedent said he was in a dying condition, he expected to show that the decedent "laid the killing on some one else," and that the jury could infer from that whether or not it was a dying statement. The evidence was excluded. While it is not essential to show that the declarant affirmatively said he was in a dying condition, to render a dying declaration admissible in evidence, yet it must appear from the attendant circumstances that the declarant was in articulo mortis, and conscious of his condition, at the time of making the declaration. Pen. Code 1910, § 1026. We think the testimony falls short of this requirement. The decedent was shot in the leg, and death was caused by loss of blood, and the evidence discloses no utterance or act, by him or the other persons with him, indicating any appreciation of the probable fatality of the wound. There is no fact brought out in the evidence which would serve to show that the decedent believed that death was imminent at the time of making the alleged statement. Besides, the answer which the court was apprised the declarant would make was that he "laid the killing on some one else," and was too indefinite. It was not the statement of a fact as to who killed him.

[3] 3. The court refused to allow testimony that Garfield Royal, who was shot by the accused, and who testified in behalf of the state, said that he did not want the accused hurt. The testimony was not offered for the purpose of impeachment, as no foundation was attempted to be laid. The desire of a witness that the defendant be acquitted is totally irrelevant.

[4-6] 4-6. Other rulings on points made in the record appear in the headnotes. The evidence supports the verdict, which has the approval of the trial judge, none of the assignments of error are meritorious, and the judgment refusing a new trial is affirmed.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except BECK, J., absent, and HILL, J., not presiding.

GLENN v. STATE. (No. 3,753.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. WEAPONS (§ 11*)—RIGHT TO CARRY—MINORS.

The act approved August 12, 1910 (Acts 1910, p. 134), prohibits any applicant under the age of 18 years from obtaining a license to have a pistol or revolver about his person; and, as the terms of the act make it unlawful for any person to have a pistol or revolver about the person, except as stated, it follows by necessary implication that a minor under 18 years of age cannot legally have a pistol or revolver about the person, either with or without license.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Weapons, Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

2. INFANTS (§ 13*)—PROTECTION—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—POLICE POWER.

This state, in the exercise of its police power, has adopted the policy (as indicated by many statutes) of protecting minors from the formation of vicious habits or evil conduct; and this policy is not only within its police power, but is a wise exercise thereof. Minors are the wards of the police power of the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Infants, Cent. Dig. § 14; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

3. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—NO ERROR.

The verdict is supported by evidence, and no error of law appears.

Error from City Court of Jackson; H. M. Fletcher, Judge.

John Glenn was convicted of having about his person a pistol or revolver without having obtained a license, and brings error. Affirmed.

W. E. Watkins, for plaintiff in error. C. L. Redman, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. John Glenn was convicted of a violation of the act approved August 12, 1910 (Acts 1910, p. 134), which prohibits any person from having about his person a pistol or revolver without first having obtained a license from the ordinary of the county of his residence. His motion for a new trial was overruled, and he brings error. [1] He contends that his conviction was illegal for two reasons: First, because he was under the age of 18 years, and the act in question did not apply to minors of such tender years, as by the terms of the act the ordinary was authorized to grant license only to applicants 18 years of age or over, and that, as minors under that age were not allowed to procure a license, it was illogical and unjust to punish them for failing to do something that under the terms of the act they were not allowed to do; and it is insisted, apparently with seriousness, that minors in this state under the age of 18 years are legally allowed to carry pistols or revolvers on their persons without any license, if they do not carry them concealed. We think the conclusion is a non sequitur. Indeed, we frankly confess that it would take an express declaration of the Legislature of the legislative intent, before we would be willing to place the lawmaking body of the state in the attitude of requiring adults to obtain licenses before they could have or carry pistols or revolvers about their persons, and of permitting, in the same statute, minors under the age of 18 to have this right without any restriction. On the contrary, we are convinced that it was the intention of the Legislature that minors under 18 should not have this right at all, either with or without a license.

[2] This purpose is not only manifest, but wise. It is also in harmony with the legislative policy of the state as to rights of minors. The police power of the state makes a special charge of minors. It gathers them under its ample and protective wing "even as a hen gathereth her brood." Minors, as to their property rights, are the wards of chancery. Minors, as to their protection from vicious conduct or habits, are the wards of the police power of the state. The truth of the latter part of this statement is proved by the numerous statutes in the Code restricting the exercise by adults of rights in so far as the exercise of these rights relate to minors. No person controlling a billiard table, pool table, or tenpin alley is allowed to permit a minor to play or roll on the same. Pen. Code 1910, § 406. No person can furnish to a minor spirituous, intoxicating, or malt liquors without first obtaining written authority from parent or guardian. Pen. Code 1910, § 444. No one is allowed, through himself or agent, or in any other way, to furnish a minor with cigarettes, cigarette tobacco, cigarette paper, or any substitute therefor. Pen. Code 1910, § 491.

Illustrating the purpose of the Legislature in the act now under discussion, no person can knowingly sell, or furnish, any minor with "any pistol, dirk, bowie knife, or sword cane, except under circumstances justifying their use in defending life, limb, or property." Is not this section inconsistent with that part of the act of 1910 which permits a license to be granted to a minor, even above the age of 18 years, to carry about his person a pistol or revolver, if he cannot be furnished or sold a pistol by any one? He should not be permitted to have a license to carry that which he can neither legally buy nor receive as a gift. Neither can any one furnish to minors any malt liquors, whether such liquors are intoxicating or not. Stoner v. State, 5 Ga. App. 720, 63 S. E. 602. An adult is not permitted to gamble with a minor at any game played with cards, dice or balls. Of course, adults cannot lawfully gamble with each other; but the penal statute above noted makes it a distinct offense for an adult to gamble with a minor. Pen. Code 1910, § 393. These and other statutes of similar character all prove the truth of the statement that the protection of minors is a favorite exercise by the state of its police power. We conclude, therefore, that the act of 1910 not only prohibits minors under the age of 18 years from obtaining license to have a pistol or revolver on their persons, but that the clear intendment of said act is to prevent minors from having about their persons at all this character of weapons, and this construction is in harmony with the general legislation of the state on the subject of minors.

2. The next ground upon which it is insisted that the conviction in this case was illegal is that, if the act in question is construed to prohibit minors from having about the person a pistol or revolver, this construction would be in violation of article 1, § 1, par. 22, of the Constitution of Georgia. This provision of the Constitution declares that "the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed, but the General Assembly shall have power to prescribe the manner in which arms may be borne." The Supreme Court in the case of Strickland v. State, 137 Ga. 1, 72 S. E. 260, has held that the act is not violative of this provision of the state Constitution. While the exact question made in this record and now under consideration was not directly involved in that case, yet we think it fairly and reasonably deducible, from some of the language which is used by Mr. Justice Lumpkin in the opinion of the majority of the court, that the construction which we place upon the act in reference to minors under the age of 18 years is the view entertained by that court. It is entirely within the province of the Legislature, in the exercise of the police power of the state, to prohibit, on the part of minors, the exercise of any right, constitutional or otherwise, although it might only have the right in the case of adults to regulate and restrict such rights. For there are some rights which may be exercised by adults without harm to the state, but the same rights exercised by minors might injuriously affect in some way the public health, public safety, or public morality. Unquestionably the possession of a pistol or revolver by a minor constitutes a menace to the peace of the public, and to the safety of the individuals constituting the public.

So far as the writer of this opinion is concerned, he is decidedly of the opinion that the possession of a pistol or revolver about the person, either by a minor or an adult, concealed or open, is a menace to individual safety and to law and order, and he concurs strongly in the view of those able jurists who construe the constitutional provision above quoted as not applicable to the modern pistol or revolver. The framers of the federal Constitution and of the state Constitution did not have this weapon in contemplation as one of the constitutional rights of the citizen. This constitutional provision, rationally construed, applies only to such "arms" as could be used by the army or the militia in the preservation of public order. It is incredible that any lawmaking body, cognizant of the evils of having about the person a pistol or revolver, would have intended to preserve such evil by a constitutional provision. The ordinary pistol or revolver, usually carried in the hip pocket, is not a weapon of defense. It is a weapon of offense. The pistol is, in the opinion of the writer, the most offensive weapon ever devised by the ingenuity of man for the destruction of life and the peace of society. The people in their sovereign capacity have the right to prohibit absolutely this evil, and the individual member of society cannot claim it as one of the inalienable constitutional privileges of personal liberty. In a free country, no man has any personal right that is not subservient to the public weal. "Salus populi suprema lex" is a rule of unlimited application, and qualifies every personal right of the citizen.

One of the ablest and wisest judges who ever presided in the Supreme Court of this state, in discussing this provision of the Constitution, in the case of Hill v. State, 53 Ga. 472, uses the following wise and cogent language in alluding to this right claimed to exist under the Constitution: "It is to secure the existence of a well-regulated militia, * * * and I have always been at a loss to follow the line of thought that extends the guaranty to the right to carry pistols, dirks, bowie knives, and those other weapons of like character, which, as all admit, are the greatest nuisances of our day. It is in my judgment a perversion of the meaning of the word 'arms,' as used in the phrase 'the right to keep and bear arms,' to treat it as including weapons of this character. * * * The Constitution is to be construed as a whole. One part of it is not to be understood in such a sense as will militate against another. It is as well the duty of the General Assembly to pass laws for the protection of the person and property of the citizen as it is to abstain from any infringement of the right to bear arms. The preservation of the public peace, and the protection of the people against violence, are constitutional duties of the Legislature, and the guaranty of the right to keep and bear arms is to be understood and construed in connection and in harmony with these constitutional duties."

This construction of the constitutional provision was referred to by Mr. Justice Lumpkin, apparently with approval, in his able and learned opinion in the Strickland Case, supra. But, irrespective of the views entertained by Judge McCay as to the proper construction of this constitutional provision, it must be conceded by every one that, so far as minors are concerned, the Legislature of this state, in the exercise of its police power, has, by the statute in question, absolutely prohibited minors from having about their persons a pistol or revolver. If there was any doubt on this question, or any possibility of a difference as to the constitutionality of that portion of the act of 1910 restricting the right of a minor under 18 years of age to have about his person a pistol or revolver, we would certify this question to the Supreme Court for instruction. But we think the construction which we have given it is so clearly covered by the decision recently made in the Strickland Case, supra, that it would be wholly superfluous to do so.

We are asked by counsel for the plaintiff in error to certify to the Supreme Court the decision in the Strickland Case for review, in order that the same may be overruled. We decline to do so. The Strickland Case is too recent, and so fully meets our own views as to the proper construction of the statute that we do not feel warranted in complying with the request.

Judgment affirmed.

The accusation charged Lewis Herndon with selling alcoholic, spirituous, malt, and intoxicating liquors, and with keeping such liquors on hand at his place of business. There was a general verdict of guilty. His motion for a new trial contains, besides the general grounds, the following assignments of error: (1) The verdict is contrary to law and the evidence, in that the uncontradicted testimony of an unimpeached witness, to wit, W. P. Dumas, affirmatively showed that the alleged liquor which formed the basis for the prosecution was not found at the defendant's place of business; that the place where it was found was not a part of the defendant's place of business; that the defendant had no control over the said place; that the room or passage where the whisky was discovered was in a portion of the building rented to and in the control of third parties, not connected in any way with defendant or his business. (2) Because the officer who made the arrest was allowed to testify as follows: "After I had placed the defendant under arrest, and had reached the door leading into the room where I found the whisky, I told the defendant to get the key to this door, and had him unlock and open the door of the room. When he opened the door, I saw the whisky at the foot of the staircase. It was at my direction that defendant got the key, and at my direction that he unlocked and opened the door to the apartment where I found the whisky." The introduction of this testimony was objected to, because the officer compelled the accused to furnish the incriminating evidence against himself, in violation of the Constitution and laws of this state, which provide that no person shall be compelled to give testimony tending in any manner to incriminate himself, and that it was acquired while defendant was under arrest, and without his consent, and against his will. The court overruled the motion for a new trial, and this judgment constitutes the assignment of error.

The evidence, substantially stated, is as follows: The deputy sheriff of Bibb county testified, that the accused ran a "soft drink" place and pool room on Cotton avenue, near New street, in the city of Macon, Bibb county; that in company with another officer he went to this place on the 26th day of March, 1911, where he arrested the defendant. The front door of the "soft drink" establishment and pool room opened on Cotton avenue. The front room was used by the defendant as his "soft drink" place, where he kept soda water, cigars, etc. Just behind this room was the defendant's pool room, separated by a wall, with a door between. In the rear of the pool room, at the left-hand corner, "is a little room or passage, cut off by a wall running from ceiling to floor. It is very small, and there is a door leading into it from the pool room. This door was open on the night of the arrest. Passing into this door, and going directly forward about three or four feet across this little room or passage, you come to another wall leading from ceiling to floor, which has a door, and this door opens from the little room just mentioned into a room or passage from which a stairway leads to the second story of the building. This door was locked, and the defendant, at my instance, got the key and unlocked it. The door which I found open leading out of the pool room was only three or four feet from the door of the room or passage in which the whisky was found, and which was locked, and to which defendant furnished the key, and all was under one and the same roof with the 'soft drink' place of the defendant and his pool room. In this last-named room or passage, just at the foot of the stairway, I found an ordinary five-cent basket containing several flasks of whisky. There were six half pints of rye and one half pint of corn whisky in the basket. I asked the defendant for the key to the door at the top of the staircase, which was also locked, and he said that he did not have it; that some member of the bricklayers' union had it. When I found the whisky, I said to the defendant, 'I have found your liquor.'

and he said, 'Yes, sir; you've got me.' That is all I remember that was said. The stairway which leads to the upstairs of this building had the appearance of not being in use, as there was considerable trash on it, and the door opening on the rear porch and in front of the stairway just mentioned was closed at the time the whisky was found. There is another stairway which leads to the upstairs of this building from the front and on the outside of this building. I went to the defendant's place of business with a warrant for him and for the purpose of searching for whisky. This was the only whisky or intoxicants found on this occasion on the place. We made a thorough search of defendant's entire place. The building occupied by him is a two-story brick building, and his place of business is in the lower story. After passing from the pool room, I had to go through two doors before I reached the room containing the basket with the whisky in it." The state also introduced in evidence a diagram of the part of the building occupied by the defendant, showing the exact location of the room and place in which the whisky was found, and also introduced a five-cent basket containing six half pints of rye whisky, most of which was dreggy, and a half pint of corn whisky, which had been opened and had in it an ordinary house fly.

The following evidence was introduced in behalf of the defendant: W. B. Dumas testified that he was the owner of the building in which the defendant's place of business was located, and had rented the lower floor to him, and that the defendant ran a "soft drink" place in front and a pool room in the rear; that he rented the upstairs of the building to a colored bricklayers' union; that there were two stairways leading to the quarters above, the front stairway being on the outside of the building, and the rear stairway on the inside, and the bricklayers' union rented and controlled both stairways, as well as the passage down into which the stairway lands, and that this passage was not a part of the building which was rented to the defendant, and that he had no control over it and no right to use it; that the place where the whisky in question was found was not in any room, but in the little passageway or hall leading to the staircase in the rear of the building, and was separated from that part rented to the defendant by a wall reaching from the ceiling to the floor; that the members of the bricklayers' union often left the key to their quarters in the store of the defendant for their own convenience, and they often left it in the store of the witness, just a few doors below.

The defendant, in his statement to the jury, said that he ran this "soft drink" place and pool room on Cotton avenue; that he had never sold any whisky, beer, or intoxicants of any kind at this place of business, and had never kept any on hand; that on the night of his arrest the officers came into his place of business and told him that they wanted to search the place, and proceeded to do so; that they exhibited no warrant of any kind, and did not tell him that they had one; that they searched his "soft drink" place, in the front room, but found no whisky; that they went through the door leading back into the pool room, searched it, and found none. They then came to the door in the wall which runs from the ceiling to the floor and separates his place of business from that part of the building rented to the colored bricklayers' union. This door was locked, and, at the command of the officer, he went and got the key and opened the door. The union rented the entire upstairs of the building, including this stairway in the rear, and the little passage or apartment where the stairway lands, the place where the officer found the whisky. He stated that he had no control over the upstairs of the building, the stairway leading thereto, or the little passageway or apartment at the foot of the staircase where the whisky was found; that these places had no connection with his place of business, which was separated from them by a wall reaching from the ceiling to the floor; that, his store being just under the union men's quarters, the key to the door leading upstairs was often left in his store for the convenience of the men of the union, who were frequently going to their quarters. He further stated that on the night of the arrest he had gotten the whisky for his own use and was going to carry it home and strain it, as it was full of trash and dregs, and one bottle had a fly in it; that in the condition in which it was found it was not fit for use; that, knowing that it was a violation of law to keep or put whisky in one's place of business, he got the key, unlocked the door leading into this passage where the stairway comes down, placed the basket with the whisky in it there, and relocked the door, intending, when he started home later, to unlock the stairs, get the basket, and carry it home with him; that it had been setting there only a short time before the officers came in, it being only a few minutes before closing time; that he set the basket in the passageway because it had no connection with his place of business, as he knew that by setting it there he would not violate the law; that it was not his custom to use this passage or stairway for any purpose; and that he only set the basket there on the night of his arrest to avoid putting it in his store.

1. FINES (§ 13*)—IMPRISONMENT—RIGHT TO DISCHARGE.

Where the court sentences a misdemeanor convict in the alternative, directing that he labor upon the public works as the proper authorities of the county may direct, for the space of 12 months, with the privilege of paying a designated fine and costs at any time after entering upon said public works, and thereupon be discharged from custody, and it appears that shortly after the imposition of the sentence, and while the defendant was in the custody of the public authorities of the county, he made a tender of the fine and costs to the sheriff of the county, it was the duty of the sheriff to accept the fine and costs as thus tendered, and to notify the proper authorities, who held the custody of the defendant under said sentence, that the sentence had been fully complied with in the payment of the fine and costs to him; and, upon receiving this notice from the sheriff, it was the duty of the officer holding the custody of the defendant under this sentence to discharge him from further custody.

2. FINES (§ 13*)—IMPRISONMENT—RIGHT TO DISCHARGE.

Where a sentence has been imposed in a misdemeanor case in the alternative, the misdemeanor convict has the right, as a matter of law, to pay, within a reasonable time, that part of the money sentence imposed upon him by the court; and, upon payment or tender thereof to the sheriff of the county within a reasonable time, he is entitled to be discharged from any further custody under the sentence.

Error from City Court of Camilla; H. C. Dasher, Jr., Judge.

Application by Janie Abram for writ of habeas corpus to A. A. Maples, Warden of Convicts for the County of Mitchell. From a judgment refusing the writ, the petitioner brings error. Reversed, with directions.

This is a writ of habeas corpus against the warden of convicts for the county of Mitchell for the purpose of testing the legality of the warden's custody of Charlie Abram, the husband of the petitioner. The facts are as follows: Charlie Abram entered a plea of guilty to the offense of gaming, in the city court of Camilla, on the 18th day of July, 1911, and thereupon the judge of the court imposed upon him the following sentence: "Whereupon it is considered by the court that the defendant, Charlie Abram, be put to work and labor on the public roads, or such other public works as the proper authorities of said county may direct, for the space of 12 months, with the privilege to pay a fine of $60, including all costs of this prosecution, and be discharged at any time after entering upon such public work." The day after this sentence was imposed Charlie Abram was delivered by the sheriff of the county into the custody of the respondent as warden of convicts for Mitchell county, and he was put to work upon the public roads of the county. Seven days after the imposition of the sentence B. H. Jones, a citizen of said county, representing the petitioner and Charlie Abram, went to C. D. Crowe, the sheriff of Mitchell county, and made a tender to him of the full amount of the fine imposed, and requested the sheriff to accept it, and demanded the discharge of Charlie Abram from custody. The sheriff refused to accept the money, assigning as a reason for the refusal that the authorities of the county would not discharge him from custody. On August 19th thereafter Jones made a like tender of the fine to the sheriff, which was again refused by him, and for the same reason, and on the following day Jones again made a tender to the sheriff of the fine imposed upon Charlie Abram, and requested him to accept the money, "and have the said Charlie Abram discharged, which said tender the said sheriff refused to accept, and refused to order the said Charlie Abram discharged."

The respondent admitted the allegations of the petition for the writ, in so far as the custody of Charlie Abram was concerned and his official position as therein stated. He sets up the following reasons why Charlie Abram should not be discharged from his custody: (1) That he holds custody of Charlie Abram as the warden of convicts of Mitchell county, under regular appointment of the prison commission of Georgia, under the sentence imposed by the court, and that the said Abram is under the absolute and exclusive control of the prison commission of Georgia; that the term of his sentence has not expired, and that as warden he has no authority to release the convict, unless authorized to do so by the prison commission of the state of Georgia. (2) That that part of the sentence which reads, "and be discharged at any time after entering upon such public work" is an old printed form and is mere surplusage; that it was not the intention of the judge, in imposing the fine and sentence, to incorporate in his sentence the language quoted, but that it was only his intention to give Charlie Abram, the defendant, a reasonable time in which to pay the fine after the imposition of the sentence, and that more than a reasonable time had elapsed for this purpose before the fine was tendered to the sheriff. (3) That the sheriff was not the proper officer to whom to make the tender of the payment of the fine, or to receive the fine. (4) That no notice or demand of any kind was ever served upon the respondent warden for the release of Charlie Abram; his first notice thereof being the application for his discharge under habeas corpus. (5) That no application was made to the prison commission for the release of Charlie Abram, and no notice was ever served on that body or tender made to it, and said commission had the exclusive control of the convicts.

The judge who imposed the sentence testified that after the imposition of the sentence he had some conversation with the defendant as to the time that would be allowed in which to pay the fine, and that he stated to the defendant that he would have until Mr. Maples, the warden, came after him, which would probably be the next day, and that it was his intention to give the defendant until the next day, or until Mr. Maples came after him, to pay the fine; that the form of the sentence which he used was the general form that had been in use for a number of years, and that he did not consider the language thereof in making out the sentence, simply signing the printed form. This testimony was objected to by the attorney for the petitioner, on the ground that it was irrelevant and immaterial, and was an effort on the part of the judge to change, modify, amend, revoke, and nullify a written sentence and judgment, after the term of the court at which it had been rendered. The admission of this testimony is assigned as error. The sheriff in his testimony admitted that the tender of the fine had been made to him, and that he refused it, and that, while he did not know whether he was the proper officer to receive fines imposed on prisoners in the city court of Camilla, he did collect most of them.

After hearing the evidence, the court refused to discharge Charlie Abram from custody, and this refusal is assigned as error.

E. E. Cox, for plaintiff in error. E. M. Davis, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] We think the court erred in not discharging the convict. We are not disposed to be severely technical, or to require strict compliance with mere formal procedure, when the personal liberty of a citizen is concerned. The question, and the only one, to be determined, is: Is the custody of Charlie Abram, under the admitted facts of this case, legal? It is immaterial that the warden held his position under the prison commission of Georgia, and that neither he nor the prison commission had been given any notice that the fine imposed by the judge had been tendered to the sheriff. The validity of this custody is to be tested by the terms of the sentence imposed upon Charlie Abram, and whether he had complied with its terms, and to test this question it was not necessary for the prison commission or the warden to receive any notice of an effort made by the convict to comply with the terms of the sentence; nor does it matter whether or not the sheriff was, strictly speaking, the officer to whom the tender should have been made and who should have received the fine. We think, however, he was such officer. It is a general practice of sheriffs of this state to collect fines imposed in criminal cases. They are bonded officers of the state, and while it may not be expressly within their duties, in practice it is generally performed by them, and in this case the sheriff states that he had collected the fines imposed in the city court.

[2] It is admitted that the tender of this fine was made by the agent of the petitioner and Charlie Abram, the convict, seven days after the fine had been imposed, and this tender was twice repeated a few days thereafter, and the fine was every time refused by the sheriff. Penal Code 1910, § 1111, provides that "every fine imposed by the court under the authority of the Code shall be paid immediately, or within such reasonable time as the court may grant." In the present case the court imposed a fine in the alternative, and gave to the defendant the privilege of paying this fine, including all costs, at any time after entering upon his labor on the public works of the county. Where the courts have a right to impose a fine as a part of a sentence, we think they also have a right to grant to the defendant the privilege of paying it at any time during his period of confinement under the sentence, and the payment thereof should operate as a discharge from further custody. This is a privilege in favor of liberty, and should be left to the discretion of the trial court. Now, in this case the judge who imposed the sentence testified to the effect that it was not his intention to give such an extended privilege to the defendant in reference to the payment of the fine, but meant to give him only a reasonable time in which to pay it.

We do not think that the testimony of the judge on this point was relevant or material. It certainly could not operate to change the sentence, which was unambiguous. It was the duty of the court, in the exercise of his discretion, to prescribe at least a reasonable time within which to pay the fine; and even if we disregard the time which the judge did actually prescribe for that purpose, the law itself would give to the defendant a reasonable time in which to pay the fine, and would declare what would be a reasonable time in each particular case, under the evidence. Dunaway v. Hodge, 127 Ga. 690, 55 S. E. 483. In that case the Supreme Court held that 15 days after a fine had been imposed was a reasonable time in which to make a legal tender in payment of the fine and costs, and that it should have been accepted and the prisoner discharged. In the case of Broomhead v. Chisolm, 47 Ga. 393, the court decided that the better practice, in imposing a sentence with the alternative of a fine, would be for the judge to fix some reasonable time in which the prisoner might pay the fine, and that, if this was not done, the prisoner would nevertheless be entitled, under the law, to a reasonable time in which to pay it. In the case above mentioned the sentence was imposed on March 12th, and on April 2d thereafter the tender of payment of the fine was made, and the court held that that was a reasonable time. Here the undisputed evidence is that the tender of the fine was made to the sheriff the first time within seven days after the imposition of the sentence. Certainly this was a reasonable time.

The material facts in this case, in our opinion, are fully controlled by the decisions of the Supreme Court in the cases of Dunaway v. Hodge and Broomhead v. Chisolm, supra; and, under the law as there decided, this court reverses the judgment of the lower court, with direction that Charlie Abram be permitted, by himself or any one acting for him, to pay the fine to the sheriff of the county of Mitchell, or other officer authorized to receive it, and that upon such payment, and notice thereof given to respondent, the warden who has him in custody shall discharge him from custody; otherwise, that he continue to hold in his custody the said Abram.

Judgment reversed, with direction.

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1064*)—APPEAL—REVIEW—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

This case arose after the passage of the act approved August 21, 1911 (Acts 1911, p. 149), under which no judgment of a trial court in a criminal case is to be reversed "for lack of proof of venue or of the time of the commission of the offense, save where the particular point has been specifically raised by a ground of the original or amended motion for a new trial." The only point insisted on in this court is that the state did not sufficiently show the time when the offense was committed, so as to affirmatively prove that it was within the statute of limitations; but the motion for a new trial contains no such specific ground. Hence the act cited applies, and the judgment is affirmed.

Action by W. J. D. Taylor against Pete Keen. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

E. H. Williams, for plaintiff in error. Haygood & Cutts, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. [1] Taylor brought trover against Keen for the recovery of 63 sticks of round timber, alleged to have been grown on lot of land 853 in the Fourteenth district of Dodge county, and to have been cut therefrom unlawfully. The plaintiff attempted to show ownership of the timber, by showing title to the land or possession thereof. There was testimony that in the year 1902 or 1903 the plaintiff bought the lot of land in question from one Thomas Walker, who executed to him a deed, which had never been recorded, and which had been lost. It may be said, however, that proper secondary proof of this deed was duly made. It was a quitclaim deed, but was adequate as color of title. No title was shown in Walker; hence it possessed no greater validity than color of title. During the next year after he got this deed, the plaintiff went into possession of the land by erecting thereon a small house, which was occupied by certain employés of his, who cut timber from the lot and made staves therefrom. They remained in the house during that year from February until November. During the next year no one resided in the house and no timber was cut from the land. In the third year thereafter the laborers and stove makers again occupied the house for a period of four months. Again in the year 1907 timber was cut from the land for the purpose of making staves, and the plaintiff's laborers occupied the house for a period of about three months. During the year 1908 the house was washed away in a freshet. The land is wild land, and is subject to overflow from the river, and none of it can be cultivated, by reason of the fact that it is subject to overflow. Other than above indicated, there was no house, fence, inclosure, or cultivation of any kind upon the land. The suit was brought in the year 1910, and, while the record does not definitely disclose the exact date on which the defendant cut the timber from the land, it is reasonably inferable from the pleadings that it was cut during the year 1910. It is plain that if the plaintiff's possession from the year 1902 to the year 1908, when his last vestige of possession was destroyed by the freshet, could be considered as that open, notorious, continuous occupancy which is essential to the ripening of acquisitive prescription, no title by prescription was in fact acquired thereby, for it lasted for less than the statutory period of seven years. The plaintiff had no title by prescription. His only reliance therefore was upon prior possession.

[2] Whether we take the view that the right of a plaintiff to recover in ejectment, and in similar actions, on prior possession, rests on a presumption of title, or take what is, perhaps, the correct view, that the possession itself is property, which the law will protect, is of no consequence here. The possessor, who shows no higher right than his mere possession, loses that right whenever his possession ends, except in those cases where it constructively continues on by reason of an animus revertendi. Knight v. Isom, 113 Ga. 618, 39 S. E. 103; Delay v. Felton, 123 Ga. 15, 65 S. E. 122(3); Watkins v. Nugen, 118 Ga. 375 (1), 377, 45 S. E. 260; King v. Sears, 91 Ga. 577 (7), 589, 18 S. E. 830; Jones v. Nunn, 12 Ga. 469, 474. However, no animus revertendi can save the plaintiff's rights, where the physical evidences of the possession, such as houses, fences, etc., are totally destroyed, and no other control over the property is shown. The writer of this opinion has so lengthily discussed these questions in the twelfth chapter of his text-book on "Actions for Land" (see, especially, §§ 300, 312, where the Georgia cases are collected and cited) that he takes the liberty of making reference to it, instead of further extending the discussion of the question here. The plaintiff, having shown no title to or possession of the land at the time the alleged cause of action arose, could not maintain trover for the timber cut therefrom, since he has not otherwise shown possession of or title to the timber itself.

Judgment affirmed.

Jeff Harwell was convicted of disturbing a public assemblage in schoolhouse, and brings error. Reversed.

J. O. Newell, for plaintiff in error. C. E. Roop, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The language of the statute is: "Any person who shall willfully interrupt or disturb any public school, private school, or Sunday school, or any assemblage or meeting of any such school, lawfully and peacefully held for the purpose of scientific, literary, social, or religious improvement, either within or without the place where such school is usually held, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." The proof is that a sleight of hand performer, desiring to give a show in a community, obtained the use of the schoolhouse by agreeing to give the trustees 10 per cent. of the door receipts for the use of the room, and that, while he was giving his performance, the accused disturbed it. The statute is directed against the disturbance of schools and assemblages of persons at schoolhouses for some purpose connected with exercises pertaining to a school, and has no reference to meetings of any other nature, though held in the house where school is commonly conducted. The language of the statute is not very clear in all of its terms, but by no fair construction can it be made to include a case like this.

In an action for the killing of a mule on a railroad track, where the testimony of the engineer was contradicted in various particulars, so that the jury might believe that his statements as to those particulars were not true, they could have considered him as impeached, and disregarded his uncontradicted statement that he was so close upon the mule before he discovered it that he could not have stopped his train in time to prevent striking it.

Error from City Court of Dublin; K. J. Hawkins, Judge.

Action by J. J. Barfield against the Macon, Dublin & Savannah Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Minter Wimberly, Adams & Flynt and Akerman & Akerman, for plaintiff in error. W. O. Davis, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. The railroad company killed the plaintiff's mule. The jury found for the plaintiff. Defendant's motion for a new trial was overruled, and it excepts.

[2] If the engineer's testimony is to be taken as the truth of the transaction, the company was not liable. It is argued that the jury had no right to disregard this testimony. It is conceded that other witnesses disputed his testimony as to whether he slackened his speed at the time he said he slackened it, and as to whether he sounded the cattle alarm as he said he sounded it. It is said that there is no conflict in his testimony, so far as it states that he was so close upon the mule before he discovered it that he could not have stopped his train in time to prevent striking it, and that, in spite of the conflict as to other matters, his testimony must be believed as to this, where-in he is not contradicted, and that this alone is sufficient to rebut the presumption of negligence. One of the ways to impeach a witness is to disprove material facts testified to by him, relating to the transaction in question. The testimony of the engineer that he threw on the brakes and brought about a slackening of the speed of the train, and that he sounded the cattle alarm, were a part of the res gestæ of the transaction, and if the jury believed, as they could have believed, any of the testimony of the other witnesses, that his statements as to these things were not true, they could have considered the engineer as impeached, and disregarded his testimony.

[3] It is said, however, that the verdict was without evidence to support it, because it is not shown that the injury complained of occurred in Laurens county. The testimony of at least one of the witnesses locates the scene of the killing of the mule at a point less than a quarter of a mile from the defendant company's station at Rockledge, as he himself, according to his testimony, was about a quarter of a mile from the station, and the place where the mule was killed was between him and the station. By the act of August 17, 1908 (Acts 1908, p. 900), we are informed that the town of Rockledge is in the county of Laurens, and that its incorporated limits extend "eight hundred yards in all directions from the depot of the Macon, Dublin & Savannah Railroad Company at Rockledge." Hence every point on the company's track within a quarter of a mile of the station at Rockledge is in Laurens county. Therefore, even if the point as to the jurisdiction of the court must be made under the general grounds of the motion for a new trial, it is not well taken.

Judgment affirmed.

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1911.)

1. STATUTES (§ 162*)—IMPLIED REPEAL—GENERAL AND SPECIAL LAWS.

In the construction of general and special acts, the maxim "generalia specialibus non derogant" applies, and a general act will be held to repeal or modify a special act embraced within the terms of the general act only when the provisions of the two acts are clearly repugnant and irreconcilable, or where the provisions of the general act manifest that it was the intention of the Legislature to enact a general law on the subject-matter which should be exhaustive and a substitute for every prior general, local and special law relating to the subject-matter covered by the general act.

2. GAME (§ 4*)—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—REPEAL OF SPECIAL ACT.

The general law on the subject of the protection of game in this state, approved August 21, 1911 (Acts 1911, p. 137), was intended by the Legislature to be exhaustive of the subject, and was intended to repeal all existing general, special, or local laws on the same subject-matter.

Error from City Court of Blakely; L. M. Rambo, Judge.

Ernest Hammond was convicted of unlawful shooting of game, and brings error. Reversed.

Hawes, Pottle & Wright, for plaintiff in error. Walter Park, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. An accusation in the city court of Blakely charged Ernest Hammond with a violation of the act approved August 17, 1911 (Acts 1911, p. 417). On arraignment the accused made a written motion to quash the accusation, on the ground that it charged no offense against the laws of this state: (1) Because the local law prohibiting the shooting of game in Early county, approved August 17, 1911, was in conflict with article 1, § 4, par. 1, of the Constitution of Georgia (Code of 1910, § 6391), which prohibits the enactment of a local or special law in any case for which provision has been made by an existing general law, and that the local game law for Early county, under which the accusation was framed was in violation of section 586 of the Penal Code of 1910; and (2) because the local law in question is invalid for the reason that it has been repealed by the general game law of the state, approved on August 21, 1911 (Acts 1911, p. 137). The court overruled the motion to quash the accusation, and this judgment is assigned as error.

The local law under which the accusation is framed is entitled "An act to prohibit the killing of doves, partridges, and quail in the county of Early for a period of five years, and for other purposes, and to provide a penalty for its violation." Section 1 provides that from and after the passage of the act it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to shoot, kill, trap, or ensnare, or destroy in any way, any dove, partridge, or quail, for a period of five years from the passage of this act. Section 2 makes a violation of this act a misdemeanor, and prescribes the punishment provided for in section 1089, Penal Code of 1895. Section 3 repeals conflicting laws. When this local law was passed, the general law on the subject, as contained in section 586 of the Penal Code of 1910, made it a misdemeanor for a person "to shoot, trap, kill, ensnare, net, or destroy, in any manner, any wild turkey, pheasant, partridge or quail, between the fifteenth day of March and the first day of November in each year, or to kill, shoot, trap, ensnare, net, or in any manner destroy any dove, marsh hen, or snipe, between the fifteenth day of March and the fifteenth day of July in each year." The accusation in the present case charged that the accused, on the 27th day of October, 1911, in Early county, did unlawfully shoot and kill one dove, in violation of the act of the Legislature approved August 17, 1911, prohibiting the shooting of doves and other game birds in Early county from the date of the passage of said act. The general act of the General Assembly, approved August 21, 1911 (Acts 1911, p. 137), need not be set out in full.

It is manifest from the act, considered as a whole, that it was intended to embrace all the law on the subject of the protection of game in this state. The act establishes a department of game and fish for the state, provides a state game and fish commissioner, game wardens, and deputy game wardens, and was clearly intended to cover the whole subject of protection of game in this state, and to fix and prescribe the only rules in respect thereto, and it was also intended by the Legislature that it should act as a repeal of all former statutes, either general or local, relating to the same subject-matter, whether they were, in direct words, repugnant to this act or not; and we are clearly of the opinion that this general act, by terms, expressly covers the whole subject-matter of the protection of game in this state. If the first point made by the demurrer to the accusation is well taken, to wit, that this local act of Early county was in conflict with that provision of the statute which prohibits the enactment of a local law where the same subject-matter was covered by a general law, in our opinion the local law would be inoperative, null, and void, as being in conflict with this provision of the Constitution under the repeated rulings of the Supreme Court, beginning with the decision in the case of Papworth v. State, 103 Ga. 36, 31 S. E. 402, which has been followed in numerous decisions.

[1] Unquestionably the general act, as contained in section 586 of the Penal Code of 1910, applied to the shooting of the game specified in the special or local act for Early county. But inasmuch as this law, in our opinion, was itself repealed by the general law on the subject, approved August 21, 1911 (Acts 1911, p. 137), the only material question for this court to decide is whether or not the local special law for Early county has been repealed by the general law subsequently approved. It is the established rule of construction that the law does not favor a repeal by implication, and that, where there are two or more provisions relating to the same subject-matter, they must, if possible, be construed so as to maintain the integrity of both. 1 Lewis' Sutherland on Statutory Construction (2d Ed.) § 27. And it follows that, as a rule, general laws will not impliedly repeal those which are special or local; in other words, that a general statute, without express repealing words, will not repeal by implication the provisions of a former special, local, or particular law which is limited in its application unless there is something in the general law upon the subject-matter that makes it manifest that the Legislature contemplated and intended a repeal, or, to express it otherwise, in the construction of general and special acts, the maxim "generalia specialibus non derogant" applies, and a general act will not be held to repeal or modify a special one embraced within the general terms of the general act, unless the two acts are so repugnant or irreconcilable as to indicate a legislative intent to modify or repeal the other.

[2] But it is manifest that the general act in this instance is a general revision of the whole subject-matter, and was intended by the Legislature to be exhaustive as to that subject-matter. Florida v. Southern Land & Timber Co., 45 Fla. 374, 33 South. 999; Village of Ridgway v. County of Gallatin, 181 Ill. 521, 55 N. E. 146; State v. Archibald, 43 Minn. 328, 45 N. W. 606, and many cases there cited. This whole question of construction is summed up in a headnote in the case of Davis v. Dougherty County, 116 Ga. 491, 42 S. E. 764, in the following language: "A general law will not be so construed as to repeal an existing particular or special law, unless it is plainly manifest, from the terms of the general law, that such was the intention of the lawmaking body." These rules of construction apply both to the subject of the repeal of a general law by a subsequent general law and the repeal of a special or local law by a general law. They are axiomatic, and need no further discussion. It remains only to make an application of these rules to the particular statutes now under consideration.

The local act for Early county prohibits the killing of game birds, therein described, for a period of five years. The general act on the same subject (Acts 1911, p. 140, § 6) fixes the hunting season, and, among other things, provides that any resident of the state may procure a license to hunt in his residence county upon the payment of one dollar. "License to such resident shall be issued authorizing him to hunt throughout the state upon the payment of three dollars." And it further provides that "licenses shall be issued to nonresidents upon the payment of the sum of fifteen dollars, which shall authorize them to hunt throughout the state." The act creates a game warden and deputy game wardens, and prescribes their terms of office and their duties, among which is to grant the licenses provided for by the act. Clearly these provisions of the general act are in irreconcilable conflict with that provision of the local act which prohibits any person, whether with or without license, from killing in Early county in five years, any of the game birds mentioned in both of the acts. As to this provision the two acts cannot stand together, and therefore the general act is paramount and necessarily repeals that provision of the local act. Further, the penalty presented by the acts is different. But, as before suggested, this general act, establishing the department of game and fish for the state of Georgia, was intended to be exhaustive of the subject-matter, and was manifestly intended by the Legislature to repeal all general or special or local laws on the same subject-matter, and, for this additional reason, even if the provisions of the two statutes were not directly repugnant, the local law of Early county was repealed by the general act subsequently passed. The accusation should therefore have been quashed.

Judgment reversed.

The evidence authorizes the conviction.

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 140*)—OFFENSES—KEEPING LIQUORS ON HAND.

It is a violation of the statute of this state for a person to keep intoxicating liquors on hand at his place of business, "whether the package, bottle, or barrel is open or unopen."

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 140.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 814*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

The written request to charge on the subject of mere transient possession of liquors at one's place of business was properly refused, because there was no evidence on which to base it.

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 233*)—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—PAYMENT OF GOVERNMENT TAX.

In a prosecution for keeping intoxicating liquor on hand at one's place of business, the state may show, and the jury may consider, the fact that the accused has registered as a retail liquor dealer and paid the United States government tax therefor, even though the act approved August 21, 1911 (Acts 1911, p. 180), is not applicable, and though a prima facie case of guilt is not made out by the introduction of this evidence.

5. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 101*)—OFFENSES—EFFECT OF "NEAR BEER" LICENSE.

One who has paid the tax and obtained a license under what is known as the "near beer act" (Acts 1908, p. 1112) is not entitled thereby to keep on hand at his place of business any alcoholic, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquors. The only liquors he is authorized to keep on hand are such as, if drunk to excess, will not produce intoxication.

Error from City Court of Macon; Robt. Hodges, Judge.

S. D. Cassidy was convicted of the sale of intoxicating liquor, and of keeping on hand intoxicating liquor at his place of business, and brings error. Affirmed.

John P. Ross, for plaintiff in error. Walter J. Grace, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. The defendant was indicted on two counts. The first charged the sale of intoxicating liquor, and the second the keeping on hand of intoxicating liquor at his place of business. He was found guilty upon the second count only.

[1] The state showed that there had come by railway, addressed to the accused, a number of shipments marked "whisky," and so designated on the bills of lading; that these articles thus marked and consigned had been delivered to draymen, under written orders of the accused; and that the draymen had taken these packages and had delivered them within the place of business of the accused. The accused's place of business was raided some time later, but no liquor was found therein. It was shown by a certified copy from the records of the office of the collector of internal revenue for the district of Georgia that the accused had registered and paid the federal tax as a retail liquor dealer for the first half of the year 1911; the place where the business was being carried on being designated as 601 Fourth street, Macon, Ga. This was the address to which the liquor mentioned in the bills of lading was consigned. Apart from these writings, it does not affirmatively appear that the defendant's place of business was at 601 Fourth street, in Macon. The oral evidence speaks of his place of business as being located at the corner of Fourth and Plum streets, in Macon, and this latter address is given as the address at which the draymen delivered the barrels and packages said to contain liquor. The accused made no statement and introduced no evidence.

We think that the evidence is amply sufficient to support the conviction. It is said that it has not been proved that the packages which were delivered to the place of business of the accused from the railway station were in fact intoxicating liquors. This is sufficiently proved by the fact that these packages were marked "whisky," that they were entered upon the freight bills, bills of lading, and receipts to the railway company as whisky, and that the accused himself recognized the contents of the packages as such, by making memoranda upon the freight bills thus describing them, requesting the freight agent to deliver them to the draymen for him. To state it more plainly, the state introduced in evidence freight bills which on their faces purported to be for shipments of whisky, together with the defendant's written order thereon to the agent asking him to deliver the above to a named drayman, to whom the packages were in fact delivered, and by whom they were carried to the defendant's place of business. We are under the impression that there is an interstate commerce regulation (and these were interstate shipments) requiring the contents of packages containing alcoholic liquors to be truly marked. If so, the very fact that the packages were marked as containing whisky has even higher value as circumstantial evidence than it otherwise would have. This court has, however, fully recognized the principle that it is at least prima facie sufficient to prove that an article is whisky to show that it was treated by the accused himself as whisky, as where a purchaser calls for whisky and the accused as seller delivers it.

We shall presently discuss the evidentiary value of the fact that the accused had registered with the internal revenue collector of the United States government as a retail liquor dealer. We need not enter upon that now. As it was proved that these packages, thus presumptively containing intoxicating liquors, were delivered with the defendant's consent into his place of business, it was sufficiently shown that he kept them on hand at his place of business, in the absence of any proof to the effect that they were merely deposited there for the moment and immediately removed elsewhere. It may be that there is some difference between the meaning of the words "keep on hand," as used in this statute, and such an expression as "have in one's possession" (see dissenting opinion of Russell, J., in Cohen v. State, 7 Ga. App. 5, 65 S. E. 1096); but the majority of this court does not think that the keeping on hand must be continuous, in order to make it violative of the statute. Merely to allow liquors to be deposited in one's place of business, under peculiar circumstances, followed by an immediate removal of them, might not constitute a violation of the statute; but where it is shown that the liquors were delivered into the place of business with the proprietor's consent, and nothing further is shown as to the disposition of them, it is to be presumed, until the contrary appears, that he is keeping them on hand, contrary to the statute.

[2] 2. By exception to the refusal of a written request to charge, the plaintiff in error makes the point that to keep unopened packages of liquor at one's place of business is not a violation of the law. The statute makes no exception of this kind, and we know of no good reason for making any such judicial exception. Indeed, deference to the spirit of the act would prevent the making of any such exception by construction or interpretation.

[3] 3. The plaintiff in error also has excepted to the failure of the court to give in charge a number of requests to the effect that, if the jury should find that there was a mere temporary deposit of intoxicating liquors at the defendant's place of business, the law would not be violated. These requests were properly refused for lack of evidence to support them. As we have already said above, the state, by showing delivery of the liquor into the accused's place of business, with his consent, made out the case against him; and he in no wise attempted to avoid the effect of the state's evidence by any refutation or explanation or by any attempt to show that his custody of the liquor at his place of business was merely transient.

[4] 4. The state introduced in evidence a certified abstract from the records of the collector of internal revenue of the district of Georgia, and showed that the receipt for the tax due to the government had been issued to the accused for the first six months of the year 1911, for the business of retail liquor dealer, to be carried on at 601 Fourth street, Macon, Ga. At the time this evidence was offered the defendant objected to it, on the ground that it was not a copy of a paper required by law to be kept in the office of any particular officer; also because it was immaterial, since the state had abandoned the prosecution on the count charging a sale. The first of these objections is answered by the decision of this court in Huckabee v. State, 7 Ga. App. 677, 67 S. E. 837. As to the second objection: We think that it is relevant, in a prosecution for keeping intoxicating liquors on hand at one's place of business, to show that the accused has paid the government tax as a retail dealer; for it is a matter of legal knowledge that this tax is paid upon an application reciting that the person paying it intends to engage in that business. One who makes preparation and pays out money for the purpose of engaging in the business of a retail liquor dealer is much more liable to have intoxicating liquors on hand at his place of business than one who has not. It is not necessary, in a prosecution for keeping intoxicating liquors on hand at one's place of business, to show that any of the liquor has been sold; but when liquor has in fact been sold at one's place of business, this is conclusive evidence of the crime. The two acts of preparation, the getting of the liquor and the taking out of the government license, are natural concomitants, and the one has relevancy as supporting the probative value of the other.

We have not overlooked the act of August 21, 1911 (Acts 1911, p. 180), which makes it prima facie evidence of guilt in certain cases for any person to be in possession, to make application for, or to have issued to him the United States special tax receipt as a retail liquor dealer. This act, by its terms, is applicable to the trial of cases brought to abate or enjoin the operation of "blind tigers," and to prosecutions for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor. In those cases proof of the defendant's having paid the government tax as a liquor dealer is made prima facie evidence of guilt. The act is without direct applicability where mere keeping on hand is charged; but, independently of this statute, the fact of the defendant's having applied for and having paid for the special tax receipt is relevant. The Case of Huckabee, supra, was decided prior to the passage of this act, and therefore shows that, irrespective of the statute, proof of this nature may be received.

The point is made that this tax receipt specifies the place at which the retail liquor dealer's business is to be carried on as "601 Fourth street, Macon, Ga.," while the proof shows that the place where the liquor was delivered was the corner of Plum and Fourth streets, and, therefore, that the connection between the two is not sufficiently shown. In the first place the jury probably inferred that the two addresses were identical, from the fact that the address given on the bills of lading on which the liquors were shipped and under which the defendant received them designated the place where they were to be delivered as 601 Fourth street, and that the draymen, under this direction, delivered them at the corner of Plum and Fourth streets. But, even if this is not so, the evidence as to the payment of the government tax would not be wholly without relevancy; for, say that the two addresses are different, but in the same general locality, the jury might believe that the accused, intending to open his place for illegal sale at the address stated in the tax receipt, had stored his general stock near by in his other place of business.

[§] 5. The defendant, by numerous requests to charge, attempted to get the benefit of some such theory as that if the accused had taken out, under the act of 1908, license as a "near beer" dealer—that is, a license to sell imitations and substitutes for beer, wine, whisky, or other spirituous or malt liquors—his liability to prosecution, and the effect of the evidence against him, would be legally different from what it would be if he had not procured this license. One of the requests to charge along this line was as follows: "If at the time of the passage of the act of September 5, 1908, known as the 'near beer act,' there was not and is not now any beverage or drink or liquor known to science or practical use in this state, in imitation of or intended as a substitute for beer, whisky, or other alcoholic, spirituous, or malt liquors, that did not contain alcohol, then and in such event said act authorized the license and the sale of beverages or drinks or liquors containing alcohol, and proof that the beverage or liquor kept on hand or sold by the defendant contained alcohol would not, of itself and without more, authorize the conviction of the defendant." The act taxing "near beer" and other imitations of liquors (Acts 1908, p. 1112) expressly provides that "nothing in this act contained shall ever be held, taken, or construed to authorize the sale of any beverage, drink or liquor now prohibited by law." And the law then prohibited, and now prohibits, throughout the state, the sale of any and all kinds of liquors of such a nature as will, if drunk to excess, produce intoxication. "Near beer," the thing at which the act in question was particularly aimed, has been defined by this court as follows: "'Near beer' is a term of common currency, used to designate all that class of malt liquors which contain so little alcohol that they will not produce intoxication, though drunk to excess." Campbell v. City of Thomasville, 6 Ga. App. 212, 64 S. E. 815. The evidence in the present case related only to whisky as such, and there is not the slightest suggestion in the record of any other form of liquor or imitation of liquor, and whisky, of course, is judicially known to be intoxicating, so that in no event did the judge err in not giving the charges requested.

The whole record shows a clear case of guilt, followed by a legal trial and a conviction; hence the judgment is affirmed.

POWELL, J. The evidence in this case is of the same general nature as that dealt with in Cassidy v. State, 72 S. E. 939, this day decided. Shipments marked "whisky" came addressed to the accused. He gave to the railroad agent orders directing that the whisky shipped to him be delivered to certain draymen, who hauled it to his place of business. Sometimes the draymen left it inside the store, and sometimes in the back yard, near the back door of his store. The defendant had a government tax receipt as a retail liquor dealer. He did make a statement in which he denied that any whisky had ever been brought to his store by the draymen; but the jury, as they had the right to do, disregarded this statement in the light of the overwhelming evidence to the contrary. The jury had a right to find, even as to the liquor left in the back yard of his store, that it was left "at his place of business." Bashinski v. State, 5 Ga. App. 3, 62 S. E. 577; *Jenkins v. 2. CARRIERS (§ 218*)—TRANSPORTATION OF LIVE STOCK—LIMITATION OF LIABILITY—WAIVER.

This stipulation in the contract may be expressly or impliedly waived by the carrier. Carter & Co. v. Southern Ry. Co., 3 Ga. App. 40, 59 S. E. 209; Arnold v. Louisville Ry. Co., 4 Ga. App. 520, 61 S. E. 1050; Hill v. Telegraph Co., 85 Ga. 430, 11 S. E. 874, 21 Am. St. Rep. 166. In this case there is no evidence of waiver; but, on the contrary, the stipulation is expressly set up and relied upon by the carrier in answer to the claim made in violation of its terms.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 674-696, 927-949; Dec. Dig. § 218.*]

3. CARRIERS (§ 218*)—TRANSPORTATION OF LIVE STOCK—LIMITATION OF LIABILITY—CONSTRUCTION.

Whether the stipulation above set out applies only to injuries that are patent is not necessary to be ruled, for the injury in this case was not latent, but an indication of the injury was discernible to the eye by superficial examination, and was in fact discovered by plaintiff, or his agent, before the horse was removed from the point of delivery, and no complaint was then made, or damages claimed.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Carriers, Cent. Dig. §§ 674-696, 927-949; Dec. Dig. § 218.*]

4. CARRIERS (§ 218*)—TRANSPORTATION OF LIVE STOCK—LIMITATION OF LIABILITY.

Where the evidence shows that the plaintiff did not comply with the above stipulation in the contract, and there is no evidence of any waiver by the carrier, a recovery could not be legally had, and a verdict for the defendant was properly directed.

SALES (§ 472*)—CONDITIONAL SALES—EFFECT OF FAILURE TO RECORD.

A contract for the sale of personalty, reserving title in the seller until the purchase money has been paid, to be valid and binding as to third persons, must be recorded as required by Civil Code 1910, §§ 3318, 3319. Otherwise, the sale is absolute as to third persons; and where the purchaser subsequently gives the property to another, the property generally becomes subject to the debts of the latter, reduced to judgment, especially where the creditor of the donee in possession had no actual notice of the existence of the conditional contract of sale, and that the property covered by that contract had not been paid for, and extended credit on the faith thereof.

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; Geo. L. Bell, Judge.

Claim by J. D. Wester to property levied on under execution in favor of Joe Reisman. From a judgment for the complainant, the execution creditor brings error. Reversed.

Hewlett & Dennis, for plaintiff in error. Shepard Bryan and W. R. Tichenor, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Wester sold a piano to Taylor under a conditional contract in writing reserving title until the piano was fully paid for. This contract was not recorded. He was to pay for the piano by installments. Before paying for it he gave it as a Christmas present to his wife. After the piano had been given to her, Reisman obtained a judgment against her, and the execution issued upon this judgment was levied on the piano as her property. Wester interposed a claim. The jury in the justice's court found the piano subject to the execution, and Wester, by certiorari, asked the superior court to review this finding. The superior court sustained the certiorari and entered up final judgment in favor of Wester, holding that the property was not subject to the execution; and Reisman brings error to this court.

On the trial of the claim case there was no controversy as to the facts, which are substantially set out above. Reisman testified that he had extended credit to Mrs. Taylor on the faith of her statement that the piano was her personal property. The claimant objected to this testimony, so far as it related to the statement of Mrs. Taylor that the piano belonged to her, on the ground that it was mere hearsay, and irrelevant and inadmissible; that Mrs. Taylor was not a party to the contract between Wester and her husband, and her statement was not binding upon Wester, as he was not present when it was made. The court overruled this objection, and this is assigned as error. We think the statement of Mrs. Taylor to Reisman was admissible, as showing the good faith of Reisman in extending credit to her. Under the view we take of the merits of the case, however, it makes very little difference why Reisman extended credit to Mrs. Taylor. His judgment was good against her and was binding on her property, and the undisputed evidence is that her husband had given her this piano.

It is insisted, however, that Mrs. Taylor knew that her husband had not paid for the piano, that he bought it from Wester on installments, and that he had no right to make a voluntary gift of it to her as against Wester's claim for the balance of the purchase money. And this is probably the view that the superior court took of the question. The Code requires that every conditional contract of sale, to be valid as against third persons, shall be in writing and recorded within 30 days from date. Civil Code 1910, §§ 8318, 8319. The contract in this case was not recorded. It was therefore binding upon nobody except the parties thereto. Relatively to third persons, the sale of the piano by Wester to Taylor was an absolute sale. Steen v. Harris, 81 Ga. 681, 8 S. E. 206. Cf. Rhode Island Works v. Empire L. Co., 91 Ga. 642, 17 S. E. 1012. Now, suppose that Reisman had obtained judgment against Taylor himself, and had had the execution levied on the piano, and Reisman, when extending credit to Taylor, had no knowledge of the conditional contract in writing made by Wester to Taylor; can it be doubted that Reisman's execution would be prior in dignity to Wester's claim? The creditor (with judgment lien) of the donee of the purchaser under the conditional sale is likewise a third person within the meaning of the Code sections cited.

Another reason why we think the property was subject to the execution in favor of Reisman: Wester failed to record his conditional contract. He put the piano into the possession of Taylor; and, according to the evidence, Taylor told him at the time of the sale that he wanted to buy the piano as a Christmas present for his wife. He thus put it into the power of Mrs. Taylor to perpetrate a fraud on Reisman, for she stated to him that the piano belonged to her, and it was on the faith of this statement that he extended the credit to her. Wester put it into the power of Taylor, the husband, through his wife, to commit a fraud upon an innocent person; and if Reisman, the innocent person, or Wester, who had put it in the power of Taylor and his wife to perpetrate the fraud, must suffer, clearly the one who made the fraud possible should suffer, and not the one who was innocent.

For these reasons, we think that the superior court erred in sustaining the certiorari and entering final judgment in favor of Wester. The certiorari should have been reversed.

Judgment reversed.

WILSON v. BARNARD. (No. 3,208.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. PLEADING (§ 258*)—AMENDMENT—ANSWER.

The amendment to the answer, although filed after the time for answering had expired, was properly verified as required by section 5640 of the Civil Code of 1910, and there was no error in allowing it. Besides, the amendment set up no defense that was not substantially made by the original answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 765-782; Dec. Dig. § 258.*]

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 489*)—ACTIONS—ISSUES AND PROOF.

Under the plea of non est factum to a suit on a note, the defendant may deny either the execution of the note by him altogether, or its execution by him in its present shape, and proof of either allegation, provided, in case of alteration, the change was material, would sustain the plea. Civil Code (1910) § 4295; Joyce on Defenses to Commercial Paper, § 135.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Dec. Dig. § 489.*]

3. EVIDENCE (§ 197*)—DEMONSTRATIVE EVIDENCE—COMPARISON OF HANDWRITING.

Where the signature to a note sued on is attacked on the ground that it is a forgery, an admittedly genuine signature of the person purporting to have signed the note is admissible for the purpose of comparison, and to aid in the determination of the issue as to the genuineness of the signature in dispute, and the jury can make a physical inspection of both the genuine signature and the one in dispute. Joyce on Defenses to Commercial Paper, §§ 96, 97, and cases in notes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 681, 681½; Dec. Dig. § 197.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 197*)—ADMISSIBILITY—WRITINGS FOR COMPARISON.

In support of his plea of non est factum, it was not error to permit the defendant to introduce in evidence a blank copy of a note, which he testified was an exact copy of the one he executed, for the purpose of showing dissimilarity between that and the note sued on and alleged to be a forgery.

5. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 492*)—TRIAL (§ 229*)—BURDEN OF PROOF—INSTRUCTIONS—REPE-TITION.

When a plea of non est factum is filed under oath to a suit on a note, the burden is upon the plaintiff to prove the execution of the note sued on. Paulk v. Creech, 8 Ga. App. 738, 70 S. E. 145 (2). It was not error for the trial judge, during the course of his charge, to instruct the jury repeatedly to the foregoing effect. One time would have been sufficient, but needless repetition in a charge of a correct principle of law applicable to the pleadings and evidence could not be error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1649-1651; Dec. Dig. § 492.*; Trial, Cent. Dig. § 513; Dec. Dig. § 229.*]

6. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 497*)—ACTIONS—PRESUMPTIONS—BONA FIDE HOLDERS.

Where a plea of non est factum is filed to a suit on a note, the plaintiff must prove the execution of the note sued on, before the presumption of law would arise that he was a bona fide holder for value; and, after charging sections 4286 and 4288 of the Civil Code of 1910, the court did not err in also charging the above qualification.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bills and Notes, Cent. Dig. §§ 1675-1687; Dec. Dig. § 497.*]

7. ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS (§ 3*)—MATERIALITY—NAME OF PAYEE.

The alteration of the name of the payee in a note, without the knowledge of the maker, is a material alteration, and would constitute a good defense to an action against the maker of the note. Joyce on Defenses to Commercial Paper, § 158, and cases cited; 3 Randolph on Commercial Paper, §§ 1749 and 1777.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Alteration of Instruments, Cent. Dig. §§ 5-15; Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

8. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1003*)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT.

This court has repeatedly ruled that, in the absence of legal error, it has no jurisdiction to interfere with a verdict supported by some evidence, although the verdict was against the preponderance of the evidence. The decisions cited to the contrary, applicable to the Supreme Court, were rendered prior to the constitutional amendment restricting the jurisdiction of that court and this court to the decision of errors of law and equity, and are not now in point.

9. MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—NO ERROR.

Other grounds of alleged error contained in the motion for a new trial, not specifically covered by the foregoing notes, are without substantial merit.

10. SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL.

There was evidence in support of the plea of non est factum, and the verdict for the defendant was authorized, and there was no error in refusing a new trial.

RAPE (§ 16*)—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO RAPE—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Under the evidence the defendant was guilty of assault with intent to rape, or not guilty at all, and therefore there was no error in not charging the law as to assault and battery. An assault with intent to induce consent to sexual intercourse on the part of a female child under the age of consent is not assault and battery, but assault with intent to rape, just as the completed intercourse with such a child would be rape.

MOSS v. TAZEWELL COUNTY.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 48*)—CONSTRUCTION—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

All doubts as to the constitutionality of a statute should be resolved in favor of its existence, and the court should not declare a statute unconstitutional, unless it clearly and plainly appears to be so.

3. TAXATION (§ 40*)—STATUTES (§ 95*)—UNIFORMITY—GENERAL LAW.

Acts 1908, c. 70 (Code Supp. 1910, p. 729), entitled "An act to provide for the issuing of county bonds for permanent road or bridge improvements in the magisterial districts of the counties of the state," does not violate Const. 1902, § 168 (Code 1904, p. cclxii), providing that all taxes, whether state, local, or municipal, shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied under general laws.

4. COUNTIES (§ 187*)—FISCAL MANAGEMENT—BONDS—LIABILITY ON.

Acts 1908, c. 70, § 1 (Code Supp. 1910, p. 729), permits bonds to be issued by any county for road and bridge improvements in magisterial districts. Section 2 requires the polls to be opened at all the voting places in the county not in a particular magisterial district, and provides that all qualified voters of the counties shall vote upon the question. Section 3 requires the county election commissioners to canvass the returns. Section 4 provides that, if a majority of the voters of the county and also a majority of the voters of the district voting upon the question favor issuing the bonds, the county board of supervisors shall be directed to carry out their wishes. Section 6 requires the board to issue the bonds and have written therein a recital that they are issued for "—magisterial district," but that the full credit of the county is pledged for their payment, and that a tax will be levied upon the property of the district to pay interest and create a sinking fund. Section 7 requires a levy by the county on all property liable to state tax in the magisterial district in which the proceeds of the bonds are to be expended, and that, should the county have to assume any payment, the board of supervisors shall levy such tax in the magisterial district as may be necessary to pay the amount so assumed: "it being * * * intended that bonds issued or to be issued under this act are county obligations, but payable primarily out of levies upon the property in the magisterial district, where the proceeds of the bonds may be expended hereunder." Held, that the bonds were direct county bonds, and not bonds of the magisterial district: the county's liability to the bondholder not being diminished because of the provision for levy upon the property of the district.

Error to Circuit Court, Tazewell County.

Action by the County of Tazewell against C. J. Moss. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Henry & Graham, for plaintiff in error
George W. St. Clair and T. C. Bowen, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. This writ of error is to a judgment rendered upon motion by the circuit court in behalf of the defendant in error, the plaintiff below, against the plaintiff in error, C. J. Moss, for the purchase price of three bonds (known as "road bonds"), each of the denomination of $1,000.

These bonds constitute part of a bond issue made by Tazewell county by virtue of an act of the General Assembly of Virginia, entitled "An act to provide for the issuing of county bonds for permanent road or bridge improvement in the magisterial districts of the counties of the state," approved February 25, 1908. 3 Va. Code Supp. 1910 (Pollard) p. 729.

In pursuance of this act an election was held in Tazewell county to take the sense of the qualified voters of the several magisterial districts of the county and of the qualified voters of the county as to whether the board of supervisors should issue county bonds aggregating $625,000 for the entire county, the proceeds of which were to be apportioned among the several magisterial districts in accordance with the provisions of the act. The election was duly held, and resulted favorably to the bond issue.

We have scrutinized the proceedings leading up to and including the authorization, execution, issuance, and sale of these bonds, and, without undertaking to set out in detail the various steps taken, it is sufficient to say that the county authorities have substantially complied with all the requirements of the act.

There are only two assignments of error which demand our attention. The first is "that the statute under which the election was held and the bonds issued is unconstitutional"; and, second, "that the bonds are not direct county bonds for which the county is primarily responsible, but are direct magisterial district bonds, these districts being primarily liable."

With respect to the first assignment, it is maintained that the act is in conflict with that portion of section 168 of the Constitution of Virginia (Code 1904, p. cclxii) which declares that " * * * all taxes, whether state, local, or municipal, shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws."

Objection to the constitutionality of this act has recently received careful consideration at our hands. In May last a petition for appeal from a decree of the circuit court of Lee county, in the case of Holliday v. Board of Supervisors,<sup>1</sup> involving the precise question now in judgment, was refused by four of the judges in vacation, and afterwards by the court, on the ground that the decree of the circuit court, maintaining the constitutionality of the act, was plainly right. In these circumstances, we would ordinarily have simply denied a writ of error in the present case; but, in view of the large number of bond issues under this act throughout the state, we have deemed it advisable to affirm its constitutionality by an authoritative decision.

[1-2] The principle is elementary that "the power of the Legislature of the state is supreme, except so far as it is restrained by the state or federal Constitution, and even in case of doubt as to the power, all doubts are to be resolved in favor of the existence of the power. The courts have no power to declare an act unconstitutional, unless it is so clearly and plainly so that there can be no doubt on the subject." Henry's Case, 110 Va. 879, 65 S. E. 570, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 883; Button v. State Corporation Commission, 105 Va. 634, 54 S. E. 769, and cases cited.

This canon of construction is essential to the very life of the state and has always been jealously guarded by the courts. In deference to this fundamental principle, the constitutionality of acts of the Legislature essentially similar to the present statute have repeatedly received the sanction of this court.

In Gilkeson v. Frederick Justices, 13 Grat. 577, it was held that section 22, art. 4, of the Constitution of 1851, providing that "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the commonwealth, and all property * * * shall be taxed in proportion to its value," applied to state revenue, and not to taxes and levies by counties for local purposes.

The convention which adopted the Constitution of 1869, in section 1, art. 10, enlarged the scope of the equality and uniformity provision, so as to include taxes imposed for state revenue and also levies imposed by counties and corporate bodies for local revenue. Nevertheless, in Norfolk City v. Ellis, 26 Grat. 224 (a decision under the Constitution of 1869), the court held that the council of Norfolk had authority under the city charter and the Constitution of the state to assess the expense, in whole or in part, of paving a street upon the owners of the property on the street in proportion to the number of feet facing on the street. The court construed the constitutional prohibition as applying to revenue as contradistinguished from assessments for local improvements. Such assessments, it was said, proceeded upon the theory of benefits conferred upon the inhabitants of the particular locality, and not upon the idea of revenue. Judge

Staples, in delivering the opinion of the court in that case, observes: "It is regarded as a system of equivalents. It imposes the tax according to the maxim that he who receives the benefit ought to bear the burden; and it aims to exact from the party assessed no more than his just share of that burden according to an equitable rule of apportionment."

In Richmond & A. R. Co. v. City of Lynchburg, 81 Va. 473, the charter of Lynchburg, which empowered the city, where water mains were laid in the street, to levy an annual special assessment on the real estate on both sides of the street to meet the expense of the waterworks, was held to be valid.

In Supervisors v. Saltville Land Company, 99 Va. 640, 39 S. E. 704, the court held: "In the absence of constitutional restrictions, the Legislature may impose upon a taxing district, such as a town, the duty of keeping in repair the streets and roads within, and relieve it from taxation for roads without, its limits. The Legislature judges finally and conclusively upon this question."

In Day v. Roberts, 101 Va. 248, 251, 43 S. E. 362, 363, Buchanan, J., speaking for the court, said: "Constitutional provisions similar to the one now under consideration (section 1, art. 10, Constitution of 1869) have frequently been before the courts. The settled construction placed upon them is that uniform taxation requires uniformity, not only in the rate of taxation and in the mode of assessment upon the taxable valuation, but the uniformity must be coextensive with the territory to which it applies. If a tax is imposed by the state, it must be uniform over the whole state; if by a county, city, town, or other subordinate district, the tax must be uniform throughout the territory to which it is applicable. Knowlton v. Board of Sup., 9 Wis. 410, 420, 421; Bright v. McCullough, 27 Ind. 223, 230; Exchange Bank v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 15; Sleight v. People, 74 Ill. 47; Dyar v. Farmington, 70 Me. 515; Hutchinson v. Ozark Co. [57 Ark. 554] 22 S. W. 173, 38 Am. St. Rep. 258; Pine Grove, etc., v. Talcott, 19 Wall. 676, 22 L. Ed. 227; Cooley on Tax. (2d Ed.) 141, 244; Cooley's Const. Lim. (6th Ed.) 610; 1 Desty on Tax. § 85, p. 173; Burroughs on Taxation, 61, 62."

[3] The uniformity clauses of the Constitution of 1869 and of 1902 are substantially the same, and the authorities to which attention has been called fully sustain the constitutionality of the act of February 25, 1908.

[4] We are furthermore of opinion that the assignment of error, that these bonds are not direct county bonds, for which the county is primarily responsible, but are direct magisterial district bonds, for which the districts are primarily liable, is not meritorious.

Counties are erected by the Legislature, and constitute subdivisions of the state. They are organized under the Constitution and laws, and, within their territorial limits, are clothed with many important governmental and other functions. Among others, they have authority to make levies for local purposes. They also have power to make contracts, with respect to which they may sue and be sued as provided by law, and possess adequate agencies and machinery to discharge the duties and obligations imposed upon them by law. But it is otherwise with respect to magisterial districts, which are subordinate divisions or precincts of a county, created for political and administrative purposes of exceedingly limited character. They are without that artificial personality possessed by corporate bodies. They have authority to elect certain officers, but possess no debt-making power under general statutes of the state, and plainly have no such power under the act of February 25, 1908. It is not possible, therefore, that these road bonds are direct magisterial district bonds.

On the other hand, that the bonds are direct county bonds, for payment of which the full faith and credit of the entire county is pledged, unmistakably appears from the terms of the act.

Section 1 declares "that bonds may be issued by any county" for the purpose, and upon the conditions, and in the manner therein provided.

Section 2 provides that the polls shall be opened at all the voting places in the county, not in a particular magisterial district, and that all the qualified voters of the county shall have the right to vote on the question of bond issue.

Section 3 provides that the commissioners of election of the county shall canvass the returns.

Section 4 provides that if the report of the commissioners of election shows that a majority of the qualified voters of the county voting upon the question, and also that a majority of the qualified voters of the district voting on the question, are in favor of issuing the bonds, the circuit court shall direct the board of supervisors of the county to carry out their wishes.

Section 5 provides for contesting such elections.

Section 6 provides that the board of supervisors shall issue the bonds, which shall be signed by the chairman and countersigned by the clerk of the board, "and shall have written or printed in said bonds the following sentence: 'These bonds are issued for ..... magisterial district, but the full faith and credit of the entire county is hereby pledged for their payment; and a tax to be levied upon the property of said district to pay the interest on them and to create a sinking fund sufficient in amount to pay them upon maturity.'"

Section 7 provides that a levy shall be made by the county on all property liable to state tax in such magisterial district in which the proceeds of the bonds have been or are to be expended to pay interest and create a sinking fund to redeem the principal at maturity. It also provides that, "should for any reason the county in any way have to assume any payment on account of said bond issue, either interest or principal, it is hereby provided that the board of supervisors shall levy such tax in said magisterial district as may be necessary to defray the amount assumed by the county, it being and having heretofore been intended that bonds issued or to be issued under this act are county obligations, but payable primarily out of levies upon the property in the magisterial district where the proceeds of the bonds may be expended hereunder."

It thus appears that these bonds are direct county bonds, for the payment of which "the full faith and credit of the entire county is * * * pledged," and the liability of the county, so far as the holder of the bonds is concerned, is in no way diminished by the circumstance that as between the county and the magisterial district a convenient and expeditious method is provided for payment of the interest and principal of the bond by levy of a sufficient tax upon the property in the district for that purpose.

In conclusion, we are of opinion that the act in question is constitutional; that the bonds are direct county bonds, for which Tazewell county is primarily liable to the holders; and that the proceedings by which this bond issue was authorized and the bonds executed were in all respects regular and lawful.

For these reasons, the judgment of the circuit court must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

HARRIS v. BROCK et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 15, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. DOWER (§ 108*)—COMMISSIONERS' PROCEEDINGS — CONFIRMATION — CONCLUSIVENESS — PERSONS CONCLUDED — CREDITORS OF ESTATE.

Where a person other than the widow of the decedent is the administrator upon the latter's estate, and is duly notified of an application for dower, and the creditors of the estate fail to enter a traverse to the return of the commissioners which assigned dower, and the return is without objection of any kind made the final judgment of the superior court, the creditors are (in the absence of actual fraud upon the part of or collusion between the widow and administrator) bound by such judgment, whether they had notice of its rendition or not. Williamson v. McLeod, 64 Ga. 762; Fussell v. Short, 96 Ga. 524, 23 S. E. 506.

(a) The fact that the administrator was the son of the intestate and the widow, and that he knew, previously to the return of the commissioners being made the judgment of the superior court, that the intestate had executed a security deed to the land out of which the dower was assigned, and made no objection to the return being made the judgment of the superior court on that ground, did not amount to such actual fraud or collusion between the administrator and the widow as would authorize the creditors to attack such judgment after its rendition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dower, Cent. Dig. §§ 319, 320, 357; Dec. Dig. § 108.*]

2. DOWER (§ 112*)—ASSIGNMENT—CONCLUSIVE-NESS AS TO CREDITORS.

Where the holder of such security deed, subsequent to the making of the return of the commissioners setting apart dower the judgment of the superior court, obtained a judgment against the administrator for the recovery of the land in which dower had been assigned, and the administrator, in pursuance of the decree of the court in such action against the administrator, obtained a quitclaim deed to such land from the holder of the security deed upon payment to him by the administrator of the debt secured by such deed, the administrator did not thereby become liable to the creditors of the intestate for the rental value of the lands assigned as dower.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 637*)—RECORD—EFFECT OF DEFECTS.

Error was assigned upon the overruling and dismissal of certain exceptions to an auditor's report, and, there being enough in the bill of exceptions to enable this court to ascertain the real questions in the case which the plaintiff in error seeks to have decided, the motion to dismiss the writ of error is overruled. McPHERSON et al. v. CHANDLER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 28, 1911.)

1. DEMURRER OVERULED—NO ERROR.

There was no error in overruling the demurrer to the petition.

2. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 53*)—ACTIONS—PLEADING.

The defendant in error (hereinafter called the plaintiff) brought an action against the plaintiffs in error (hereinafter called defendants) for illegal arrest and malicious prosecution, alleging that he had been wrongfully arrested for carrying on a "near beer" business without a municipal license, and that the defendants, who were the mayor, a member of the municipal council, and a deputy marshal, sought to prevent his conducting such business by means of arrests, although he held a license from the municipal authorities for the conduct of such business. The defendants denied the allegations of the petition. They also alleged that in order to conduct a "near beer" business it was necessary to have a license from the state, one from the federal government, and one from the municipality where the business was located, and that the plaintiff had no license. They further alleged that every act for which the plaintiff was arrested was a crime, and was committed in the presence of the arresting officer. The plaintiff demurred to so much of the answer as sought to set up that it was necessary to obtain a license from the federal and state authorities for the reason, among others, that it was not alleged that the plaintiff's arrest was based on any violation of the state or federal law. The defendants made no effort to amend, but left their allegations on this subject in a vague and ambiguous condition. Held, that there was no error in sustaining the demurrer and striking such allegations from the answer.

(a) There was no error in sustaining the demurrer to certain other portions of the defendants' answer.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Dec. Dig. § 53.*]

3. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 55*)—PLEADING—ISSUES AND PROOF.

Under the law of this state, where a petition alleges that a plaintiff was illegally arrested on the ground that he was conducting a certain business in a city without having a municipal license for that purpose, and that he in fact had such a license, and the answer denies the allegations of the petition, such denial puts in issue only the allegations of the petition. Under such issue, the defendant may disprove the plaintiff's cause of action, and for that purpose may show that the arrest was not made for an alleged violation of a municipal ordinance, but for an offense against the laws of the state committed in the presence of the arresting officer; but if it is sought to justify the arrest on the ground that it was made both for a violation of a municipal ordinance and of a state law, and that the arrest was legal on either or both of such grounds, a plea of justification should be filed. Civil Code 1910, §§ 4488, 5636; Ratere v. Chapman, 79 Ga. 574, 4 S. E. 684 (3); Kerwich v. Steelman, 44 Ga. 197.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Malicious Prosecution, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 671*)—RECORD—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

The brief of evidence filed with the motion for a new trial set forth the parol evidence introduced, and also stated that certain documentary evidence was introduced by mere general reference to a minute book, copies of transcripts from minutes, by-laws, and the like, without setting forth such evidence in substance, or showing in any way what were the contents of such documents. There was no charter provision, nor does it appear from such brief that there was any municipal ordinance, making it an offense for the plaintiff to conduct his business without a license. The brief of evidence is so imperfect, and omits such essential parts of the evidence, that it cannot be treated as a compliance with the law as to the manner of bringing the evidence to this court, nor can this court determine any of the assignments of error requiring a consideration of the evidence. Such are a number of the grounds of the motion for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2867-2872; Dec. Dig. § 671.*]

5. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 72*)—INSTRUCTIONS—"MALICE"—"PROBABLE CAUSE."

There are sufficient assignments of error in the motion for a new trial, which can be considered, to show that the presiding judge erred, and that a new trial should be granted. Without sifting the numerous grounds of the motion for a new trial, and discussing how far each of them may or may not be affected by the condition of the brief of evidence, the following will suffice to show error requiring a new trial.

(a) The court charged that, "to constitute malice, it would not be necessary to show ill will or hatred to the person injured, but malice may be inferred from any offensive act, or any act of an offensive nature, which would show disregard of him and violation of proper consideration of the person who is alleged to have been injured." This definition was too broad, and made the definition of "malice" turn rather upon whether an act was offensive to the person claiming to be injured than upon the intent, purpose, or state of mind of the actor, and it was also too general in referring to a disregard of "proper consideration" of the person claiming to be injured. Civil Code 1910, § 4451; Patterson v. State, 85 Ga. 131, 133, 11 S. E. 620, 21 Am. St. Rep. 152.

(b) It was not accurate to charge that, in order to constitute "probable cause," there must be reasonable grounds of suspicion, "supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in the belief that the person arrested is guilty of a crime." It is the "reasonable" man, rather than the "cautious" man, who is to be taken as the standard. Civil Code 1910, §§ 4440, 4452.

(c) A charge that "the court charges you, gentlemen of the jury, that the law as a rule does not look with favor upon arrests made without a warrant," should not have been given. Where the law permits an arrest without a warrant, such a rule does not apply; where it does not permit an arrest without a warrant, such an arrest is illegal.

6. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 55*)—APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1031*)—EVIDENCE—PREJUDICE FROM ERROR.

In an action for illegal arrest and malicious prosecution, where aggravating circumstances and bad faith are charged, the measure of damages in case of a recovery by the plaintiff is necessarily in issue, and under a general denial of the plaintiff's allegations, the defendant may introduce evidence tending to show that there was no bad faith, or aggravation, and that the plaintiff was not damaged in the amount claimed.

(a) In a suit of the character above indicated there is no exact measure of damages, and the recovery of no particular amount can be declared by a reviewing court to be demanded by the evidence; and errors calculated to prejudice the jury in respect of the amount of the recovery import injury.

HOLTON v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 14, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. JURY (§ 127*)—DISQUALIFICATION—INVESTIGATION AFTER ACCEPTANCE.

Upon the trial of the accused, charged with murder, after the jury of 12 had qualified upon their voir dire, and had been accepted by the state and the accused, and sent to their room, and before being sworn in chief, the solicitor general stated to the court that he desired to put upon trial, as to his competency, one of such jurors, for the reason that the juror had expressed a decided bias as to the case, in that he had made the statement that "it ought to be narrated all over the county that the defendant ought to be turned loose, and if he got on the jury he would do it." The solicitor further stated to the court that the alleged disqualification of the juror had come to his knowledge since the juror was accepted, and that no one interested in behalf of the state had any knowledge of such alleged disqualification until after the juror had been accepted. After the introduction of evidence in behalf of the state, before the court as a trier on the question as to the juror's disqualification, and after the juror's statement to the court on the subject, the court found the juror to be qualified, and he served in the trial of the case, and a verdict of guilty was rendered. Held, that the court did not err in allowing such investigation as to the competency of the juror. Penal Code 1910, § 1004; Eberhart v. State, 47 Ga. 598 (3).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Dec. Dig. § 127.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 954*)—NEW TRIAL—SPECIFICATIONS IN MOTION.

One of the grounds of the motion for a new trial was: "Because on the trial of the case, while [a named person], a witness for the defendant, was on cross-examination by the solicitor general, said witness having testified that in his opinion the defendant on trial, at the time he killed the deceased, was insane, the court erred in ruling out, upon the objection of the solicitor general that the same was irrelevant and immaterial, the following answer of the witness: 'About this insult to his wife —.' This witness at the time being cross-examined as to his reasons for basing the option [opinion] that the defendant at the time of the homicide was insane." This ground does not sufficiently specify any point for determination.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2363-2367; Dec. Dig. § 954.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 954*)—NEW TRIAL—GROUND OF MOTION.

A ground of a motion for new trial, based upon the refusal of the court to permit a given question to be asked by a party of his own witness, furnishes no reason for a new trial, where it does not appear what answer was expected to the question. Southern Railway Co. v. Cunningham, 123 Ga. 90, 50 S. E. 979; Morris v. State, 129 Ga. 434, 59 S. E. 223.

4. HOMICIDE (§ 297*)—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE TO SUSTAIN.

Upon the trial of one accused of murder, who, in his statement to the jury, admitted committing the homicide, and nothing was set up by way of justification or mitigation, other than that the person killed, several years prior to the homicide, had grossly insulted the wife of the accused, and that the accused was insane at the time of the homicide, it was not error for the court to refuse, upon written request of counsel for the accused, to give in charge to the jury the provisions of Penal Code 1910, §§ 70, 72, 74, 75, relating, respectively, to justifiable homicide, killing in defense of property or habitation, mutual protection by parents and children, and all other instances standing upon the same footing of reason and justice.

(a) Nor did the court, under the evidence in this case and the statement of the accused, and in view of the defenses set up, err in refusing to give, upon the written request of counsel for the accused, the following instruction to the jury: "I charge you that the section of the Code which I have just read you, to wit, that which provides that 'all other instances which stand upon the same footing of reason and justice as those enumerated shall be justifiable homicide,' refers to those instances which I have given you under the head of 'justifiable homicide,' killing in defense, or defense of habitation or property, or killing another under the fears of a reasonable man, or killing in his own defense, and that the jury, who, as I have explained previously to you, being the judges of both the law and the evidence in this case, are clothed with large discretionary powers over that class of offenses, where the defense is set up by the slayer that he took the life of another under other instances or circumstances standing upon the same footing of reason and justice as those which I have enumerated, and that it is with the jury to say whether the defense set up in this case, if you should see fit and proper to give weight and credit to the statement of the accused, was such as contemplated by the law when it says that 'all other instances which stand upon the same footing of reason and justice as those enumerated, shall be justifiable homicide.'"

(b) There was no evidence authorizing an instruction that, "the homicide appearing to be justifiable, the persons indicted shall, upon the trial, be fully acquitted and discharged."

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 773, 829*)—REPETITION OF INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the judge, in his general charge to the jury, fully, clearly, and accurately instructed them as to the law of insanity and the degree thereof that will excuse a person from criminal liability, and as announced by previous decisions of this court, it was not error to refuse to give in charge, upon written request of counsel for the accused, correct legal principles relating to the same subject, which are fully covered and expressed substantially in the same language by the general charge.

(a) Nor, under such circumstances, was it error for the judge to refuse to give in charge the request embracing language used by way of argument by text-writers and judges of reviewing courts in other cases as to "the infinite variety of forms in which insanity and derangement may show itself" and the difficulty in defining "the invisible line that divides perfect and partial insanity."

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 829*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REPETITION.

The request to charge upon the subject of impeachment of witnesses was fully covered in the general charge, and in practically the same language as the request.

7. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—INSTRUCTIONS—HARMLESS ERROR.

Complaint was made in one ground of the motion for new trial that the court, in charging upon the subject of impeachment of witnesses, instructed the jury as follows: "It being entirely with the jury to determine whether or not a witness has been successfully impeached, whenever they find any evidence of an impeaching nature, and if they should determine that any witness had been successfully impeached, then it is entirely for the jury to determine whether or not they will believe the impeaching witness or the witness sought to be impeached; it being for the jury to pass upon the credibility of the testimony in the case—the evidence in the case." The criticism made upon this charge was "that it instructed the jury to the effect that, although they might find that a witness had been successfully impeached, still the jury had a right, after so finding that such witness had been successfully impeached, to believe such impeached witness in preference to the witness by whom such impeachment was made." While this exception to the instruction was well taken, it was not harmful to the accused, for the reason that the only witness sought to be impeached was one who testified in behalf of the accused.

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 768*)—INSTRUCTIONS—DUTIES OF JURY.

The court did not err in instructing the jury as follows: "If the court should err in giving you a principle of law, there is a way by which such error may be corrected. That responsibility does not rest upon your shoulders, and it is therefore your duty to accept the law as given you in charge by the court, and apply those principles of law to the facts as you find them, and make up your verdict, as stated to you."

9. REVIEW OF INSTRUCTIONS.

There was no merit in any of the exceptions to the instructions given on the subject of insanity, as they were in almost the identical language of charges approved by this court in Lee v. State, 116 Ga. 563, 42 S. E. 759.

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§§ 773, 822*)—INSANITY AS A DEFENSE—INSTRUCTIONS.

In view of the full, clear, and accurate instructions given by the court to the jury on the subject of insanity, the mere failure to charge the jury "that the insanity of a person charged with crime might appear from the indicia of the act committed," and "failure to charge the jury the law of partial insanity," was not cause for a new trial. Nor was the failure to charge "the law of delusional insanity" cause for a new trial, for the reason that there was no evidence to authorize an instruction upon that subject, and, even if delusional insanity were presented in the statement made by the accused to the jury, the failure to charge upon that subject, in the absence of a proper and timely written request, was not cause for the grant of a new trial.

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1129*)—APPEAL—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

Assignments of error upon the admission of evidence, or the statement of a witness made before the jury while testifying, are not sufficiently made, where it does not appear from the grounds of the motion in respect thereto what objection was made and ruled upon by the court in reference to such evidence. Cook v. State, 134 Ga. 347, 87 S. E. 812; Wadsworth v. Wadsworth, 134 Ga. 816, 68 S. E. 649.

GEORGIA & F. RY. v. JOHNSON.

(No. 3,302.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1911.)

1. WITNESSES (§ 196*)—APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1051*)—CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS—DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

The plaintiff made a verbal contract with the defendant railway company to furnish it a specified number of cypress poles. It was admitted that the number of poles were furnished, but some were rejected, and payment for them was refused, because, as contended by the company, they did not come up to the specification of the contract as to size; the company contending that the contract specified that the poles were to be "10 inches in diameter at the small end." The plaintiff contended that the contract specified that they were to be "8 inches in diameter at the small end." The general manager of the defendant company, after inspecting the poles, wrote to the roadmaster, who was the agent representing the railway company in making the contract, to the effect that a majority of the poles exceeded 8 inches in diameter at the small end, and, if the specification of the contract was as claimed by the plaintiff, the company owed the account sued on. Held, the letter was not a confidential communication, and was competent evidence in behalf of the plaintiff. But, even if incompetent, its admission was harmless, there being no dispute that the poles were not less than 8 inches in diameter at the small end; and the letter contained no statement as to what in fact was the specification of the contract on the sole question in issue.

2. TRIAL (§ 234*)—INSTRUCTIONS—RULES OF EVIDENCE.

There was no error for any reason in the following: "If you should find that the plaintiff has not carried the burden to your satisfaction, or that the defendant, by the preponderance of testimony, or by sufficient proof to satisfy your mind, has proven to you that they are not liable for any amount, your verdict will be: 'We, the jury, find for the defendant.'"

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1002*)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT.

GARNETT v. STATE. (No. 3,586.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Nov. 20, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 278*)—PLEA IN ABATEMENT—DISQUALIFICATION OF GRAND JUROR.

A plea in abatement, setting up that a member of the grand jury who returned the indictment was also a member of the firm whose store was alleged to have been burglarized, is insufficient in law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 278.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1178*)—WRIT OF ERROR—REVIEW—ABANDONMENT OF ERROR.

A point, not insisted on in the brief of counsel for the plaintiff in error, will be treated as abandoned.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 406*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS—PROMISE OF IMMUNITY.

Where, in the chain of evidence fixing unmistakable guilt on the accused, there is one link consisting of his own incriminatory admission leading to the discovery of other independent circumstantial evidence, the incriminatory admission, together with the circumstances, should go before the jury, even though it appear that the incriminatory admission was induced by promise of immunity from prosecution.

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 563*) — EVIDENCE — WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY — CORPUS DELICTI.

The corpus delicti was sufficiently proved by the circumstantial evidence, coupled with the incriminatory admissions of the accused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1269; Dec. Dig. § 563.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1169*) — WRIT OF ERROR — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR — ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

While, from some of the numerous grounds of the motion for a new trial, complaining of the admission of evidence, there appears some hearsay and some irrelevant testimony, it also appears that the defendant was not prejudiced thereby; and the trial being otherwise free from error and the evidence strongly indicative of guilt, this court would not be justified in reversing the judgment overruling the motion for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1169.*]

6. PROOF OF VENUE—SUFFICIENCY.

The venue was sufficiently proved.

7. CHARGE—SUFFICIENCY.

The charge was full and fair, and covered the written requests, in so far as they were appropriate to the issues in the case.

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

J. W. Garnett was convicted of burglary, and brings error. Affirmed.

Isaac S. Peebles, Jr., for plaintiff in error. John M. Graham and J. S. Reynolds, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant, Garnett, who, at the time of the transaction set out below, was a policeman of the city of Augusta, was convicted of the offense of burglary and sentenced to seven years' imprisonment. Some time in 1907 it was reported to the prosecutor, J. J. O'Connor, a member of the firm of Rice & O'Connor Shoe Company, that there were a lot of his shoes in a certain cellar. The matter was investigated by the police department of the city, and, having cause to suspect the defendant, his locker at the police barracks was examined, and therein was found a pair of ladies' shoes, which were identified by the prosecutor as shoes from his stock. The defendant was then sent for, and, in an interview which followed between him and the prosecutor, at which several other witnesses were present, he admitted that he had taken the shoes from the prosecutor's store one night, by using a key with which he effected an entrance through the front door. He further admitted that he had taken about $250 worth of shoes from the same store, and thereupon agreed to pay $150 in settlement of the matter, to which the prosecutor assented. Whether the money was ever paid does not clearly appear, but it is fairly inferable from the testimony that it was not.

The evidence does show that about a dozen pair of shoes were returned by the defendant to the prosecutor, and that these shoes were clearly identified as shoes sold only by the prosecutor's firm at Augusta, and of their brand, size, and mark. After the conversation in which the defendant admitted that he had effected the entrance into the store with a key, the prosecutor met him in the street and asked him for the key, and was given by him a key with which the prosecutor afterwards unlocked the door of the store. The shoes returned by the defendant were kept by him at the house of a fortune teller, with whom he was intimate. Shortly afterward the defendant fled from the state, and he remained in hiding for three years.

It appears that, at the first interview between the prosecutor and the defendant, the prosecutor promised not to hurt a hair of the defendant's head if he would tell the truth about the matter, and further promised to help him hold his position on the police force. Relying on these promises of immunity from punishment, and hope of being rewarded by retention in his position, the defendant made the admissions, and undertook, by causing the return of goods, to make satisfactory restitution and settlement of the matter. In his statement at the trial he denied all guilt, and explained his admissions previously made, by saying he was trying to shield the fortune teller, who feared trouble with the police, because she had not paid her license fee. He accounted for his flight by saying that, after the matter was given publicity, he noted that public opinion was so strong against him that, under the advice of his attorney, he fled from the state until sufficient time had elapsed to insure his having a fair trial, when he voluntarily returned and surrendered.

[1] 1. Before pleading to the merits, the defendant filed a plea in abatement, on two grounds, the first of which was that it appeared that J. J. O'Connor, a member of the firm whose store was alleged to have been burglarized, was a member of the grand jury by whom the presentment was found. There was a day when parties litigant were wholly incompetent as witnesses; the reason of the law at that time being that their interest in the result of the case was such as to make their testimony of no probative value. It is a far cry from that day to this, when usually the only, and certainly the most important, witnesses in every case are the parties litigant themselves, whose testimony is admitted to the jury, to have such weight as that tribunal may see fit to give it. No less interesting is the change as to the qualification of a juror as a witness. There was once a time in our law when, after retiring to the jury room, the jury could administer the oath to one another, hear their own evidence as to the transaction in issue, and bring in a verdict on the evidence thus adduced, out of the hearing of judge, lawyers, and parties litigant. In this day and time the verdict must be based on the evidence as heard from the witness stand, and a juror is expressly forbidden to act on his own private knowledge of the transaction, unless he is sworn and examined as a witness in the case. Civil Code 1910, § 5932. Thus do our notions of things change. But we have not yet reached the point that we are willing for a juror to act as a judge in his own case, and still recognize that a party and his relatives are not qualified to sit in the petit jury box. The person from whom goods are alleged to have been burglarized sustains such a relation to the state's side of a criminal case that he would be incompetent as a petit juror. But the grand jury is merely a court of inquiry, and the disqualification of a grand juror for such a cause cannot be taken advantage of by plea in abatement. The reasons for this rule are well stated in the recent case of Hall v. State, 7 Ga. App. 115, 68 S. E. 390 (1). We conclude, therefore, that the judge did not err in holding that the plea in abatement was insufficient in law in this particular.

[2] 2. The second point raised by the plea in abatement relates to whether or not the indictment was indorsed by the grand jury as the law requires. The brief of the plaintiff in error makes no reference to this point, and we assume, therefore, that it has been abandoned. Groves v. State, 8 Ga. App. 690, 70 S. E. 93 (3).

[3] 3. The motion for a new trial, as amended, contains 39 grounds, all of them presenting, in a little different way for the most part, the same general questions. The first one we shall discuss is whether or not the court erred in admitting the alleged incriminatory admissions of the defendant. It is ably and earnestly argued before us that it appears from the state's own evidence that the admissions were not freely and voluntarily made, but were induced by hope of reward, based on promises of the persons receiving the admissions. We are inclined to believe that able counsel fails clearly to delimit the difference between a confession and an incriminatory admission. A confession, not freely and voluntarily made, should be rejected. The reason for this rule has been stated so many times and is so well known that restatement here would be useless redundancy. On the other hand, where the reason fails, the rule ceases. Where, in the chain of evidence fixing unmistakable guilt on the accused, there is one link, consisting of his own admission, which makes the chain complete, the law in its wisdom does not reject that link as useless, but permits it to go before the jury, not as a confession, but merely as a circumstance, which, together with the other evidence in the case, tends to prove the guilt of the accused.

Daniels v. State, 78 Ga. 99 (3), 103, 104, 6 Am. St. Rep. 238.

Where, therefore, in making a confession which comes up to the full requirements of the law in all particulars, save that it was not full, free, and voluntary, the defendant discloses a clue which leads to other extraneous evidence tending to incriminate him, the evidence thus disclosed, together with the particular part of the admissions of the defendant relating thereto, is admissible. This was just what happened in the case at bar. It is true that, before making the alleged confession, the defendant, a policeman, thought he had securely intrenched himself behind promises which would forever keep closed the mouths of the persons in whose presence he was speaking. It is often said, however, that a little learning is a dangerous thing, and the truth of the maxim is well illustrated in the case at bar. The experience of a policeman is such that he must soon become acquainted with the general principle that a confession not voluntarily made cannot be used against the confessor. Few of them, however, would have occasion to know the limitation on this principle to which allusion has been made. If the defendant had been content to remain intrenched behind the general principle, he would have been safe; but he went further, and disclosed clues which resulted in the unearthing of extraneous evidence which weaved about him a web so strong that even the most incredulous of all the doubting Thomases would not call for a confirmation. There are the ladies' shoes in his locker at the police barracks, positively identified as having come from the stock alleged to have been burglarized; there is the key, found in his possession, with which he says he opened the door and which proved to fit it; there are the lot of shoes of the same kind, with the private mark and identified as sold at Augusta only by this firm, which never in the memory of the senior member had sold so large a quantity at retail to one person; there is the fortune teller, with whom the defendant was intimate, and at whose house he directed the negro hackman to call for the shoes and return them to the firm, from whom he says he had taken them; there is the defendant's flight from the state—all these circumstances tending to show the defendant's guilt, and his own statements fitting in so well with the other indicia of guilt. The judge properly, therefore, received in evidence these incriminatory admissions, and correctly charged the jury as to the rules of law governing such evidence. Rusher v. State, 94 Ga. 365, 21 S. E. 593, 47 Am. St. Rep. 175; Plines v. State, 21 Ga. 227 (3); Dixon v. State, 116 Ga. 186, 42 S. E. 357 (3); Waycaster v. State, 70 S. E. 885.

[4] 4. The next point urged is that the corpus delicti was not sufficiently proved. It appears that the shoes were not missed from the stock at the time of the alleged burglary, and that the only evidence that a crime had been committed was that adduced after suspicion had pointed to the defendant and the investigation resulted in the disclosure of the clues which led to his admission, which in turn unearthed other circumstances of guilt. We are aware of the rule that a confession uncorroborated is not sufficient proof of the corpus delicti; but we are also cognizant of the counter proposition that the corpus delicti may be proved by circumstantial evidence, coupled with an incriminatory admission of the defendant. The jury were authorized to infer from the evidence, direct and circumstantial, that the store had been burglarized and that the defendant was the burglar; and, after all, this is what corpus delicti means.

[5-7] 5-7. Various other grounds of the appended motion complain that the court erred in admitting certain testimony over the defendant's objection that it was hearsay or irrelevant. A careful examination of each ground, together with the record as a whole, fails to disclose any error so prejudicial to the defendant as to justify a new trial. We are inclined to believe that some of the evidence which was admitted possessed such a slight degree of relevancy, if relevant at all, that it might properly have been rejected; and that in one or two instances the judge allowed a little hearsay evidence of slight relevancy to creep in; but in a case so free from other material error, and one wherein the proof is so strongly indicative of guilt, the admission of irrelevant or hearsay harmless testimony is not cause for a new trial. The venue was properly proved. The requests to charge, so far as pertinent and appropriate, were covered by the general charge.

Judgment affirmed.

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 563*)—EVIDENCE—WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY—CORPUS DELICTI.

The circumstantial evidence, in connection with the incriminatory admission of the defendant, sufficiently proves the corpus delicti. See Garnett v. State, 72 S. E. 951, this day decided. The verdict of guilty is amply supported by the evidence, and the record is free from material error.

CLARK v. W. R. BONSAI & CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 27, 1911.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 435*)—ACCIDENT INSURANCE—ACCRUAL OF ACTION.

If the indemnity provided in an employer's accident insurance policy is against loss or damages, an action will not lie by insured, where he has not suffered damage by payment of some part of an employe's claim; but if the indemnity is against liability by the employer a right of action accrues to him when an employe is injured, or, in some cases, when the amount and legality of the claim has been established by a valid judgment, if so provided by the policy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Cent. Dig. § 1144; Dec. Dig. § 435.*]

2. INSURANCE (§ 621*)—EMPLOYER'S ACCIDENT INSURANCE—PERSONS ENTITLED TO SUE.

Unless an employer's accident insurance policy expressly provides that it is for the benefit of injured employes, and that amounts recovered should be paid to them, an injured employe may not, in the first instance, sue on the policy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Insurance, Dec. Dig. § 624.*]

3. PARTIES (§ 25*)—DEFENDANTS.

That a judgment may determine points of law adverse to a person is not sufficient ground for making him a defendant; it being necessary as a rule that all defendants have a responsible interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, Anson County; Justice, Judge.

Action by W. H. Clark, administrator, against W. R. Bonsai & Co. and the Maryland Casualty Company. From a judgment dismissing the action as against the Casualty Company, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Civil action to recover damages for death of plaintiff's intestate, an employe of the Bonsai Company, caused by alleged negligence of the employer, and in which the Maryland Casualty Company was joined as an original party defendant, heard on demurrer for misjoinder of parties before his honor, M. H. Justice, at April term, 1911, of the superior court of Anson county. The complaint sets forth a cause of action against the Bonsai Company for negligently causing the death of intestate in the course of his employment with that company, and alleges that Bonsai & Co. held a contract of indemnity insurance with the Casualty Company, and makes the contract a part of the complaint. The complaint contained no allegations of insolvency on the part of the Bonsai Company; nor any facts ultra, having a tendency to give the court jurisdiction, in application or distribution of an insolvent's estate; nor was there allegation of assignment to plaintiff by the insured company. The right of joinder is made to rest on the terms of the policy and the stipulations therein, relevant to the questions presented, are as follows: "The Casualty Co. guarantees the assured against loss from the liability imposed by law upon the assured for damages on account of bodily injuries, including death resulting therefrom, accidentally suffered by any employé or official, or employés and officials, of the assured while the said employés or officials are engaged in the occupations and at the places mentioned in the schedule below; provided such bodily injuries or death are suffered as a result of accidents occurring within the period of twelve (12) months, beginning on the first day of December, 1908, at noon, and ending on the first day of December, 1909, at noon, standard time, at the place where the policy has been countersigned.

* * * The company's liability for loss from an accident resulting in bodily injuries, including death resulting therefrom, to one person, is limited to five thousand dollars ($5,000), and subject to the same limit for each person, the company's total liability for loss from an accident resulting in bodily injuries, including death resulting therefrom, to more than one person, is limited to ten thousand dollars ($10,000). In addition to these limits, however, the company will, at its own cost (court costs being considered part thereof), investigate all accidents and defend all suits, even if groundless, of which notices are given to it as hereinafter required, unless the company shall elect to settle the same. * * * Immediate notice of any accident and of any suit resulting therefrom, with every summons or other process, must be forwarded to the home office of the company or its authorized representative. The company is not responsible for any settlements made or any expenses incurred by the assured, unless such settlements or expenditures are first specifically authorized in writing by the company, except that the assured may provide at the time of the accident, at the expense of the company, such immediate surgical relief as is imperative. In the event of an accident causing injuries to more than one person, the company may terminate its liability under this policy on account of such accident, by payment to the assured of its total limit of liability above named. * * * This policy may be canceled by either the company or the assured at any time by written notice to the other, stating when the cancellation shall be effective." The court below sustained the demurrer and dismissed the action as to the Casualty Company, and plaintiff, having duly excepted, appealed.

Lockhart & Dunlap and Robinson & Caudle, for appellant. McLean, Varner & McLean and Murray Allen, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1, 2] In construing contracts of this character, the courts have generally held that if the indemnity is clearly one against loss or damages no action will lie in favor of the insured till some damage has been sustained, either by payment of the whole or some part of an employé's claim; but if the stipulation is in effect one indemnifying against liability a right of action accrues when the injury occurs, or, in some instances, when amount and rightfulness of the claim has been established by judgment of some court having jurisdiction, this according to the terms of the policy, but, unless the contract expressly provides that it is taken out for the benefit of the injured employé, and the payment of recoveries by them, none of the cases hold that an injured employé may, in the first instance, proceed directly against the insurance company. In all of them, so far as examined, a right of action arising on the policy is treated and dealt with as an asset of the insured employer, and, in the absence of an assignment from him, the employé cannot appropriate it to his claim, except by attachment or bill in the nature of an equitable f. fa., or some action, in the nature of final process, incident to bankruptcy or insolvency. Certainly this position is supported by the great weight of authority. Connolly v. Bolster, 187 Mass. 266, 72 N. E. 981; Bain v. Atkins, 181 Mass. 240, 68 N. E. 414, 57 L. R. A. 791, 92 Am. St. Rep. 411; Embler v. Hartford Boiler Co., 158 N. Y. 431, 53 N. E. 212, 44 L. R. A. 512; Cushman v. Fuel Co., 122 Iowa, 656, 98 N. W. 509; Hawkins v. McCalla, 95 Ga. 192, 22 S. E. 141; Carter v. Insurance Co., 76 Kan. 275, 91 Pac. 178, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1155; Finley v. Casualty Co., 113 Tenn. 592, 83 S. W. 2; Kinnan v. Casualty Co., 107 Ill. App. 406; Vance on Insurance, p. 608; 15 Cyc. p. 1038; 11 A. & E. (2d Ed.) p. 16. The doctrine, as announced and sustained in these citations, is very well epitomized in Vance on Insurance as follows: "The fund, payable under a liability policy, is not subject to any trust in favor of the person whose right to damages for personal injury gave rise to the insurer's liability; nor has such third person any other right in connection with the insurance, save the common right of reaching the fund, when payable, by garnishment or other proper process." The cases from other courts, chiefly relied upon by plaintiffs, are not necessarily in conflict with this position. In Fritchle v. Miller's Co., 197 Pa. 401, 47 Atl. 351, Hoven v. Employer's Liability, 93 Wis. 201, 67 N. W. 46, 32 L. R. A. 388, and Anoka Lumber Co. v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 63 Minn. 286, 65 N. W. 353, 30 L. R. A. 689, judgment had been first obtained against the employer, and garnishment was issued against the company. In Sanders v. Frankfort Insurance Co., 72 N. H. 485, 57 Atl. 655, 101 Am. St. Rep. 688, judgment was first obtained, and the action was in the nature of an equitable f. fa., seeking to appropriate claim as the property of the insured; and in Insurance Co. v. Moses, 63 N. J. Eq. 260, 49 Atl. 720, 92 Am.

St. Rep. 663, the insured employer had become bankrupt, and appropriation was had, to an amount of loss, as indicated by a pro rata distribution of the other assets among the creditors, reversing, in this respect, a decree of the vice chancellor, in which the entire amount of claim had been held applicable to injured employé's recovery. See same case, 61 N. J. Eq. 59, 47 Atl. 579. What amount may be recovered on proceedings of garnishment or bill in aid of collecting the judgment will depend on the nature of the stipulations of indemnity and the facts and circumstances of the particular case. Thus when, as in the Massachusetts, Tennessee, and Iowa cases, supra, the policy is clearly an indemnity against "loss actually paid" by the assured, "to reimburse him for a loss actually sustained and paid in satisfaction of a judgment after the issue determined" (the language in the Iowa case, supra), and it appears that there has been nothing paid, it seems that no amount is applicable. In the New Jersey case, as stated, on similar stipulations, it was finally held that the loss would be considered paid by the insured and recoverable from the company to the amount indicated by the pro rata distribution of the other assets, etc. In the Minnesota and New Hampshire cases, supra—and we incline to the opinion that the present policy comes within the principle—it was held that the term "insured against loss from liability arising," etc., in the first portion of the policy, was so modified by subsequent clauses that it amounted to insurance against liability, and the entire amount could be applied to the employer by appropriate process—process that recognizes and deals with it as an asset of the employer.

The cases in our own court, to which we were especially referred by counsel, do not sustain his contention. In Aiken's Case, 141 N. C. 339, 53 S. E. 867, in which the court said that a casualty company, while not a necessary, was a permissible party, the policy was not before the court, or made part of the record. The allegation concerning it was to the effect that the employer had a policy and stipulations to indemnify it against all injuries to any of its employés, including the plaintiff, and to pay any sum that might be recovered by any of said employés, including the plaintiff—a direct stipulation to pay the recovery sought in the action. In case of Shoaf v. Insurance Co., 127 N. C. 306, 37 S. E. 271, a policy holder in a fire insurance company brought his action directly against a reinsuring company, and the decision was made to rest on the ground that, by the express terms of the agreement the reinsuring company was to pay the losses on policies already issued, and so, as between the two contracting parties, became the principal debtor; and on the further ground that the property of the original company, as part of the consideration, was assigned and transferred to the company sued, as it was in Johannes v. Insurance Co., 68 Wis. 50, 27 N. W. 414. 57 Am. Rep. 249, a case cited and relied on in the Shoaf decision. And so, in all the decisions cited by plaintiff, where the claimant was allowed to sue the indemnitor by direct action, the contract, either in express terms or by fair intendment, was made for the benefit of the plaintiff, as in Gorell's Waterworks, 124 N. C. 328, 32 S. E. 720, 46 L. R. A. 513, 70 Am. St. Rep. 598; or, by the nature of the contract, or by virtue of property passed and the attendant facts, the party assumed towards the other the place of primary debtor, and was held bound to plaintiff, under the general equitable principles of indebitatus assumpsit, as in Keller v. Ashford, 133 U. S. 610, 10 Sup. Ct. 494, 33 L. Ed. 667, and Voorhees v. Porter, 134 N. C. 591, 47 S. E. 31, 65 L. R. A. 738; or the bond taken under statutory provision was for the benefit of claimant; or the action was permissible in tort for wrongful seizure of property, and the bond of indemnity constituted the obligor a participant in the wrong; but no such facts are presented here.

An ordinary indemnity contract of this character is not made for the benefit of the employé, either in its express terms or in its underlying purpose. It is made for the protection and the indemnity of the employer, fortifying him against unexpected and uncertain demands which might otherwise prove disastrous to his business, and the rights arising under such a contract are his property, and actions to recover the same are and should be under his control. The nature of the contract and the principles applicable are well stated in one of the Massachusetts cases, above cited (Bain v. Atkins), as follows: "The only parties to the contract of insurance were Atkins and the company. The consideration for the company's promise came from Atkins alone, and the promise was only to him and his legal representatives. Not only was the plaintiff not a party to either the consideration or the contract, but the terms of the contract do not purport to promise an indemnity for the benefit of any person other than Atkins. The policy only purports to insure Atkins and his legal representatives against legal liability for damages respecting injuries from accidents to any person or persons at certain places within the time and under the circumstances defined. It contains no agreement that the insurance shall inure to the benefit of the person accidentally injured, and no language from which such an understanding or intention can be implied. Atkins was under no obligation to procure insurance for the benefit of the plaintiff, nor did any relation exist between the plaintiff and Atkins which could give the latter the right to procure insurance for the benefit of the plaintiff. The only correct statement of the situation is simply that the insurance was a matter wholly between the company and Atkins, in which the plaintiff had no legal or equitable interest, any more than in any other property belonging absolutely to Atkins." This being the correct position the complaint as it now stands, sets forth no cause of action against the insurance company; nor does it contain facts giving plaintiff any present right to recover against it, nor to have judgment in any way directly affecting its rights.

[3] The principle is very well stated in 30 Cyc. p. 125, as follows: "It is not sufficient reason for joining a person as defendant that the adjudication of the case at bar may determine points of law adversely to its interests. As a rule, the record must show a responsible interest in all the defendants, citing, among other cases, Conklin v. Thurston and Others, 18 Ind. 290; U. S. v. Pratt Coke & Coal Co. (C. C.) 18 Fed. 708. In our opinion, the Casualty Company has no interest or place in this controversy, and the judgment of his honor, sustaining the demurrer, must be affirmed.

Affirmed.

KELLY v. ENTERPRISE LUMBER CO.

1. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 2*)—RESERVATION OF TIMBER.

Where the fee of land was granted with a reservation of timber, there being no indication of when rights under the reservation would expire, the mere lapse of time will not defeat it, but the grantee of the fee must give the owner of the reserved timber reasonable notice to remove before his rights will be cut off.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Cent. Dig. §§ 6-12; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

2. INJUNCTION (§ 178*)—TEMPORARY INJUNCTION.

In an action to restrain the cutting of timber, it appearing that when the land was conveyed to plaintiff the trees then matured were reserved, and that defendant was threatening to cut trees which have matured since the grant, a temporary injunction, restraining the cutting of such timber, was improperly dissolved on defendant's giving a bond, where the court did not find that plaintiff was not bona fide in his contention, since Revisal 1905, §§ 807, 808, does not make insolvency of the defendant a condition precedent to an injunction, and section 809 allows a bond, in lieu of an injunction, only where the application appears not to be bona fide, and it is not impossible for experts to determine which trees have matured since the grant.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Injunction, Cent. Dig. § 390; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

3. REFERENCE (§ 14*)—COMPULSORY REFERENCE.

Under Revisal 1905, § 519, subsec. 3, providing for a compulsory reference where a case is one requiring a personal view of the premises, compulsory reference may be had to determine what trees were included in a reservation of timber.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Reference, Cent. Dig. § 29; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

4. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 2*)—RESERVATIONS OF TIMBER ON SALE OF LAND—EFFECT.

Where timber land was granted with a reservation of all timber of every description on said land, the instrument providing that until said timber was cut the grantee might have all the necessary firewood and fence rails, to be cut from pine trees, not over 14 inches in diameter, and two marked cypress trees, the reservation embraced only such trees as were large enough for timber trees when the grant was made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Duplin County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by Gaston Kelly against the Enterprise Lumber Company. From a judgment dissolving a temporary injunction and denying defendant's right to certain timber, both parties appeal. Reversed on plaintiff's appeal and affirmed on that of defendant.

H. D. Williams and Davis & Davis, for plaintiff. Langston & Allen and Stevens, Beasley & Weeks, for defendant.

CLARK, C. J. The question on this appeal arises upon the construction of the following reservation in a deed, of December 2, 1900, from the Cape Fear Lumber Company to the plaintiff: "It is understood and agreed by the parties to this deed, that the party of the first part hereby conveys to the party of the second part only the land with its agricultural privileges, together with all the necessary firewood and fence rails that may be needed on said land herein conveyed (until said timber is cut by the Cape Fear Lumber Co.), to be cut from pine trees not over 14 inches in diameter two feet from the ground; also two cypress trees to be marked with the name of the party of the second part by the agent of the said Cape Fear Lumber Co.; reserving in the grantors, the said Lumber Co., all the timber of every description on said land, except as hereinbefore specified, together with the rights and privileges appertaining thereto."

[1] On February 11, 1911, the Cape Fear Lumber Company conveyed to the defendant, the Enterprise Lumber Company, the timber which it had reserved in conveying the land to the plaintiff. The deed of the Cape Fear Lumber Company to the defendant uses the following language: "The land upon which this said tract of timber stands belongs to Gaston Kelly, having been sold to him by the Cape Fear Lumber Co., with the timber reserved." Cases of this nature usually arise where the owner conveys the timber, reserving the land. Here the deed of the Cape Fear Lumber Company to the plaintiff, December 2, 1900, conveyed the land, reserving the timber. The court held that only the trees which were large enough to be "timber" trees on December 2, 1900, were reserved, but, it being impossible to ascertain what trees had become timber trees since that date, dissolved the injunction upon the defendant giving bond in the sum of $5,000.

In Mining Co. v. Cotton Mills, 143 N. C. 307, 55 S. E. 700, the court held: "Whether the right to cut timber is a grant or a reservation, it expires at the time specified. When no time is specified, the grantee of such right takes upon the implied agreement to cut and remove within a reasonable time; whereas, when the grantor of the fee reserves or excepts the timber, and there is no limitation to indicate when the reservation shall expire, then the grantee of the fee must give notice for a reasonable time that the grantor must cut or remove the timber included in his reservation." The defendant, the Enterprise Lumber Company, here holds the reservation of the timber in the same plight that the Cape Fear Lumber Company held it, and the grantee of the fee, the plaintiff, Kelly, should give reasonable notice to the defendant to cut or remove all timber which was included in the reservation, i. e., such trees as were large enough to be timber at the time of the deed of December 2, 1900.

[2, 3] The court not having found as a fact that the contention of the plaintiff was "not bona fide," as required by Revisal 1905, § 809, he should have continued the injunction under Revisal 1905, §§ 807, 808, as to all trees not large enough to have been "timber" on December 2, 1900. This is not impossible, as his honor held, but may be fairly approximated by experts. The parties may possibly agree as to the trees, or in default of agreement the court may designate an expert or a referee for that purpose, just as a surveyor is appointed in cases of a disputed boundary. Revisal, § 519 (3), provides for a compulsory reference: "(3) When the case involves a complicated question of boundary or [is] one which requires a personal view of the premises."

The order requiring a bond is set aside, and an injunction till the hearing is ordered as to all trees that were not timber trees on December 2, 1900.

Reversed.

Defendant's Appeal.

[4] The sole question presented on this appeal is the ruling of his honor that under the reservation in the deed above set out the grantor reserved only such trees as were large enough for timber trees on December 2, 1900. The language used is that he reserves "all the timber" of every description. There being no prospective words, this ruling was correct. Robinson v. Gee, 26 N. C. 186; Whitted v. Smith, 47 N. C. 36; Warren v. Short, 119 N. C. 39, 25 S. E. 704; Lumber Co. v. Hines, 126 N. C. 254, 35 S. E. 458; Hardison v. Lumber Co., 136 N. C. 175, 48 S. E. 588. It is true the deed permitted the grantee, Kelly, to cut firewood, and fence rails from pine trees, if "not over 14 inches in diameter 2 ft. from the ground," and also allowed him to cut two cypress trees without restriction as to size. But these privileges to Kelly do not affect the fact that the grantor reserved only the "timber trees," without any prospective words, and therefore the reservation was only of the trees that were large enough to be timber trees at the date of the deed. The judgment in this respect is affirmed.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 289*)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—NONSUIT—EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY.

Under employer's liability act (Act Cong. April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1171]), plaintiff, a railroad employe, engaged in interstate commerce, can elect to sue under such statute in the state court. The statute forbids a nonsuit where there is any evidence of negligence on the part of defendant. Held, that where plaintiff, engaged in interstate commerce, elects to sue in the state court under such statute, the court cannot direct a nonsuit on the ground of contributory negligence, though under Revisal 1905, § 483, defendant is entitled to set up in his answer contributory negligence as a defense.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Whedbee, Judge.

Action by James F. Horton against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Douglass, Lyon & Douglass and Holding & Snow, for appellant. Murray Allen, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. [1] This is an action to recover damages for injury to one of plaintiff's eyes caused by the bursting of a defective water glass on a locomotive engine which plaintiff, as engineer, was operating on defendant's railroad. Plaintiff alleges that he was injured while he and the defendant were engaged in interstate commerce, and brought this action under the federal employer's liability act (Act Cong. April 22, 1908, c. 149, 35 Stat. 65 [U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1909, p. 1171]). The parts of said act material to this action are as follows:

"Section 1. Every common carrier by railroad engaging in commerce between any of the several states shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce for such injury, resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents or employes of such carrier, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency, due to its negligence, in its engines, appliances, machinery," etc.

"Sec. 3. In all actions hereafter brought against any such common carrier by railroad, under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act, to recover damages for personal injuries to an employe, the fact that the employe may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employe."

"Sec. 5. Any contract, rule, regulation or device whatsoever, the purpose or intent of which shall be to enable any common carrier to exempt itself from any liability created by this act, shall to that extent be void."

The plaintiff testified that he had in the train cars of several railroads located beyond the state boundary and some of them were lumber cars destined for Richmond, Suffolk, Portsmouth, Norfolk, and Franklin, Va., and Pittsburg, Pa. In Railroad v. Johnson, 178 Fed. 643, 102 C. C. A. 89, it was held that an employe of a railroad company charged with the duty of seeing to the coupling of cars some of which were being used in interstate commerce was employed in interstate commerce within the provisions of the employer's liability act. The same was held as to a section hand working on the track of a railroad over which both interstate and intrastate traffic is moved. Zikos v. Railroad (C. C.) 179 Fed. 893.

In a very recent case decided by the United States Supreme Court October 30, 1911 (Railroad v. United States, 222 U. S. —, 32 Sup. Ct. 2, 56 L. Ed. —), it was held that when the defendant railroad company was operating a railroad which was "a part of a through highway over which traffic was continually being moved from one state to another," hauled over a part of its road five cars, the couplers of which were defective, two of the cars being used at the time in moving interstate traffic, and the other three in moving intrastate traffic. Though the use of the last three was not in connection with any car or cars used in interstate commerce, yet the federal liability statute applied to said three cars, and the defendant was liable to the penalty for not having automatic couplers thereon because the act applies "on any railroad engaged in interstate commerce." Applying that decision to this case, it is very certain that for a stronger reason the plaintiff was entitled to bring this action under the federal statute. He was at the time engaged in hauling cars which were being used in interstate commerce.

The engine on which the plaintiff was placed by the defendant was equipped with a "Buckner water glass" without a shield or guard. The plaintiff testified: That "while he was in the discharge of his duty, and without any act on his part and without his fault, the defective water glass exploded, and injured his eye. * * * That, if the water glass had been supplied with a shield or guard, the glass would not have struck his eye when the tube exploded. * * * And that water glasses of the character of the Buckner glass are in general and accepted use by the railroad companies operating in this country." Pusey, a witness for plaintiff, testified: "If the shield is left off * * * when the inner tube breaks, the glass will fly, but it cannot fly out in front of the shield. * * * It is the duty of the inspectors to examine the engine and report all defects. It was the duty of the inspectors at Raleigh to ascertain and report the defects in this water glass." The plaintiff also further testified "that on his return from his first trip with the defective water glass he applied to Matthews, the foreman, for a shield or guard, and was informed by him that the company had none, that they were put on at Portsmouth." The plaintiff then arranged to have one made himself, but, before it was done, the glass exploded, and for lack of the shield his eye was injured.

[2] The plaintiff was furnished with a defective and dangerous appliance. This constituted negligence on the part of the defendant. Whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence or not, it is immaterial to consider, for this statute provides that in such actions as this "the fact that the employe may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employe." In Owens v. Railroad, 88 N. C. 502, two of the three judges then constituting the court held that, in an action by an employe against a railroad company for personal injuries sustained by its negligence, the burden was upon the plaintiff to negative contributory negligence on his part; Mr. Justice Ruffin dissenting. Thereupon the Legislature promptly enacted chapter 33, Laws 1887, now Rev. 1905, § 483, which required the defendant in such cases to "set up in the answer and prove on the trial" contributory negligence as a defense. As the court cannot logically direct a nonsuit when the burden of proof is upon the defendant (Spruill v. Ins. Co., 120 N. C. 141, 27 S. E. 39, and cases citing it in Anno. Ed.) the intent of the statute was evident. This court, however, in Neal v. Railroad, 120 N. C. 634, 36 S. E. 117, 49 L. R. A. 684, held by a divided court—two judges dissenting—that, notwithstanding the statute, the court in such case upon a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence could direct a nonsuit.

[3] The act of Congress of 1908 clearly forbids a nonsuit to be entered in any case where there is any evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant. As under this statute the plaintiff can elect to sue in the state court, he has naturally chosen to bring his action under the provisions of the federal statute. Doubtless the next Legislature will make similar provision in this state. All that is necessary for us to say in this case is that the plaintiff was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of his injury; that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant; that the plaintiff could elect to sue in the state court specifying in his complaint, as he does, that he invokes the protection of the federal statute; and that under its terms the court is forbidden to direct a nonsuit upon the ground that there is evidence of contributory negligence shown by the plaintiff's testimony because the statute provides that, though the plaintiff may have been guilty of contributory negligence, it shall not bar a recovery.

In directing a nonsuit, therefore, the judge was guilty of error.

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 95*)—TRANSFER—INVALIDITY—CONVEYANCES IN FRAUD OF CREDITORS.

2. HOMESTEAD (§ 167*)—ABANDONMENT OF HOMESTEAD.

Where an insolvent, who had not had his homestead assigned, conveyed to his wife by way of gift the land which was subject to homestead, and such conveyance, being void, was set aside, the insolvent was entitled to claim his homestead in the land so conveyed, Revisal 1905, § 686, providing that a homestead shall be exempt from levy so long as occupied by the homesteader, but when conveyed the exemption thereof ceases, applying only to an allotted homestead, and, the deed to the homestead having been set aside, the title still remained in the insolvent, and he could claim the exemption. Appeal from Superior Court, Nash County; Ward, Judge.

Action by Charles Rose and others against D. T. Bryan and O. Sadler, copartners, doing business under the firm name of Bryan & Sadler. From a judgment awarding defendant Sadler a homestead, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Jacob Battle, for appellants. T. T. Thorne, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. On November 7, 1908, the defendant O. Sadler made an assignment of all his property, including this lot of land and dwelling house, for the benefit of creditors, specifying therein that the trustee should reserve and set apart his homestead exemption in said lot. On December 28, 1908, Sadler conveyed said lot to his wife without any consideration. Soon thereafter the plaintiffs docketed their judgments. The court set aside the conveyance to the wife as void in regard to the plaintiffs, but adjudged that the debtor O. Sadler was entitled to have his homestead set apart in said lot. The plaintiffs excepted, and that presents the only point before us.

[1, 2] Sadler being insolvent, the deed of gift to his wife was fraudulent at law and void as to his creditors (Revisal 1905, 961-963); but, when the deed was set aside, the judgment debtor was entitled to claim his homestead in the land conveyed (Crummen v. Bennett, 68 N. C. 494; Arnold v. Estis, 92 N. C. 162; Rankin v. Shaw, 94 N. C. 406; Dortch v. Benton, 98 N. C. 190, 3 S. E. 638, 2 Am. St. Rep. 331). The land is still occupied by Sadler, and he is a resident of the state, and hence entitled to his homestead. The court having declared the deed of gift to his wife void, he holds the title, as to these plaintiffs, as if no deed had been executed.

Revisal 686, applies only to the "allotted homestead," which it provides "shall be exempt from levy so long as owned and occupied by the homesteader or by any one for him, but when conveyed by him in the mode authorized by the Constitution, art. 10, sec. 8, the exemption thereof ceases as to liens attaching prior to the conveyance. The homestead right being indestructible the homesteader who has conveyed his allotted homestead can have another allotted, and as often as may be necessary." This section has no application to this case.

The plaintiffs rely, also, upon Sash Co. v.

Parker, 153 N. C. 130, 69 S. E. 1. That, also, has no application. There, a judgment having been docketed, the judgment debtor and his wife subsequently conveyed the land out of which the homestead might have been allotted, and the grantee took possession. The court held that the judgment debtor, not "owning and occupying" the land, was not entitled to have a homestead allotted therein, and that it was subject to sale under the lien of the docketed judgment. This has been cited with approval. Fulp v. Brown, 153 N. C. 533, 69 S. E. 612; Davenport v. Fleming, 154 N. C. 293, 70 S. E. 472. The judgment debtor there, having in a legal mode conveyed his interest in said land and given possession thereof, was no longer "owner and occupier" of said land, and therefore could not claim a homestead therein, and the purchaser had no right to claim the homestead of another man against the lien of a judgment docketed against the property before he bought it.

The judgment below is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Randolph County; Daniels, Judge.

Action by R. L. Coltrane against Seth W. Laughlin, administrator, and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed, and judgment rendered for defendants.

Defendants denied the existence of the contract and pleaded an estoppel of record against recovery by reason of a judgment on action commenced before the clerk of Randolph county as a special proceeding to sell land for division among tenants in common, transferred on issues joined to the superior court of Randolph county, and determined there by judgment on report of referee, duly entered in the superior court of said county, July term, 1909, as follows: "Superior Court of Randolph Co. July Term, 1909. This cause coming on for a hearing upon exception to report of referee, all exceptions are withdrawn, and it is adjudged that the report of referee be in all respects approved and confirmed. The referee allowed a fee, etc. [Signed] B. F. Long, Judge Presiding." On the present trial his honor, reserving the question of estoppel, submitted issues, and the following verdict was rendered by the jury:

"(1) Did the plaintiff and S. L. Coltrane enter into the contract alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Did the plaintiff comply with the terms of said contract, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes."

And the court being of opinion on the question reserved that there was no estoppel of record shown, and, the amount of damages, if any due, having been admitted, entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants excepted and appealed.

Sapp & Williams and Morehead & Morehead, for appellants. J. A. Spence, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). On the question of estoppel it was made to appear by admission and the inspection of the record chiefly that: "In the year 1866 or 1867 Abner Coltrane died in Randolph, seised of a tract of land containing 111 acres, leaving a widow and three children, his only heirs at law, to wit, the plaintiff, R. L. Coltrane, S. L. Coltrane, and Ruth Gardner; S. L. Coltrane, then a non-resident, having moved from this state while a minor. Mrs. Gardner left the state soon after her father's death. The plaintiff moved in with his mother immediately after the death of his father and resided with her till she died—about 40 years—raising a family while so living with her and repairing and putting improvements upon the premises. In May, 1906, soon after the death of the life tenant, his mother, the plaintiff instituted a special proceeding in the superior court of Randolph county to sell the land for division—S. L. Coltrane and Mrs. Gardner, she being a widow—and in the complaint made a claim for an allowance by reason of permanent and valuable improvements put upon the land during his occupation, and basing his claim also on separate and specific allegations made in terms as follows: "That, just after the death of the said Abner Coltrane, the defendants contracted and agreed with the plaintiff that he should move on said lands and take care of his mother and in consideration of his taking care of his mother, who was also the mother of the defendants, that the said petitioner should have their interest in the lands aforesaid; that, in pursuance of the aforesaid agreement, the said R. L. Coltrane did move on said lands and carried out his part of the aforesaid agreement in spirit and letter by taking care of his mother, who died a year or two ago; that, while in possession of said lands under the aforesaid agreement and as tenant in common, the petitioner put valuable and permanent improvements on said lands, to wit, dwelling house, barn, grainary, smokehouse, and the digging of a well and other things worth in all $500 to $600, and the said petitioner is advised and believes that he should be paid for the value of said improvements before the defendants are allowed anything from the proceeds of said sale." Defendants S. L. Coltrane and Mrs. Gardner made answer alleging that they were tenants in common with plaintiff, denied there was ever any contract to convey their interest to plaintiff, alleged that rents and profits received should be accounted for as against the claim for permanent improvements and amount, if any, due defendants paid, and prayed judgment that the land be sold for division, etc. The cause was transferred to civil issue docket, and, S. L. Coltrane having died, his heirs at law were duly made parties defendant, and at March term, 1908, an order of reference was made containing the following recitals: "This cause being called for trial, and it appearing to the court that the plaintiff alleges that he and the defendants are tenants in common, and which is admitted by the defendants, and both parties in open court having agreed that the land described in the petition should be sold and that the questions raised by the pleadings should be referred." And after directing a sale the said order proceeded: "And the said referee is hereby ordered to hear evidence as to the increased value of said land because of any improvements, if any, placed upon said land by any of the parties thereto, and ascertain and find the value of the same, and also to hear evidence as to the rental value of said land, and to find what the rental value of said land amounts to, and also to find from the evidence whether or not the plaintiff should be paid for his improvements, and, if so, how much, and whether or not the plaintiff should account for rents and profits arising from this land, and, if so, what amount."

Said referee made his report to July term, finding facts specially relevant to this inquiry, as follows: "(1) That the plaintiff, R. L. Coltrane, moved on the tract of land described in the complaint in the year 1887, and has lived thereon continuously to the present. (2) That there was no contract between plaintiff and defendants that the plaintiff should have the land in consideration of his moving there and taking care of his mother. (3) That the said R. L. Coltrane resided on and cultivated only that part of the land which was embraced in his mother's dower, which had been allotted covering a portion of said tract of land. (4) That his mother, the dower tenant, died in January, 1905, since which time the plaintiff has been receiving the rents and profits of the place." The report then proceeds to state the account, and as a conclusion of law awards plaintiff the sum of $300 over and above rents for which he was properly chargeable, which said sum was first allowed plaintiff from the proceeds of sale. Judgment was entered confirming report as heretofore shown, and Mrs. Gardner having received her share of this money, and defendant McLaughlin having duly qualified as administrator of S. L. Coltrane, deceased, plaintiff instituted the present action against him and the children, heirs at law of S. L. Coltrane, to recover damages for breach of the contract to convey the land and condemn and apply the share belonging to the estate of S. L. Coltrane to payment of same.

Upon these, the controlling facts relevant to the inquiry, we are of opinion that plaintiff is concluded as to the existence of the contract upon which he brings suit, and that no recovery may be had thereon.

[1] It is well recognized, here and elsewhere, that when a court, having jurisdiction of the cause and the parties, renders judgment therein, it estops the parties and their privies as to all issuable matter contained in the pleadings, and, though not issuable in the technical sense, it concludes, among other things, as to all matters within the scope of the pleadings which are material and relevant, and were in fact investigated and determined, on the hearing. Gilliam v. Edmonson, 154 N. C. 127, 69 S. E. 924; Tyler v. Capehardt, 125 N. C. 64, 34 S. E. 108; Tuttle v. Harrill, 95 N. C. 456; Fayerweather v. Ritch, 195 U. S. 277, 25

In Capehardt's Case, supra, it was held: "A judgment is decisive of the points raised by the pleadings, or which might be properly predicated upon them, but does not embrace any matters which might have been brought into the litigation, or causes of action which the plaintiff might have joined, but which in fact are neither joined nor embraced by the pleadings."

In Fayerweather's Case, it was held: "Where it appears that a question was distinctly put in issue and the parties presented, or had an opportunity to present, their evidence, and the question was decided by a court of competent jurisdiction, private right and public welfare both demand that the question so adjudicated shall, except in direct proceedings for review, be considered as finally settled and conclusive upon the parties."

In Aurora City v. West, supra, it is said: "The better opinion is that the estoppel when the judgment was rendered on its merits, whether on demurrer, agreed statement, or verdict, extends to every material allegation or statement, which, having been made on one side and denied on the other, was at issue in the cause and was determined in the course of the proceedings." Associate Justice Miller dissented in the case, on the ground that the decision was in some respects too broad, but he gave full adherence to the proposition here stated, as follows: "It is true that some of the earlier cases speak as if everything which might have been decided in the first suit must be considered as concluded by that suit; but this is not the doctrine of the courts of the present day, and no court has given more emphatic expression to the modern rule than this. That rule is that, when a former judgment is relied on, it must appear from the record that the point in controversy was necessarily decreed in the first suit or be made to appear by extrinsic proof that it was in fact decided."

[2] In the proceedings relied upon by defendant, it may not have been essential to plaintiff's recovery for permanent improvements to allege that there was a contract to convey him the land, but he alleged the existence of such a contract and made the same a basis for such recovery, issue was joined thereon by express averment, the matter was fully investigated, and the facts determined against him, and, under the doctrine of estoppel as recognized and instanced in the authorities cited, plaintiff is and should be concluded.

[3] It was objected on the argument that the clerk had no jurisdiction to award the equitable relief by decreeing specific performance, and the position might be maintained if the proceedings had remained before him, but on issues joined the cause was properly removed to the superior court in term, and under the provisions of our statute that court had full jurisdiction to determine all questions presented and afford adequate relief. Revisal 1905, §§ 614, 717; Oldham v. Rieger, 145 N. C. 254, 58 S. E. 1091; Foreman v. Hough, 98 N. C. 386, 3 S. E. 842.

[4] It was further insisted that the referee was not authorized to consider and pass upon the existence of the contract, and so the question was not properly presented in the former proceedings. We do not take this view of the order of reference. Paying due regard to the preliminary recitals, we think that all matters embraced in the pleadings were within the purview of the order, except the tenancy in common and the necessity for a sale, both of which were admitted; but, conceding that the question was not within the terms of the order, it was fully investigated and determined. All exceptions to the findings of the referee withdrawn, and the report in all respects approved and confirmed. Any defect in the order of reference, if it existed, is thereby fully cured. Morris v. Haas, 54 Neb. 579, 74 N. W. 828.

[5] Apart from all this, it has always been held that in proceedings for partition a plea of sole seisin could be entered before the clerk, and on transfer to the court in session that this issue would be determined as in an action of ejectment. Purvis v. Wilson, 50 N. C. 22, 69 Am. Dec. 773. In the original proceedings, while inconsistent with the other portion of his pleading and the prayer for relief, the allegation of plaintiff's petition amounted, in substance, to this: That he had a contract with defendants, his brother and sister, that they would convey him the land for taking care of his mother; and that he had paid the price. If this was established, defendants had no interest, and, recognizing this, they joined issue on these averments, denied the existence of the contract, and alleged that they were tenants in common, and asked for a sale. In this view, the existence of the contract was directly involved in the issue as to tenancy in common, and, in any event, the plaintiff should be estopped by the judgment. Carter v. White, 134 N. C. 466, 46 S. E. 983, 101 Am. St. Rep. 853; Weeks v. McPhail, 129 N. C. 73, 39 S. E. 732.

There is error, and, on question reserved, judgment must be entered for defendant.
Reversed.

From the judgment rendered the defendant appealed.

King & Kimball and Thos. S. Beall, for appellant. Justice & Broadhurst, for appellees.

BROWN, J. The assignments of error bring up for consideration practically three propositions.

1. The charge of his honor upon the fourth issue was erroneous, and the finding upon that issue alone would not be sufficient to uphold the judgment.

[1, 2] The act of the General Assembly Laws of 1889, c. 389 (Revisal 1905, § 956), has been heretofore construed, and it is held that "The presence and undue influence of the husband at the ceremony of privy examination would not vitiate a certificate in all respects regular, unless the grantee had notice of it, and the burden would be upon the plaintiffs to show such notice." Davis v. Davis, 146 N. C. 163, 59 S. E. 659; Hall v. Castleberry, 101 N. C. 155, 7 S. E. 706. In this connection, we will say that the concurring opinion of Clark, J., in Benedict v. Jones, 129 N. C. 474, 40 S. E. 223, is a clear presentation of the law and receives our indorsement. In it the learned judge points out strongly the great danger to the security of titles which would result, if the reasoning of the court on that case is carried to its logical conclusion, and well says: "It was, as is well known, to cure the effect of a decision of this court that a privy examination did not have the effect of a fine and recovery (as had been understood by the profession), that chapter 389, Laws 1889, was passed."

2. Is there any evidence of fraud?

[3] It is not for us to say that Penny acted fraudulently, but whether there was evidence enough to justify his honor in submitting that issue to the jury.

[4] All the evidence was introduced by the plaintiffs, and none by the defendants.

The evidence offered tends to prove that Moser was the owner of 20 shares of stock of the par value of $100 each in the High Point Planing Mill Company; that at the time of the transaction that corporation was insolvent, and it is a legitimate inference that Penny knew it. This stock was placed in Penny's hands for sale by Moser, who was to receive only $800 of the proceeds and Penny was to receive the remainder. Penny or his corporation actually received $1,200 for their part. Penny approached feme plaintiff to sell her the stock and to give him a mortgage on her house and lot. She at first declined and afterwards agreed to buy. She told Penny she knew nothing about the stock and relied on him. Penny assured her of its value, said the corporation owed but little and had an account due sufficient to pay. He told feme plaintiff that he owned stock in the planing mill and her husband could be secretary and treasurer at $75 a month with an increase, as the business grew, to $150 a month. The feme plaintiff further said: "Mr. Penny did not tell witness whose stock this was he was selling. He said Mr. Moser was dishonest, and that the firm—the reason they were standing still then and wasn't working, he said that they wanted to get Mr. Moser out; he was tricky and dishonest. Mr. Penny did not state that Mr. Moser was in the business further than that. Q. You understood it was Mr. Moser's stock you were buying? A. No, sir. Q. Whose stock did you understand it was? A. I did not know whose stock it was. He said he had bought out 20 shares and if witness would take $2,000 stock in it it would give witness and Mr. Penny the controlling interest." Penny further told plaintiff he had bought Loughlin and Dodamead's stock for himself, and further that "we would make so much money, 20 per cent. on the dollar from the start." Plaintiff further testifies that: "Mr. Penny said: 'Don't you appear to be over anxious about this. If you do Mr. Moser will back out. I don't think he wants to sell very badly, anyway.' So he looked out of the window and saw Mr. Moser and Mr. Ingold approaching, and he said, 'There comes the boys now.' And when they came in he reached his hand in his pocket and pulled out some stock and said, 'Well, Mr. Moser, I have bought out Mr. Dodamead since I saw you,' and Mr. Moser, he says, 'You have?' and he says, 'Yes,' and Mr. Moser says, 'You have been hustling since I saw you last.' Q. What occurred then? A. On the 17th I said to Mr. Penny, 'Is there any indebtedness on this stock?' He said: 'Nothing to amount to anything. I have looked over the books, and there is little indebtedness; but there is an outstanding account that will overbalance all the indebtedness on the stock. I will see all that out. Don't you have any uneasiness whatever. I will see that is all right. We will be running here in two or three days.'"

Penny did not offer himself as a witness and deny any of these charges. He did not show that he owned any stock in the planing mill, or that he had purchased Dodamead's or Loughlin's stock. The planing mill never commenced operations again and was very shortly forced into bankruptcy by its numerous creditors.

We will not recite further from the evidence in the record, and comment is unnecessary. That his honor was justified in submitting the first issue to the jury is manifest from a simple recital of the facts in evidence.

3. Is the Carolina Loan & Realty Company upon the facts in evidence bound by Penny's acts?

Upon this phase of the case we were strongly impressed by the forcible argument of counsel for defendant; but a close analysis of the evidence discloses that the principles of law so earnestly contended for by them do not apply.

[5] We recognize the general doctrine held by all courts that a corporation is not bound by the action or chargeable with the knowledge of its officers or agents in respect to a transaction in which such officer or agent is acting in his own behalf, and does not act in any official or representative capacity for the corporation. Bank v. Burgwyn, 110 N. C. 267, 14 S. E. 623; Le Duc v. Moore, 111 N. C. 516, 15 S. E. 888; Bank v. School Committee, 118 N. C. 383, 24 S. E. 792; Kennedy v. McKay, 43 N. J. Law, 283, 39 Am. Rep. 581. But that doctrine cannot be successfully invoked by the realty company under the facts of this case.

His honor substantially charged the jury upon the third issue that, if Penny acted for the corporation in this transaction, the company would be bound by his conduct, and that the realty company is presumed to know what its agent knew. This is elementary law and has been invoked repeatedly in the cases of insurance companies whose agents make false representations in selling insurance. Caldwell v. Insurance Co., 140 N. C. 100, 52 S. E. 252; Frazell v. Insurance Co., 153 N. C. 60, 68 S. E. 912.

What was the "transaction" in this case? It was the sale of the stock for Moser, and in order to carry out that main purpose, and realize a large profit, the loan of the money or mortgage by the realty company was incidentally necessary.

The plaintiff offers part of Penny's examination taken before a commissioner and parts of his answer. Penny states that he is president as well as secretary, treasurer, general manager, and the person who looks after all the affairs of the Carolina Loan & Realty Company, and "that it is true that the sale by said Moser of his 20 shares of stock in the said Planing Mill Company to the plaintiff at the price of $2,000 resulted in a benefit to this defendant of $1,200 in pursuance of an arrangement made with this defendant by the said Moser at the time said stock was listed with this defendant for sale, to the effect that such sum as might be realized upon the sale of said stock within the time limited, whether sale were effected by this defendant or by the defendant Moser, should belong to this defendant after the said Moser had received net therefor the sum of $800."

It thus appears that Penny was not selling his own stock, but was selling Moser's stock, which had been listed with him for sale at a huge commission. Now, with whom was that stock listed for sale, with Penny individually or his corporation, of which he was practically the "whole thing"?

The corporation was not engaged in a banking business. It loaned money, it is true, and it dealt in real estate; but it also was a dealer in stocks and bonds, and, when Moser listed his stock for sale through Penny, he listed it with the corporation. It is not to be supposed that Penny, the corporation officer, was acting adversely to the interests of his corporation that employed and paid him and was engaged in selling stocks on his own account, thereby constituting himself a rival in business to his corporation, and both occupying the same place of business.

[6] The law would not permit him to act in any such double capacity to appropriate business for himself belonging legitimately to his corporation and to reap the profits of it. Good faith to the stockholders forbade it.

Penny did not advance the money to pay for this stock, but it was the corporation's money, as evidenced by this check: "No. 479. Carolina Loan & Realty Company. Real estate, loans, stocks and bonds. High Point, N. C., May 18, 1909. Pay to the order of B. F. Brite and Laura Brite 2,000 dollars. Carolina Loan & Realty Co., By George T. Penny, Sec. Treas. Home Banking Co., High Point, N. C. Mtg. due 5-11-1911." Stamped on the face of the above check: "Cashed Home Banking Co., Paid May 18th, 1909. High Point, N. C." Indorsed on the back of the check: "B. F. Brite. Laura Brite." This check was at once turned over to Moser, and Penny admits he received his share of it.

It is unjust to Penny to suppose that he was using the corporation's funds in order to make $1,200 for himself in the sale of stocks, when dealing in stocks was a part of the corporate business intrusted to his management. It is a significant fact that in its separate answer in the case the realty company does not allege that Penny was not acting for it.

[7] In any view of the evidence in this case, his honor would have been warranted in charging the jury as matter of law that the Carolina Loan & Realty Company is bound by Penny's acts in selling Moser's stock to the feme plaintiff.

Upon a review of the entire record, we find no error.

BAILEY v. CITY OF WINSTON.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 751*)—TORTS —PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT WITH MUNICIPALITY—INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

A municipality cannot relieve itself from the duty to keep its streets in proper repair by transferring it to an independent contractor, and it will be responsible for the acts of a contractor if the matter involved in his contract is one of absolute duty owed by the city to an individual, or if the work is intrinsically dangerous, or if, even when properly done, it creates a nuisance, so that a municipality which authorizes the performance of work which necessarily renders the streets dangerous is liable for injuries due to the absence of barriers, lights, and other precautions for safety, but it will not be liable for acts of the contractor where the injury is through some negligence of the contractor in a matter in which the city owes no duty to the person injured.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 751*)—TORTS —INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR—SUPERVISION BY CITY OFFICERS.

A city will be liable for the negligence of a contractor in its employ where the work is performed under the direct control of the city's own officers.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 751*)—TORTS —INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR—STIPULATIONS AS TO LIABILITIES.

If otherwise liable, a city will continue liable, although it has no control over the workmen of a contractor, and although, in its agreement with the contractor, it is stipulated that he shall be liable for accidents occasioned by his negligence.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 763*)—TORTS —DEFECTS IN STREETS—CARE REQUIRED.

A municipality is under an absolute duty to put its streets and highways in passable condition, and to keep them so by the exercise of reasonable care and supervision.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 788*)—TORTS —DEFECTS IN STREETS—NOTICE.

Where streets become unfit for use by reason of defects which could not be anticipated or guarded against under ordinary circumstances, a city should have some notice of the defects, either actual or implied from the circumstances, but it is bound to exercise a reasonable and continuing supervision over its streets so as to know that they are in safe condition for use.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 791*)—TORTS—DEFECTS IN STREETS—CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.

Where a defect in a street has existed so long as to show that a city has omitted or neglected its plain duty of supervision, there is a constructive notice of the defect which charges it with liability for injuries resulting therefrom.

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 821*)—DEFECTS IN STREETS—ACTION FOR INJURIES—QUESTION FOR JURY—CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.

Upon the question of notice to a city implied from the continued existence of a defect in a street no fixed rule can be laid down as to the time required to charge it with notice, and the question is usually for the jury, giving proper consideration to the character of the structure, its material, the time it has been in existence and use, the nature of the defect, and other circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1750; Dec. Dig. § 821.*]

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 788*)—DEFECTS IN STREETS—EXPRESS NOTICE.

The doctrine of express notice is not relevant on the question of a city's notice of a defect in a street, when the very danger is created by the city itself or by some one under its direction, since there notice is necessarily implied, nor does it apply to the existence of a defect resulting from the negligence of a contractor, since the fact of the contract charges it with such notice.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. §§ 1641-1643, 1646, 1652; Dec. Dig. § 788.*]

9. TRIAL (§ 138*)—QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT—PRELIMINARY QUESTIONS.

It is the duty of the court in the first instance to decide whether there is any evidence of the facts assumed in a hypothetical question.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

10. TRIAL (§ 138*)—QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT—PRELIMINARY QUESTIONS.

Where a medical expert in a personal injury case had answered hypothetical questions, the action of the court in leaving it to the jury to say whether the facts assumed in such questions had been established by the proof and directing them to disregard the answers thereto if not so established is proper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Dec. Dig. § 138.*]

11. WITNESSES (§ 372*)—CREDIBILITY—BIAS.

A question tending to show bias of the witness is competent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Forsyth County; Adams, Judge.

Action by M. D. Bailey, Jr., against the City of Winston. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. No error.

This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for injuries sustained by his falling into an unprotected sewer ditch, which was being constructed on Liberty street, within the corporate limits of the city of Winston. The plaintiff alleged that the ditch was not properly guarded and protected on the night that he fell into it and was injured; whereas the defendant averred that it was sufficiently protected, and, if plaintiff suffered injury, he brought it upon himself by his own carelessness and negligence, and also by reason of the fact that he was intoxicated. The principal matters involved in the case were questions of fact, and the plaintiff offered evidence to sustain his contention; that is, that the ditch was not properly guarded and protected, and that he was not intoxicated. The defendant offered evidence to the effect that the plaintiff was a drinking man; that the ditch was protected by sufficient lights, ropes, and other barriers. Upon the issues thus raised the jury adopted the plaintiff's version of the facts, and rendered a verdict for him, as appears in the record. The defendant appealed from the judgment entered upon the verdict.

Manly, Hendren & Womble, for appellant.
L. M. Swink and J. E. Alexander, for appellee.

WALKER, J. It appeared that the ditch was two feet wide and nine feet deep, and was so near the path in common use, and in such an exposed position with reference to the street, that it became necessary to safeguard pedestrians and others using the sidewalk and street by placing lights or barriers, or both, if the situation required them, at or near the excavation, so as to prevent an injury to them by falling into the ditch. The city had the clear right to dig the ditch for the purpose of laying mains or pipes in the construction of a water or sewerage plant, and to employ the Bibb Company to do the work, but it did not, by reason of that fact, shift its duty and responsibility to those using its streets and who are injured by any defect in them, provided it had or should have had notice of the defect. The plaintiff had the right to use the street in going from the Kinzendorf Hotel, where he was boarding, to Gentry's Dog and Pony Show, under the circumstances shown in the evidence.

The jury found, under proper instructions from the court, that he was not guilty of contributory negligence, so that the only remaining question is: Was the ditch properly guarded? The defendant contended, and introduced evidence to prove, that it was, and that the injury was not caused by any negligence in that respect, either of the city or the independent contractor, assuming for the sake of discussion that the Bibb Company was such a contractor. Evidence was introduced by the plaintiff to show that there was negligence in the fact that no proper safeguards had been placed at or near the ditch to warn approaching pedestrians or others using the street of the danger. The defendant excepted to the charge of the learned judge (W. J. Adams) upon the ground that he had told the jury that it was the duty of the defendant to guard the dangerous place both with lights and barriers, but we do not so understand the very able and clear-cut charge of the judge; on the contrary, he instructed the jury that the defendant was required to exercise only ordinary care in the matter, and to guard the place by "lights or barriers," or in such other way as was reasonably sufficient for the protection and safety of the public. The charge was eminently fair and just to both parties, and, after a careful consideration of it, we think it stated fully, and with remarkable clearness, the principles of law applicable to the facts as the jury might find them to be, and is entirely without error. The city of Winston was under the duty to keep its streets in proper condition and repair, and, if in prosecuting any work of public improvement it became necessary to dig a ditch in one of them, the law requires that it should protect the public against injury therefrom by sufficiently guarding the dangerous excavation in the exercise of such care at least as a prudent man would use under like circumstances.

[1-3] The duty and liability of a municipality in this respect is well stated in Moll on Independent Contractors' and Employers' Liability, §§ 139-140, though we do not quote him literally: It is not easy to determine when a municipality is liable for the negligence of a contractor. It certainly cannot relieve itself from the duty which rests upon it by transferring that duty to the contractor. The corporation must see that the public is properly protected, and, if the contractor fails to perform that duty, the city is liable for the resulting damage. The city will be responsible for the acts of an independent contractor if the matter involved in his contract is one of absolute duty, owed by the city to an individual, or the work is intrinsically dangerous, or when properly done creates a nuisance. It is the general rule that a city will be liable for the negligence of a contractor in its employ, where the work is performed under the direct control of the city's own officers. If otherwise liable, a city will continue liable, although it has no control over the workmen of a contractor, and although it has in its agreement with the contractor stipulated that he shall be liable for accidents occasioned by his neglect. If the work be done by an independent contractor, the city will not be answerable where the injury is through some negligence of the contractor or his servant, not amounting to a failure of a duty which the city itself owes to the person injured; otherwise it would be liable for his neglect in like manner as where the work is executed by its officers. Whether the city will be jointly liable with a contractor must depend on the circumstances of the case.

If, for example, an excavation is left unguarded or unlighted by the contractor during the progress of the work, and the city has notice of its dangerous condition, express or implied, then the city will be liable to a traveler who without fault on his part is injured by driving or falling into it, because it would be liable if the excavation were made by a stranger. It may be said generally that it is as much the duty of a municipality to remove or guard against an obstruction to a public highway placed there by a third person as if it was so placed by the city itself, provided the city has actual or implied notice. The duty of the city to erect barriers and to establish signals in case of dangerous defects, etc., in the highway is not discharged by engaging a contractor to perform it. But, where the negligence relates to a matter with reference to which the corporation is under no special obligation, the liability rests on the contractor alone. The generally accepted doctrine in this country is said to be—"that a municipality which is charged with the duty of keeping certain highways in safe condition for public travel, and which has either authorized, or has been constrained by the operation of statute to permit, the performance of the work which, in the absence of certain precautions, will necessarily render one of these highways abnormally dangerous for the time being, is liable for injuries caused by the absence of these precautions, whatever may be its relation to the party who is actually engaged in doing the work. The municipality lies in this regard under a primary, absolute, or nondelegable duty, in the performance of which it is bound to use reasonable care and diligence." Moll Ind. Contractors, p. 243, note 71, and cases cited in that and the other notes to sections 139 and 140, especially Bennett v. Mt. Vernon, 124 Iowa, 537, 100 N. W. 349, where it is said: "If the matter involved was one of positive duty to the plaintiff, then, of course, the defendant town could not relieve itself by delegating the work to an independent contractor. Or if the work itself was intrinsically dangerous, or, when properly done, was likely to create a nuisance, the defendant town would be responsible for any damage resulting therefrom. Wood v. Ind. Dist., 44 Iowa, 30."

The same doctrine is stated in Brusso v. City of Buffalo, 90 N. Y. 679, as follows: First. "The defendant's counsel claims that, before the city can be made liable, it must be shown that it had notice of the dangerous condition of the street. But that rule does not apply to a case like this. The city was under an absolute duty to keep its streets in a safe condition for public travel, and was bound to exercise reasonable diligence and care to accomplish that end, and, when it caused this excavation to be made in the street, it was bound to see that it was carefully guarded, so as to be reasonably free from danger to travelers upon the street. It is not absolved from its duty and its responsibility because it employed a contractor to make the excavation. That is settled by a long line of decisions in this and other states. Storrs v. City of Utica, 17 N. Y. 104, 72 Am. Dec. 437; Chicago City v. Robbins, 2 Black, 418, 17 L. Ed. 298; Robbins v. Chicago City, 4 Wall. 657-659, 18 L. Ed. 427; Water Company v. Ware, 16 Wall, 566, 21 L. Ed. 485; City of St. Paul v. Seitz, 3 Minn. 297 (Gil. 205), 74 Am. Dec. 753; City of Logansport v. Dick, 70 Ind. 65, 36 Am. Rep. 166; Dillon on Municipal Corporations, §§ 791, 792, 793. There was a controversy upon the trial of the action as to whether the excavation at the place where the plaintiff was injured was properly guarded. The verdict of the jury is conclusive upon that point in favor of the plaintiff. Second. It is claimed that there was a stone walk across the street, and that, if the plaintiff had crossed upon that walk, he would not have been injured. But a person desiring to cross the street, either in the nighttime or in the daytime, is not confined to a crossing. He has a right to assume that all parts of the street intended for travel are reasonably safe; and if, in the nighttime, he desires to cross from one side to the other, and knows of no dangerous excavation in the streets or other obstruction, he may cross at any point that suits his convenience without being liable to the imputation of negligence. Raymond v. City of Lowell, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 524, 530, 53 Am. Dec. 57. Third. It was claimed that the proof showed that the place where this excavation was made was not in one of the streets of the city, but that it was in a turnpike belonging to the 'Buffalo & Aurora Plankroad Company.' I think the evidence satisfactorily shows that it was in one of the public streets of the city. It was within its limits, and, whether one of its streets or not, it was a highway used by the public, and that is sufficient to render it liable for the consequences of an excavation made under its direction and left unguarded."

[4] A municipality is under a positive or absolute duty to put its streets and highways in passable condition, and to keep them so by the exercise of reasonable care and supervision. The decisions of this court are to that effect. Bunch v. Edenton, 90 N. C. 431; Russell v. Monroe, 116 N. C. 720, 21 S. E. 550, 47 Am. St. Rep. 823; Dillon v. Raleigh, 124 N. C. 184, 32 S. E. 548; Foy v. City of Winston, 126 N. C. 381, 35 S. E. 609; Cresler v. Asheville, 134 N. C. 311, 46 S. E. 738. Numerous other cases might be cited from our own reports, but those already given will suffice to show what the doctrine is, with its limitations.

[5] Very instructive and useful cases on this point are Fitzgerald v. Concord, 140 N. C. 110, 52 S. E. 309; Brown v. Durham, 141

N. C. 252, 53 S. E. 513; Brewster v. Elizabeth City, 142 N. C. 11, 54 S. E. 784; Kinsey v. Kinston, 145 N. C. 108, 58 S. E. 912; Revis v. Raleigh, 150 N. C. 353, 63 S. E. 1049. They all tend to this conclusion that a city or town or village must keep its streets in good condition and repair so that they will be safe for the use of its inhabitants or of those entitled and having occasion to use them. If they become unfit for use by reason of defects which could not be anticipated, and consequently guarded against, under ordinary circumstances, the municipality should have some notice of the defect, either actual, or else implied from the circumstances, and in this connection it must be said that it is the duty of the city (and, of course, these principles apply generally to all forms of municipalities) to exercise a reasonable and continuing supervision over its streets in order that it may know they are kept in a safe and sound condition for use.

[6, 7] Sometimes notice of their defective condition is actual or express, again, it is constructive or implied, where, for instance, the defect has existed for such a length of time as to show that the city has omitted or neglected its plain duty of supervision, and, still again, it may be inferred by the jury from the facts in evidence. This principle is illustrated and was applied in Fitzgerald v. Concord, supra, where it is said, approving 1 Sh. & Red. on Negligence, § 369: "Unless some statute requires it, actual notice is not a necessary condition of corporate liability for the defect which caused the injury. Under its duty of active vigilance, a municipal corporation is bound to know the condition of its highways, and for practical purposes the opportunity of knowing must stand for actual knowledge. Hence, when observable defects in a highway have existed for a time so long that they ought to have been seen, notice of them is implied, and is imputed to those whose duty it is to repair them; in other words, they are presumed to have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable diligence." And, again, in the same section: "It is only reasonable that notice of latent defects should not be so readily presumed from their continuance as open and obvious defects. If these were so dangerous as to challenge immediate attention, the jury is justified in finding a very short continuance of such condition to constitute sufficient notice. Active vigilance is required to detect defects from natural decay in wooden structures, like bridges, plank sidewalks, and the like, which will necessarily become unsafe from age, but the most that ought to be required is the use of ordinary diligence by making tests and examinations with reasonable frequency to ascertain whether they are safe or not. It has been held that notice will not be implied unless the defect was so open and noticeable as to attract the attention of passers-by. But travelers are not charged with any duty to search for defects in a highway as road officers are, and the better rule in our judgment is that knowledge of a defect may be inferred, notwithstanding it may have escaped the attention of all travelers or even of an officer frequently passing by. It is not a question whether all passers-by actually notice a defect, but whether it was noticeable.' And the decided cases support the doctrine as stated. Jones v. Greensboro, 124 N. C. 310, 313, 32 S. E. 675; Kibele v. Philadelphia, 105 Pa. 41; Kunz v. Troy, 104 N. Y. 346, 10 N. E. 442, 58 Am. Rep. 508; Pomfrey v. Saratoga, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43. On the question of notice implied from the continued existence of a defect, no definite or fixed rule can be laid down as to the time required, and it is usually a question for the jury on the facts and circumstances of each particular case, giving proper consideration to the character of the structure, its material, the time it has been in existence and use, the nature of the defect, its placing," and other considerations not necessary to be stated.

The general duty of a municipality with reference to the condition of its streets is discussed in Gregg v. Wilmington, 155 N. C. 18, 70 S. E. 1070; Jeffress v. Greenville, 154 N. C. 490, 70 S. E. 919. The law applicable as between individuals is not the same when we come to consider the obligation of municipal authorities to the public, for in the latter case the duty to keep streets and highways in repair and free from dangerous pitfalls is a positive one, which they cannot, as public trustees, delegate to another to perform, and thereby relieve themselves from liability for nonperformance, or for negligence in the manner of doing the requisite work in the proper way.

[8] The doctrine of express notice is not relevant to the question when the very danger is created by the city itself or by some one under its direction, for there notice is necessarily implied. The principle is well stated by Moll, § 141, as follows: "If the act or omission of the independent contractor is a violation of some primary or inalienable duty of the city, such as that of keeping its streets in a reasonably safe condition for public travel, the city will be liable therefor. The duty of a city to exercise reasonable care, to the end that its highways, streets, sidewalks, etc., shall be reasonably safe for ordinary travel, is absolute in the sense that it is primary, and cannot be delegated so as to absolve it. The duty rests on a municipal corporation to keep its streets in a safe and passable condition, and where a contractor with the city failed to place proper guards about an excavation, thereby causing injury to a passer-by, the city was held liable. And the city is nevertheless liable for the unsafe condition of its streets even where it exercises no control over the contractor in respect of the manner of doing the work, except to see that it is done according to certain specifications. It is on sound principle that a city is responsible for injuries proceeding from dangerous and unguarded excavations left in its highways by an independent contractor, and the very fact of the contract charges the city with notice that the street is being dug up and puts it on inquiry as to whether any excavation made by the contractor is properly guarded and lighted. Nor can a municipality claim exemption from liability from defects in a street by reason of its not accepting the work of the contractor, where the defect has existed long enough to charge its officials with knowledge. A city is chargeable with notice of the existence of a dangerous obstruction in one of its streets, where such defect is the result of the negligence of contractors under the city, so as to dispense with the necessity of giving it express notice of its existence." Applying these well-settled principles to the facts before us, as evidently found by the jury, we have little difficulty in adjudging the liability of the defendant for the injury received by the plaintiff when he fell in the ditch.

[9, 10] There are some matters of evidence which require notice. The hypothetical questions put to the medical experts cannot be criticised for lack of evidence to support them. It was the duty of the judge in the first instance to decide whether there was any evidence of the facts assumed to exist, which he did, and then he left it to the jury to say whether the facts had been established by the proof, instructing them that, if they had not been, they should disregard the answers. We do not think the defendant can complain of the charge in this respect.

[11] The question tending to show the bias of one of the witnesses was competent, for it enabled the jury the better to determine the value of his testimony. It may have been slight, but there was enough evidence of a leaning towards the defendant to let it in, so that it might pass for what it was worth.

The case, it appears, was well tried, and is, as we look at the record, free from any error.

No error.

2. MARRIAGE (§ 25*)—LICENSING OFFICERS—ISSUING LICENSES—"REASONABLE INQUIRY."

Under Revisal 1905, § 2088, which declares that every register of deeds shall, on application, issue a marriage license, provided it shall appear to him probable that there is no legal impediment to such marriage, and that where either party to the proposed marriage is under 18 years no license shall be issued without the written consent of the parent, guardian, etc., and section 2090, which provides a penalty for issuing a license unlawfully, without "reasonable inquiry," the inquiry to be made is such as makes it probable that there is no legal objection to the marriage, and involves at least the idea that it should be made of some person known by him to be a reliable party, or, if unknown to him, information as to his reliability should be obtained from some person known by the officer to be reliable.

3. MARRIAGE (§ 25*)—LICENSING OFFICERS—ACTIONS AGAINST OFFICER—QUESTIONS OF LAW OR FACT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action under Revisal 1905, § 2090, imposing a penalty upon registers of deeds for unlawfully issuing a license, without reasonable inquiry, where there is a conflict of evidence upon the question as to whether due inquiry had been made, it should be submitted to the jury, and whether the register inquires as to the age of the party, by examining the witnesses or the applicant under oath, is only a circumstance; but, where the facts are established, what is reasonable inquiry becomes a question of law, and the court may peremptorily instruct the jury, and the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to show that the officer issued the license when he knew of the impediment to the marriage, or that it was forbidden by law, or when he had not made reasonable inquiry.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 927*)—PRESUMPTIONS—DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

5. MARRIAGE (§ 25*)—LICENSING OFFICERS—ISSUING LICENSES—ACTION AGAINST OFFICER—"REASONABLE INQUIRY."

In an action to recover the penalty under Revisal 1905, § 2090, for issuing a marriage license for the marriage of plaintiff's daughter while under the age of 18, without the written consent of the plaintiff, it appeared that defendant, as register, took the word of the prospective bridegroom and his friend as to the age of the daughter, and made no further inquiry of any one; that the register did not know the bridegroom or his friend, and that, if such statement had not been made, defendant would not have issued the license; that he did not ask if there was any objection to the marriage, or telephone to the place where her parents lived. Held, that the defendant failed to make reasonable inquiry as to the age of plaintiff's daughter, and that he was liable under the statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cabarrus County; Biggs, Judge.

Action by R. D. Joyner against J. F. Harris, for the recovery of a statutory penalty.

Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Montgomery & Crowell and H. S. Williams, for appellant. T. D. Maess, for appellee.

WALKER, J. This is an action to recover the penalty given by Revisal 1905, § 2090, for unlawfully issuing a marriage license to Martin Burrus and Julia B. Joyner, without proper inquiry as to the age of the prospective bride.

The statute, under which this suit was brought, is a wise and beneficent one; the object being to protect the parties themselves, and the community as well, from hasty and improvident matrimonial alliances, which eventually produce discord and unhappiness in the family—one of the essential units of our republican household—and are hurtful to society in many ways. Let us examine the case, in view of this main purpose of the law. Martin Burrus and Julia B. Joyner, by themselves, had consented to their marriage, but, in order to make it a valid union, it is required by the statute that he should be 16 years and she 14 years old (Revisal, § 2083), provided that, if they are under the age of 18 years, the consent of the person designated by the statute shall first be obtained, and if a register of deeds knowingly, or without reasonable inquiry, issues a license for the marriage of any two persons, either of whom is under that age, without the written consent required by law to be delivered to him (Revisal, § 2088), he forfeits the sum of $200, as a penalty, to any parent, guardian, or other person, standing in loco parentis, who may sue for the same. It is further provided that the register of deeds shall issue the license, if it appears to him probable that there is no legal impediment to the marriage. Revisal, § 2088.

[1, 2] It has been held that the several sections, and especially sections 2088 and 2090, being in pari materia, should be construed together, and when this is considered, the inquiry required to be made before issuing the license is such as makes it probable that there is no legal objection to the marriage. Bowles v. Cochran, 93 N. C. 398.

[3] With this general definition of a reasonable inquiry established, we find that the following rules have been adopted by this court, for the purpose of determining if such an inquiry or investigation has been made: (1) Where there is a conflict of evidence upon the question, it should be submitted to the jury to decide, under proper instructions from the court, whether due inquiry had been made. (2) Where the facts are admitted or established, what is reasonable inquiry becomes a question of law, and the court may instruct the jury to answer the issue according as it may decide the law upon the facts to be. Joyner v. Roberts, 114 N. C. 389, 19 S. E. 645. (3) The statute (Revisal, § 2088) does not require that the register shall inquire as to the age of the party by examining the witnesses or the applicant under oath, but merely declares that he may do so, and his doing or not doing so, in the exercise of his discretion, is only a circumstance for the jury to consider in finding whether the proper inquiry has been made. (4) While the court cannot prescribe any exact rule for the guidance of the officer, it would seem that "reasonable inquiry" involves, at least, the idea that it should be made of some person known by him to be a reliable party, or, if unknown to him, information as to his reliability should be obtained from some person who is known by the officer to be reliable. (5) The burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show that the officer issued the license when he knew of the impediment to the marriage, or that it was forbidden by the law, or when he had not made reasonable inquiry. Furr v. Johnson, 140 N. C. 157, 52 S. E. 664; Trollinger v. Boroughs, 133 N. C. 312, 45 S. E. 662. The fourth rule may be somewhat modified in its application by the particular facts and circumstances of the case in hand; what is due inquiry depending largely upon them.

[4] Let us now apply the law, as thus understood, to the facts of this case. The court instructed the jury, if they believed the evidence, to answer the first issue, "Yes," and the second issue, "No," and, if they did not believe the evidence, to reverse their answers, as the burden of the issues was upon the plaintiff. Under these instructions, the jury returned the following verdict:

"(1) Was the plaintiff's daughter, Julia Burrus, under 18 years of age at the time of her marriage? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Did the defendant issue the marriage license without plaintiff's consent, and without reasonable inquiry? Answer: Yes.

"(3) What amount, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover of the defendant? Answer: $200." The charge of the judge was equivalent to saying that there was no evidence which, if believed, entitled the defendant to the verdict, and this being so, we must view the evidence in the light most favorable to him.

We will, therefore, take his version of the facts, which in substance is as follows: Martin Burrus, the prospective groom, went to the register's office with his brother, Adam Burrus, and applied for the license. They were well dressed, and defendant says he thought they were trustworthy, and would not get him in trouble. He asked them if they were related to J. A. Harris, whom defendant knew very well, and one of them replied that he was his uncle. He inquired of Martin Burrus his age, and was told that he was 21 years old, and lived in No.

9 township with his father. He then stated the ages of his father and mother. Defendant then asked him as to the age of the young lady, and he answered that "she said she was 18." Defendant told him "that would not do—that is not the question"—but, "Is she 18, and will you swear it?" to which he replied that he would, and thereupon the license was issued, and defendant testified that, if he had not made that statement, he would not have issued the license. Martin Burrus also gave the names of her father and mother and their place of residence, and further stated that they all lived on Tom Bost's farm, within three or four hundred yards of each other. When he was asked to qualify as to the girl's age, he replied, "She said she was 18," but when he was again told that his answer would not do he swore that she was 18. Defendant knew the plaintiff, but did not know at the time that she was his daughter. He did not ask if there was any objection to the marriage. The two men answered the defendant's questions openly and frankly, and there was nothing in their manner or conduct to arouse suspicion. He knew there was a telephone to Bost's mill, where the girl's parents lived, but he did not use it. He had never seen the two young men before, and did not know anything about them up to that time, and issued the license solely upon their statement; they not being identified or vouched for by any one. There was no further inquiry by the defendant about the matter. The plaintiff's evidence varied a little from the defendant's, it appearing therefrom that the questions were addressed to the brother of the applicant, Adam Burrus, and the answers thereto given by him; but this makes little or no practical difference in the result. Plaintiff testified that defendant afterwards told him that he regretted the occurrence, and asked him not to think hard of him, and that "nobody else would get him in a hole like that again." The plaintiff's witness, Adam Burrus, differed with the defendant as to what he or his brother had said as to the age of the girl; he stating that they did not say that she was 18, but that "she had said so to him," and he had no reason to doubt her word. In this respect, defendant was corroborated by his witness, W. M. Weddington, who stated that the one who answered the questions signed the oath as to her age. The plaintiff testified that his daughter was a little over 14 years old at the time of the application for the license, and there was no evidence to the contrary as to her age.

[5] We do not think upon this statement of the facts, which is most favorable to the defendant, that he made the requisite inquiry. The two young men were entirely unknown to him, and it is perfectly apparent that they were either ignorant of the girl's age, or were attempting to suppress the truth as to it.

The defendant had no reason to rely upon them as men of good character, and as being trustworthy, for he knew absolutely nothing about them; and, besides, it should have been evident to him, or to any prudent man, under the same circumstances, that they were basing their opinion as to her age upon her own statement, and not upon their own knowledge. He could easily have obtained reliable information by the use of the phone, or by requiring them to produce some person, known to him, who would identify them as being the persons they had represented themselves to be, and who would testify as to their good character. This case is not, in its main features, unlike Cole v. Laws, 104 N. C. 651, 10 S. E. 172, the syllabus of which fairly states the facts and the ruling, and is as follows: "When a register of deeds issues a license for the marriage of a woman under 18 years of age, without the assent of her parents, upon the application of one of whose general character for reliability he was ignorant, and who falsely stated the age of the woman, without making any further inquiry as to his sources of information, held, that he had not made such reasonable inquiry into the facts as the law required, and he incurred the penalty for the neglect of his duty in that respect." And likewise, in Morrison v. Teague, 143 N. C. 186, 55 S. E. 521, it was held that, "in an action against a register of deeds to recover the penalty under Revisal, § 2090, for issuing the marriage license contrary to its provisions, where the uncontradicted evidence showed that the register took the word of the prospective bridegroom and his friend, neither of whom he knew, as to the age of the young lady, and made no further inquiry of any one, the court should have given the plaintiff's prayer for instruction that, as a matter of law, defendant failed to make reasonable inquiry as to the age of the plaintiff's daughter." To the same effect are the following cases: Williams v. Hodges, 101 N. C. 300, 7 S. E. 786; Trolinger v. Boroughs, supra; Laney v. Molkey, 144 N. C. 630, 57 S. E. 386. If we should hold that a register of deeds can satisfy himself as to the essential facts upon such an inadequate investigation as was made in this case, we would defeat the very object and purpose of the statute to throw safeguards about the young and inexperienced, who would, by reason of their youthful impulses, be liable to enter into so solemn and serious a relation lightly or unadvisedly, and not soberly, discreetly, and reverently, as they should do, and as the best interests of society require should be done. It was suggested that the defendant had just taken office, and intended no wrong. We do not doubt it, and it is a matter which might, perhaps, induce the plaintiff to relent in his prosecution, and constitutes a strong appeal to his generosity; but the law must be upheld, and ignorance of it is no excuse. The best way to compel obedience to it is by its strict enforcement. This will make the citizen and the officer more careful to observe it. We sympathize with the defendant, under the circumstances, but cannot help him. He has violated the law, and, if the plaintiff exacts it, must pay the penalty, as did Shylock, the Jew, of his victim.

There is no force in the contention that the witness Adam Burrus testified to the age of the girl, as given by her to him. He was manifestly merely repeating to the court what occurred before the register of deeds, and did not intend to state, independently and substantively, that she had told him her age. It was therefore no evidence for the defendant upon the first issue, conceding that it would have been, had he so testified.

No error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Adams, Judge.

Action by the Farrish-Stafford Company against the Charlotte Cotton Mills. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. Crawford Biggs and F. L. Fuller, for appellant. Tillett & Guthrie, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The case agreed, which embraces much correspondence unnecessary to set out, discloses that Eldredge Lewis & Co., commission merchants of New York, were the factors of defendant, sold its product on commission, and advanced it money as its needs demanded. To retain defendant's business, that firm became preferred stockholders in defendant corporation. By mutual consent the account was transferred to plaintiff, in consideration of which 250 shares of preferred stock of defendant were issued to plaintiff, for which it paid $25,000. It has held this stock for many years and received dividends at 7 per cent. annually thereon, aggregating $7,000. The defendant went into voluntary liquidation in May, 1908, under the provisions of section 1195 of the Revisal, and the directors, D. W. Oates, J. M. Oates, and R. M. Oates, became trustees in dissolution. These trustees have paid all the debts of the corporation, and converted into money all of its assets, and are now prepared to distribute these assets among those entitled thereto. There is not a sufficient amount to pay the preferred stockholders in full. The question before the court under the facts stated is whether the plaintiff is a stockholder, and therefore entitled only to its ratable share of the assets, or whether the plaintiff is a creditor, and entitled to be paid in full. The contract or agreement between the parties is contained in their correspondence, the substance of which is that plaintiff on August 29, 1903, in order to secure defendant's business and become its factor, offered to loan it $25,000, and take as collateral security the same amount in preferred stock. This proposition was declined; the defendant stating to plaintiff that it did not care to increase its indebtedness. Thereupon plaintiff at once wired defendant to forward certificate for 250 shares preferred stock, as check for same was being then mailed. At same time plaintiff wrote defendant, confirming the telegram, and saying: "Our understanding of the agreement between us is as follows: We are to represent the entire production of your mill and receive as compensation therefor 5 per cent. commission on all goods made and shipped, we to guarantee the accounts. We will remit you on the 15th and 1st of each month for all invoices in hand up to those dates. This arrangement to remain in effect just so long as we hold the $25,000 worth of preferred stock. Should you for any reason desire to change the account, you are to take up this stock at par."

[1] It is unnecessary to consider the feature of the case so learnedly argued by counsel on both sides as to the power of a corporation to redeem or retire the stock of one shareholder to the prejudice of others. It is elementary that a corporation as a rule must treat all shareholders of the same class alike.

[2] We are of opinion that the plaintiff was never a creditor of the defendant for the $25,000, and is only a preferred stockholder, and must share with the others of like class. The contingency has never happened which is referred to in the letter from which we have quoted when according to the agreement the defendant could be called on to redeem the stock. Defendant's account has never been changed, or transferred from plaintiff to another factor. The defendant has continued to do business continuously with plaintiff from that date until it has ceased to manufacture. The record shows that at the time the defendant went into voluntary liquidation in May, 1908, the plaintiff had on hand a stock of goods of the defendant which it continued to sell and receive its commissions until October 23, 1909, when the last goods were sold. At the time of the sale of the last goods which the plaintiff had on hand, the account, being balanced, disclosed that the plaintiff owed the defendant on account $946.31, and the plaintiff still owes this amount to the defendant on account. The agreement did not mention the voluntary retirement of the defendant from business, or its failure in business and subsequent insolvency. Those contingencies do not seem to have been in the contemplation or thoughts of either party. Evidently the plaintiff was willing to take the chances as those.

We find nothing in the agreement which could prevent the defendant from going out of business, or which required it to take back the stock in case it did.

The judgment is affirmed.

McCALL v. SUSTAIR.

LIBEL AND SLANDER (§ 123*)—AMBIGUOUS WORDS—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where the evidence showed that defendant had charged that plaintiff had "taken or gotten" cotton of another, and that defendant and his brother had attempted to settle the matter by having plaintiff pay for the cotton, and defendant testified that he did not mean to charge plaintiff with larceny of the cotton, the words "taken or gotten" were ambiguous, and whether they were intended to charge larceny, and were so understood by the hearers, was properly submitted to the jury.

Walker and Hoke, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Biggs, Judge.

Action by M. D. McCall against J. T. Sustair. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

McCall & Smith, Burwell & Cansler, and R. S. Hutchison, for appellant. Stewart & McRae and Maxwell & Keerana, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This is an action for slander, on an allegation that the defendant had charged the plaintiff with stealing cotton; said charge having been made on three several occasions, viz., to John Cochrane, to L. A. Ferguson, and to Charles Simpson. Neither justification nor privilege was pleaded.

but a denial of having charged the plaintiff with larceny.

The issues submitted were: "Did the defendant speak and publish of and concerning the plaintiff the alleged slanderous words set out in article 1 of the complaint, with the intent to thereby charge the plaintiff with the crime of larceny?" This paragraph alleged that the charge was made to one John Cochrane. The second issue was in the same words, as to the alleged conversation with L. S. Ferguson, and the third issue was in the same words, as to the alleged conversation with Charles Simpson. There was no exception to the issues. The judge in charging the jury told them that the charge of larceny need not be made in express terms, by declaring that the person is a thief, or that he has stolen, but the imputation may be made by the use of any apt words which, in connection with the other words and in view of the circumstances under which they are used, naturally import that the person spoken of has committed the crime of larceny, and that the words were used in that sense. And further charged them that if they found "from the greater weight of evidence that the defendant spoke to or in the hearing of John Cochrane words which should be reasonably construed to mean a charge of larceny of cotton by McCall from J. P. Sustair, and that defendant intended to charge him with larceny in uttering said words," they would answer the first issue, "Yes." The plaintiff excepted because the judge inserted the words "and that defendant intended to charge him with larceny in uttering said words."

The plaintiff also excepted because the court charged the jury: "The words to be slanderous must have been spoken with the intent to charge the crime of larceny, and the words used under the circumstances must be so understood by the hearers." The judge used the same instructions, that there must be an intent on the part of the defendant to charge the plaintiff with larceny, in instructing the jury on the second and third issues. This presents substantially the controversy submitted on appeal.

The proof was not that the defendant had used the word "stole," but that he said to Cochrane that his brother had "ketched McCall taking some pokes of cotton out of his cotton patch the night before." As to the second issue, Ferguson testified that he "told defendant that he didn't doubt that Thomas had lost the cotton, but didn't believe that Dave McCall got it, to which defendant replied, 'I do,' and that defendant further said, 'I believe Dave McCall got it, for Thomas said he had seen him get it.'" As to the third issue, Simpson testified that the "defendant told McCall that he had come down to make up with him," and said, "Now, we have come up here to make up this trouble between you and Thomas about taking Thomas' cotton," to which McCall replied, "I never took any cotton from Thomas, or any one else.' The defendant replied: 'Thomas saw you take it, and you know you got it. Thomas says you got it.' And McCall replied that he didn't get it, and was very sorry they accused him of getting it, and he had not taken cotton from any one."

If the evidence had been that the words used were unequivocal that the plaintiff "had stolen the cotton," then the judge would have been justified in charging the jury that if they believed the evidence they should answer the issue "Yes." But here the words proven were that the plaintiff had "taken the cotton." The judge therefore properly charged the jury that the burden was upon the plaintiff to find whether the words, in view of the circumstances under which they were used, naturally imported that the persons spoken of had committed the crime of larceny, and that the words were used with the intent to charge the plaintiff with larceny in uttering said words. The words were not an express charge of larceny, because a "taking" of cotton is not necessarily larceny. Whether the use of that word was intended to convey, under the surrounding circumstances, a charge that the defendant had "stolen" the cotton was a matter which was properly left to the jury.

In Lucas v. Nichols, 52 N. C. 36, the court said: "The words used being ambiguous and capable of a double construction, it was proper for the judge to leave it to a jury to decide under the circumstances whether it was intended thereby to charge the plaintiff with a crime. The plaintiff contends here that this well-settled principle is not in point, because only one opinion could be drawn as to the meaning of the language used. But we do not think so, and neither did the jury to whom the matter was submitted. They have found, as a matter of fact, that the defendant did not intend to charge the plaintiff on either occasion with larceny. We cannot know how far the jury may have been influenced by the fact that, if the defendant intended to charge the plaintiff with larceny, his conduct in attempting to make up the matter with him would have been the compounding of a felony, and therefore that it was unlikely that he charged the plaintiff with the felonious taking of the cotton."

No witness testified that the word "steal" was used at any time, but in all the conversations the word used was "take," or "got," which does not necessarily imply a "felonious taking," and as to the surrounding circumstances there is the fact that there was an attempt by the defendant and his brother to settle the matter by getting the plaintiff to pay for the cotton. There is also the testimony of the defendant that he did not mean to charge the plaintiff with stealing the cotton, and did not think that the plaintiff had stolen it, and had never told any one that he thought the plaintiff had stolen the cotton. In Hampton v. Wilson, 15 N. C. 470, Ruffin, C. J., said that, unless the words used could bear only one construction, "it was for the jury to pass upon the intent, to be collected from the mode, extent, and circumstances of the publication." To same effect is Studdard v. Linville, 10 N. C. 474, where the court laid down the rule: "Words to be slanderous must be spoken with an intent to slander, and must be so understood by the hearer." That case has been approved in McBrayer v. Hill, 26 N. C. 139; Pugh v. Neal, 49 N. C. 369.

The words "took" and "got" being susceptible of more than one construction, the court properly left the question of the intent and meaning of the language to the jury to say whether the hearers would reasonably have construed them as charging larceny of the cotton. "Where, in an action for slander, the words are ambiguous; but admit of slanderous interpretation, it should be left for the jury to say, under all the circumstances, what meaning was intended." Reeves v. Bowden, 97 N. C. 32, 1 S. E. 549; Lucas v. Nichols, 52 N. C. 32. The intent with which the words were used was left to the jury in State v. Benton, 117 N. C. 788, 23 S. E. 432; Webster v. Sharpe, 116 N. C. 470, 21 S. E. 912, and Hudnell v. Lumber Co., 133 N. C. 169, 45 S. E. 532.

In Wozelka v. Hettrick, 93 N. C. 13, relied on by the plaintiff, the defendant admitted that he spoke the words charged, which were slanderous per se, and the court held that an honest belief in the truth of the charge was not a defense, and could be considered by the jury only in mitigation of damages.

In the recent case of Fields v. Bynum, 72 S. E. 449, at this term, it was not contended that the words spoken were of doubtful import, as in this case; but they plainly and unequivocally charged that the plaintiff, Fields, in the nighttime, had burned, not one, but two, sawmills of the defendant. The language there used is set out in the opinion by Mr. Justice Brown, and is too plain to admit of any doubt as to its meaning. It was not even contended that the words were not actionable per se. The defense was that the occasion upon which they were spoken was privileged. The difference between that case and this is plainly manifested in the statement of facts.

No error.

WALKER, J. (dissenting). A man's intention cannot, in the nature of things, have anything to do with the slanderous character of his words. He is to be judged by what his words mean, and not by what his secret intention may have been. The law gives an action for slander because of the dangerous tendency of the words. You violate a fundamental maxim of the law when you say that a man may utter words which, on their very face, mean one thing, defamatory of his neighbor, and yet another, because he did not intend that they should have that meaning. It is not his intent that does the harm, but his actual words. It is a well-known maxim of the law that a man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts. It ignores his hidden purpose, and measures his liability by what he has done or said, if it is injurious in its consequences. His secret intention is something intangible, and sometimes unprovable, and he must therefore be held to have meant what his words import. If the doctrine of the majority is to be declared as the law, a man may utter words outrageously derogatory of his neighbor, and, unless they constitute what the law regards as a slander per se, he is not liable, unless he had the bad motive. This cannot be the law. I have the highest authority for saying that it is not. "In actions for defamation, it is immaterial what meaning the speaker intended to convey. He may have spoken without any intention of injuring another's reputation, but if he has in fact done so he must compensate the party. He may have meant one thing and said another; if so, he is answerable for so inadequately expressing his meaning. If a man in jest conveys a serious imputation, he jests at his peril. Or he may have used ambiguous language which, to his mind, was harmless, but to which the bystanders attributed a most injurious meaning; if so, he is liable for the injudicious phrase he selected. What was passing in his own mind is immaterial, save in so far as his hearers could perceive it at the time. Words cannot be construed according to the secret intent of the speaker. 'The slander and the damage consist in the apprehension of the hearers.'" Newell on Slander, p. 301, § 22.

In Belo v. Smith, 91 Tex. 221, 42 S. W. 850, the court said substantially that in an action for using defamatory words it is not so much the idea which the speaker or writer intends to convey, as what he does in fact convey. If the language used may import a slanderous charge, its meaning must be ascertained from the words as commonly understood, and as to how it would impress the bystanders, and not from what the defendant intended by it. The intention of the speaker is material, not on the question of liability, but only as bearing on the question of damages. The cases supporting the principle just stated are very numerous, and emanate from courts of the highest authority upon the subject. King v. Sassaman (Tex.) 54 S. W. 304; Dunlevy v. Wolferman, 106 Mo. App. 46, 79 S. W. 1165; Williams v. McKee, 98 Tenn. 139, 38 S. W. 730; Short v. Acton, 33 Ind. App. 361, 71 N. E. 505; Nicholson v. Rust (Ky.) 52 S. W. 933; Hamlin v. Fantl, 118 Wis. 594, 95 N. W. 955; Jackson v. Williams, 92 Ark. 486, 123 S. W. 751, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 840; Hatch v. Potter, 2 Gilman (Ill.) 725, 43 Am. Dec. 88; Holmes v. Jones, 147 N. Y. 59, 41 N. E. 409, 49 Am. St. Rep. 646. In Rodgers v. Kline, 56 Miss. 808, 31 Am. Rep. 389, the court said: "The absence of this intent or purpose does not per se exonerate the publishers of the article from responsibility, if in fact such language was used in it as would inflict an illegal injury on plaintiff; for the injury to him would be all the same, whether it was the result of design on the part of defendants, or of their carelessness and negligence."

I have not discussed the question whether the words used, being in their nature an unequivocal, though not direct, charge of larceny, are actionable per se. There is authority for saying that they are, and similar words have been held to constitute slander per se. Estes v. Antrobus, 1 Mo. 197, 13 Am. Dec. 496; Hinesley v. Sheets, 18 Ind. App. 612, 48 N. E. 802, 63 Am. St. Rep. 356; Alcorn v. Bass, 17 Ind. App. 500, 46 N. E. 1024; Bornman v. Boyer, 3 Bin. (Pa.) 515, 5 Am. Dec. 380. In Alcorn v. Bass, supra, the court said: "If the words charged, taken in connection with the circumstances under which they are alleged to have been spoken, were calculated to induce the hearers to suspect that the plaintiff was guilty of the crime of larceny, they were actionable. Drummond v. Leslie, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 453. The words alleged to have been spoken by appellant, 'Well, I believe you took it,' were not actionable per se, but they might be so by reason of extrinsic facts, including other words spoken in the same conversation." See, also, Wozelka v. Hettrick, 93 N. C. 10, which seems to be practically to the same effect.

In this case, the words uttered, under any possible or reasonable construction of them, clearly and unmistakably implied a charge of slander, and they present a very aggravated case. The use of them was the equivalent of saying that the defendant had stolen the corn, and therefore, they amounted to a charge of larceny; in other words, they meant that the plaintiff had committed larceny, and nothing else. The law does not permit a man to clearly insinuate, in the presence and hearing of others, and in the most insulting way, that his neighbor, who is also present, has stolen corn, and excuse himself because he did not say, in so many words, and in direct and positive speech, that he had stolen it. The insinuation, under the circumstances, stands for the express charge, for it does just as much harm, and tends to a breach of the peace. If a fight had ensued, we would not hesitate to hold the defendant guilty of an affray, because of the provocation he gave. I cannot well distinguish the words in this case from those which were held, at this term, in Fields v. Bynum, 156 N. C. —, 72 S. E. 449, to be actionable, except in this respect: That they are more offensive and more significant of a purpose to slander and defame the plaintiff. In that case the defendant accused the plaintiff of burning the mill, and added that his neighbors believed it, as he burnt it last June; while in this case the defendant plainly accused the plaintiff of stealing the cotton, if his words mean anything at all. What were they? "I have been over to my brother Tom's, helping to watch his cotton, as Dave McCall has been taking it." That his brother had caught him "taking some pokes of cotton out of the patch the night before." He said to plaintiff that his brother had told him he had taken the cotton, and he had better fix it up. This was in the presence of Charles Simpson. Even after plaintiff had denied taking the cotton, he repeated the charge against him, saying, "Thomas saw you take it, and you know you got it," and upon further denial, he persisted in making the accusation. In the Fields Case, there was no more unequivocal charge of arson than in this case of larceny. In both cases, the words imputed but one thing—the perpetration of a felony; in the one case, arson, and in the other, larceny—and it is impossible to make anything else out of them. In the Fields Case, the words were not privileged because of the time, place, and manner of using them. That was one question in the case; the other was whether they were actionable, to which we gave an affirmative answer.

But it is said that the issues submitted were those raised by the plaintiff's own allegations and the denials of the answers. I do not so understand the allegations of the complaint. The words are set out with an innuendo, the office of which is to show the meaning and application of the charge, and is merely explanatory of the preceding words. It is said to mean no more than "id est" (that is), or "scilicet" (a word used in pleadings, as introductory to a more particular statement of matters previously mentioned in general terms). Black's Dict. (1st Ed.) 626; 25 Cyc. 449. It is intended to disclose the injurious sense imported by the charge. 25 Cyc. 451. Where the words are actionable per se, or the meaning of the publication is plain and unambiguous, the use of it is not required, as its peculiar function is to point the meaning of the words. It has no reference to the intention of the speaker who made the charge. It is what he says, and his words mean, and not what he intended, that hurts, or makes his victim smart under his plain accusation, and so it has been said that want of actual intent to injure furnishes no legal excuse. Read, then, the complaint in the light of these principles, and we find that nothing is said about intent, but everything about the meaning of the defendant's words, if it was necessary to explain that which was perfectly intelligible. No reasonable man in that audience could have heard the words without knowing instantly, and without the trouble of thinking, what the defendant meant. It was therefore prejudicial error to inject into the issues submitted by the court the question of intent. The court should have accepted, and submitted to the jury, the issues tendered by the plaintiff. The charge also was erroneous, in that it made the liability of the defendant turn entirely upon the intent with which the words were used, and not upon their meaning and the impression they made, and were calculated to make, upon his hearers; or at least the court laid too much emphasis upon the intent, and misled the jury. They may have found the words to have been slanderous, and yet gave the verdict against the plaintiff, because they did not find that he had the intent to slander. This error in the charge is the subject of several of the assignments of error, and permeates the entire charge. It is more pronounced in the instruction that, "Words to be slanderous, must be spoken with the intent to charge the crime of larceny," which is duly excepted to in the second assignment of error. I do not understand that to be the law, but rather the meaning and effect of the words which are used, without regard to the intent, which would not injure, if the words had not been spoken.

My conclusion is that there should be a new trial for the alleged error.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 155*)—APPEAL—TIME FOR TAKING.

Under Revisal 1905, § 608, requiring an appeal from a justice's judgment to be docketed at the next ensuing term of the superior court, as construed to mean the next term beginning more than 10 days after rendition of the judgment appealed from, an appeal from a justice's judgment, rendered July 22, 1910, was properly dismissed, where the appeal was not docketed until March 27, 1911, there having been regular terms of the superior court in July and November, 1910, since the only case in which an appeal can be docketed after the next ensuing term is by consent, or when there has been no laches on appellant's part.

Brown, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mitchell County; Long, Judge.

Action by E. Peltz and another against J. Milton Bailey. From an order dismissing defendant's appeal from a justice's judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. L. Lambert, Councill & Yount, and Black & Ragland, for appellant. Chas. E. Greene, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. This is an appeal from an order dismissing an appeal from a justice of the peace. The judge finds the facts as follows:

The judgment was rendered by a justice of the peace July 22, 1910. The defendant appealed, and gave notice thereof in open court. The justice was doubtful whether his fee of 30 cents was paid, but upon conflicting evidence the court found that it was. The next term of the superior court began July 25th, and the next regular term was held in November. The appeal was not sent up till March 27, 1911. At November term the defendant attended court, but was informed by his attorneys that the cause could not be tried at that term, and returned home. Neither the defendant nor his counsel asked the clerk, nor examined the docket at that term to see, whether the cause was docketed or not; nor was any recordari asked for; nor was there any offer at that term to docket the case.

The appellee has rights, as well as the appellant. The failure to docket the appeal in this case at the November term was negligence on the part of the appellant, which entitled the appellee to have the appeal dismissed. This point has been so often held by this court that it admits of a mild surprise that it can again be presented. In Pants Co. v. Smith, 125 N. C. 588, 34 S. E. 552, the court held that an appeal from a justice of the peace should be dismissed, on motion of the appellee, "if not docketed for trial at the next succeeding term of the superior court, if it began more than 10 days after judgment rendered." The court further said that this provision of the statute was "reasonable, in order to prevent further delay and put an end to litigation in a reasonable time"—citing State v. Johnson, 109 N. C. 852, 13 S. E. 843; Ballard v. Gay, 108 N. C. 544, 13 S. E. 207; Davenport v. Grissom, 113 N. C. 38, 13 S. E. 78.

In Davenport v. Grissom, supra, the court held that an appeal from the judgment of a justice of the peace, rendered more than 10 days before the next ensuing term of the superior court, should be docketed at that term, and that an attempted docketing at a subsequent term is a nullity. Hence that such appeal was not in the superior court, and the plaintiff could not take a nonsuit. In that case the court held that the judge properly held that he "had no discretion to permit the appeal to be docketed at a subsequent term to the one to which it should have been returned. The appellant had his remedy (if in no default) by an application for a recordari at the first ensuing term of the superior court after appeal taken. Boing v. Railroad, 88 N. C. 62." This case has been cited since with approval. Pants Co. v. Smith, supra; Johnson v. Andrews, 132 N. C. 380, 43 S. E. 926; Johnson v. Reformers, 135 N. C. 386, 47 S. E. 463; Blair v. Coakley, 136 N. C. 407, 48 S. E. 804; McKenzie v. Development Co., 151 N. C. 278, 65 S. E. 1003.

In Johnson v. Andrews, supra, the appellant was held excused, because the return to the appeal was delivered to the clerk, and 50 cents was paid him by the appellant to docket the appeal, and, there being no civil docket made up at that term, the appellant asked the clerk if the appeal had been docketed, and was told by him that it had been; hence the appellant was in no default, and was entitled to have his case tried. In the present case, the appellant did not pay the clerk for docketing the appeal, and made no inquiry as to whether it had been sent up, or whether it had been docketed; and neither he nor his counsel paid any attention to the matter. The appellee had the right under the statute and the repeated decisions of the court to consider the litigation terminated.

Revisal 1905, § 606, requiring an appeal from the justice of the peace to be docketed at the next ensuing term of said court which the court has held, means the next ensuing term "which begins more than 10 days after the judgment in the magistrate's court"; and the statute provides further that the case shall be triable at such first term of the superior court at which the appeal is required to be docketed. The courts have no more right to dispense with such requirement as to docketing an appeal in the superior court than to disregard the similar provision as to docketing an appeal in this court. To further expedite the trial of appeals from justices, Revisal, § 609, provides that such cases shall be tried upon the original papers. The only cases in which an appeal can be docketed, either in the superior court or in this court, after the next ensuing term is when there has been no laches on the part of the appellant, or when there is the consent of parties. Jerman v. Gullledge, 129 N. C. 242, 39 S. E. 835.

In McKenzie v. Development Co., 151 N. C. 277, 65 S. E. 1008, this court reviewed the decisions and reaffirmed the ruling that: "An appeal from a justice of the peace must be docketed at the next ensuing term of the superior court, commencing more than 10 days after the notice of appeal. An attempted docketing at a later term is a nullity." Revisal, §§ 607, 608. And further reiterated what was said in Pepper v. Clegg, 132 N. C. 318, 43 S. E. 906: "That the employment of counsel does not excuse the client from giving proper attention to the case. McLean v. McLean, 84 N. C. 386; Vick v. Baker, 122 N. C. 98 [29 S. E. 64]; Norton v. McLaurin, 125 N. C. 185 [34 S. E. 269]"—to which was added, "When a man has a case in court, the best thing he can do is to attend to it."

The courts have sufficient employment to decide the cases which are presented to them on the merits, without taking up valuable time to consider pleas to excuse the negligence of parties who do not think enough of their appeals to attend to them in the time provided by statute. After such time, the appellee is entitled to consider the litigation at an end.

The judgment dismissing the appeal is affirmed.

BROWN, J. (dissenting). Upon the facts as found by the judge of the superior court, the defendant took an appeal in open court from the judgment rendered, and paid the fees of the justice of the peace fixed by law, and demanded that the transcript be forwarded to the superior court. This was not done. I think the defendant did all the law required of him, and that it was the duty of the justice to forward the appeal without further request. Having done all the law required, I think the defendant ought not to be charged with the justice's neglect, and that the case should be docketed as upon recordari. Where there is no substantial negligence upon part of a litigant, his cause should not be dismissed. The law favors trials upon the merits.

Appeal from Superior Court, Montgomery County; Daniels, Judge.

Suit by J. C. Currie and others against the Golconda Mining & Milling Company and O. M. Allen, Jr. Judgment for plaintiffs by default, and motion by defendants to set aside judgment. Judgment set aside for irregularity, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

This is a motion to set aside a judgment for irregularity.

The summons was issued on the 3d day of March, 1910, against the Golconda Mining & Milling Company and O. M. Allen, Jr. Both defendants were nonresidents, and, as far as the record discloses, the only property owned by the said Allen is a debt of $18,000 due him by said Golconda Company, which is a corporation owning property in this state, but not doing business therein when the action was commenced. A warrant of attachment was issued at the time of the issuing of the summons, and the return thereon shows that it was levied on said debt of $18,000 and on the property of said corporation. A copy of the summons against the Golconda Company was left with the Secretary of State in accordance with Rev. § 1243, on March 19, 1910. An order of publication of summons and of the attachment was procured against both defendants on the 15th day of March, 1910. The publication began on the 24th day of March, 1910, and was continued once a week for four weeks, the last publication being on April 14, 1910. The term of court at which the judgment was rendered began on the 18th day of April, 1910. Within the first three days of said term, the plaintiffs filed their complaint, with the following form of verification thereon: "J. C. Currie, one of the plaintiffs, being duly sworn, deposes, and says that the foregoing complaint is true of his own knowledge, except as to those matters and things therein stated on information and belief, and as to those he believes it to be true. Witness my hand, this 18th day of April, 1910. Hiram Freeman, Justice of the Peace."

They allege as to the defendant Allen a promise to pay them $5,000 as the purchase price of certain property on certain conditions, and that the conditions have been performed. They also allege: That said property was sold by said Allen to the Golconda Company, and that it is indebted to him in the sum of $18,000 for the same, and that the purchase price of $5,000 agreed to be paid by the defendant O. M. Allen, Jr., to the plaintiffs for their interests in the tracts of land aforesaid was included in the $18,000 agreed to be paid by the defendant the Golconda Mining & Milling Company to the said Allen for the purchase price of said tracts of land, and the said Allen in securing said agreement from the defendant the Golconda Mining & Milling Company to pay the $18,000 purchase price of said property, became the agent or trustee of the plaintiffs to the extent of $5,000 of said purchase price agreed to be paid by the defendant the Golconda Mining & Milling Company for said property, and said indebtedness of the defendant the Golconda Mining & Milling Company to the defendant O. M. Allen, Jr., was contracted for the benefit of the said plaintiffs to the extent of $5,000 of said $18,000, and in pursuance of the agreement hereinbefore alleged and the agreement referred to herein as "Exhibit A," and the defendant the Golconda Mining & Milling Company thereby became liable to the plaintiffs in the said sum of $5,000 for the purchase price of the interests of the plaintiffs in and to the lands and property hereinbefore set forth. That thereafter the defendant O. M. Allen, Jr., pursuant to the agreement hereinbefore set forth, assigned, transferred, and set over to the plaintiffs the indebtedness due from the defendant the Golconda Mining & Milling Company to the defendant O. M. Allen, Jr., for the purchase price of said tracts of land, as aforesaid, to the extent of $5,000 thereof, with interest on the same from the time the defendants the Golconda Mining & Milling Company and O. M. Allen, Jr., are due and owing to the plaintiffs the said sum of $5,000, with interest thereon from the said 19th day of January, 1904, until paid.

Upon the hearing of the motion, the following judgment was rendered:

"This cause coming on to be heard upon the motion of the defendants to set aside the judgment rendered herein at April term, 1910, of Montgomery superior court, and being heard upon the complaint and affidavits filed by the parties, the court finds the following facts:

"First. That judgment by default final was rendered in this action at April term, 1910, of said court, and that motion to set aside the said judgment was made returnable to July term, 1911, of said court, and the said motion was continued by consent and heard at Lexington, in the county of Davidson, on this the 21st day of August, 1911.

"Second. That service of summons in the case was made upon the defendants through the Secretary of State and also by publication, but publication of summons and notice of attachment by publication were begun immediately after the summons issued, and not after 30 days from the issuing of said summons.

"Third. That the plaintiffs at the return term of the summons in this action offered testimony as to the proof of the claims set up in the complaint.

"Fourth. That the defendants have a good and meritorious defense to the action of the plaintiffs.

"Fifth. That as to the first cause of action the complaint does not set forth a contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant corporation with sufficient definiteness and certainty and of the nature and character required by the statute for the rendition of a judgment by default final at the return term.

"Sixth. That the defendant O. M. Allen at the time referred to in the complaint after the organization of the defendant corporation was the president of said corporation.

"Seventh. That as to the first and second causes of action, the complaint sets forth a contract between the plaintiffs and the defendant O. M. Allen, Jr., with sufficient definiteness and certainty and of the nature and character required by law for the rendition of a judgment by default final as against said defendant Allen.

"Eighth. That April term, 1910, of Montgomery superior court began on the 18th day of April, 1910. * * *

"Tenth. That this action was begun in the superior court of Montgomery county, N. C., on the 3d day of March, 1910, the summons issued therein being returnable to April term, 1910, of said court, the summons in said case being issued both to Montgomery county and to Wake county. That the summons issued to the sheriff of Montgomery county was returned, 'No officer or agent of the defendant the Golconda Mining & Milling Company upon whom process against the defendant can be served can be found in Montgomery county,' and summons issued to the sheriff of Wake county was served by the sheriff of said county on March 19, 1910, as shown by the return thereon made by leaving a true copy of the summons with J. Bryan Grimes, Secretary of State of the state of North Carolina, and by paying him 50 cents at the instance of the plaintiffs in said cause. That, upon affidavits made as shown by the judgment roll in said action, the summons and notice of the issues of the warrant of attachment therein was also served by publication as shown by said judgment roll, and a warrant of attachment was issued against said defendant the Golconda Mining & Milling Company on the 16th day of March, 1910, which said warrant was on the 17th day of March, 1910, levied by the sheriff of Montgomery county upon the property described and referred to in the judgment rendered in this cause and the complaint herein filed, and that thereafter and within five days from said levy said levy was certified by the said sheriff to the clerk of the superior court of Montgomery county, and the same was docketed on the judgment docket of said court as shown by the judgment roll in this action. That within the first three days of the April term, 1910, of the superior court of Montgomery county, it being the term to which said summons were returnable, the plaintiffs filed the complaint appearing in the judgment roll and record, and there was no answer filed to the same during said term. That the plaintiffs moved for judgment upon said complaint by default for want of an answer immediately before the adjournment of said April term, 1910, of said court, and offered evidence to establish the claims and demands of the plaintiffs, and the judgment appearing in the judgment roll in this cause in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendants was rendered by the court at said term.

"Eleventh. That the Golconda Mining & Milling Company, defendant, is a foreign corporation, created and organized under the laws obtaining in the District of Columbia. In the United States, and on or about the 11th day of September, 1905, became the owner of the real estate described in the complaint in this cause by a deed executed to it by the defendant Oscar M. Allen, Jr., and his wife, Lucile D. Allen, which said deed was, after probate, recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Montgomery county in Book of Deeds No. 43, at page 490. That thereafter the said defendant the Golconda Mining & Milling Company began to do business in the county of Montgomery, in the state of North Carolina, and purchased certain machinery and proceeded to make certain excavations and sink certain shafts upon the real estate aforesaid referred to, and operated its property for the purpose of mining for gold and other minerals thereon, and continued to operate said mine and engage in business, as aforesaid, in said county of Montgomery and state of North Carolina until about the year 1907, when it ceased to operate its mine and discontinued the working and development of its mine and property, and has not worked or operated the mine and property, and has not worked or operated the mine since the year of 1907, and has not, since that time, worked or developed said mine to any extent whatever. That the said defendant the Golconda Mining & Milling Company has at no time filed in the office of the Secretary of State of the state of North Carolina a copy of its charter or articles of agreement, attested by its president and secretary, under its corporate seal, and a statement, attested in like manner, of the amount of its capital stock authorized, the amount actually issued, the principal office of this corporation in this state, and the name of the agent in charge of said office, the character of the business which it transacts, and the names and post-office addresses of its officers and directors, as required by law, and has not since the year 1907 had an officer or agent in the state of North Carolina upon whom process in all actions or proceedings against it can be served, as required by law.

"Twelfth. That the defendant the Golconda Mining & Milling Company had actual knowledge of the bringing of this action for some time prior to the taking of the judgment herein at the April term, 1910, of the superior court of Montgomery county, and said defendant had actual knowledge of the judgment so rendered herein at said April term, 1910, for more than one year before serving the notices in this cause that it would move to set aside said judgment and before making said motion.

"Thirteenth. That the complaint appearing in the judgment roll and record was actually sworn to by J. C. Currie, one of the plaintiffs, as set forth in the affidavit attached to the complaint on the day it bears date, before Hiram Freeman, a justice of the peace of Montgomery county, N. C., who was duly authorized to administer such oath shown by affidavits filed upon the hearing of this motion, but at the time judgment by default was rendered no certificate or jurat appeared to the verification, except what appears on the face of the complaint.

"Fourteenth. That since the rendition of the judgment herein at April term, 1910, of the superior court of Montgomery county, execution duly issued thereon, and by virtue thereof the sheriff of Montgomery county, to whom said execution was issued and delivered, sold the real estate described in the complaint in this cause pursuant to the mandate of said execution and deed made to the purchaser.

"Fifteenth. That the Pittman-McDonald and Black warranty deeds, referred to in 'Exhibit A,' attached to the complaint, were actually executed and delivered to O. M. Allen, Jr., and conveyed the lands referred to in said contract.

"Upon the foregoing findings of fact, the court adjudges that the judgment by default final rendered in this cause was and is irregular, and not taken according to the regular course and practice of the court, and the said judgment is hereby set aside, and the defendants allowed to answer the complaint."

The plaintiff excepted and appealed.

U. L. Spence, for appellants. T. J. Jerome and J. A. Spence, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. [1] The defendants are not entitled to relief on the ground of excusable neglect, because the motion was not made within 12 months from the rendition of the judgment (Clement v. Ireland, 129 N. C. 220, 89 S. E. 838; Insurance Co. v. Scott, 136 N. C. 157, 48 S. E. 581), nor under Rev. § 449, allowing a defendant against whom a judgment has been rendered upon service by publication to defend after judgment upon good cause shown, because more than 12 months had elapsed after notice of the judgment before any notice of the motion issued. They must therefore rely upon the right to have the judgment set aside upon the ground that it is irregular.

[2] An irregular judgment is one rendered contrary to the course and practice of the courts, and may be set aside within a reasonable time, and upon showing a meritorious defense. Scott v. Life Ins. Co., 137 N. C. 520, 50 S. E. 221. We must then inquire into the regularity of the proceeding.

[3] The summons was duly served on the corporation under section 1243 of the Revisal, and also by publication. The section of the Revisal referred to provides for personal service on corporations "having property or doing business in this state" by leaving a true copy of the summons with the Secretary of State, and it appears that the Golconda Company had property in the state, and that a copy of the summons was left with the proper officer on the 19th of March, 1910. A statute similar to this has been held valid. Fisher v. Insurance Co., 136 N. C. 222, 48 S. E. 667.

[4] The publication of the summons and attachment was not irregular because commenced within 30 days from the time of issuing the summons (Best v. British & Am. Co., 128 N. C. 351, 38 S. E. 923; Grocery Co. v. Bag Co., 142 N. C. 174, 55 S. E. 90, the last case overruling McClure v. Fellows, 131 N. C. 509, 42 S. E. 951), and it was not necessary that the service thereof should be complete 10 days before the April term of court (Guilford v. Georgia Co., 109 N. C. 310, 13 S. E. 861). The same principles apply to the service by publication on the defendant Allen, except in one particular, to which we will hereafter refer.

[5] The verification of the complaint is a substantial compliance with the statute, and it sufficiently appears that the plaintiff was sworn, and by an officer authorized to administer oaths. It was not necessary that it should be subscribed. Alford v. McCormick, 90 N. C. 153. As against the defendant Allen, the complaint alleges an express promise to pay a sum certain, and, if there had been personal service of summons, the plaintiff would have been entitled to judgment by default final against him. Hartman v. Farrier, 95 N. C. 178; Scott v. Life Ass'n, 137 N. C. 522, 50 S. E. 221.

[6] There was, however, no personal service on him, and, as he was a nonresident, jurisdiction could only be had by levying the attachment on property belonging to him in this state, and, when thus obtained, it would not authorize a personal judgment against him. Winfree v. Bagley, 102 N. C. 515, 9 S. E. 198; Goodwin v. Claytor, 137 N. C. 230, 49 S. E. 173, 87 L. R. A. 209, 107 Am. St. Rep. 479; May v. Getty, 140 N. C. 318, 53 S. E. 75; Lemly v. Ellis, 143 N. C. 213, 55 S. E. 629.

[7] These cases fully sustain the propositions that, in the absence of an attachment levied upon property of a nonresident within the state, an attempt at service by publication is ineffective for any purpose, and that "the court acquires jurisdiction where an attachment has issued or the res has otherwise been brought within its control only to the extent that the res will satisfy the plaintiff's recovery, and no general or personal judgment will be binding beyond that." Lemly v. Ellis, supra. Applying these principles to the judgment against the defendant Allen, it must be held to be irregular, because a personal judgment was rendered against him, which might, however, be treated as an adjudication of the amount found to be due, and not a judgment for its recovery (Goodwin v. Claytor, 137 N. C. 230, 49 S. E. 173, 67 L. R. A. 209, 107 Am. St. Rep. 479), and for the further and stronger reason that the attachment was not levied on any property belonging to him situate in this state.

[8] It is not alleged that the defendant Allen has any interest in the property of the Golconda Company, and the only property belonging to him referred to in the attachment is the debt of the company to him. He and the company are outside of the state, and nonresidents, and the debt cannot be property of his in this state.

The case of the Golconda Company rests on different facts. The summons as to this defendant was served by leaving a copy with the Secretary of State, and also by publication, and the attachment was levied on property of the defendant in this state.

[9] If, then, the complaint is sufficient to sustain a judgment by default final, the judgment as to this defendant is regular, and otherwise not. As was said in Junge v. McKnight, 137 N. C. 286, 49 S. E. 474: "The plaintiff must be careful to draw his judgment when by default final, according to the right arising upon the case stated by the complaint, 'because the defendant is concluded by the decree, so far at least as it is supported by the allegations of the bill.' If the decree or judgment do not conform to this well-settled principle, if it give relief in excess of or of a different character from that to which the plaintiff is entitled upon the allegations of fact in the complaint, the court will promptly set it aside upon application. It thus becomes important that the pleader, when he wishes to take a judgment by default final, set forth clearly the facts upon the admission of which by failure to answer he bases his right to relief, so that the court may, upon an inspection of his complaint, adjudge his rights to correspond with such facts." The complaint alleges a promise upon the part of Allen to pay the plaintiffs $5,000 upon certain conditions, and that the conditions have been performed; that the defendant the Golconda Company has promised to pay the said Allen $18,000 under a contract made for the benefit of the plaintiffs to the amount of their debt; and that the said Allen has assigned to the plaintiffs said debt to the extent of their claim against Allen, but it does not allege any promise upon the part of the Golconda Company to pay the plaintiffs any sum, or that it had notice of the assignment to the plaintiffs. If so, the amount for which the Golconda Company would be liable to the plaintiffs is of necessity uncertain, as the debt to Allen was contracted in 1906, and under the facts stated its liability would be determined as of the time the attachment was levied. The contract between the said Allen and the other defendant is also made a part of the complaint, and it appears from an inspection of it that provision was made therein for the payment of said sum of $18,000, and there is no allegation as to what was done under it. If the amount for which the defendant would be liable is not made certain by the complaint, the plaintiffs were not entitled to judgment by default final therein, and such judgment is irregular. Witt v. Long, 93 N. C. 390; Battle v. Baird, 118 N. C. 854, 24 S. E. 668; Jeffries v. Aaron, 120 N. C. 169, 26 S. E. 696; Stewart v. Bryan, 121 N. C. 46, 28 S. E. 18.

[10] We conclude, therefore, that there is no error in the judgment rendered, but we note that the property seized under the attachment has been sold, and a deed made to the purchaser, who is not a party to this motion, and will not be prejudiced thereby. If he is an innocent purchaser for value, it may be that the judgment would be set aside as between the parties, and retained for his protection, as was done in Harrison v. Hargrove, 120 N. C. 96, 26 S. E. 936, 58 Am. St. Rep. 781, and in determining his rights the fact that Allen was president of the Golconda Company, which appears from affidavits on file, and that both defendants knew of the pendency of the action before the judgment was rendered, and that neither moved in the matter for more than twelve months, would have an important bearing. It is advisable that he be made a party.

[11] The defendants Allen and the Golconda Company in their application to have the judgment set aside ask to be allowed to answer, and this is equivalent to a general appearance by both. Scott v. Insurance Co., 137 N. C. 515, 50 S. E. 221.

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT (§ 81*)—PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 105*)—AUTHORITY OF ATTORNEY—DISCHARGE OF SURETY.

An attorney is not authorized to give a debtor an extension of time, and where an attorney employed to collect a note secured by a mortgage, without the consent or ratification of his principal, gave the debtor a slight extension of time upon a mortgage given to secure the note, such an extension will not discharge a surety upon the note, as the extension was not valid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Watauga County; Long, Judge.

Action by W. G. Hall against W. W. Presnell and E. F. Lovell and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Lovell appeals. Affirmed.

Edmund Jones, for appellant.

WALKER, J. There is but one question in this case. On November 5, 1906, G. W. Presnell made his note to W. G. Hall for $135.96, payable May 1, 1907, and indorsed by W. W. Presnell and E. F. Lovell as sureties. This note was deposited by Hall with the Bank of Blowing Rock as collateral security for a debt he owed the bank. Presnell, at the request of Lovell, gave a mortgage to Hall for $120.70 on a pair of horses to secure the debt and indemnify his sureties, and it was duly registered. The note and mortgage were placed in the hands of an attorney for collection, and he immediately pressed the defendants for payment. Lovell requested the attorney to take immediate steps to secure possession of the horses for the purpose of selling them, we assume, under the power contained in the mortgage, and gave him $5 to pay his expenses. The attorney demanded the horses of Presnell, the debtor, who asked indulgence for several days, so that he might dispose of the horses and pay the debt, which was granted, and Presnell paid the attorney $5 for his expenses. The attorney afterwards sold the horses, but did not realize enough to pay the debt, and meanwhile Presnell left the state. W. G. Hall had no knowledge of the transactions between the attorney and the bank, and, of course, did not authorize the extension of time, nor did the bank. It was simply a slight accommodation given by the attorney to Presnell on his own responsibility, and without any express authority or any ratification afterwards of his act. It does not appear whether or not Presnell was solvent at the time the attorney granted the slight indulgence to him, and has remained so to this time, nor does it appear distinctly that the attorney extended the time for paying the debt, but it rather appears that the short extension was restricted to the time of seizing and selling the horses under the mortgage. Upon the facts admitted by the parties, the court rendered judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant Lovell appealed.

[1, 2] We think the decision of the court below was right. It is not clear to us how the appellant was injured by the transaction of which he complains, but assuming that it was such an extension of the time for paying the note as would have discharged him, as surety, if it had been given by the plaintiff, we are of the opinion that the attorney had no express or implied authority to bind his client, the bank, or Hall, the payee, by the agreement. He was retained to collect the debt, and not to release it or any party liable to Hall or the bank for its payment; and any one dealing with him was fixed in law with notice of this lack of authority. As said in Bank v. Hay, 143 N. C. 326, 55 S. E. 811: "There is a general rule that, when one deals with an agent, it behooves him to ascertain correctly the scope and extent of his authority to contract for and in behalf of his alleged principal, for, under any other rule, it is said every principal would be at the mercy of his agent, however carefully he might limit his authority. The power of an agent is not unlimited unless in some way it either expressly or impliedly appears to be so, and the person who proposes to contract with him as agent for his principal should first inform himself where his authority stops or how far his commission goes before he closes the bargain with him. Briggs v. Ins. Co., 88 N. C. 141; Ferguson v. Mfg. Co., 118 N. C. 946 [24 S. E. 710]." No one could reasonably suppose that it was within the scope of an attorney's authority to release a debt or any party to a note, or to do anything which would have that effect, when his commission extended only to the collection of the debt. It is stated in the books that an attorney has no implied authority to work any discharge of a debtor, but upon actual payment of the full amount of the debt, and that in money. He cannot release sureties or indorsers, nor enter a retraxit, when it is a final bar (Lambert v. Sanford, 2 Blackf. [Ind.] 137, 18 Am. Dec. 149), nor release a witness (Wood v. Hopkins, 3 N. J. Law, 689; Campbell v. Kincaid, 3 T. B. Mon. 63), nor a party in interest (Succession of Weigel, 18 La. Ann. 49). It is a general rule that an attorney, who is in many respects considered as a mere agent, cannot waive any of the substantial rights of his client without the latter's consent, and in such a case he is not barred thereby without ratification, or something which amounts to an estoppel, to deny his attorney's authority. These principles will be found to be sustained by the following authorities: Weeks on Attorneys, § 219, and cases cited in the notes; Savings Inst. v. Chinn, 70 Ky. (7 Bush) 539; Ireland v. Todd, 36 Me. 149; Givens v. Briscoe, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 529; Union Bank v. Govan, 10 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 333, and cases cited; Tankersley v. Anderson, 4 S. C. (4 Desaus.) 44; Terhune v. Colton, 10 N. J. Eq. 21.

It was directly held in Roberts v. Smith, 3 La. Ann. 205, that an attorney at law in whose hands a note has been placed for collection has no power by an agreement made out of court without authority of his client to give an extension of time to the principal obligor, which would have the legal effect, if the act were valid, to relieve or discharge a surety on the note. Of like effect is Varnum v. Bellamy, 4 McLean 87, s. c. 28 Fed. Cas. 1096, No. 16,886. In Savings Inst. v. Chinn, supra, it was held to be well settled that an attorney at law employed to collect a debt has not authority to release the sureties upon his client's claim, either directly or indirectly, nor to do any act with reference thereto prejudicial to his interest. "No implied power (of an attorney) exists, under a general retainer, to grant additional time to his client's debtor" (4 Cyc. 945), "nor has an attorney the implied power to release his client's claim, and, where there is security for the demand, he cannot surrender it to his client's detriment, nor has he implied authority to release sureties on an obligation to his client." 4 Cyc. 949, and the numerous cases cited. In Kellogg v. Gilbert, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 220, 6 Am. Dec. 335, the sheriff, upon the request of the plaintiff's attorney, permitted the defendant in custody on a ca. sa. to go at large for the purpose of securing money with which to pay the debt. It was held that the attorney had no authority to order the release of the defendant without the plaintiff's consent or a previous satisfaction of the debt, and that the sheriff was therefore liable for an escape. See, also, Lewis v. Gamage, 18 Mass. (1 Pick. [2 Anno. Ed.]) 847 and cases cited; Simonton v. Barrell, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 362; Jackson v. Bartlett, 8 Johns. (N. Y. 3d Ed.) marg. p. 361. Justice Patteson said, in Savory v. Chapman, 39 E. C. L. 242 (11 Ad. Ell. 829): "It is clear that the attorney could not of his own authority, without payment, discharge the defendant out of custody as a matter of indulgence; nor, indeed, is it contended that he could. Either the money must have been actually paid, or the plaintiff (himself) must have chosen to show favor; that would be his act. The plea does not allege either fact. It is true that, if the attorney has power to receive the money, he may, having received it, order a discharge; but then, in pleading the discharge, it should be shown that the money was paid. So, if the plaintiff chose to dispense with the further detention, it should have been alleged that he authorized the attorney to discharge." And Justice Coleridge in the same case said: The party "is bound to know the legal qualifications of persons filling certain employments. The question, therefore, turns on the authority of the attorney; and there is nothing here to show that he had any, either in his general character, or with reference to the circumstances of the suit. He could, as it appears here, be only an agent de facto; and there is nothing shown to make him one for the present purpose." It seems, therefore, to be the generally accepted doctrine that an attorney charged with the collection of a debt has no power in virtue of his general authority to do any act which will either release his client's debtor, or his surety, or substantially jeopardize his interests in any way."

The cases cited by the learned counsel of the appellant are not in point. There the question was as to the authority of an attorney in the actual conduct of a suit in court, whether in prosecution or defense, and in matters of practice and procedure, as in Beck v. Bellamy, 93 N. C. 129, the case cited by appellant's counsel. Chief Justice Smith thus refers to the subject: "The conduct of the case by caveators' counsel would, in the absence of connivance, be binding upon their clients, and it would be a dangerous innovation in judicial proceedings to hold otherwise. In the words of Nash, J., in reference to the authority of counsel retained in a case: 'By his acts and agreement made in the management of the cause the plaintiff was bound.' Greenlee v. McDowell, 39 N. C. 485. Not less explicit is the language of Merrimon, J., in Branch v. Walker, 92 N. C. 89, where he says of an attorney that, 'as soon as he is duly retained in an action or proceeding, he has, by virtue of his office, authority to manage and control the conduct of the action, on the part of his client during its progress, and subject to the supervision of the court.' 'As between the client and the opposite party, the former is bound by every act which the attorney does in the regular course of practice, and without fraud or collusion, however injudicious the act may be.' Weeks on Att. § 222, and cases cited." We add Pierce v. Perkins, 17 N. C. 250. But this is far from saying that he can release a debt or any part of it, or relinquish substantial or important rights, without the consent of his client. An attorney cannot compromise his client's case without special authority to do so (Moye v. Cogdell, 69 N. C. 93), and, this being so, how can he release it, or any part of it? "A power to collect," says this court, "does not authorize an assignment or any disposition other than full payment." Bradford v. Williams, 91 N. C. 7.

Nor do we think the case of Kesler v. Linker, 82 N. C. 458, cited also by counsel, is pertinent to this case. There is no evidence that the plaintiff agreed to look after the security and see that it was applied to the debt. On the contrary, he did not know that the mortgage or lien on the horses had been taken, nor does it appear that the attorney, whether he had authority or not to act in that behalf for his client, made any agreement which bound the plaintiff to active diligence for the preservation of the security. Nor does it appear that the security or any part thereof has been lost or impaired. The horses were seized, sold, and the proceeds applied to the debt. What more could the surety ask to be done?

Our conclusion is that the defendant Lovell, as surety to the note, was not discharged by anything done by the attorney, nor did the latter intend to release him.

No error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rowan County; Daniels, Judge.

J. Thomas Broadway was convicted of incest and he appeals. Affirmed.

M. F. Hatcher and R. Lee Wright, for appellant. T. W. Bickett, Atty. Gen., and George L. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

CLARK, C. J. This is an indictment for incest, under Revisal 1905, § 3351, which provided that the punishment should be "by imprisonment in the state's prison for a term not exceeding five years in the discretion of the court." Laws 1911, c. 16, amended that section "by striking out the words 'five years' in line 5 of said statute, and inserting in stead thereof the words '15 years' between the words 'exceeding' and 'in,'" and provided that the amendment should be in force from its ratification, February 11, 1911. The indictment was found at May term, 1911, and the evidence showed the crime was committed prior to the act of 1911. The defense depends upon the question whether this is an ex post facto law.

[1] An ex post facto law is one which either makes that a crime which was not a crime at the time the offense was committed, or imposes a heavier sentence than that which was prescribed by law at the time the offense was committed.

[2] Here there was no change in the constituent elements of the crime. The change in the punishment took effect only, by the terms of the statute, "from its ratification," and hence did not apply to an offense which was committed prior to its enactment.

[3] Repeals by implication are not favored by the law. In this case there is neither express repeal of any part of the statute nor any repeal by implication. The statute stands intact as it was; the Legislature simply adding 10 years to the quantum of the punishment which the judge might impose. This additional 10 years was to take effect in the future, and, indeed, under the constitutional provision forbidding ex post facto laws, such additional punishment could not have applied to such crime unless committed after the act. The Legislature did not attempt to make it apply to crimes committed before that time, nor did the judge.

The subject is so fully and ably discussed by Mr. Justice Walker in State v. Perkins, 141 N. C. 797, 53 S. E. 735, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 165, that we can add nothing thereto. He quotes from Potter's Dwarris on Statutes, 156, with approval, the following, which is conclusive of this case: "It is a general rule that subsequent statutes, which add accumulated penalties and institute new methods of proceeding, do not repeal former penalties and methods of procedure ordained by preceding statutes, without negative words." He also quotes with approval 28 A. & E. (2d Ed.) 726 as follows: "Every effort must be made to make all the acts stand, and the later act will not operate as a repeal of the earlier one, if by any reasonable construction they can be reconciled. The repeal in any case will be measured by the extent of the conflict or the inconsistency between the acts, and, if any part of the earlier can stand as not superseded by the later one, it will not be repealed." In the present case the extension of the limit of the punishment which the judge could impose in futuro in no wise affected the elements which constitute the crime nor the punishment which would be imposed for its commission prior to the passage of the new act.

Bishop, Stat. Crimes (1873) § 1865, is also quoted in State v. Perkins, as follows: "Where a provision of the law is thus modified or cut short, it is not in any proper sense repealed. And we may lay down the doctrine broadly that no repeal takes place if the earlier provision can stand to any extent consistently with the later." In State v. Putney, 61 N. C. 543, which is also quoted in State v. Perkins, supra, we have a case which is on all fours with the present. In that case the offense of stealing a mule was punished by imprisonment, whipping, and fine, or either, at the discretion of the court. The act of 1867 (Laws 1866-67, c. 62) made the stealing of a mule punishable with death, and the point was made, as here, that the defendant could not be punished under the former statute, because it was repealed by the new. But the court held that the act of 1867 did not repeal the former law, but merely made the increase of punishment prospective, and that it should read as if written, "If any person shall hereafter steal a mule, etc., he shall suffer death," and held that all larcenies of that nature committed before the act should be tried and punished without reference thereto.

The defendant in this case relied upon State v. Massey, 103 N. C. 360, 9 S. E. 632, 4 L. R. A. 308; but Judge Walker, in State v. Perkins, supra, well says: "State v. Massey was decided upon the theory that the later statute by its very terms, and as if in so many words, had unqualifiedly and expressly repealed the earlier one." In State v. Massey, 97 N. C. 465, 2 S. E. 445, it was held: "Where a statute only undertakes to amend one already on the statute books, it may be presumed that it did not intend to repeal it, unless there is an express repealing clause."

[4.5] The exception to proof of other acts of the same nature cannot be sustained. They are competent in corroboration (Underhill, Crim. Ev. § 396; 22 Cyc. 53), as was also evidence of cruel treatment of the daughter offered to show compulsion (22 Cyc. 53).

[6] The evidence of similar statements made by the witness before the trial was also competent as corroborative evidence, and this may be shown by the witness himself. State v. Freeman, 100 N. C. 434, 5 S. E. 921; State v. Maulsby, 130 N. C. 665, 41 S. E. 97.

No error.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 29, 1911.)

1. CARRIERS (§ 85*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—DELIVERY—NOTICE TO CONSIGNEE.

While a carrier is not bound to give notice to a consignee of the arrival of goods, in the absence of a contract to that effect, the parties may contract for such notice.

2. CARRIERS (§ 85*)—CARRIAGE OF GOODS—DELIVERY—NOTICE TO CONSIGNEE—CONTRACT IN BILL OF LADING—"ORDER NOTIFY."

Where a bill of lading contains a provision and condition to the effect that, "if the word 'order' is written immediately before or after the name of the party to whose order the property is consigned, the surrender of the bill of lading, properly indorsed, shall be required before delivery of the property at destination," and the words "order notify" appear before the name of the consignee thereon, such bill of lading requires notice to the consignee and production of the bill of lading before delivery.

3. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENCY—FAILURE TO OBJECT.

An instruction, giving the court's construction of a bill of lading requiring notification and presentation of the bill of lading before delivery of a shipment, is not improper, even though there were other shipments involved in the case, made without such directions, where the court's attention was not called to any distinction between "order notify" shipments and other shipments, which counsel desired to have made.

Where a shipment of goods to a consignee is unrestricted, the title and control of the goods is in him, and he must look after his property, and on its arrival remove it within a reasonable

5. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—SUFFICIENCY—FAILURE TO OBJECT.

Where, in an action by a consignee of goods destroyed while in the depot of a carrier, it is sought to recover a statutory penalty provided for a failure to settle claims in a specified time after filing, and conditional on a recovery of the amount of claims filed, a charge, allowing a recovery of the amount claimed in the cause of action, is not erroneous, though the amount demanded in the claims and alleged in the complaint was greater by a few cents than the prayer for judgment, where it is evident the court did not intend to mislead, and defendant asked for no more explicit instruction.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Spartanburg County; J. W. De Vore, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by F. L. Layton & Sons against the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. B. Grier, Nicholls & Nicholls, and Bomar & Osborne, for appellant. John Gary Evans and S. M. Wetmore, for respondents.

JONES, C. J. This suit was for damages for not delivering freight, consigned to plaintiffs at Enoree, S. C., embracing two causes of action; the first being for the value of four shipments in the possession of defendant on September 13, 1907, one for $14.71, the value of a lot of hardware, one for $16.89, the value of another lot of hardware, one for a lot of sugar, starch, and soap, of the value of $40.85, and another for $101.56, the value of a lot of flour, aggregating $174.01, for which claims had been filed. Judgment was prayed for this sum, and in addition $50 penalty for failure to adjust the claims filed therefor, as required by statute. The second cause of action was for $52.72, the value of a portion of a shipment of flour in the possession of defendant, with penalty for failure to adjust, as required by statute.

Answering the first cause of action, defendant admitted possession of the property in September, 1907, as a common carrier, but alleged that the goods were safely carried to their destination, and were stored in its warehouse, and were there destroyed by fire without fault or negligence on its part. There was no issue raised in the pleadings in this cause of action as to the loss of the goods while in defendant's possession, their value, and the filing of claims therefor; the only issue being whether defendant was liable, either as common carrier or as warehouseman. As to the second cause of action, the answer was a general denial. The judgment was for $326, in favor of plaintiffs.

[1, 2] The first question presented by defendant's appeal is whether the court erred in instructing the jury that under the bill of lading produced in evidence it was the duty of the railroad company to notify the consignee of the arrival of the goods, and allow a reasonable time for their removal. The only bill of lading set forth in the record contained the following: "Order notify F. L. Layton, Enoree, S. C.;" also the following: "If the word 'order' is written immediately before or after the name of the party to whose order the property is consigned, the surrender of the bill of lading, properly indorsed, shall be required before the delivery of the property at destination as provided by Sec. 9 of the conditions on the back hereof." On the back of the bill of lading was printed: "If the word 'order' is written hereon, immediately before or after the name of the party to whose order the property is consigned without any condition of limitation other than the name of the party to be notified of the arrival of the property, the surrender of this bill of lading, properly indorsed, shall be required before the delivery of the property at destination. If any other than the aforesaid form of consignment is used herein the said property may, at the option of the carrier, be delivered without requiring the production or surrender of this bill of lading." The general rule is well settled that the carrier is not bound to give notice to the consignee of the arrival of goods. Spears & Colton v. S., U. & C. R. R. Co., 11 S. C. 158; Bristow v. Railroad Co., 72 S. C. 46, 51 S. E. 529. But the carrier and shipper may contract that notice shall be given of the arrival of the goods, and we agree with the circuit court that the contract, as shown by the bill of lading, requires notice to the consignee, and the production of the bill of lading, before delivery.

[3] The appellant further contends that, if this construction be correct as to "order notify" shipments, it was error to so instruct in this case, in which there were other shipments, without such directions. The court, however, was only construing the particular bill of lading introduced in evidence, and if counsel wished to discriminate between "order notify" shipments and other shipments the court's attention should have been directed to the matter, if there was any evidence that the other shipments were under a different kind of a contract.

[4] There was evidence that the goods mentioned in the first cause of action were destroyed by fire, which burned defendant's depot at Enoree, on the night of September 13, 1907; that the shipment of sugar, etc.,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes

arrived at Enoree on the 10th or 11th of September, the shipments of hardware on the 7th and 10th of September, and the shipment of flour arrived on the 6th of September. It was also in testimony that plaintiff was notified of the arrival of the flour on the 9th and of the arrival of the other goods on the 12th of September. The bill of lading for the flour was retained by the shipper, awaiting the consignee's remittance. Plaintiff sent his check on September 11th, and received the bill of lading on the 12th of September. Plaintiff conducted his business about six miles from the nearest station at Enoree, and on the morning of September 14th had hitched up a team to go for the goods, when he heard of the fire. The court instructed the jury that, if it became necessary to produce the bill of lading before plaintiff, as consignee, could get the goods, it would be the duty of the railway company to give him a reasonable time to produce the bill of lading. This instruction is made the basis of exception, on the ground that the relation of common carrier exists only so long after arrival of the goods as would give the consignee a reasonable time to take his goods away. The general rule is as stated; but since, in an "order notify" shipment under the contract noticed, it was the duty of the carrier to notify the consignee of the arrival of the goods the reason of the rule would require that the consignee must have a reasonable time in which to remove the goods after notice of their arrival; and since, under the contract, there was to be no delivery, except upon production of the bill of lading, the rule must necessarily involve reasonable time to obtain and produce the bill of lading, as a prerequisite of removing the goods. In an unrestricted shipment of goods to a consignee, the title and control of the goods is in him, and he is expected to look after his property, and on its arrival remove the same within a reasonable time; but in a shipment "order notify," where the bill of lading is held by the shipper or his order, title and control of the goods do not pass to the consignee until he acquires the bill of lading. National Bank of Chester v. Atlanta & Charlotte Ry. Co., 25 S. C. 216; Grocery Co. v. Elevator Co., 72 S. C. 453, 52 S. E. 191, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 79, 110 Am. St. Rep. 627. No duty, therefore, devolves upon a consignee to demand the goods and remove the same, until he acquires the ownership and control of same.

[5] Exception is taken to the following charge: "If you conclude that the value of the property in the first cause of action is less than the amount claimed in the complaint, he cannot recover the penalty. The verdict has to be as much as the amount claimed is, before he can recover the penalty. If you find that plaintiffs are entitled to recover the full amount claimed in the first cause of action, then they would be entitled to recover the $50 penalty; and if you find that he is not entitled to recover the full amount in the second cause of action then they would not be entitled to recover the penalty. In order to recover the penalty in both cases, plaintiffs must satisfy you that they are entitled to recover the full amount of both claims in both causes of action. You may give him the penalty in one or both cases, or in neither one, just as you find the value of the property to be. If you find the value of the property to be what is claimed in both cases, then he would be entitled to the penalty in both cases—both causes of action." It is contended that this charge made the test of the right to recover the penalty depend upon the amount claimed in the complaint, instead of the amount of the claims as filed with the agent at the point of destination. The amount of the claims, as filed with the agent and alleged in the complaint was $174.01 in the first cause of action, and $52.72 in the second cause of action, which aggregated $226.73; and the court no doubt supposed what is true—that the amount of the damages as alleged in the complaint was the same as the amount of value as stated in the claims filed with the agent. The fact that the general prayer for judgment for $326, including presumably the amount of the claims and $100 for penalties, was 73 cents less than the amount claimed in the body of the complaint was not called to the court's attention. The plaintiffs proved the amount of their loss precisely in accordance with their claims as filed, and there was really no contest in this regard.

While there is no doubt that the statute requires recovery of the amount demanded in the claims, as filed with the agent, as a condition for recovery of the penalty, as shown in Best v. Railway, 72 S. C. 483, 52 S. E. 223, and Rippy & Co. v. Southern Ry., 80 S. C. 526, 61 S. E. 976, we do not think it can fairly be said that the charge given by the court meant to instruct otherwise. A consideration of the charge as a whole also leads to this conclusion.

The contention that the court should have instructed the jury that, if their verdict should be less than the amount claimed by the plaintiffs in the claims filed with the agent, they could not recover the penalty is met by the view above stated, and by the further consideration that, if appellant wished a more explicit charge on that subject, a request for instruction should have been made. We are satisfied that Judge De Vore was endeavoring to instruct in accordance with the view now contended for by appellant.

We do not consider that the exceptions and the record present the question whether a recovery for 73 cents less than the amount of the claims as filed with the agent would sustain a judgment for the penalty. We have not noticed in detail all the exceptions, but they have been considered, and are regarded as controlled by what has been stated above.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

MATTISON et al. v. STONE

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Dec. 4, 1911.)

1. CONVERSION (§ 15*)—DIRECTIONS OF WILL—SALE.

The will gave the residue of testator's estate, real and personal, to his wife for life or widowhood, and provided that, at her death or marriage, the realty and personalty should be sold and equally divided among his children, and that testator desired "that the portion of my estate that shall fall to my daughters," naming them, should be theirs during their lifetime, and then go to their children. Held that, upon the death of testator's widow, the realty became converted into personalty so that no realty passed to testator's daughters; the gifts to them being personalty.

2. PARTITION (§ 21*)—TITLE TO SUSTAIN ACTION—INTEREST IN LAND.

Where the remainder interest to which plaintiff was entitled upon the death of a life tenant was converted into personalty at the life tenant's death by directions in the will to sell the realty, she had no interest in the land devised to the original life tenant as to authorize her to maintain partition.

3. CONVERSION (§ 22*)—RECONVERSION.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Anderson County; Ernest Gary, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by W. E. Mattison and others against W. C. Stone. From a judgment for plaintiff named, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

Paget & Watkins, for appellant. Leon Rice and Bonham, Watkins & Allen, for respondent.

JONES, C. J. In this action for the partition of a tract of land in Anderson county formerly belonging to Peter Johnson, an issue of title was raised by the answer, and that issue was submitted to a jury. After the conclusion of all the testimony, defendant made a motion to direct a verdict in his favor which was refused, and, instead, the court, Judge Ernest Gary presiding, instructed the jury to find for the plaintiff W. E. Mattison a one-fifth interest in the land. The appeal comes from such judgment. There were other plaintiffs, who were the children of Mary A. E. Ellison, but the court held that suit by them was premature, and, as no exception challenges this ruling, they go out of the case, leaving W. E. Mattison sole plaintiff. Both parties claim under Peter Johnson as common source of title, who died seised and possessed of the land May 9, 1872, leaving his will, upon the construction of which the case depends. The first paragraph of the will is as follows: "1st. My lawful debts and funeral expenses be paid. Then the residue of my estate, real and personal, I give and bequeath to my beloved wife, Nancy A. Johnson, to be hers during her natural life or widowhood and at her death or marriage then the said realty and personalty to be sold and equally divided among my children; and having an eye in such division and settlement to the advances I have already made to them, which advances are hereinafter stated to date, as well shall an eye be had to advances after the date hereof in said division and settlement, moreover I desire that the portion of my estate that shall fall to my daughters, N. Caroline Mattison and Mary A. E. Ellison to be theirs during their lifetime, and then to their children respectively forever." The will was admitted to probate May 18, 1872, and B. L. Johnson, son of testator, duly qualified as executor. On January 4, 1879, the widow, Nancy A. Johnson, and children of the testator, Jas. W. Johnson, Sarah P. Johnson, Mary E. Ellison and her husband, N. C. Mattison and her husband, in consideration of $1,050, executed a fee-simple warranty deed of the premises in question to B. L. Johnson, the son and executor of the testator. This land was sold under judicial proceedings as the property of B. L. Johnson, and was purchased by B. Frank Mauldin, who received the deed of the master therefor on November 2, 1885. B. F. Mauldin conveyed the premises to the defendant W. C. Stone by deed probated December 21, 1885, and recorded February 10, 1886. Defendant Stone has been in exclusive possession since his purchase in 1885. Nancy A. Johnson the life tenant died in 1888. The plaintiff is the only child of N. Caroline Mattison, who died it seems in 1898, and as such child claims one-fifth interest in the land.

The circuit court construed the will as if there were no directions for sale and division of proceeds, and as giving to Mary Ellison a life estate in the premises to the extent of one-fifth after the death of Nancy A. Johnson, with remainder in fee to her child, the plaintiff. The court further held that the plea of the statute of limitations and adverse possession could not avail against plaintiff, although there was testimony that his mother died in 1898, and this action was not commenced until 1910, for the reason that no cause of action had accrued in behalf of the children of Mary Ellison, who was living at the time of the trial, and that plaintiff, being tenant in common with the children of Mary Ellison, was not barred because such children were not barred.

[1] We think the court was in error in construing the will. It will be noticed that there is no devise of the fee after the life estate of Nancy A. Johnson, but the express direction is to sell the realty and personalty, and divide the proceeds, equally adjusting for all advances in the settlement. Under the equitable doctrine of conversion, the real estate became personal property after the death of the life tenant, and no real estate passed to N. Caroline Mattison for life, with remainder to plaintiff. The gift was of personal property, money, a legacy to Mrs. Mattison for life, with remainder over to her children. Perry v. Logan, 5 Rich. Eq. 215; Andrews v. Loeb, 22 S. C. 274; Wood v. Reaves, 23 S. C. 385; Bell v. Bell, 25 S. C. 149; Farr v. Gilreath, 23 S. C. 513; Earle v. Maxwell, 86 S. C. 1, 67 S. E. 962, 138 Am. St. Rep. 1012; Walker v. Killian, 62 S. C. 491, 40 S. E. 887.

[2] Plaintiff, having no interest in the land under the terms of the will, could not maintain this action for partition, or recovery of any portion thereof, in the absence of a proper case made, showing a reconversion of the personalty into real estate.

[3] Parties to whom the proceeds of the sale of land are bequeathed may elect to take the land by some unequivocal act or declaration, in which case there is a reconversion, but it is essential to such reconversion that all the beneficiaries join therein. This subject is fully discussed in Ukiah v. Rice, 143 Cal. 265, 76 Pac. 1020, 101 Am. St. Rep. 118. But, when a case is sought to be based upon the theory of reconversion, the requisite facts must be alleged and proved, and there is neither such allegation nor proof in this case. Hence we do not pursue the matter of reconversion further. It follows that it was error to direct a verdict for plaintiff.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed, and the cause is remanded for such disposition on the equity side of the court as may be just and proper, and in accordance with the view herein announced.

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 690*)—QUESTIONS REVIEWABLE—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE.

Error cannot be predicated on the sustaining of an objection to a question, asked a witness in an action for negligent death, as to whether he heard decedent make any statement as to how the accident happened, where the record does not show that the witness heard decedent make any statement, or, if he made one, that it was material.

Appeal from Superior Court, Watauga County; Long, Judge.

Action by Emma J. Stout, administratrix, against the Valle Crucis, Shawneehaw & Elk Park Turnpike Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 153 N. C. 513, 69 S. E. 508, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804.

This is an action to recover damages for the death of the plaintiff's intestate, caused, as it is alleged, by the negligence of the defendant. The facts, showing the nature of the controversy, are fully stated in the opinion on the former appeal in the action, reported in 153 N. C. 514, 69 S. E. 508, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804. The jury rendered the following verdict: (1) Was the death of plaintiff's intestate, W. A. Stout, caused by the negligence of the defendants, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes. (2) Did plaintiff's intestate, W. A. Stout, contribute by his negligence to his own injury? Answer: No. (3) What amount of damages, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover of the defendant? Answer: $2,100. Judgment was rendered in accordance with the verdict, and the defendant excepted and appealed.

A. E. Norman, a witness for the plaintiff, testified: "I was at home the night Stout was killed. Heard of the injury just after midnight. Found deceased under the fall, leaning against a log, holding his broken knee. Leg broken twice. Bruised between his hips. Taken to my house. Conscious when he got to my house. Remained conscious for 24 hours. Then became speechless and unconscious." On cross-examination he was asked: "Did you hear the deceased make any statement as to what happened immediately before he went off the road?" Objection by the plaintiff; sustained; defendant excepts. This is the only exception appearing in the record.

L. D. Lowe and Edmund Jones, for appellant. T. A. Love and F. A. Linney, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. The exception of the defendant cannot be sustained. There is a presumption in favor of the correctness of the ruling of his honor, and it is incumbent on the defendant to show that it was erroneous and prejudicial, which it has not done. We cannot see from the record that the witness heard the deceased make any statement, or, if one was made, its materiality does not appear, and, if a new trial should be ordered, the question might be answered in the negative.

In Knight v. Killebrew, 86 N. C. 402, the court says: "It is a settled rule that error cannot be assigned in the ruling out of evidence, unless it is distinctly shown what the evidence was, in order that its relevancy may appear, and that a prejudice has arisen from its rejection"—citing Whitesides v. Twitty, 30 N. C. 431; Bland v. O'Hagan, 64 N. C. 471; Street v. Bryan, 65 N. C. 619; State v. Purdie, 67 N. C. 328. This ruling has been approved many times. Sumner v. Chandler, 92 N. C. 634; State v. McNair, 93 N. C. 628; State v. Rhyne, 109 N. C. 794, 13 S. E. 943; Baker v. Railroad, 144 N. C. 40, 56 S. E. 553.

The case of Watts v. Warren, 108 N. C. 517, 13 S. E. 232, relied on by the defendant, cites Knight v. Killebrew with approval, but holds that, under the facts there appearing, the question indicated clearly the evidence excluded. The action was a creditor's bill against an administrator, to compel an accounting and settlement, and to set aside an assignment to the defendant of a policy of insurance on the life of the intestate. "There was evidence tending to prove that the intestate and the defendant administrator were executors of their deceased father's will, and that the intestate in his lifetime had used very considerable sums of money—how much did not definitely appear—that belonged to legatees of the will, and that the defendant W. A. Warren had paid, and had to pay, the same, etc., and that such payments constituted part of the consideration paid by him for the policy of insurance." The defendant was then examined in his own behalf and was asked: "What payments have you made to other persons than J. B. Warren, in consideration of that assignment?" Having offered evidence that he had paid considerable sums to the legatees, without being able to show definitely the amounts, it was reasonable to infer from the question that he would state the payments made, if allowed to answer.

The defendant does not come within this exception.

BOWMAN v. BLANKENSHIP.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 6, 1911.)

LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 21*)—CONTRACTS FOR SAWING—TERMS OF CONTRACT.

In an action to recover the amount due on a contract for sawing lumber, plaintiff claimed that he was to saw the lumber in a manner suitable for market and was to "edge it square so as to save loss at the mills," while defendant claimed that plaintiff was to square it up; that he said he had a good edger and would square it up for the shops and do a guaranteed job, and that a part of the lumber did not come up to the specifications. Held, that as there was a dispute as to the exact terms of the contract, and its requirements and plaintiff's evidence tended to establish an agreement general and indefinite in terms, evidence that it was cut "as good as any mill commonly cuts" was admissible.

Appeal from Superior Court, Catawba County; Long, Judge.

Action by L. G. Bowman against W. S. Blankenship. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. No error.

Civil action to recover $246.77, alleged to be due plaintiff for sawing lumber. There was denial of the debt to the amount alleged to be due. The verdict was for plaintiff for the amount claimed.

W. A. Self and J. H. Burke, for appellant.
A. A. Whitener, for appellee.

HOKE, J. On the argument it was correctly contended by defendant's counsel that an ordinary express contract which is definite, specific, and plain of meaning may not as a rule be changed or varied by evidence of local custom or usage. Cooper v. Purvis, 46 N. C. 142; Baseball Club v. Pickett, 78 Md. 375, 28 Atl. 279, 22 L. R. A. 690, 44 Am. St. Rep. 304; Brown v. Foster, 113 Mass. 136, 18 Am. Rep. 463; Mearage v. Rosenthal, 175 Mass. 358, 56 N. E. 579. But in our opinion the present case does not come within the principle. The plaintiff claimed and testified that he was to saw defendant's lumber, in a manner suitable for market, and was to "edge it square so as to save loss at the mills"; that he had done the work according to contract, and the balance due was $246.77. Defendant contended and testified: "That plaintiff was to square it up. I told him we wanted the lumber cut for the shops. That defendant said he knew how to do this, said he had a good mill and a good edger and would square it up for the shops and do a guaranteed job." That a part of the lumber did not come up to the specifications. That the amount was not so much as claimed, and the balance due was only about $60. In support of his position plaintiff introduced witnesses who testified: One: "That it was good lumber and was edged good." Another,

W. A. Holler: "That he had had 22 years' experience in sawing; that the lumber was all right; edged all right." Another, Thomas Moretz: "That he had had 20 years' experience as sawyer, and it was cut as good as any mill commonly cuts." The testimony was admitted over defendant's objection. His position being that each and every piece of the lumber was to be squared, and that evidence to change this specific requirement because the lumber was good as "commonly cut," etc., was inadmissible. There is doubt if by defendant's version of the contract the terms were sufficiently definite and precise as to render the testimony inadmissible, but there was dispute about the exact terms of the contract and its requirements, and plaintiff's testimony tended to establish an agreement in terms sufficiently general and indefinite as justify reception of the evidence. We find no testimony that any of lumber was rejected at the shops because unsuitable. The charge of the court gave defendant the full benefit of the position contended for by him, the jury, adopting plaintiff's version of the contract and facts relevant, have rendered a verdict for the full amount claimed, and we find no error which gives defendant any just ground for complaint.

No error.

STATE v. GOUGE (157 N. C. 602)

1. RECORDS (§ 22*)—MUTILATION—INDICTMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

An indictment, charging that accused unlawfully and with fraudulent intent took from the office of the register of deeds a tax book and unlawfully and fraudulently obliterated, injured, and changed such book, the record required to be kept by the register of deeds, is sufficient under Revisal 1905, § 3508, prescribing a penalty for mutilating, etc., public records.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

2. RECORDS (§ 22*)—MUTILATION—OFFENSES.

One's criminal responsibility under Revisal 1905, § 3508, for mutilating and altering a tax list by changing the township totals, is not affected because the law does not require such totals to be recorded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Records, Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

3. RECORDS (§ 22*)—MUTILATION—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a trial for mutilating a tax book by changing the township totals, the register of deeds was properly permitted to testify that the abstract which he made and sent to the auditor was a correct copy of the tax list, and that the books showed that there had been a mutilation and change of the tax list as to the totals which were recorded for certain townships, amounting in the aggregate to about $3,000; it being unnecessary to produce such abstract.

4. RECORDS (§ 22*)—MUTILATION—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In the trial of a deputy sheriff for mutilating a tax book by reducing the township totals, enabling him to settle by the reduced totals, the state could show that he drew gold from the sheriff's deposit in a bank and refused to tell the amount of money which had been paid over to a certain fund.

5. WITNESSES (§ 330*)—CHARACTER OF WITNESSES—CROSS-EXAMINATION.

While evidence of accused's good character cannot be attacked on cross-examination by proving specific misconduct, it was not error in the trial of a deputy sheriff for mutilating a tax book to permit a witness, who had testified to accused's good character, to be cross-examined to show that accused twice refused to show his books to proper authority, or to disclose the amount of taxes paid over, until witness threatened to appeal to the superior court judge to force him to do so.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 1106-1108; Dec. Dig. § 330.*]

Brown and Allen, J.J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mitchell County; Long, Judge.

A. M. Gouge was convicted of fraudulently mutilating and changing tax books, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. L. Lambert, W. O. Newland, and S. J. Ervin, for appellant. The Attorney General and Asst. Atty. Gen. Geo. L. Jones, for the State.

CLARK, C. J. [1] The defendant was convicted upon an indictment under Rev. 3508, for fraudulently mutilating and changing tax books covering certain townships in Mitchell county. The indictment charged that the defendant "did unlawfully, willfully, and corruptly, and with a fraudulent intent and purpose, take from the office of the register of deeds of the said county the tax book for the year 1908, said tax book having been deposited in said office as ordered by law, and did unlawfully, maliciously, willfully, and fraudulently obliterate, injure, and change the said tax book for the year 1908, a record required to be kept by the register of deeds."

The indictment comes squarely within the terms of the statute, and the motion to quash was properly denied. The tax list is in a bound volume and is a "book of records" required to be kept by the register of deeds. The register of deeds is ex officio clerk of the board of county commissioners. Rev. 2666. The clerk of the board of commissioners is not a separate office, but a part of the office of register of deeds. The two offices are used interchangeably in the statute. In Rev. 5238, the title says, "The register of deeds can make out tax duplicates." In the same section, it is provided that one of the copies "shall remain in the office of the clerk of the board of commissioners," and further on in the same section it is said that an allowance shall be made to the "register of deeds." In Rev. 5239, both the terms "register of deeds" and "clerk of the board of commissioners" are used. In Rev. 5240, the same interchangeable use of these words occurs.

[2] The defendant is indicted for altering and mutilating the tax list and not a copy of the abstract which was sent to the auditor. The abstract sent to the auditor is taken from the tax list, and a copy of such abstract is not required to be kept. The defendant made the further objection that, since the evidence shows that the township totals were changed, the indictment is not good because the law does not require the total for each township to be put in the record. It is true the statute does not say in so many words that the total of the tax of each township shall be set down by the register of deeds; but, being so set down, as is convenient and customary, to mutilate and change those totals is to mutilate and change the record, which the register of deeds has made in compiling the tax list for the county. Besides, this is a matter of proof and not a question of the sufficiency of the indictment.

[3] The defendant further contends that it was error to permit the witness to state that the abstract which he made and sent to the auditor was a correct copy from the tax list, and that the books show now that there has been a mutilation and change of the tax list as to the totals which were recorded for certain townships, amounting in the aggregate to about $3,000.

The register of deeds, through his office force, prepared two copies of the tax list, one for his office, and one for the office of the sheriff. In the register's own copy of the tax list book the township totals appeared, and it was these that the defendant was charged with having altered. It was not contended that the general tax items on the tax list had been changed, only the township totals. The evidence of the witness amounted to nothing more than his saying that on a certain day, after the tax lists were made out, he added the general items of the county taxes and arrived at a certain sum, and thereafter, when he compared that sum with the totals of the townships as they appeared on the tax list, the county total made about $3,000 more than the sum of the township totals as they appeared after the alteration therein. The abstract sent the auditor, having been made from the unchanged items, could be in no wise affected by the alteration in the township totals.

The defendant urges that the abstract sent to the auditor's office should have been produced, and that it was error to permit the witness to testify as to the sum total which was shown by such abstract. But there is no charge that the abstract was in any wise altered by the defendant. The abstract was simply a declaration made by the witness and was of no higher dignity, as concerns this trial, than his oral testimony as to what amount it showed. A certified copy of such abstract might have been used to corroborate the witness, or might have been used by the defendant to contradict him. But neither was required. The abstract was a written declaration of the witness which he at one time made as to the amount of the unaltered totals, but that did not prevent him from testifying now what the total was. The addition of the unaltered items on the tax list book, which was before the jury, would show whether he is correct or not without obtaining the abstract, which was a mere statement made out at some other time as to what the total of the general items of the tax list amounted to.

[4] The other exceptions which were pressed were that the defendant, while collecting taxes as deputy sheriff, drew from the bank money from the sheriff's account which he took in gold, and refused to tell the amount of money which had been paid over to the school fund. The charge is that the township totals were mutilated by the defendant to show about $3,000 less than the true amount. It is contended that the motive was to settle by these reduced totals, which thus enabled the defendant to draw out the difference between the true amount collected and the amount shown by the addition of the altered township totals, and that the defendant drew this money in gold so that it might not be traced. This was simply a circumstance which was competent to go to the jury for what it was worth and tending to show that the act was done "illegally and fraudulently," as charged.

[5] A witness, who had testified as to the good character of the defendant, was permitted to state on cross-examination that he had threatened the defendant with Judge Council before he would show his books or state the amount he had paid over. It is true that it is not competent on cross-examination to attack evidence as to good character by proving specific acts of misconduct. State v. Bullard, 100 N. C. 486, 6 S. E. 420. But this the state did not attempt to do. The witness was put up by the defendant as a character witness; but the cross-examination is not restricted to that matter, and it was competent for the state on the cross-examination to bring out the fact as an incriminating circumstance that the defendant twice refused to show his books to proper authority or to disclose the amount of the tax fund he had paid over to the board of education until the witness threatened to appeal to the superior court judge to force him to do so. The evidence was submitted to the jury for that purpose only.

No error.

BROWN, J. (dissenting). I would not dissent in this case unless I thought a serious error had been committed. I believe in sustaining convictions of crime in the lower courts unless some substantial error has been committed. It may be that the error which I think has been committed in this case would not have changed the result; but I cannot give my approbation to the precedent the ruling of the court will establish.

The abstract referred to in the opinion of the court is as much a record as the tax lists. Such record was in existence and well known to the register of deeds and to the prosecutor. One was in the auditor's office and one in the corporation commission.

The sum totals of that abstract was a potent fact in the proof. The register of deeds made them out. The correctness of his recollection of those totals was a most pertinent and important matter. The state had the right under the statute to offer copies of the originals duly certified. Such copies are the best secondary evidence and far more reliable than the memory of the witness.

I think they should have been produced on the trial. Kelly v. Craig, 27 N. C. 129. In this case Chief Justice Ruffin says: "It is always a question of law whether the best evidence in the party's power has been produced, and inferior evidence is not admissible. If in this case the sheriff's copy of the tax list had been offered, it would have been competent, as there was sufficient proof of the destruction of the original. So, if it had appeared that the sheriff's copy had also been lost, then the parol evidence might have been given, since the paper of which the contents were proved was certainly lost—whether it was that in the clerk's office or in the sheriff's office." See, also, the remarks of same great judge in Kello v. Maget, 18 N. C. 425; Nelson v. Whitfield, 82 N. C. 46; 25 Am. & Eng. Ency. 162-167.

ALLEN, J., concurs in this dissent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cleveland County; Webb, Judge.

Submitted controversy between the Commissioners of Cleveland County and the Citizens' National Bank of Gastonia. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Timberlake, for appellant. Ryburn & Hoey, for appellees.

BROWN, J. [1, 2] By the act of Assembly (Chapter 429, Public Local Laws 1911) Kings Mountain precinct in No. 4 township, Cleveland, is authorized to issue bonds in the sum of $25,000 for the purpose of building roads, repairing those in existence, and for other purposes named in the act. An election was held and the act adopted and approved by a large majority of the qualified voters of the precinct. Kings Mountain precinct in No. 4 township, Cleveland county, has existed under well-known boundary lines for more than 30 years, and comprises an area of over 22,000 acres of land; the town of Kings Mountain being also situate therein. The act also provides for a "highway commission of Kings Mountain precinct" and gives it appropriate powers as a body corporate and politic. Section 4 of the act provides for the levy within the township of a special tax to pay the interest on the bonds and eventually also to provide a sinking fund.

It is contended by defendant that the bonds are not negotiable, and are not a valid obligation of the precinct because of the proviso in Section 4 of the act. The entire section reads as follows: "Sec. 4. In order to pay the interest on said bonds, create a sinking fund for taking up said bonds at maturity, to compensate laborers employed on the roads in King Mountain precinct, in No. 4 township, and to establish, alter, repair, survey, lay out, grade, construct, maintain and build the public roads and highways of Kings Mountain precinct, in No. 4 township, in Cleveland county, in good condition, the board of commissioners of the county of Cleveland, or other authorities vested with power of levying taxes for said county, shall annually compute and levy, at the time of levying other county taxes, a sufficient tax on all polls, real estate and all personal property and all other subjects of taxation in said Kings Mountain precinct which said commissioners or other authorities now or hereafter may be allowed to levy taxes upon for any purpose whatever, always observing the constitutional equation between taxes on property and the taxes on polls: Provided, there shall not at any time be levied in Kings Mountain precinct, in No. 4 township, in the county of Cleveland, for the purpose of road improvement, and including all expenditures made necessary by this act or any act or statute now existing, a tax greater than twenty-five (25) cents upon the one hundred dollars ($100) worth of property and seventy-five (75) cents on each poll: Provided further, that no sinking fund shall be created by such levy within less time than ten years from the date of issuing said bonds, but the highway commission hereinafter created may use for the purpose of this act such sums of money remaining, after the interest on said bonds shall have been paid, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act."

We see nothing in this proviso, or in the whole act, which destroys the negotiability of the bonds. They contain an unconditional promise to pay a sum certain in money at a fixed time, and are payable to bearer, and fulfill all the requirements of negotiability. They are not promises to pay out of any particular fund, and the act by virtue of which they are issued does not profess to restrict their payment out of a particular fund.

Kings Mountain precinct is a quasi municipal corporation created by the state and vested with certain corporate powers. Smith v. School Trustees, 141 N. C. 143, 53 S. E. 524; Board Trustees, Youngsville Township, v. Webb, 155 N. C. 379, 71 S. E. 520, and cases therein cited.

These bonds are the general and unrestricted obligation of that body corporate. They are not payable solely out of a particular fund, although a particular fund is provided for their payment. They therefore do not come within the description of the negotiable instrument act as nonnegotiable paper, for that instrument especially provides that "an unqualified order or promise to pay is unconditional within the meaning of this chapter, though coupled with (1) an indication of a particular fund out of which reimbursement is to be made, or a particular account to be debited with the amount." Revisal 1905, § 2153.

[3] The fact that the special tax is limited to 25 cents on the property and 75 cents on the poll may affect the value of the bonds possibly, but does not affect the ultimate liability of the precinct for their payment in full.

As said by the Supreme Court of the United States in U. S. v. County of Clark, 96 U. S. 211, 24 L. Ed. 629: "Limitations upon a special fund provided to aid in the payment of a debt are in no sense restrictions of the liability of the debtors." 2 Daniel, Neg. Inst. (4th Ed.) § 1491c; Red Springs Hotel v. Red Springs, 72 S. E. 837, at this term, and cases therein cited.

As we have heretofore substantially said in above-cited case, in the event the special tax is insufficient to meet the demand upon it for interest and sinking fund requirements, the Legislature may authorize its increase, or the growth of the precinct and the increase in the taxable value of property render such increase unnecessary.

The judgment is affirmed.

NELSON v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 27, 1911.)

MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 78*)—PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—DECISION BY INTERNAL TRI-BUNAL—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Under regulations of the relief department of a railroad company requiring controversies to be submitted to the superintendent and making his decision, or that on appeal therefrom to an advisory committee, conclusive, suit cannot be maintained to recover benefits covering a period during which such officers found the beneficiary to be no longer under disability, in the absence of fraud and undue influence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Master and Servant, Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Pitt County; Ferguson, Judge.

Action by W. C. Nelson against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. New trial ordered.

This is an action to recover benefits, which the plaintiff alleges he is entitled to, under the rules and regulations of the relief department of the defendant. The plaintiff, an employé of defendant, became a member of the relief department on the 28th of June, 1902, and paid his dues, amounting to $6.15, up to the 6th day of September, 1902, when he was accidentally injured. After his injury he was paid, as benefits on account of his disability to work, $1 per day for 12 months, and thereafter 50 cents per day up to May 15, 1905, making a total of $673.50. On or about the last day, the superintendent of the department decided that the plaintiff was able to return to work, and he was notified to do so; but he refused, contending that he was still unable to work. The plaintiff appealed from the decision of the superintendent to the advisory committee, and employed counsel to represent him. He was given a hearing by the committee, and this tribunal held that he was no longer under disability. He then began this action, and the defendant pleads, as a defense, the rules and regulations of the department, and the decision of the advisory committee.

There is no evidence of fraud and no claim that the injury to the plaintiff was due to negligence. The regulations of the department are fully stated in Barden v. Railroad, 152 N. C. 318, 87 S. E. 971, and in King v. Railroad, 72 S. E. 801, at this term, and it is not necessary to do more than quote the part particularly relied on, which is as follows: "(65) All claims of members, or of their beneficiaries or other representatives, for benefits, and all questions or controversies of whatsoever character, arising in any manner or between any parties or persons, in connection with the relief department or the operation thereof, whether as to the construction of language or the meaning of the regulations or acts in connection with the operation of the department, shall be submitted to the determination of the superintendent, whose decision shall be final and conclusive thereof, unless a written appeal from his decision is made to the committee. If the party or parties so submitting any matter to the superintendent shall be dissatisfied with his decision, such party or parties shall appeal to the committee within thirty days after notice to the parties interested of the decision of the superintendent. When an appeal is taken to the committee it shall be heard by said committee without further notice at their next stated meeting, or at such future meeting or time as they may designate, and shall be determined by vote of the majority of a quorum, or if any other member not less than a quorum of the members present at such meeting, and the decision arrived at thereon by the committee shall be final and conclusive upon all parties without exception or approval."

There was evidence on the part of the plaintiff that he was unable to work on May 15, 1905, and that this disability continued up to the time of the trial, and evidence to the contrary by the defendant.

The defendant requested the following special instruction, which was refused, and defendant excepted: "That, if you believe the evidence in the case, the plaintiff was at the time of the alleged injury a member of the relief department of the Atlantic Coast Line Company, and agreed to be bound by the rules and regulations of said relief department, and accepted benefits therefrom in accordance with the said rules and regulations,

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r Indexes and that there is no evidence that any fraud or deceit of any character was practiced upon the plaintiff, either in signing the application for membership in said relief department, or in inducing him to accept the benefits in said department after his said injury, and that the plaintiff voluntarily accepted benefits and elected thereby to obtain his rights under said contract in accordance with the rules and regulations of said relief department; and the court therefore charges you that as the plaintiff has submitted the questions in controversy in this action to the tribunal provided for in the rules and regulations of said relief department, of which he was a member, and the same having been duly and orderly considered by said advisory committee of said relief department, the plaintiff under the terms of his contract, as a matter of law, is bound thereby, and he cannot maintain this action, no fraud or undue influence having been proven, you will answer the issue as to the right of recovery by plaintiff in this action, 'No.'"

There was a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and defendant excepted and appealed.

Harry Skinner, for appellant. Julius Brown, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. (after stating the facts as above). The question involved in this case is of general importance, and the principle announced will determine, in this state, the right of all benefit societies and fraternal orders, which provide for the payment of benefits to sick or disabled members, to establish, within the society or order, some tribunal with power to investigate the fact, upon which the right to the benefit may depend, and whose decision shall be final, unless impeached for fraud.

We cannot declare that the decision of such a tribunal is binding upon a member who belongs to a fraternal order, and refuse to enforce it, on substantially the same facts, because it is invoked in behalf of the relief department of a railroad.

The principal contentions of the plaintiff, assailing the validity of the decision of the advisory committee, are that it is practically an arbitration; that on the facts developed a property right is involved; that an agreement to submit such a right to arbitration in advance of the controversy is invalid, because it is an agreement which ousts the courts of their jurisdiction, and that the advisory committee was not fairly constituted.

The defendant replies that, if the action of the advisory committee is to be governed by the strict rules of an arbitration, no property right was submitted to the committee, but only the ascertainment of a single fact that the committee was impartially constituted, and, if not, that the plaintiff submitted his claim with full knowledge of the facts, and that there has been an award, which is final. The defendant further says, that the principles relied on are not applied, without qualification, in behalf of a member of an organization, who acquires his property right, under and by virtue of its regulations.

There is some difference of opinion as to the motive behind the adoption of the rule that an agreement in advance of a controversy to submit all questions of law and fact to arbitration is not enforceable, some attributing it to the jealousy of the courts and a desire to repress all attempts to encroach on the exclusiveness of their jurisdiction, and others to an aversion, from reasons of public policy, to sanction contracts by which the protection which the law affords the individual citizen is renounced (Canal Co. v. Coal Co., 50 N. Y. 258); but the tendency of the later decisions is to relax the rule.

In the case from New York, the court says: "An agreement of this character induced by fraud, or overreaching, or entered into unadvisedly through ignorance, folly, or undue pressure, might well be refused a specific performance, or disregarded when set up as a defense to an action. But when the parties stand on an equal footing, and intelligently and deliberately, in making their executory contracts, provide for an amicable adjustment of any difference that may arise, either by arbitration or otherwise, it is not easy to assign, at this day, any good reason why the contract should not stand, and the parties made to abide by it and the judgment of the tribunal of their choice. Were the question res nova, I apprehend that a party would not now be permitted, in the absence of fraud or some peculiar circumstances entitling him to relief, to repudiate his agreement to submit to arbitration and seek a remedy at law, when his adversary had not refused to arbitrate, or in any way obstructed or hindered the arbitration agreed upon. * * * The better way, doubtless, is to give effect to contracts, when lawful in themselves, according to their terms and the intent of the parties, and any departure from this principle is an anomaly in the law, not to be extended or applied to new cases unless they come within the letter and spirit of the decisions already made. The tendency of the more recent decisions is to narrow rather than enlarge the operation and effect of prior decisions, limiting the power of contracting parties to provide a tribunal for the adjustment of possible differences, without a resort to courts of law; and the rule is essentially modified and qualified."

This is in line with the statement of Chapman, J., in Hood v. Hartshorn, 100 Mass. 117, 1 Am. Rep. 89, that "judicial tribunals are provided by the government to enable parties to enforce their rights when other means fail, but not to hinder them from adjusting their differences themselves, or by agents of their own selection." And with the remark of Pollock, B., in Dawson v. Fitz gerald, 1 Ex. D. 257, that "it has been shown, not only by decision, but by the legislation of late years, that the same pious reverence is not felt for litigation in an open court that was felt in the olden time."

There would appear to be some contradiction for the same court to say that "the settlement of controversies by arbitration is looked on with great favor by the courts" (Hurdle v. Stallings, 109 N. C. 6, 13 S. E. 720), and then refuse to permit the members of an organization to agree upon a plan for determining when a member is able to return to his work.

The rule as to agreements to arbitrate has been modified from time to time until now it is generally accepted that it is competent to contract that the amount of damages which may be recovered, or the existence of any fact, which may enter into the right to recover, shall be submitted to arbitration, provided the right of action is not embraced in the agreement.

In the leading English case of Scott v. Avery, 5 H. L. 811, it was held that a provision of a mutual insurance company was valid, "that the sum to be paid to any insurer for loss should, in the first instance, be ascertained by the committee, but if a difference should arise between the insurer and the committee, 'relative to the settling of any loss, or to a claim for average, or any other matter relating to the insurance,' the difference was to be referred to arbitration," and Lord Coleridge thus speaks of this provision: "The principle of law which is relied on by the plaintiff in error is agreed on. The difference between the parties is upon the question whether it governs the present case, and this must be decided by determining the true construction of the agreement. If two parties enter into a contract, for the breach of which in any particular an action lies, they cannot make it a binding term that in such event no action shall be maintainable, but that the only remedy shall be by reference to arbitration. Whether this rests on a satisfactory principle or not may well be questioned; but it has been so long settled that it cannot be disturbed. The courts will not enforce or sanction an agreement which deprives the subject of that recourse to their jurisdiction, which has been considered a right inalienable even by the concurrent will of the parties. But nothing prevents parties from ascertaining and constituting as they please the cause of action which is to become the subject-matter of decision by the courts."

Again, it is said in Assurance Co. v. Hall, 112 Ala. 323, 20 South. 448: "The principle is that when the agreement to arbitrate includes the whole subject-matter of difference, so that the right of the party to resort to the courts of his country for the determination of his suit or claim is absolutely and effectually waived, such an agreement is against public policy and void. We adhere to that conclusion. The courts clearly distinguish between an agreement which refers to arbitration the extent or amount of damages to be recovered, but leaves the parties free to have the right to recover or liability of the other party determined by the courts, and those agreements which refer to arbitration the authority to determine the right of the one to recover, or the liability of the other. The former are upheld and enforced, while the latter are declared to be against public policy and not binding."

In Holmes v. Richet, 56 Cal. 313, 38 Am. Rep. 54, the case from New York (Canal Co. v. Coal Co., supra) and Scott v. Avery, supra, are cited with approval, and particularly the statement in the latter case: "But nothing prevents parties from ascertaining and constituting as they please the cause of action which is to become the subject-matter of decision by the courts."

The original doctrine, with its modifications, is well summed up by Justice Manning in Kelly v. Trimont Lodge, 154 N. C. 100, 69 S. E. 766: "Our court has uniformly held to the doctrine that, when a cause of action has arisen, the courts cannot be ousted of their jurisdiction by agreements, previously entered into, to submit the liabilities and rights of the parties to the determination of other tribunals named in the agreement; but it has been also generally held that the agreement to submit the particular question of the amount of loss or damage of the assured under an insurance policy is not against public policy and is sustained. That is simply a method for the ascertainment of a single fact, and not the determination of the legal liability of the insurer"—citing Mfg. Co. v. Assur. Co., 106 N. C. 28, 10 S. E. 1057. And in Braddy v. Ins. Co., 115 N. C. 354, 20 S. E. 477, Justice Avery says the proposition is well settled that an agreement to submit to arbitration the single question of the amount of loss by fire is valid.

Under these authorities, and particularly under the declaration of our own court, and treating the agreement as one for arbitration pure and simple, the defendant might well contend that, its liability to pay benefits being admitted, when the plaintiff is under disability, it was competent for the parties to agree in advance that the single fact of disability should be determined by arbitration.

But the case is stronger for the defendant than this, as the plaintiff has voluntarily submitted his claim to the arbitrament of the advisory committee, and an award has been rendered against him.

The authorities seem to agree that, although an agreement to arbitrate the entire controversy is not enforceable, and that prior to the award either party may revoke the agreement, if he fails to do so, and enters upon the arbitration, and an award is made, he is bound.

In Tobey v. Bristol, 23 Fed. Cas. 1321, Judge Story, after discussing the power of revocation, says: "But, where an award has been made before the revocation, it will be held obligatory, and the parties will not be allowed to revoke it, and the courts of law, as well as of equity, will enforce it."

The same principle is declared by Justice Walker at the last term, in Williams v. Manf. Co., 154 N. C. 208, 70 S. E. 291, in which he says: "After the arbitrators have acted and rendered an award, the case is very different. Their decision (that of the arbitrators) is binding upon the parties, and can be successfully impeached only upon the grounds which would invalidate any other judgment. This distinction between a mere agreement to submit and a submission consummated by an award is uniformly recognized by the authorities."

Nor can the plaintiff now object that the members of the advisory committee were interested, or partial, if such is the fact, because he knew how it was constituted when he became a member of the department, and at the time he submitted his claim to them.

As was said by Justice Shepherd in Pearson v. Barringer, 109 N. C. 400, 18 S. E. 943: "It is well settled that parties 'knowing the facts may submit their differences to any person, whether he is interested in the matters involved (Navigation Co. v. Fenlon, 4 Watts & S. [Pa.] 205), or is related to one of the parties, and the award will be binding upon them.' 6 Wait's Act. & Def. 519; Morse on Arbitration, 105. But, if the submission is made in ignorance of such incompetency, the award may be avoided. No relief, however, will be granted unless objection is made as soon as the aggrieved party becomes aware of the facts, and, if after the submission he acquires such knowledge and permits the award to be made without objection, it is treated as a waiver, and the award will not be disturbed. Davis v. Forshee, 34 Ala. 107. 'A party,' says Morse on Arbitration, supra, 'will not be allowed to lie by after he has attained the knowledge and proceed with the hearing without objection, thereby accumulating expense and taking the chance of a decision in his favor, and then, at a later stage, or after a decision has been or seems likely to be rendered against him, for the first time produce and urge his objection.' From these and other authorities, it would seem clear that when one seeks to impeach an award, he must show that he made objection as soon as he discovered the disqualifying facts."

If, therefore, we applied the rules governing arbitration and awards, we would hold upon the facts in this record that it was competent for the parties to agree in advance to submit to arbitration the single question of the ability of the plaintiff to return to his work, and that an award rendered on such an agreement would be valid, when free from oppression or fraud.

The rights of the parties cannot, however, be determined strictly upon the principle governing arbitrations, because the plaintiff acquires his right to the benefits he claims under the rules of the relief department, and he has by contract attached to the enjoyment of these benefits the condition that he will abide by all reasonable regulations.

There is no question of negligence involved, and the plaintiff does not say that the provisions of the relief department are against public policy and void. On the contrary, he demands relief because he is a member of the department and under its provisions. He says that having contributed dues amounting to $6.15 before he was accidentally injured, and having received benefits amounting to $873.50 on account of his injuries, when the department, upon an appeal by him, in accordance with the by-laws, decides that he is able to return to work, he may refuse to do so, and that the regulations providing for a tribunal to decide this single question has no binding force.

The authorities upon this question are in much conflict. All seem to agree that when the regulation of an organization relates to its internal policy, or to a question of membership, the action of the organization, according to the regulations, is, in the absence of fraud, conclusive; but there is a difference of opinion as to what is a property right and as to the effect of the regulation when a property right is involved. Some courts hold that, when a property right is involved, the member must first seek redress inside of the order, and that, having done so, he may then resort to the courts. Others hold that, if there is no inhibition against resorting to the courts, he may do so in the first instance. Others that he must resort to the order first, if the regulations so require, and then to the courts, although the regulations say that the decision by the tribunal in the order shall be final. And others that the decision rendered according to the regulations of the order is final and conclusive. Vandyke's Case, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 312, 30 Am. Dec. 263; Rarker v. Great Hive, 135 Mich. 499, 98 N. W. 24; Van Poucke v. St. Vincent, 63 Mich. 381, 29 N. W. 863; Ry. Ben. Ass'n v. Robinson, 147 Ill. 159, 35 N. E. 168; Cotter v. A. O. U. W., 23 Mont. 90, 57 Pac. 650; Loeffler v. M. W. of Am., 100 Wis. 85, 75 N. W. 1012; Rood v. Ry. Ben. Ass'n (C. C.) 31 Fed. 62; Osceola Tribe v. Schmidt, 57 Md. 105; Anacosta Tribe v. Murbach, 13 Md. 91, 71 Am. Dec. 625; Sanderson v. Railroad Trainmen, 204 Pa. 183, 53 Atl. 767; Robinson v. Templar Lodge, 117 Cal. 371, 49 Pac. 170, 59 Am. St. Rep. 193; Grand Central Lodge No. 297, A. O. U. W. v. Grogan, 44 Ill. App. 111; Knights of Pythias v. Wilson, 66 Fed. 785, 14 C. C. A. 264.

In Vandyke's Case the charter of a private corporation provided that, if any member should be found breaking the rules of the society, he should be served with a notice to attend to answer at the next stated meeting, after which a decision should be made by ballot, and, if two-thirds considered him guilty, he should be dealt with agreeably to the by-laws. The by-laws provided that no member should be entitled to receive any benefit from the society whose complaints are the result of intoxication, etc. A member having been expelled by the requisite majority, on the ground of intoxication, after due notice, etc., he brought an action in the court of common pleas to recover the allowance granted to disabled members, and it was held that the regularity of the proceedings to expel him could not be inquired into in that action, and that the court had no jurisdiction to compel payment of the allowance. Chief Justice Gibson, who wrote the opinion, says: "Into the regularity of these proceedings it is not permitted us to look. The sentence of the society, acting in a judicial capacity and with undoubted jurisdiction of the subject-matter, is not to be questioned collaterally, while it remains unreversed by superior authority." It will be noted that in this case the tribunal provided in the order decided the question of intoxication, and its decision was held to be conclusive, and upon it the right to benefits was denied.

In Sanderson v. Brotherhood of Trainmen, supra, speaking to the same question, the court says: "In the case at bar the plaintiff's statement clearly shows that the constitution of the order provides a tribunal to decide the very question now in controversy in this case, to wit, whether or not the plaintiff's claim amounted to total disability. In accepting the certificate the plaintiff agreed, with the other members of the beneficial order, that he would submit this question to the tribunal so constituted. It was a tribunal of his own choice. It was doubtless provided for the express purpose of preventing litigation and thereby to prevent the funds of the order from being taken and used in defending suits. It is to the interest of every member of the order that this regulation should be enforced. In our opinion, the decision of such tribunal is conclusive upon the plaintiff and the merits of the decision of such tribunal cannot be inquired into collaterally, either by action at law or any other mode."

In the case of Anacosta Tribe of Red Men, supra, the right of a member to sick benefits was involved, and after a decision against him in the order he brought action to recover the benefits. The court says: "The appellee, by becoming a member, assent to be governed by the tribe and council, according to the regulations, and it follows that he was bound by their application and construction in his own case. It is provided that the tribe shall determine matters of this kind, and the decision, on appeal, made final. These are private beneficial institutions operating on the members only, who for reasons of policy and convenience, affecting their welfare and perhaps their existence, adopt laws for their government, to be administered by themselves, to which every person who joins them assents. They require the surrender of no right that a man may not waive, and are obligatory on him only as long as he chooses to recognize their authority. In the present instance, the party appears to have been subjected to the general laws and by-laws according to the usual course, and, if the tribunal of his own choice has decided against him, he ought not to complain. It would very much impair the usefulness of such institutions, if they are to be harassed by petty suits of this kind, and this, probably, was a controlling consideration in determining the manner of assessing benefits and passing upon the conduct of members. The very point arose in Vandyke's Case, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 309 [30 Am. Dec. 263], where (Gibson, Ch. J., delivering the opinion of the court) it was held that an action did not lie to recover benefits, upon grounds that we deem altogether satisfactory." This and Vandyke's Case were approved in the Osceola Tribe v. Schmidt, 57 Md. 105.

In Van Ponce v. St. Vincent Society, supra, plaintiff sued the defendant, a mutual benefit and co-operative insurance company of which he was a member, for money claimed to be due him for a "sick benefit." The by-laws of the company provided for a "sick committee," whose duty it should be to investigate and determine whether a member was entitled to such benefit, whose decision was to be final, and the committee to be the sole "deciders" of the question. After plaintiff had received assistance for a time, he was cited before the committee, and after a hearing they decided that he was not entitled to receive any further benefits on account of his injury, of which decision he was duly notified, and it was held that the action of the committee was final; the court saying: "It is necessary that there should be some mode of determining the question of when relief should be given and denied, and the method provided in the by-law seems well adapted to the circumstances and needs of such a society. There is nothing oppressive in the terms of the by-law, and it contains nothing which the policy of the law forbids. If it is enforced in good faith and with impartiality, which the members pledge themselves to do, it must result in benefit to sick members, and at the same time protect the funds of the society from depletion by the undeserving."

The same principle is declared in Barker v. Great Hive, 135 Mich. 502, 98 N. W. 24.

The question was considered by the Circuit Court of Appeals in Knights of Pythias v. Wilson, supra, and it was there declared: "The decided weight of authority is that a member of a mutual benefit society must resort, for the correction of an alleged wrong done to him as such member, to the tribunals of the society, and, when the proceedings are regular, the action of the society is conclusive, and cannot be inquired into collaterally."

We will not quote further from the cases cited, and there are others to the same effect, but they sustain fully the contention of the defendant that it was the duty of the plaintiff to seek redress inside the department, and that the decision of the advisory committee, upon his appeal, is conclusive upon him.

The doctrine seems to us to be reasonable and just, and necessary to the maintenance, in benefit societies and fraternal orders, of provisions conferring benefits on sick or disabled members.

If it should be held otherwise, such societies would be subjected to litigation each time a member was dissatisfied, and funds raised for wise and beneficent purposes would be wasted.

This is not in conflict with the opinion in Kelly v. Trimont Lodge, 154 N. C. 98, 69 S. E. 764. In that case it is stated that the plaintiffs were entitled, under the rules and regulations, to the sum demanded, and the defendant denied the right of action. It was held that an agreement to submit the whole controversy to arbitration was not binding; but it is distinctly stated that it was competent to agree that the decision of a single fact, such as we have here, could be submitted to a tribunal within the order.

When a member submits his claim to the committee, he is entitled to a hearing, and is not concluded by its action, if it is fraudulent or oppressive, of which the facts on this record furnish no evidence.

There was error in refusing to give the instruction requested by the defendant, and a new trial is ordered.

New trial.

OLARK, C. J. (concurring in result.) This is not the usual case in which this defendant is setting up its relief department as a defense in an action for damages for death or personal injuries caused by the negligence of the railroad company. But I cannot agree that the relief department of the defendant railroad in any particular resembles a fraternal order or a mutual benefit society. It is neither fraternal nor mutual.

In a fraternal order the members enter voluntarily, they prescribe the rules and regulations, the funds are managed by committees and officers appointed by themselves, and the rules and officers can be changed at their will. In this railroad relief department the members are compelled to enter or lose their employment with the corporation. The committees are appointed and the rules and regulations are prescribed, not by the members, but by the employer, and can be changed by the latter only and at its will. The sole management is in the employer, who contributes none of the funds but has sole charge and disposal of them, without responsibility to those who create the fund.

The motive in organizing a relief department is therefore totally dissimilar from the reasons which cause the organization of fraternal or mutual benefit societies. There is nothing which makes the latter a violation of law. That the existence of this relief department is in violation of both state and federal statutes passed for the protection of railroad employes has already been stated in my opinion in King v. Railroad (at this term) 72 S. E. 801, with my reasons for so holding, which need not be repeated here.

GULF REFINING CO. v. CHARLOTTE CONST. CO.

1. CONTRACTS (§ 162*) — CONSTRUCTION — REPUGNANT CLAUSES.

The rule that a subsequent clause of a contract irreconcilable with a former clause and repugnant to the general purpose and intent of the contract will be disregarded is subordinate to the rule that the intent of the parties, as embodied in the entire instrument, is to be given effect, and that every part of the contract must be given effect if that can be done by any fair or reasonable interpretation.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contracts, Dec. Dig. § 162.*]

2. SALES (§ 199*) — CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION.

A contract for the sale of oil provided that the oil was to be delivered at defendant's plant, free on board tank cars; that five days' notice should be given before any delivery was required; and that the liability of plaintiffs should cease when shipment was delivered to the railroad company. Held, that the intent of the parties, as gathered from the entire instrument, must be given effect, and the provision that the liability of plaintiffs should cease when the shipment was delivered to the railroad company may not be disregarded as repugnant to the other provisions, for it was apparently the intent of the parties that the title to the oil should not pass until delivery, but that plaintiffs should not be liable for negligence of the railroad company in making delivery.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Biggs, Judge.

Action by the Gulf Refining Company against the Charlotte Construction Company.

From a judgment for plaintiff and against defendant on its counterclaim, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Plaintiff sued defendant for $422.41, purchase price of oil sold and delivered to defendant as per contract, etc. Defendant admits owing plaintiff the amount stated, a balance due for oil sold and delivered, but sets up a counterclaim for something over $400 arising by reason of plaintiff's wrongful failure to deliver two car loads of oil at the time and place required by the contract between them, whereby defendant was forced to buy a specified amount of oil on the local market at an increased cost, etc. The facts admitted as relevant to this counterclaim are very well stated in one of the briefs as follows: "That on the 25th day of November, 1906, plaintiff and defendant, Charlotte Consolidated Construction Company, entered into a contract whereby plaintiff agreed to sell and deliver to defendant, Charlotte Consolidated Construction Company, and the defendant, Charlotte Consolidated Construction Company, agreed to purchase from the plaintiff Solar gas oil for use in defendant's plant in the city of Charlotte. The price was to be 5½ cents per gallon f. o. b., Charlotte, N. C., in lots not less than 160 barrels, nor more than 320 barrels, unless otherwise agreed upon. Five days' written notice to be given plaintiff or its representatives, at 916 Harrison Building, Philadelphia, Pa., before each delivery was required; payment to be made on the 15th day of each month at plaintiff's Pittsburg office, for all oil delivered during the preceding month, and liability of plaintiff to cease when any shipment was delivered to the railroad. That said contract was carried out by the parties, until the 17th day of October, 1906, at which time defendant, Charlotte Consolidated Construction Company, telegraphed plaintiff to ship two cars of oil on the 20th day of said month, instead of one, which telegram was subsequently confirmed by letter from defendant, Charlotte Consolidated Construction Company, to plaintiff, and plaintiff in accordance with said telegram, on the 20th day of October, 1906, delivered to the Central Railroad of New Jersey the two tank cars of oil, consigned to defendant, Charlotte Consolidated Construction Company, Charlotte, N. C., and took bill of lading for the same and sent the bill of lading to the defendant, Charlotte Consolidated Construction Company, Charlotte, N. C. That, on account of an error committed by the railroad company, said oil was never delivered, but was carried to Courtland, N. Y., and discharged in the tanks of other persons; but the error was not made known to plaintiff till November 2, 1906, when defendant, Charlotte Consolidated Construction Company, by its president, E. D. Latta, wired plaintiff that the oil had not arrived, and ordered shipped at once two other cars of oil, which were shipped on November 2, 1906, according to instructions of defendant, Charlotte Consolidated Construction Company. Before the second shipment of oil arrived at Charlotte, defendants' supply of oil gave out, and it was compelled to buy 11,429 gallons of kerosene oil from the Standard Oil Company, at the price of ($1,108.78) eleven hundred and eight dollars and seventy-eight cents, which oil so used by the defendant railway company in the manufacture of its gas was worth only $702.26, as compared with the value of the Solar gas oil for like purposes, incurring a loss to defendants of $406.52. Defendants admit that there is due plaintiff the sum of $422.41, with interest from the 19th day of January, 1907, subject to such set-off, or counterclaim (if any) as the defendants ought to have credit for by reason of the failure to deliver the two cars or tanks of oil, which were by error of the Central Railroad of New Jersey carried to Courtland, N. Y., and not delivered to defendants. The question of the amount sought to be recovered being eliminated by the defendants' admission, the inquiry before the court is whether or not the loss sustained by defendants, being the relative difference in the value of Solar oil and kerosene oil, is a proper counterclaim against the plaintiff." The court below, being of opinion that on the facts there was no counterclaim available to defendants, entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants excepted and appealed.

E. T. Cansler, for appellant. Clarkson & Duls and W. F. Harding, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). As the court understands the facts, there has been no charge made against defendant for the price of oil that was shipped to other parties by mistake of the railroad company and its agents. The defendant bases its counterclaim on the fact there was a failure to deliver the two car loads of oil at the time and place specified, that this failure was in breach of the contract between the parties, and the consequences are properly chargeable to plaintiff, and this by reason of certain clauses in the agreement as follows: "That plaintiff sold and agreed to deliver to defendant for use in defendant's plant at Charlotte, N. C., maximum 225,000—minimum 175,000 gallons Solar gas oil at 5½ cents per gallon, f. o. b., Charlotte, N. C., by Tank Car, at tank located at Charlotte, N. C., in lots of not less than 160 bbls. nor more than 320 bbls. unless otherwise agreed upon. * * * Five days' written notice to be given representative of party of first party (plaintiff) at 916 Harrison Building, Phil., Pa., before each delivery is required. * * * Liability of first party (plaintiff) ceases when shipment is delivered to railroad company."

The position that the last clause, "Liability of the first party ceases when shipment is delivered to railroad company," is entirely Irreconcilable with the two former clauses, is repugnant to the general purport and intent of the contract, and under the doctrine approved in Jones v. Casualty Co., 140 N. C. 262, 52 S. E. 578, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 111 Am. St. Rep. 843, and other cases of like import, the same should be set aside and not allowed to affect in any way the rights of the contracting parties. But, on the facts in evidence, the court is of opinion that defendants' counterclaim may not be brought within the principle. In Railroad v. Railroad, 147 N. C. 382, 61 S. E. 185, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 223, 125 Am. St. Rep. 550, the court, speaking to the controlling rule in the interpretation of contracts, said: "It is well recognized that the object of all rules of interpretation is to arrive at the intention of the parties as expressed in the contract, and that in written contracts which permit of construction this intent is to be gathered from a perusal of the entire instrument." In Paige on Contracts, § 1112, we find it stated: "Since the object of construction is to ascertain the intent of the parties, the contract must be considered as an entirety. The problem is, not what the separate parts mean, but what the contract means when considered as a whole."

And in Davis v. Frazier, 150 N. C. 451, 64 S. E. 201, the court, referring to the principle recognized in Jones v. Casualty Co. and other cases of like kind, said: "It is an undoubted principle that a 'subsequent clause irreconcilable with a former clause and repugnant to the general purpose and intent of the contract will be set aside.' This was expressly held in Jones v. Casualty Co., 140 N. C. 262 [52 S. E. 578, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 111 Am. St. Rep. 843], and there are many decisions with us to like effect; but, as indicated in the case referred to and the authorities cited in its support, this principle is in subordination to another position, that the intent of the parties as embodied in the entire instrument is to the end to be attained, and that each and every part of the contract must be given effect, if this can be done by any fair or reasonable interpretation; and it is only after subjecting the instrument to this controlling principle of construction that a subsequent clause may be rejected as repugnant and irreconcilable. Jones v. Casualty Co., supra; Lawson on Contracts, §§ 388, 389; Bishop on Contracts, §§ 386, 387." The opinion then quotes with approval from Lawson on Contracts as follows: "The third main rule is that that construction will be given which will best effectuate the intention of the parties, to be collected from the whole of the agreement; and, to ascertain the intention, regard must be had to the nature of the instrument, the condition of the parties executing it, and the objects which they had in view. * * * Courts will examine the whole of the contract and so construe each part with the others that all of them may, if possible, have some effect, for it is to be presumed that each part was inserted for a purpose and has its office to perform. So, where two clauses are inconsistent, they should be construed so as to give effect to the intention of the parties as gathered from the whole instrument. So every word will, if possible, be made to operate, if by law it may, according to the intention of the parties."

These cases and the principle upon which they rest were again stated with approval in a decision at the present term by Associate Justice Allen, in Hendricks v. Furniture Co., 72 S. E. 592.

[1, 2] While the rules of interpretation insisted on by defendants' counsel are correct as general proposition, and the authorities cited in his learned argument are apt to support them in proper cases, they are subordinated to the general principle recognized in the decisions cited, and, correctly applying the same to the contract in question, there is no such conflict in the last clause of the agreement as requires or permits that it be rejected as meaningless. But, on perusal of the entire instrument, we think it clear: That the oil was to be delivered at the tank of defendant company at Charlotte, N. C. That title did not pass and no charge for the oil could be made till such delivery, but at the price agreed upon, 5¼ cents per gallon, the party of the first part was not willing to stand for delays in shipment on the part of the railroad company, and in that view the final clause was inserted, "Liability of first part ceases when shipment is delivered to railroad company." This construction gives reasonable significance to all parts of the contract, harmonizes the different clauses, and is in accord with the rules of interpretation which we have approved and hold to be controlling on the facts presented.

There is no error, and the judgment below is affirmed.

No error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Watauga County; Long, Judge.

Action by S. W. Culver against R. D. Jennings. From a judgment for defendant on report of referee, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The reference was by consent. Exceptions were filed by plaintiff. His honor overruled all the exceptions, and affirmed and approved the findings of fact and rendered judgment against the defendant for $70.76 and adjudged that to be a lien on the land described in pleading and also gave judgment against defendant for the additional sum of $10.05 due on open account.

T. L. Lowe and T. A. Love, for appellant. L. D. Lowe, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. [1] All the exceptions to the referee's report except one are to his findings of fact. As such findings upon examination were approved and adopted by the judge of the superior court, and as there is some evidence to support them, the action of his honor will not be reviewed by this court.

[2] The only exception to any conclusion of law which we find in the record presents the question as to whether the plaintiff is chargeable with costs and attorney's fees as damages for the breach of warranty of title to land set up in his counterclaim.

This is expressly decided in Wiggins v. Pender, 132 N. C. 628, 44 S. E. 362, 61 L. R. A. 772; Jones v. Balsley, 154 N. C. 61, 69 S. E. 827.

PHIFER v. PHIFER et al.

1. DOWER (§ 14*)—NATURE OF HUSBAND'S ESTATE—SEISIN.

Testatrix devised all her property to trustees, directing them to sell the same and after the payment of specified debts of decedent divide the proceeds equally among her five children. Held, that the trust was an active one, and the title to the property, including the real estate, remained in the trustees until the trusts were performed, and, prior to an exercise of the power of sale or a payment of the debts, a son of testatrix had no seisin in the real property of the estate which would support a claim of dower by his widow.

2. DOWER (§ 14*)—TITLE OF HUSBAND—EQUITABLE ESTATE.

An equitable estate in the husband will not support dower in the absence of a seisin in the husband in law, conferring on him not only actual constructive possession, but the legal right to possess.

3. CONVERSION (§ 15*)—PROVISIONS OF WILL—SALE OF LAND.

Where it was the intention of testatrix that her real estate should be sold by trustees and the proceeds divided among her children, the interest of the children in the estate is personalty and not realty.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Conversion, Cent. Dig. §§ 28-37, 52; Dec. Dig. § 15.*]

4. DOWER (§ 78*)—ESTATE OF HUSBAND—PETITION FOR ALLOTMENT.

Testatrix, possessing an estate valued at $10,000, devised and bequeathed the same to trustees, with directions to sell the realty, and after the payment of certain debts to divide the proceeds equally among her five children. The will further provided that advancements made to the children should be deducted from their shares, and recited that her son R. had received by way of advancement the sum of $2,000. Held, that a petition by the widow of R., filed before a sale of the property by the trustees, praying for an allotment of dower, but which failed to allege that there was anything, over and above the advancement, to which R. would have been entitled, was demurrable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Dower, Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; W. J. Adams, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Belle McGhee Phifer against W. W. Phifer and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This is a proceeding for the allotment of dower; the petitioner claiming as the widow of R. S. Phifer, who was one of seven children of M. M. Phifer. The petitioner claims that her husband was seised of an estate of inheritance, legal or equitable, under the will of his mother, and her counsel says, in his brief, that her right depends on the construction of said will, and of two papers executed by the said R. S. Phifer, which are as follows:

"I, Mary Martha Phifer, wife of William F. Phifer, being the equitable owner of certain real estates acquired by me by virtue of a contract of purchase thereof Jos. H. Wilson, for which I hold his contracts in writing for the purchase of said property, which contracts are now in my possession, and upon which contracts of purchase a part of the purchase money has been paid and a part thereof is still owing to said Wilson, and being desirous of making disposition of my estate therein by last will and testament, do hereby make, publish and declare this instrument of writing to be and contain my last will and testament, hereby revoking and declaring void all wills and writings in the nature of a will heretofore made by me, as explanatory of my will hereinafter contained, I declare that I have received an estate under the last will and testament of my father, W. E. White, deceased, of the value of $10,000.00, which estate by virtue of said will (which is on file in the office of the judge of probate of said county), was bequeathed to me for my sole, separate and exclusive use during the term of my life, and at my death to be equally divided among my children, as will more fully appear by reference to said will. And whereas I have heretofore advanced to my sons, William W. Phifer and Robert S. Phifer, respectively, of said trust fund the following sums, to wit: To said William W. Phifer thirteen hundred ($1,300) dollars, and to said Robert S. Phifer, two thousand ($2,000) dollars, and, whereas, my remaining five children, to wit: George M., Maie W., Cordelia W., Josephine H. and Edward W. have received nothing from said source, and whereas, I have invested six thousand three hundred dollars of said trust estate, in part payment of the property purchased by me from Jos. H. Wilson, leaving four hundred dollars of said trust estate which is now in my hands invested in Rutherford county bonds. Now in view of the premises, I will and devise all my estate to my husband, William F. Phifer, and to my son, William W. Phifer, in trust for the purposes hereinafter declared, with power to sell said property, or any portion thereof, either at public or private sale, as in their discretion may seem most judicious, and the proceeds arising therefrom they shall apply:

"(1) To the payment of the residue of the purchase money due upon the purchase of said property.

"(2) To the payment of any debt I may owe.

"(3) The residue of my estate, I direct to be divided among all my children above named, subject nevertheless, to a charge in said division against my sons William W. Phifer of $1,300 and a charge of $2,000 against my son Robert S. Phifer, which said sums were advanced to them respectively out of the trust fund received by me from my deceased father; the whole of said residuary estate to be further subject to a charge for the support and maintenance of my husband, William F. Phifer, for and during his life.

"(4) I hereby constitute and appoint my husband, William F. Phifer, and my son, William W. Phifer, executors of this, my last will and testament.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal the 11th day of August, 1875.

"Witnesses: George E. Wilson. S. J. White.

"This indenture this day made between Robert S. Phifer of the county and state aforesaid, party of the first part, and George M. M. Phifer, and for the further consideration of one ($1.00) dollar to him in hand paid, by the party of the second part, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, has this day bargained and sold, aliened and conveyed and does by these presents bargain and sell, alien and convey, remise and release unto the said party of the second part, all his right, title and interest, legal and equitable, in and to that certain tracts and parcels of land lying in the county and state aforesaid and described as follows:

"Lying on the eastern limits of the city of Charlotte and adjoining the lands of M. M. Orr, Baxter Moore, Hugh Grey, G. D. Parks, W. W. Phifer and the lands of the First National Bank, containing about one hundred (100) acres more or less. Also one other tract adjoining the lands of W. W. Phifer, Dr. M. M. Orr, Robert Gibbon, Mrs. Allen William McCarley, James Davis, George Dougherty, Mrs. C. Kyle, W. R. Burwell, and others, containing about one hundred and seventy (170) acres more or less, and being the tract formerly owned by W. F. Phifer and purchased by Joseph H. Wilson at sheriff's sale and by him conveyed to Mrs. M. M. Phifer.

"To have to hold to him the same party of the second part, his heirs and assigns forever, and the said party of the first part for and in consideration aforesaid does hereby assign and convey to the party of the second part, his heirs, executors and administrators all his right, title and interest in the money, property or estate bequeathed or devised to him by the will of his grandfather, William E. White, and in any property or funds in which said bequeathed money may have been invested upon the condition, nevertheless, that the said party of the second part shall hold the above property by this indenture conveyed in trust for Mary W. Phifer, Cordelia W. Phifer, Josephine H. Durant, George M. Phifer, Edward W. Phifer, and W. M. Phifer. The last named party will be charged in the distribution with the sum of $1,300.00 so expressed and provided in the will of Mrs. M. M. Phifer.

"In testimony whereof, the party of the second part has hereunto set his hand and affixed his seal this the 17th day of February, 1881.

"Robert S. Phifer. [Seal.]"

"Whereas, my mother, Mrs. Mary Martha Phifer, received from the estate of her late father, Wm. E. White, as estate in the sum of about ten thousand dollars, which said estate was limited by the last will and testament of the said Wm. E. White to her for sole and separate use during her life, and at her death to be distributed equally among her children, which said will has been duly admitted to probate in Mecklenburg county,

"And whereas, my said mother has already advanced to me out of said estate so received by her the sum of about ——— dollars, which said sum so received by me and advanced by her, is far in excess of the amount to which I am entitled under said will and testament after the life estate of my mother is terminated,

"Now for and in consideration of the premises and for the further consideration of the sum of ten dollars to me in hand paid, by the other children of my said mother, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, I have renounced and released, and do hereby renounce and release all my right, interest, title and estate, in and to the estate thus bequeathed to me by the last will and testament of the said Wm. E. White, which, said estate was to come into possession after the death of my said mother.

"And I do hereby assign, transfer and set over all my right, title, interest and estate in and to the same, to my brothers, William W., George W., Edward White, and to my sisters, Mary W., Cordelia W., and Josephine H., to be divided among them equally, and in the event of the death of either or any of them, then the share of the one deceased to survive to the others.

"In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this the 14th day of February, 1879.

"[Signed] Robert S. Phifer. [Seal.]"

There is no allegation in the petition as to what has been done under said will, or that the trusts have been closed, or as to the value of the property bequeathed or devised, or that there is any surplus after paying the residue of the purchase price of the property referred to in the will, and the debts of the testatrix, and accounting for the charge of $2,000 against R. S. Phifer. The defendants demurred to the petition, which was sustained, and the petitioner excepted and appealed.

W. F. Harding, for appellant. Burwell & Cansler, Tillett & Guthrie, Cameron Morrison, and Maxwell & Keerans, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. There is no error in the judgment sustaining the demurrer.

[1] If it is assumed that an equitable estate and not a mere right vested in R. S. Phifer under the will of his mother, and that his interest therein was realty, it was, in any event, subject to certain trusts and charges, and neither he nor his widow could have an estate in possession until these trusts and charges were satisfied.

There were seven children of M. M. Phifer, and it clearly appears from her will that, after the payment of certain debts, she desired an equal division among her children, and that R. S. Phifer should have nothing in such division until he had accounted for $2,000 advanced to him.

He had, therefore, no interest in the land, nor in the proceeds of its sale, unless after the payment of the debts mentioned in the will, and providing for the support and maintenance of the husband of the testatrix, there was a surplus fund of at least $14,000, being $2,000 to each of the seven children, and there is nothing in the petition suggesting that this condition exists. On the contrary, the deed to his mother in 1879, and to his brothers and sisters in 1881, and the fact that thereafter he made no further claim for a period of 30 years, indicate that he had been advanced beyond his proportionate share under the will.

Nor is there any allegation in the petition that any part of the trusts declared in the will have been executed, and that parts of the land remain unsold, or that it was unnecessary to sell to perform the trusts. If, however, these allegations were made, we would be inclined to adopt the construction of the will contended for by the defendants, and, if so, the relief prayed for would be denied.

An analysis of the will of Mrs. M. M. Phifer shows:

(1) That she received, under the will of her father, William E. White, a trust fund of the value of $10,000, and by the terms thereof she had the use of same during her life, and at her death said fund was to be equally divided among her children.

(2) That out of said fund she advanced to her son Robert S. Phifer, the husband of the petitioner, $2,000; that she invested $6,300 of said trust estate in part payment of the lands devised in her will; that she held certain contracts for the purchase of the lands devised, and at her death all the purchase money had not been paid.

(3) That she bequeathed and devised her estate, both real and personal, to her husband, William F. Phifer, and to her son William W. Phifer, in trust, with power to sell said property or any portion thereof, either at public or private sale, as in their discretion might seem most judicious, and directed that they should apply the proceeds therefrom as follows: (a) to the payment of the residue of the purchase money due upon the purchase of said property; (b) to the payment of her debts; (c) the residue of her estate to be divided among all her children named in the will, subject to a charge in said division against her sons, William W. Phifer of $1,300 and R. S. Phifer of $2,000, advanced to them, respectively, out of the said trust fund of $10,000 which she received from her father's estate, as set forth in her will; (d) she further provided that the whole of her residuary estate was subject to a charge for the support and maintenance of her husband, William F. Phifer, for and during his life.

The estate of the testatrix is devised to her husband and son in trust for certain purposes, and the purposes are declared. This created an active trust, and the title remained in the trustees until the trusts were performed. The children of the testatrix had an interest in the property, but they were not entitled to possession of any part of it, and could not know what they would get until the trusts were closed. If so, it may well be contended that they had no estate, but a mere right to have the trusts executed, and an account stated, and in that event there would be no seisin in the husband. Thompson v. Thompson, 46 N. C. 431.

[2] It is true that a widow may be endowed of an equitable estate, but the husband must be seised of an estate, whether legal or equitable.

"The seisin of the husband, in order to support the dower, must be seisin in law; not only actual constructive possession, but the legal right to possess." Haire v. Haire, 141 N. C. 88-90, 53 S. E. 340, 341.

"The right to dower does not attach to the lands of the husband unless he was seised during coverture, and the husband must have an estate of inheritance. The word 'seisin' is said to have a technical meaning when used in this connection, and at common law it imported a feudal investiture of title by actual possession, and with us it is the force of possession under some title or right to hold the same; it is either a seisin in deed or a seisin in law, the former being actual possession of a freehold estate, and the latter the right to the immediate possession or enjoyment of a freehold estate. Seisin applies only to freehold estates or to the possession of land of a freehold tenure. Seisin in fact and in deed has also been defined to be possession with intent on the part of him who holds it to claim a freehold interest, and seisin in law as the right of immediate possession according to the nature of the estate." Redding v. Vogt, 140 N. C. 566, 53 S. E. 338.

It is also not unreasonable to conclude from an inspection of the whole will that it was the purpose of the testatrix that all of her estate should be sold and the proceeds divided.

[3] If this was her intention—to have the real estate sold and converted into personalty—the interest of the children in the estate would be personal property. Benbow v. Moore, 114 N. C. 269, 19 S. E. 156.

[4] The testatrix received, under her father's will, $10,000, which belonged to her children at her death, and she had advanced to the husband of the petitioner more than his share of the fund.

She had invested $6,300 of this fund in land, and owed a part of the purchase money, and she knew that she must account to the five children, who had received nothing.

Under these facts appearing on the face of the will, and knowing that the children could follow the trust fund in the land, she devises the land to her executors in trust to sell, and, after the payment of certain claims, to divide the proceeds among her children.

If this construction is permissible, the case of Patton v. Patton, 60 N. C. 574, 86 Am. Dec. 448, is an authority against the petitioner.

The language used in providing for the support of her husband seems to support this view. If she did not intend for the land to be sold and the proceeds divided, why did she not give him a life estate in the land?

If either of these contentions can be maintained, there was no seisin in the husband, and the petitioner would not be entitled to dower; but we refrain from passing on them finally in the condition of the pleadings.

Affirmed.

JOHN CHURCH CO. v. DAWSON et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 6, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1022*)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT—FINDINGS BY COURT.

The trial court's findings of fact on the hearing of exceptions to the report of a referee, being supported by sufficient evidence, are binding on the Supreme Court.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§§ 275, 719*)—PRESENTATION OF QUESTIONS IN LOWER COURT—RULINGS ON REPORT OF REFEREE.

The Supreme Court will not review exceptions of law to a referee's report, unless they are passed upon by the judge and his rulings are especially assigned as errors in the transcript of appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Dec. Dig. §§ 275, 719.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 959*)—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Permission to defendants to file an amended answer setting up a counterclaim, being within the discretion of the trial court, is not reviewable.

4. JURY (§ 28*)—RIGHT TO TRIAL BY JURY—WAIVER.

Though, on exceptions to the report of a referee on a compulsory reference, the plaintiff was entitled to a jury trial of the issues of fact raised by the exceptions, plaintiff abandoned that right when a jury trial was waived in open court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Jury, Cent. Dig. §§ 176-196; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 733*)—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—SUFFICIENCY.

An assignment of error that the court on the hearing on the referee's report signed the judgment as set out in the record presents no question of law for review.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3025-3027; Dec. Dig. § 733.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Beaufort County; O. H. Allen, Judge.

Action by the John Church Company against E. L. Dawson and another, trading as E. L. Dawson & Company. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The original reference was compulsory as to plaintiff; but on the hearing before the superior court a trial by jury was waived, and by consent the judge passed upon the exceptions to the findings of fact by referee as well as upon his conclusions of law. His honor adopted all the findings of fact of the referee except in respect to the fourth and eleventh findings. In these the court made some changes in the figures and amounts as stated by the referee. His honor overruled all other exceptions to findings of fact. His honor affirmed the third, fourth, and fifth conclusions of law of the referee and modified the first and second conclusions of law. The court rendered judgment against plaintiff in favor of the defendants for $1,144.96 and costs. The plaintiff appealed.

Wiley C. Rodman, for appellant. Small, MacLean & McMullan and Ward & Grimes, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. We have examined this record with care and find that the controversy involves a statement of account between plaintiff and its former agents in regard to the sale of pianos.

[1] The controversy is one over facts almost exclusively, and his honor's findings of fact are binding upon us; there being sufficient evidence to support them. The conclusions of law necessarily follow from the facts as found.

[2] There are six assignments of error set out at end of case on appeal. This court does not review exceptions of law to a referee's report unless they are passed upon by the judge and unless the judge's rulings are especially assigned as errors in the transcript of appeal sent to this court.

[3] 1. The defendants were allowed to file an amended answer setting up a counterclaim. This was a matter within the discretion of the court and is not reviewable. The counterclaim is a proper one because it not only grew out of and related to the dealings in pianos between plaintiff and defendants, but it arises out of contract also. Rev. 1905, § 481, subd. 2.

[4] 2. The court ordered a compulsory reference. This would have entitled plaintiff to a jury trial of the issues of fact raised by exceptions to the report, but it was plaintiff's duty to tender the issues arising and attach them to his exceptions to the report, but plaintiff abandoned that right when in open court a jury trial was waived.

Assignments of error Nos. 3, 4, and 5 relate to evidence, which we think was properly admitted, and that it is useless to discuss.

[5] The sixth assignment of error is in these words: "The court, on the hearing upon the referee's report, signed the judgment as set out in the record."

This is a broadside exception to the judgment and presents no question of law for our review.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Cleveland County; Adams, Judge.

Action by E. A. Wellman against J. A. Horn. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

O. Max Gardner and O. F. Mason, for appellant. Ryburn & Hoey and Burwell & Cansler, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. [1, 2] This was an action for the specific performance of a contract to convey land, and to recover the balance of the purchase price. On October 3, 1910, the plaintiff contracted orally to sell his home place to the defendant for $10,000, one half payable January 2, 1911, and the other January 2, 1912. It was in evidence that soon afterwards the parties by agreement went to the First National Bank to get C. C. Blanton to witness the trade, and the defendant stated to Blanton in plaintiff's presence that he had bought plaintiff's home place for $10,000, and wanted Blanton to witness the trade, and wanted to make a payment to bind the trade, and suggested $50, but, upon the plaintiff objecting, the defendant then and there gave his note for $500 due January 2, 1911, to bind the trade. Blanton wrote the note, which defendant signed, and it was also witnessed by Blanton. It was also in evidence that thereupon the defendant asked the plaintiff for something to bind him; that the plaintiff gave a receipt for the $500 note, Blanton writing and witnessing it, and that, after the receipt was given, the defendant said: "Now, we had better call over the amount to be paid, and when it is to be paid"; and said, "I am to pay the remaining part of $5,000 outside of this note on January 2, 1911, and I am to pay Wellman the remaining $5,000 on January 2, 1912."

It was further in evidence "that Blanton drew a bank deposit slip near him and wrote down what defendant said, as he stated it, the defendant standing on the right of Blanton and the plaintiff on the left, where both could see what he was doing, that, after Blanton wrote the memorandum, he said, 'Boys, let's see if we understand this trade.' Then Blanton read over the following memorandum, which both parties agreed was correct: "$5,000 Jan. 2, 1911, $5,000 Jan. 2, 1912. J. A. Horn to pay the above to E. A. Wellman, when he makes deed to Horn for Wellman's home place 3 Oct. 1910."

There was evidence in corroboration and evidence contradictory of the above. The judge recited the above and the other evidence, and told the jury that if they should find that Blanton in the presence of the defendant wrote the memorandum at the request of the defendant embracing therein the terms of the contract, and thereafter read it to the parties, and that the defendant then agreed that the memorandum was a correct statement of the contract, they would find that Blanton was lawfully authorized by the defendant to make the memorandum, and would answer the first issue, "Yes"; and, unless they so found, to answer the first issue, "No." The jury responded, "Yes."

The statute of frauds was pleaded, but this memorandum complies with that statute because as the jury find the facts there was sufficient signing. The memorandum embraced all the essential elements of the contract, it was sufficiently definite, and contained all the terms of the agreement. Under the statute of frauds it is not necessary that the contract should be subscribed. It is sufficient if it is signed by the parties to be charged, or by some one duly authorized by him. If the name "J. A. Horn" in the memorandum had been signed by the defendant, it would have been sufficient. It is equally sufficient if "J. A. Horn" was written therein by some one authorized by him. It is not necessary that such authority should be in writing. There was evidence that Blanton wrote the memorandum, including the name "J. A. Horn," in his presence, and by his authority, and that the defendant could see him while he was writing. The defendant subsequently, on October 5th, wrote the plaintiff a letter in which he said, "I would like to git out of our land trade if it would suit you. I can not rent my place so it will pay," and went on to give other reasons why he wished to be released. The jury found all the other issues also in favor of the plaintiff, to wit, that the plaintiff had tendered a good and sufficient deed which the defendant refused to accept, and that plaintiff had not made any fraudulent representations in regard to the matter. The case was fully argued below and here. But the above presents the real point in controversy, and we find no error in the record of the trial below. The statute of frauds (Rev. § 976) provides: "All contracts to sell or convey any lands * * * shall be void unless the said contract or some memorandum or note thereof be put in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some other person by him thereunto lawfully authorized."

Speaking for myself only, the statute does not require the agreement to pay the purchase money to be in writing, but only the contract "to sell or convey land." The decisions on this point have been conflicting, and are fully stated on both sides in Brown v. Hobbs, 154 N. C. 548, and 547-558, 70 S. E. 906, in the two concurring opinions therein set out. The point is not made in this case, and for the purpose of this decision the case has been tried and decided both below and in this court as if it were conceded by the plaintiff that the contract of the defendant to pay the purchase money was required to be in writing. The oral contract to pay the purchase money is not controverted, nor the sufficiency of the description "the Wellman Home Place."

No error.

1. PLEADING (§ 48*) — COMPLAINT — SUFFICIENCY.

The Code, requiring pleadings to be construed favorably to the pleader to effectuate his main purpose, and providing that a cause of action shall be plainly and concisely stated, does not permit a pleader to disregard the rule requiring pleadings to be so drawn as to present clearly the issues in the case; and the facts going to make up a cause of action must be stated as concisely as is consistent with accuracy, and no material allegation may be omitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Dec. Dig. § 48.*]

2. PLEADING (§ 406*)—COMPLAINT—DEFECTS—WAIVER.

A defect in a complaint which may be cured by an amendment is waived by answer to the merits, and a demurrer ore tenus comes too late.

3. PLEADING (§ 406*)—COMPLAINT—DEFECTS—WAIVER.

A defect in the complaint to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent against creditors of the grantor, which alleges the failure of the grantor to pay a note signed by him and sureties, and the recovery of judgment thereon, and the assignment of the judgment to a trustee for the sureties, etc., arising from a failure to allege that the sureties had paid the judgment, is waived by answer to the merits; but before final judgment the complaint should be amended so as to allege that fact.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. §§ 1355-1365; Dec. Dig. § 406.*]

4. PARTIES (§ 6*)—SURETIES OF FRAUDULENT GRANTOR.

Where a principal debtor conveyed his property in fraud of his sureties, the sureties were the real parties in interest, in an action to set aside the conveyance, brought after judgment against the sureties and the principal debtor, though the judgment creditor had assigned the judgment to a trustee for the sureties, notwithstanding Revisal 1905, § 404, authorizing an action by a trustee of an express trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Parties, Dec. Dig. § 6.*]

5. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 218*)—RIGHT TO SUE.

That a creditor, obtaining a judgment against the principal debtor and his sureties, assigned the judgment to a surety as trustee for the benefit of the sureties did not prevent the sureties from suing to set aside a conveyance by the principal debtor as fraudulent as to creditors, on the theory that the sureties had satisfied the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 643-650; Dec. Dig. § 218.*]

6. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 218*)—RIGHT TO SUE.

A surety may sue on an implied promise of his principal to reimburse him for money paid on a judgment rendered against the principal and surety; and a fresh judgment against the principal is not necessary to enable the surety to maintain an action to set aside a conveyance by the principal as fraudulent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 643-650; Dec. Dig. § 218.*]

7. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 298*)—FRAUDULENT INTENT OF GRANTOR—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit to set aside a conveyance by a debtor to his wife as fraudulent as to creditors, evidence held to show the fraudulent intent of the grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 892-895; Dec. Dig. § 298.*]

8. EVIDENCE (§§ 230, 265*)—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a suit to set aside a conveyance by a debtor to his wife as fraudulent as to creditors, a declaration, made by the debtor in the absence of the wife, disclosing a dishonest purpose to convey his property, so that it could not be reached by his creditors, was competent as to the debtor's intent, but was not binding on the wife, unless she participated in the fraud, or accepted the conveyance with knowledge thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. §§ 835-851, 1029-1050; Dec. Dig. §§ 230, 265.*]

9. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 301*)—FRAUDULENT INTENT OF GRANTEE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit to set aside a conveyance by a debtor to his wife as fraudulent as to creditors, evidence held to justify a finding that the wife participated in the debtor's fraud, justifying relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 904-907; Dec. Dig. § 301.*]

10. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 277*)—HUSBAND AND WIFE—PRE-EXISTING CREDITORS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where an insolvent debtor conveyed property to his wife, the wife, in a suit by a pre-existing creditor to set aside the deed for fraud, has the burden of showing that a consideration actually passed in the shape of money paid, something of value delivered, or the discharge of a debt due from the husband to her; and when she offers testimony sufficient to satisfy the jury that the deed was founded on a valuable consideration the burden shifts to the creditors to show the fraud alleged as ground for relief.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Fraudulent Conveyances, Cent. Dig. §§ 809-814; Dec. Dig. § 277.*]

11. WITNESSES (§ 37*)—FACTS WITHIN KNOWLEDGE OF WITNESS.

The cashier and receiving teller of a bank may testify that a judgment in favor of the bank has been paid by the sureties of the principal debtor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. §§ 80-87; Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

12. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES (§ 289*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a suit to set aside a conveyance of real estate as fraudulent as to creditors of the grantor, evidence of a bill of sale, executed by the grantor to a third person at the time of the execution of the deed, was admissible to show a fraudulent purpose to defeat creditors.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rowan County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by J. M. Eddleman and another against H. C. Lentz and wife. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This action was brought to set aside certain conveyances of real estate, executed by the insolvent defendant, H. C. Lentz, to his wife, Mary A. Lentz, on the ground that they were made in fraud of creditors. On May 7, 1904, defendant H. C. Lentz, as principal, with H. T. Graeber, J. L. Rendleman, J. M. Eddleman, W. G. Patterson, J. C. Lingle, F. E. Corriber, J. L. Holshouser, and G. A. Ramseur, as sureties, executed a note to the Davis & Wiley Bank of Salisbury, N. C., in the sum of $2,000, for value received. H. C. Lentz failing to pay said note, action was commenced by the bank, summons served February 2, 1907, and judgment rendered in favor of the bank against Lentz and his sureties at May term, 1907, of Rowan superior court. Execution was issued July 6, 1907, against H. C. Lentz and returned nulla bona. On November 6, 1909, the bank, for value and without recourse, assigned said judgment, on the record, to one J. M. Eddleman, as trustee for the sureties, who had paid the indebtedness. Defendant H. C. Lentz, having also been sued by the First National Bank of Salisbury, January 31, 1907, on a note for $5,000, upon which judgment was obtained, executed the deeds for all his real estate to his wife, the feme defendant, Mary A. Lentz, dated February 2, 1907, and on the same day executed a bill of sale to one Fesperman for a certain stock of goods, including all his personal property. The deeds to Mary A. Lentz and the bill of sale to Fesperman were recorded the day of their execution. The wife, Mary A. Lentz, grantee, had no separate estate, and no money or property of any kind, except what her husband, defendant H. C. Lentz, gave her, and when the deeds were made to her, she knew of the existence of the note to the bank, and that it had not been paid. The $1,229 note alleged to have been executed to her by her husband, which was a part of the consideration for the deeds, was given for stock in the J. A. Rose Company, which her husband had theretofore bought and paid for, and the certificate of stock was made to her without consideration. The $1,000 mortgage, which it is alleged she assumed, and upon which it is alleged she paid $750, the proceeds from the sale of a house and lot in China Grove, was a valid incumbrance, but the $750 was indirectly paid by the husband, H. C. Lentz, who had bought and paid for the house and lot at China Grove, and had the title made to her, without consideration.

The jury returned the following verdict:

"(1) Did the defendant H. C. Lentz execute and deliver the deeds mentioned in the complaint with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud his creditors, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) If so, did the defendant Mrs. Mary A. Lentz have knowledge of and participate in such fraudulent intent? Answer: Yes."

There was no objection to the issues by either party. Judgment, declaring the deeds void, was entered upon the verdict, and defendants appealed.

Jerome & Price and T. F. Hudson, for appellants. F. T. Kluttz & Son and John L. Rendleman, for appellees.

WALKER, J. [1] The defendants demurred ore tenus to the complaint, upon the ground that the complaint did not state a good cause of action; plaintiffs having failed to allege therein that the judgment against H. C. Lentz and his sureties had been paid by the latter and assigned to a trustee for them. The pleading, it is true, was not drawn with that regard for technical precision and accuracy which even the liberal provisions of the Code required. It must not be supposed that because pleadings are now under the Code construed favorably to the pleader, to effectuate the main purpose of having cases tried upon their real merits, that it permits the pleader to disregard the ordinary and familiar rule requiring pleadings to be so drawn as to present clearly the issues in the case. The Code provides that the cause of action shall be plainly and concisely stated; but this does not mean that essential fullness of statement shall be sacrificed to conciseness, but that all the facts going to make up the cause of action must be stated as plainly and concisely as is consistent with perfect accuracy, and that no material allegation should be omitted. Blackmore v. Winders, 144 N. C. 212, 56 S. E. 874; Banking & Trust Co. v. Duffy (at this term) 156 N. C. —, 72 S. E. 96. Looseness in pleading and inadequacy of allegation are as much condemned by the present Code of Procedure as they were under the former strict and exacting system of the common law. It is form and fiction that have been abolished, but the essential principles of good pleading have been retained.

[2] The defendants' demurrer comes too late. They passed the defective pleading by themselves answering to the merits, and thereby waived the defect, which is not a fatal one, but can be cured by amendment. It is the defective statement of a good cause of action, and not the statement of a defective cause. When the defect appears in the cause of action itself, no amendment can cure it, for it has no existence in fact; it is otherwise where the defect is merely in the statement, for in such a case it can be removed by amendment, and the cause of action will thus be perfected. Garrett v. Trotter, 65 N. C. 430; Warner v. Railroad, 94 N. C. 251; Johnson v. Finch, 93 N. C. 205; McElwee v. Blackwell, 94 N. C. 261, and cases supra.

[3] While the complaint does not allege, as good pleading perhaps required, that the sureties had paid the judgment, it does state that the judgment had been assigned "for value and without recourse" to a trustee for the sureties, which subrogated them in law and equity to the rights of the creditor, or plaintiff in the judgment, to whom they had advanced the consideration, for the use and benefit of the debtor, H. C. Lentz, one of the defendants. In any view of the complaint and the proceedings below, the demurrer ore tenus was properly overruled; but before final judgment is entered in the case the complaint should be amended by inserting the omitted allegation as to the payment by the sureties.

[4] The sureties should also be made parties, as plaintiffs, in their own right, and not merely as beneficiaries under the assignment of the judgment to the trustee, as they are the real parties in interest, within the meaning of the Code; the trustee merely holding the naked legal title for them, and not being beneficially interested in the recovery. They are certainly proper parties, in a case like this one, notwithstanding Revisal, § 404, and it is best that they should be brought in by amendment, and joined as parties with the trustee.

[5. 6] It is contended by the defendants that the sureties satisfied the judgment by the payment; but this is not so, as it appears that it was assigned to a trustee for their benefit, if that was necessary, and the fact that he may be one of the sureties, which does not clearly appear, can make no difference, as he holds, at least, for the other sureties under the assignment, if, as to himself, the judgment is canceled by the payment of his share. Besides, the sureties can maintain the action upon the implied promise of their principal, H. C. Lentz, to reimburse them for the money paid on the judgment to his use; and a fresh judgment against him is not necessary for the purpose, as we have recently held in Silk Co. v. Spinning Co., 154 N. C. 421, 70 S. E. 820. See, also, Bank v. Harris, 84 N. C. 206; Mebane v. Layton, 86 N. C. 574; McLendon v. Commissioners, 71 N. C. 38. As to the rights and remedies of sureties, under such circumstances, the following authorities may further be consulted: 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. (2d Ed.) 218; Stearns on Suretyship, 470, 474, 478; Brandt on Suretyship & Guaranty (3d Ed.) §§ 342, 343, and 346; Leightdown v. McMyn, L. R. 33 Ch. Div. 575; Gerber v. Shrak, 72 Ind. 553; Neal v. Nash, 23 Ohio St. 483; Benne v. Schnecko, 100 Mo. 250, 13 S. W. 82; Bragg v. Patterson, 85 Ala. 233, 4 South. 716; Harris v. Frank, 29 Kan. 200. We do not see how the defendants are now interested in the question as to the sureties' rights under the judgment. The proceeds of the property fraudulently conveyed must be applied to the payment of H. C. Lentz's creditors, and the right of the sureties to the lien of the judgment is not at present involved.

[7, 8] Having disposed of these preliminary matters, we will now proceed to consider the remaining question as to the fraud. It seems to us, after carefully reading the evidence, that there is plenary proof of the intent in the mind of H. C. Lentz to defeat his creditors when he made the conveyances to his wife and Fesperman. He was utterly and hopelessly insolvent at the time. The circumstances, not disputed, tend to show his unlawful purpose to divest himself of his property, and put it away, so that it could not be reached by his creditors, who were justly entitled to have it applied to the payment of their debts. Not only this, but he declared his dishonest purpose to the witness J. L. Holshouser on the very eve of his impending financial disaster, telling him that he intended to save himself, and advising Holshouser to do the same. The feme defendant objected to this testimony, but it was competent, as to his intent, but not binding upon her, or affecting her interest in the property, unless she participated in the fraud, or accepted the deed with knowledge of it. As to H. C. Lentz, the proof discloses a bald and transparent fraud.

[9] Did she avail herself of it with such notice? This is really the only practical question in the case. It would seem that the fraud was so palpable—so visible to the naked eye—if she had notice of the circumstances, which appears more than probable, that she could not have overlooked it, or misunderstood the true nature of the transaction. She knew that he was insolvent, or should have known it, which is the same in law; that her husband was heavily involved, and was transferring all he had to her without any adequate consideration, and upon the sole pretense of benefiting her, without any regard for the just rights of his creditors. She had paid nothing for the property, real or personal, that he had given her, but was really, and to all intents and purposes, a mere volunteer. Such a transaction should not be allowed to stand in the way of creditors so as to defeat their rights.

The presiding judge (Hon. C. C. Lyon) stated the case with unusual clearness and with impartiality, and most favorably for the defendant, in his charge to the jury, following closely the decisions of this court upon the subject, as we understand and interpret them. He instructed them substantially that, notwithstanding all the suspicious circumstances relied on to condemn the transfer of the property, if they found that the feme defendant paid value for the property, it would shift the burden to the plaintiffs, and require of them to prove that there was an actual intent on the part of H. C. Lentz to defraud; and, moreover, that the feme defendant either participated in the fraudulent alienation of her husband's property, or took the deeds from him with actual notice of his covinous purpose. He even told the jury that if, before her husband became insolvent, he had transferred to her the stock in the Rose Company it was a valid gift, and should be treated by them as her property in passing upon the question as to the consideration for the conveyances; she having testified that her husband had transferred the stock to her as a gift, and afterwards had bought it back, giving her his note for $1,229 for it; and that this debt of his to her, and a previous mortgage on the land, which she assumed, constituted the consideration of the deed to her for the property. There was ample evidence that the feme defendant was fully cognizant of the wrongful intent of her husband in making the transfers to her. It was all done at a time when he was being hotly pursued by his creditors, and it had every appearance of an effort on his part to better prepare himself for the race he was running with his creditors "to save himself," and to outstrip them. No one could hardly fail to discover his motive.

[10] In order to sustain the charge of the court, it is only necessary that we should refer to what is said by Justice Avery, in the learned and valuable opinion he delivered for the court in Peeler v. Peeler, 109 N. C. 628, 14 S. E. 59, as follows: "Where an insolvent husband has conveyed land to his wife, and a pre-existing creditor brings an action to impeach the deed for fraud, the onus is upon her to show that a consideration actually passed in the shape of money paid, something of value delivered, or the discharge of a debt due from the husband to her. Brown v. Mitchell, 102 N. C. 373, [9 S. E. 702, 11 Am. St. Rep. 748]; Bump, Fraud. Con. pp. 6, 318; Stephenson v. Felton, 106 N. C. 120 [11 S. E. 255]; Osborne v. Wilkes, 108 N. C. 668 [13 S. E. 285]; Woodruff v. Bowles, 104 N. C. 213 [10 S. E. 482]; Bigelow on Frauds, 136. To this extent she is required to assume a burden not placed upon other grantees. Helms v. Green, 105 N. C. 257 [11 S. E. 470, 18 Am. St. Rep. 893]. When she offers testimony sufficient to satisfy the jury of the existence, validity, and discharge of such previous debt by the conveyance, or shows in some other way that the deed was founded upon a valuable consideration, the burden shifts again, and rests upon the plaintiff to show, to the satisfaction of the jury, the fraud which he has alleged as the ground of the relief demanded. Brown v. Mitchell, supra; McLeod v. Bullard, 84 N. C. 515. But if, after turning the laboring oar over to the creditor, the jury are satisfied, upon a review of the testimony, that the husband executed the deed to her to hinder, delay, or defeat a creditor in the collection of his debt, and that she participated in his purpose, or knew of his intent at the time, though the consideration may have been a valid, pre-existing debt to her, it is their duty to find that the conveyance was made to defraud creditors. In the last clause of the statute (Code, § 1545, 13 Eliz. c. 5, § 2), it is provided that as against a person whose debt, etc., 'shall or might be in any wise disturbed, hindered, delayed or defrauded' by the covinous and fraudulent practices previously mentioned in the same section, viz., by conveyances executed 'with the purpose and intent to delay, hinder and defraud creditors,' such a conveyance shall be void." If there was the least departure by the learned trial judge from this statement of the law, it was decidedly in favor of the feme defendant, and therefore she cannot complain; but we think the law was given to the jury with perfect accuracy. Redmond v. Chandley, 119 N. C. 575, 28 S. E. 255; Graeber v. Sides, 151 N. C. 596, 66 S. E. 600; Crockett v. Bray, 151 N. C. 615, 66 S. E. 666.

Speaking for himself, and not in the least committing the court to his view, the writer of this opinion thinks that the law is not, and should not be, so favorable to the married woman as stated by this court in the cases cited. Our statute (Revisal, § 964) requires the purchaser of property, where the fraud of the vendor is shown, to take the burden and prove that he (or she) acquired it for value, or upon good consideration, and without notice of the fraud. Cox v. Wall, 132 N. C. 734, 44 S. E. 635. Pell's Revisal, § 964, and notes. But this court seems to have made an exception to that statutory rule in the case of the wife taking a conveyance from her husband, though there would seem to be no real and convincing reason for it. The presumption, it seems, should be stronger against her than it is when the conveyance is made to one not so closely connected with the vendor, or sustaining such an intimate and confidential relation towards him; for in the case of husband and wife, with his strong influence over her, there is a greater temptation to commit fraud, and a better opportunity afforded for its consummation. The position of the feme defendant would not be improved, but made worse, should the law be thus declared. She would have to take all, instead of only a part, of the burden to rebut the presumption against her. But the law, as it now stands, is more favorable to her, as we have shown, and we follow the decisions. The jury have found the facts against the defendants upon evidence which fully warrants the verdict, and under instructions wholly free from error.

[11] It was competent to prove by O. D. Davis that the sureties had paid the judgment of the Davis & Wiley Bank against H. C. Lentz. He knew the facts, as its cashier and receiving teller, and why should he not be permitted to speak of it?

[12] The evidence as to the bill of sale to Fesperman was also competent, as showing a contemporary transaction, indicating the fraudulent purpose of Lentz and the preparation he was making at the time to put away his property, in order to defeat his creditors. It was but forging one of the links in the chain of circumstances going to establish the essential fact of intent. It can make no difference that the conveyance was made to a third party, for still it bears upon the issue as to the covinous purpose. Brink v. Black, 77 N. C. 59. The evidence as to a fraudulent intent usually is permitted to take a wide range, as it may be inferred from many circumstances, each one by itself being apparently of small importance, but together producing an absolute conviction.

The court might, in this case, have gone further than it did in the judgment, and ordered a sale of the land for the payment of the judgment debt evidenced by it; but there was no request for it to do so, and we merely refer to it for the purpose of calling attention to the advisability of deciding all controversies, relating to the same subject-matter, in one action, as contemplated by the Code.

No error.

SOUTHWEST NAT. BANK v. JUSTICE.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 6, 1911.)

1. COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT (§ 18*)—ACCEPTANCE OF TENDER—EFFECT.

Plaintiff's bank, holding a note against defendant for $1,400, on which there was a credit of $168, sent the same to the M. bank for collection. On presentation, defendant maker claimed that the note should only have been for $500, and offered to pay $432 as the balance due on that basis, deducting a credit of $168, giving that amount to the cashier of the M. bank, to be tendered in full settlement of the note. The cashier, having entered the same as a credit, sent the amount of the payment and the note to plaintiff, accompanied by a letter, explaining defendant's claim, and stating that the $432 was delivered to be tendered to plaintiff to cover the $500 and interest, and that if plaintiff did not care to accept the remittance could be returned to the M. bank; that the drawers stated they would stand suit before making any further settlement. Plaintiff bank made no reply, and without returning the $432 sued to recover the balance of $1,400. Held, that the letter showed that the money was tendered in full settlement of the claim, and that plaintiff bank could not retain the same and still claim a balance due on the note.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Compromise and Settlement, Cent. Dig. §§ 75-82; Dec. Dig. § 18.*]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT (§ 171*)—AUTHORITY—RATIFICATION OF ACTS—RETENTION OF BENEFITS.

Where plaintiff bank sent a note to another bank for collection, and the latter received less than the face of the note, to be tendered plaintiff in full settlement, plaintiff could not accept and retain the money so paid to his agent, and repudiate the condition on which it was paid in full settlement of the claim.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Principal and Agent, Cent. Dig. §§ 644-655; Dec. Dig. § 171.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mitchell County; Biggs, Judge.

Action by Southwest National Bank against J. G. Justice to recover an alleged balance on a note for $1,400. On the court's intimation that he would direct a verdict for defendant, plaintiff excepted, submitted to a nonsuit, and appealed. Affirmed.

S. J. Ervin, W. C. Newland, and Chas. E. Greene, for appellant. J. W. Ragland, for appellee.

HOKE, J. [1] Plaintiff bank, holding a note for $1,400 on defendant, purporting to be due August 1, 1909, with interest from April 23, 1906, payable annually, and on which there was a credit of $168, of date August 11, 1908, sent the same for collection to the Mitchell County Bank of Bakersville, N. C., about two weeks before same was due. At maturity the cashier of the latter bank presented same for payment, which was refused, and the note was duly protested and returned to plaintiff. Thereupon the note was again sent by plaintiff to the Mitchell County Bank for collection, was again presented, when defendant claimed that the note should have been for only $500, and not $1,400, and offered to pay $432 as the balance due on that basis, deducting the credit of $168 by reason of the former payment, and gave that amount to the cashier, to be tendered in full settlement of the note. The cashier, having entered this as a credit on the note, sent the amount of the payment and this note to plaintiff, accompanied by the following letter: "Gentlemen: We are returning herewith P. M. Brown et al.'s note for 1,400 dollars and interest enclosed to us in your letter of August 5th and hand you herewith remittance of $432.00 which we have collected and credited on the back of note. The drawers of this paper claim that the note should have been for $500.00 instead of $1,400.00 and the $432.00, which they ask that we tender you is to cover the $500.00 and interest for three years and four months, making $600.00 less the $68 credit which appears on the back of the note. If you do not care to accept enclosed remittance, you can return same to us. We would suggest the name of Mr. Charles E. Greene as being a reliable and capable attorney. Yours very truly, [Signed] E. C. Guy, Cashier. The drawers of the note tell me they will stand to be sued on the paper before making any further settlement." The plaintiff made no reply to this communication, and without returning or offering to return the $432, claiming that same shall be considered only as a credit for that amount, instituted the present suit to recover the balance of the $1,400. In our opinion this letter gave clear intimation to plaintiff that if the money was retained it was to be in settlement of the claim, and under our decisions further recovery may not be allowed. Aydlett v. Brown, 153 N. C. 334, 69 S. E. 243; Armstrong v. Lonon, 149 N. C. 434, 63 S. E. 101; Cline & Welkie v. Rudisill, 126 N. C. 523, 36 S. E. 36.

[2] And if there was doubt as to the meaning of the letter there can be none as to the fact that the money was turned over to the cashier of the Mitchell Bank as a tender in full settlement of the claim, and it is well established that a plaintiff cannot accept and hold onto the benefits of the transaction between the cashier and defendant, and repudiate the conditions attached to it. The general principle was applied in a suit at the present term—Sprunt & Sons v. May, 72 S. E. 821, citing, among other cases, Corbett v. Clute, 137 N. C. 546, 50 S. E. 216; Harris v. Delamar, 38 N. C. 219; Manufacturing Co. v. Cotton & Long, 126 Ky. 750, 104 S. W. 758, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 427. It is urged that plaintiff did not know the positive character of the tender when the letter was received, transmitting the payment, but he knows it now, and insists on retaining the money. The principle applicable is very well stated in 30 Cyc. p. 1267, as follows: "It is a well-settled principle of ratification that the principal must ratify the whole of an agent's unauthorized act, or not at all, and cannot accept its beneficial results and repudiate its burdens. It follows that, as a general rule, if a principal, with full knowledge of all the material facts, takes and retains the benefits of the unauthorized act of his agent, he thereby ratifies such act, and with the benefits accepts the burdens resulting therefrom." Railroad v. Railroad, 147 N. C. 385, 61 S. E. 185, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 223, 125 Am. St. Rep. 550.

There is no error in the ruling of the court, and the judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

GIBBES et al. v. CLEMENT.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Dec. 8, 1911.)

INJUNCTION (§ 35*)—RIGHT TO RELIEF.

Plaintiffs were in possession and claimed certain real estate owned by their ancestor prior to his death, except for a conveyance thereof, absolute in form, to defendant. Plaintiffs sued to set aside the deed. On an application to dissolve a temporary injunction, restraining defendant from ejecting plaintiffs from the land, defendant denied the fraud, and it was shown that the deed was executed in settlement of several mortgages, made by the grantor to defendant, and that the amount due on them was more than the value of the land. Held, that the injunction was properly vacated, since, if the conveyance was either a deed or mortgage, plaintiffs had no beneficial interest in the land.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Charleston County; S. W. G. Shipp, Judge.

"To be officially reported."

Action by James O. Gibbes and others against R. Leiby Clement. From an order dissolving a temporary injunction, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Frank F. Herndon, for appellants. Wm. Henry Parker, for respondent.

WOODS, J. This is an appeal from an order of Judge Shipp, dissolving a temporary order of injunction, granted at the instance of the plaintiffs, restraining the defendant from interfering with the plaintiffs, or disturbing their possession of a tract of farm land situated in Berkeley county.

The complaint upon which the temporary order was granted alleged that the plaintiffs were the heirs of Robert Gibbes, deceased, who at the time of his death was the owner in fee of the land, and that they were in possession; that the defendant R. Leiby Clement claimed title through a deed from Robert Gibbes to himself; and that he "will undertake to have plaintiffs vacate said premises the first part of the coming year, unless he is enjoined and restrained from doing so." The complaint further alleged that the deed had been secured by imposition and undue influence exercised by the defendant over Gibbes, and prayed that it should be canceled on this ground. Affidavits from Robert Gibbes, Jr., and from Darcus Brown, widow of Robert Gibbes, Sr., were also submitted, supporting the allegations of the complaint, and alleging that if the plaintiffs should be ejected from their home they would have no other place in which to seek shelter.

Upon the hearing of the motion to dissolve the temporary injunction, affidavits were submitted on behalf of the defendant, denying that the deed had been procured by fraud or undue influence, and alleging that it had been executed by Robert Gibbes with full knowledge of its meaning, and upon full consideration, consisting of the payment and cancellation of several mortgages previously made by the grantor, which were held by the grantee. Upon this showing, Judge Shipp dissolved the temporary order of injunction, holding that the plaintiffs had not alleged sufficient grounds to warrant equitable interference.

In deciding whether the plaintiffs had rights which required for their protection an order of injunction, the showing made by both sides must be considered. The plaintiffs claim as the heirs of Robert Gibbes. On the question whether the paper held by the defendant was intended as a conveyance of the land, or only a mortgage to secure a debt, there was a direct conflict in the affidavits. But the paper is in form an absolute conveyance from Robert Gibbes to the defendant; and the affidavit of one of the witnesses to the deed, that he saw it duly executed by the grantor, was not controverted. The important statement is made in the affidavits submitted by the defendant that the mortgage debts owed by Robert Gibbes to the defendant greatly exceeded the value of the land. The plaintiffs did not deny this indebtedness; nor did they make any offer to pay it.

This, then, is the case as presented: If the defendant's affidavits be true, the plaintiffs have no interest in the land, and an injunction against the defendant taking legal proceedings to obtain the possession would be a hardship upon him; on the other hand, if the plaintiffs' affidavits be true, that the deed was intended as a mortgage, the utmost that they could demand would be a sale of the land to pay the mortgage debt of the defendant, and, as it is undisputed that the debt is far beyond the value of the land, the entire proceeds of the sale would go to the defendant. In any event, therefore, the plaintiffs' interest is unsubstantial. In such a case, it seems obvious that a court of equity is not warranted in enjoining the defendant from the exercise of his legal right to institute ejectment proceedings under the statute. This conclusion, of course, does not affect the right of the plaintiffs to test before the magistrate the right of the defendant to have them ejected, or their right to bring an action for damages for wrongful ejection.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

ROWE v. UNITED STATES INDUSTRIAL LIFE INS. CO. OF CHARLESTON.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Dec. 13, 1911.)

1. INSURANCE (§ 135*)—RULES—ADOPTION—EFFECT.

An insurance company is entitled to adopt reasonable rules for the conduct of its business, and these, when brought to the notice of the insured, are binding on him to the same extent as if declared in express terms to be a part of the contract, and, when printed in a receipt book given to insured, in which weekly premiums were entered as paid, became a part of the contract.

2. INSURANCE (§ 668*)—FORFEITURE—WAIVER OF REQUIREMENTS—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where, in an action on an industrial policy, it was shown that defendant had failed to insist on compliance with its rules and regulations concerning forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums for a certain number of weeks, whether such failure amounted to a waiver was for the jury.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Charleston County; Ernest Gary, Judge.

Action by Ella Rowe against United States Industrial Life Insurance Company of Charleston. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Nathans & Sinkler, for appellant. Wm. H. Grimbail, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. This is an action to recover the sum of $140, alleged to be due the plaintiff on a policy of insurance, issued by the defendant on the life of her husband; John G. Rowe, wherein she was named as the beneficiary.

The defendant interposed the following as a defense to the complaint: "That under and by virtue of the conditions of said policy it was provided as follows:

"7. Should the payment of weekly premiums upon this policy be due four Mondays or longer, this policy shall be void, and all payments hereunder shall be forfeited, said insured shall be out of benefit, and the company shall be freed from its liabilities hereunder.

"8. Policyholders out of benefits, as per clause 7, may be reinstated upon payment of back premiums in full, and upon passing a satisfactory medical examination (but such an examination may be waived by the company if it desires to do so), but the insured will not be entitled to any benefit under this policy, unless in sound health and free from any disease at the time of such reinstatement, and in case death should occur from any cause whatever, within five weeks from the date of such reinstatement, the company shall not be liable to any extent whatever, on account of such death."

"That the insured, John G. Rowe, on the 27th of August, 1910, under the terms of said policy, was 7½ weeks in arrears of weekly payments under the said contract agreed to be paid, and under the terms of said contract the policy was void, and all payments thereunder forfeited, and the insured, John G. Rowe, was out of benefit, and this defendant freed from its liabilities under said contract. That on the 27th day of August, 1910, the said John G. Rowe paid to the agent of the defendant, under the terms of condition eight (8), above set forth, the sum of one dollar and forty ($1.40) cents, being weekly premium for seven weeks, and thereafter, on the 21st day of September, 1910, the day of the death of the said John G. Rowe, his wife paid to the agent of this defendant the further sum of eighty (80) cents under the terms of condition eight (8) aforesaid, being weekly premiums for four weeks. That the said John G. Rowe died on the said 21st day of September, 1910, of a disease from which he was suffering on the said 27th day of August, 1910, and death occurred within five weeks from said 27th day of August, 1910, whereby, as set forth in said conditions seven and eight, this defendant was not liable to any extent whatever, on account of said death. That upon being informed of the death of said John G. Rowe this defendant tendered to the representative of said John G. Rowe the sum of two dollars and twenty ($2.20) cents, being premiums paid on the 27th day of August, 1910, and the 21st day of September, 1910, but said representative refused to accept the same, and this defendant alleges that it is now and has always been ready and willing, to return the said two dollars and twenty ($2.20) cents paid as aforesaid."

On the trial of the case, the receipt book delivered to John G. Rowe was introduced in evidence, without objection, which, under the head of "Extracts from the rules, regulations, etc., of the company," contained the following: "Policies in arrears more than five Mondays become lapsed. No money paid to an agent after that time, will effect a revival or continuance of the policy, and any agent collecting money after such time, is committing a fraud upon both the company and the insured, except he does it in accordance with the following plan, which is the only mode of revival: A written application upon the company's regular form must be made, and with it a deposit of all premiums in arrears. A receipt must be given for this deposit, which deposit is not sent to company, but is retained at the local office to be returned if the applicant be rejected, and to be sent to the company if the applicant be accepted. In no case must premiums in arrears more than five weeks be entered upon this book, until after a revival form has been sent to and approved by the home office, when the revival receipt is to be returned to the agent, and the amount of the same re*cepted in this book. All other entries will be in fraud of the company, and not recognized by it. In all cases of revival the old policy must be surrendered and the form of policy in use at the time of revival accepted in its stead.*"

J. S. Thompson, defendant's secretary, testified on cross-examination as follows: "Q. In the first part of your book, where it speaks of revival, does not it say before any revival the person who is insured shall first make out an application for a revival and get a receipt, and turn in his old policy and get a new policy? A. He turns in his old policy, and has it revived. Q. You said it was not the custom of the company to collect on a policy which was lapsed without a regular form of renewal? A. Yes, sir. Q. Don't your books show that you violated that rule in this very instance? Didn't you collect these 7½ premiums after the policy was lapsed? That was in violation of the rule, was not it? A. It should have been lapsed after four weeks. Q. Should not there have been a renewal under your rule? A. Yes, sir; a revival form should have been made out, and the policy reinstated. Q. If the policy was lapsed, the rule to get in again was to issue a new policy? A. Yes, sir. Q. Didn't your company violate that rule when it accepted these 7½ premiums in the lifetime of the insured? A. A revival should have been made out."

The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $140, and the defendant appealed upon exceptions which will be reported. It will not be necessary to consider the exceptions in detail, as the practical question raised by them is whether there was error on the part of his honor, the presiding judge, in submitting the question of waiver to the jury.

[1] It is unnecessary to cite authorities to sustain the proposition that it is the right and duty of a corporation to formulate reasonable rules and regulations for the conduct of its business; and that they are as binding upon the corporation and those dealing with it after notice thereof as if such rules and regulations had been declared, in express terms, to be a part of the contract. Therefore, when the insured accepted the receipt book delivered to him by the insurance company, with extracts from certain rules and regulations therein printed, they became a part of the contract, and of course were binding on both parties.

[2] There was a failure on the part of the defendant to insist upon the rules and regulations hereinbefore mentioned, and the question whether this was a waiver was properly submitted to the jury. Heustess v. Insurance Co., 88 S. C. 31, 70 S. E. 403.

Furthermore, the court could not have construed the policy of insurance in the manner for which the appellant contended, as the provisions thereof and the rules and regulations were in some respects contradictory, especially since there were other facts in the case with which they were to be considered. Holliday v. Pegram, 89 S. C. 73, 71 S. E. 367.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

CHATTEL MORTGAGES (§ 235*)—PAYMENT OF DEBT—TRANSFER OF PROPERTY TO MORTGAGEE.

Defendant, in an action to recover possession of mules, answered that he had purchased the mules and given his own mule in exchange, and his note for the balance, secured by a chattel mortgage; that at the time of the purchase plaintiffs warranted the mules to be sound, and agreed that if they were not defendant might return them, and would not have to pay for them; that one of the mules was returned as defective; and that defendant had paid the balance due on the mule he retained. Held, on demurrer, that the matters set up in the answer were not a mere set-off, but constituted a payment or discharge of the debt, so as to defeat plaintiff's recovery.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Cherokee County; John S. Wilson, Judge.
 "To be officially reported."

Action by Wilkins & Brown against J. H. Curry. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Butler & Hall, for appellant. Otts & Dobson, for respondents.

JONES, C. J. This is an action to recover possession of personal property, and the appeal is from an order of Judge Wilson, sustaining a demurrer of plaintiff to certain parts of defendant's answer.

The complaint alleged that on February 14, 1910, defendant executed to plaintiff a promissory note for $385, payable six months thereafter, and to secure same executed a chattel mortgage on two mules described. That on June 23, 1910, defendant paid plaintiffs $150, and on August 18, 1910, $98.25, which had been duly credited on the note, that the condition of the mortgage has been broken, and that plaintiffs are entitled to the possession of one of the mules described, and alleged to be of the value of $166.70, and demands possession, with damages.

The answer, after admitting the execution of the note and chattel mortgage, the payment of $98.25, and refusal to surrender the mule, denied the other allegation of the complaint, and as a further defense alleged the following matters, as to which demurrer was sustained, on the ground that they do not state facts sufficient to constitute a counterclaim or defense:

"(3) That, on or about March 10, 1910, the defendant purchased from the plaintiff a pair of mules at the agreed price of $600, each of said mules being valued at $300; that defendant exchanged therefor his own mule at the agreed price of $215, which left a balance of $385, for which the note and mortgage was executed, as set out in the complaint.

"(4) That at the time of said purchase, and as a part of the transaction, the plaintiff guaranteed and warranted said pair of mules as being sound and all right, and the plaintiff agreed with the defendant that if said mules were not as represented and guaranteed and warranted, as aforesaid, that the defendant should return said mules, or either of them, and would not have to pay for same.

"(5) That one of the said mules was distempered and wind-broken which was known to the plaintiff, which defects were covered expressly by the aforesaid warranty and guaranty, which defect rendered said mule unfit for ordinary work, and made it wholly unsuitable for use, so that the defendant was much hindered and delayed in his work, and complained to the plaintiff, whereupon the plaintiff himself came to Gaffney and inspected said mule, and admitted that said mule was wind-broken, and promised to make good the defendant's damage. Defendant thereupon elected to rely on the contract made with the plaintiff, and pursuant thereto returned said defective mule to the plaintiff, who, as defendant is informed and believes, received said mule, and thereafter disposed of the same in some way.

"(6) That, by reason of the foregoing facts, the defendant owes plaintiff nothing on the mule so returned and accepted by the plaintiff.

"(7) Further answering, and as further defense, the defendant alleges: That after the return of the mules, as above stated, the defendant paid to the plaintiff the sum $98.25, which was the balance due to the plaintiff on the mule retained by the defendant, including interest up to the date of the payment, made on August 18, 1910, so that the mule retained, and which is the mule seized in this action by the plaintiff, has been fully paid for, and there is nothing due thereon by the defendant to the plaintiff."

Further answering, the defendant alleges:

"(8) That on account of the breach of the plaintiff's warranty and guaranty, and the defective condition of the mule, the defendant was caused much loss of time and labor, losing the hire of the team of mules for a period of seven days, at $3 per day, making a loss to defendant of $21; also on said account defendant was forced to spend money going to Spartanburg to purchase another mule in the place of the defective mule, as aforesaid, at an expense of $6, all which the defendant pleads as a counterclaim to the amount claimed by the plaintiff."

We think the court was clearly in error. With reference to the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh paragraphs of the answer above quoted, it may be said that they do not undertake to set up a counterclaim strictly, but matters which, if established as true, would constitute payment or discharge of the mortgage debt, and defeat recovery, because it is essential to plaintiffs' recovery that they establish a mortgage debt which remains due, in breach of the condition of the mortgage. No debt, no mortgage. Spears v. Fields, 72 S. O. 397, 52 S. E. 44.

It is unnecessary to consider whether there was error in sustaining the demurrer as to paragraph 8 of the answer, purporting to set up a counterclaim, as an examination of the exceptions fails to disclose any specification of error with respect to that paragraph, beyond the general contention that the answer held demurrable was sufficient to show payment or discharge of the mortgage debt.

After the submission of the case to this court, notice of a motion was given to stay action until points and authorities could be filed, for the purpose of sustaining the order of the circuit court, on the ground that the act of 1909 (26 St. at Large, p. 161) relates to action for recovery of personal property, and not to actions in claim and delivery, under section 227, Code of Civil Procedure 1902. The act of February 25, 1909, provides: "In every action for the recovery of personal property which has been pledged in any way to secure credit or debt, the defendant may plead his counterclaim arising out of the same transaction, and the jury in such case may find, in addition to the verdicts now provided by law, the amount due to plaintiff if any; and in such case the defendant shall have the right to pay said amount and costs and the property shall thereafter be free from the encumbrance." Since, under the view we take, it is unnecessary to consider the appeal as it may be affected by the act quoted, we do not deem it proper to delay the decision for the motion.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed.

HENRY et al. v. MEANS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Nov. 16, 1911.)

*(Syllabus by the Court.)1. RECORDS (§ 17*)—SUPPLYING OR RESTORING RECORDS—CONTRACTS BY COUNTY—AUTHORITY OF COMMISSIONERS.

Under the general powers of the county commissioners of Pulaski county (Acts 1896, p. 279), they have authority to provide for the safe-keeping and preservation of the records of deeds in the office of the clerk of the superior court. They may have the books containing such records rebound, when necessary, may provide a safe for their keeping, or may take steps looking to their preservation. But there is no authority of law in such county commissioners, at the expense of the county, to employ an unofficial person to make a copy of certain deed books, on the ground that they are old and becoming somewhat dilapidated, and the ink on some of the pages is becoming faded. Such copies, when made, would have no official character, and import no verity. They could not be substituted by the commissioners in lieu of the official books, and would have no higher standing than private copies or memoranda.

(a) The transaction here involved was not a proceeding seeking to establish records, under Civil Code 1910, § 5810 et seq.

(b) In so far as it was sought to justify the contract of the county commissioners with an individual to make a copy of certain deed books because of the recommendation of the grand jury, that body recommended that some of the old books in the clerk's office be rebound and put in condition, not that they be copied.

(c) Whether or not, construing the provision in Civil Code 1910, § 4892, par. 9, in reference to the transcribing by the clerk of the contents of any books of record which may be in a dilapidated condition in connection with its context, in which certain books are enumerated, such provision contemplates the copying of deed books, it would not avail the defendant commissioners in this case.

2. COUNTIES (§ 196*)—REMEDIES OF TAXPAYERS—INJUNCTION.

Though the contribution of a taxpayer to the public fund of a county may be small in proportion to the aggregate, he has such a pecuniary interest in the sum made up from taxes, of which his forms a part, as to authorize him to prevent an illegal diversion of such sum. Accordingly he may file an equitable petition to enjoin county commissioners from paying out public funds upon an unlawful contract. Koger v. Hunter, 102 Ga. 76, 29 S. E. 141; Mitchell v. Lasseter, 114 Ga. 275 (4), 40 S. E. 287; Clark v. Cline, 123 Ga. 856, 864, 51 S. E. 617.

3. COUNTIES (§ 196*)—REMEDIES OF TAXPAYERS—INJUNCTION.

The legal title to funds in the county treasury is in the county. If some of them have been unlawfully paid out upon a contract which the county commissioners were not authorized to make, a suit to recover them must be brought in the name of the county. An individual taxpayer has no right to bring an action in his own name against the county commissioners for the purpose of recovering from them the amount so paid out by them, or to require them to repay it to the county treasurer. Civil Code 1910, § 6594; Bennett v. Walker, 64 Ga. 326; Arnett v. Board of Commissioners of Decatur County, 75 Ga. 782; Cook v. Board of Commissioners of Houston County, 62 Ga. 223.

(a) This is true, although the county commissioners may be the persons who would ordinarily institute suits in the name of the county.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1176*)—DISPOSITION OF CAUSE—NECESSITY FOR NEW TRIAL.

Inasmuch as, under the undisputed evidence, the legal principles above announced are controlling of the final result, it is unnecessary to discuss the rulings of the court in detail, or to remand the case for a new trial, if any of the rulings are inaccurate. Accordingly, the judgment is affirmed in so far as it enjoins further unauthorized payments from the county treasury; but direction is given that the verdict and judgment be set aside, in so far as they provide for the recovery of a sum of money by the plaintiff against the county commissioners.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Cabell County.

Bill in equity by W. L. Mustard against the Big Creek Development Company. From a decree dismissing the bill, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Neal & Strickling, for appellant. W. R. Thompson and F. C. Leftwich, for appellee.

MILLER, J. On grounds alleged, and according to the prayer of his bill, plaintiff and appellant, sought to have cancelled and annulled, as a cloud on his right and title to the oil and gas, in and under 51.8 acres, within the boundary thereof, a certain lease of 253 acres, dated September 8, 1906, from Oliver Hill and wife to C. H. Freeman.

The demurrer to the bill was overruled; but on final hearing on bill, answer and proofs taken, the plaintiff was denied relief, and his bill dismissed.

Plaintiff claims title to the oil and gas under the 51.8 acres, under a deed from W. J. Vickers and wife, to the Hyman Gas and Oil Co., a corporation. This deed in consideration of $6,000.00, in hand paid, purports to convey unto the grantee, with general warranty, all the oil and gas in and under said 51.8 acres; with the further provision, that whenever the settled production from said land shall reach seventy-five barrels per day of twenty-four hours, the grantee shall pay to Vickers, an additional sum of $6,000.00, and that until then said company shall pay to him, every three months, a sum equal to six per cent on said $6,000.00, a vendor's lien being retained on said property to secure the payment of said six thousand dollars. This deed refers for description of the land to a deed from Oliver Hill and wife to said Vickers, dated May 4, 1908, reciting that it is the same tract described in an agreement, between said Hill and Vickers, to convey said land to the latter, of April 2, 1906, and pursuant to which the deed of May 4, 1908, had been made and executed. Mustard obtained his title to the property by deed from the Hyman Gas and Oil Co., of March 22, 1909.

[1] On the demurrer appellees contend that actual possession by the appellant, necessary to maintain a bill to remove cloud, is not alleged, and that plaintiff's remedy, if any, is complete at law. Regardless of the question of possession, we are of opinion that a court of equity has jurisdiction to grant the relief prayed for. It is alleged that the deed under which the plaintiff claims is subsequent in date to that of the lease under which the Big Creek Development Company claims, and the equitable grounds of relief alleged against the Big Creek Development Co. would not be available in a court of law. The bill alleges, in effect, that although the lease under which said Development Company claims, is prior in date to the deed from Vickers to the Hyman Gas & Oil Co., it is nevertheless subsequent in date to the contract or title bond from Hill and wife to Vickers, referred to, and of which, it is also alleged, both Freeman, the immediate lessee, and his grantee or assignee, the Big Creek Development Co., at the time Freeman took said lease, had due notice; and that they took said lease subject to the prior and superior rights of Vickers, and of his grantee, under the title bond. The allegations of these facts we think presents a case clearly cognizable in a court of equity.

[2] On the merits, it is sufficiently alleged in the answer of appellee, the Big Creek Development Company, by way of defense, and fully proven, that in July, 1906, at the time of, and before the execution by Hill and wife to Freeman, of the lease dated September 8, 1906, Vickers, who held the title bond from Hill, for the 51.8 acres, was called in and consulted in relation to the execution of said lease, and as he admits in his testimony, although he says he was not asked to sign the lease, that he then knew Freeman had a prior lease, not expired, on the same property, and prior in time to his title bond, and that he then and there agreed, that Hill who still held the legal title to the land, should make and execute the new lease to Freeman, covering the whole tract, and he admits also to have received, through Hill, his share of the rental or commutation money, for the first year, provided for in the lease.

On this state of the pleadings and proofs the question is, is Vickers, or Mustard, with notice of the part Vickers took in the execution of the lease to Freeman, bound by that lease, and concluded or estopped from setting up title in hostility to that of the Big Creek Development Company?

[3] Mustard, in his bill, pleads and relies on the statute of frauds, in denial of the rights of appellee, under the lease of September 8, 1906. Many authorities are cited by counsel for the proposition, that the statute of frauds is available to one having only equitable title to land. We hold, however, that by the part Vickers took in the transaction he made Hill, his father-in-law, holding the legal title, his agent, to lease the land as a whole tract for and on behalf of himself and Vickers, and that he afterwards ratified the act of his agent, by accepting, through him, his share of the rentals or commutation money, thereby taking the case from under the ban of the statute. Numerous decisions of this and other courts unite in holding, that the authority of an agent to sell or lease land need not be in writing, and that the agent may bind his principal, either by signing his own name or that of the principal. Kennedy v. Ehlen, 31 W. Va. 540, 8 S. E. 398; Conaway & Smith v. Sweeney, 24 W. Va. 643; Campbell v. Fetterman, 20 W. Va. 399; Smith v. Tate, 82 Va. 664; Minor on Real Property, § 1289, p. 1422; Davis v. Gordon, 87 Va. 579, 580, 13 S. E. 85; Brown v. Brown, 77 Va. 619; Yerby v. Grigsby, 9 Leigh (Va.) 387; Johnson v. Somers, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 269; Armstrong v. Maryland Coal Co., 67 W. Va. 589, 69 S. E. 195.

[4] True, power can not be conferred on an agent to execute a deed conveying land, except by a writing of the same dignity; but there is high authority for holding, as we do, that where an agent, though verbally empowered to sell, attempts to convey land by deed, such deed will be treated as a good memorandum or contract, binding the vendor to convey the land. Hersey v. Lambert, 50 Minn. 373, 52 N. W. 963; Henry v. Root, 33 N. Y. 526, 550; Blacknall v. Parish, 59 N. C. 70, 78 Am. Dec. 239. So, whether or not we regard the deed of lease from Hill to Freeman a good conveyance of the equitable title of Vickers, it is good as a contract of sale by Vickers' agent, under the statute of frauds, for his equitable title, binding him and his grantees, and supporting the decree below, denying relief, and which decree we are of opinion should be affirmed.

DARNELL v. WILMOTH et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 14, 1911.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 553*)—RECORD—VACATION ORDER OF JUDGE.

A vacation order made by the trial judge, under his signature and seal, within the time fixed by law for saving and certifying bills of exceptions, which order is in itself a veritable bill of exceptions, specifically pointing out and identifying by certain and sure references the stenographer's transcript of evidence and other papers pertaining to the trial, and declaring that they are thereby made a part of the record, operates to bring into the record the evidence and papers referred to, though not embraced in formal bills of exceptions.

2. LOGS AND LOGGING (§ 3*)—DEED OF STANDING TIMBER—CONSTRUCTION.

A particular enumeration of the kinds of standing timber meant to be conveyed, contained in the granting clause of a deed, will not be enlarged by a separate and subsequent general clause stating that the intention of the parties is to convey all the timber included in the bounds named in the deed, but the general words used in the latter clause will be held to apply to timber ejusdem generis with that specifically named.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Logs and Logging, Dec. Dig. § 3.*]

3. TRESPASS (§ 52*)—CUTTING GROWING TIMBER—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

For the cutting of growing timber having no more than ordinary commercial value, a proper measure of damages is the market value on the stump.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Cent. Dig. §§ 137-138; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

4. TRESPASS (§ 56*)—CUTTING TIMBER—EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

Exemplary damages are not awardable for the cutting of timber when it appears that the trespass was not wanton but was committed under a bona fide claim of right.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trespass, Cent. Dig. § 144; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

Error to Circuit Court, Pocahontas County.

Action by W. S. Darnell against H. J. Wilmoth and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

N. C. McNeil and F. R. Hill, for plaintiffs in error. L. M. McClintic and Price, Oseinton & McPeak, for defendant in error.

ROBINSON, J. In this action seeking damages for cutting growing timber, plaintiff has judgment, by the verdict of a jury, and defendants challenge the regularity and propriety of the same by writ of error.

[1] A preliminary question is raised: Are the papers and testimony submitted as evidence before the jury, and the instructions given and refused, made a part of the record by proper bills of exceptions? If they are not made a part of the record, we cannot consider the assignments of error, for the assignments all relate to these matters pertaining to the trial. We hold, however, that the evidence and instructions are properly before us as record of the court below. It is true that they have been made so by a method somewhat novel, but, we think, none the less substantial and effective. The trial judge has certified the stenographer's transcript by his signature and seal under a declaration that it contains all the evidence adduced at the trial. The vacation order which the judge has made pursuant to the statute, directed to the clerk for entry, particularly identifies this transcript and recites the name of each witness whose testimony it contains. It also points out the written papers offered in evidence and the instructions given and refused, by references which leave no uncertainty as to the identification of the very papers and instructions meant. Then that order, a veritable bill of exceptions itself, under the seal and signature of the judge, declares that all the evidence, papers, and instructions referred to and identified therein are "made a part of the record as fully and completely and to have the same effect as if entered in term time." This act of the trial judge, in vacation, within the time fixed by statute, clearly suffices to bring the papers, evidence and instructions into the record. The identification is as completely set out as it ordinarily is in separate and formal bills of exceptions. The documents referred to are so plainly pointed out that there can be no mistake in referring to them in connection with the vacation order of the trial judge. The mere fact that the judge makes the vacation order to have the force of a bill of exceptions itself is no argument against the validity of the procedure. The judge has simply done by the one order what is generally done by separate bills of exceptions referred to, and certified, by an order. The old method of formal bills of exceptions tends to more certainty, and we hope that there will be no general departure therefrom. It is at least more judicial. But where there is the substantiality for the purpose of making evidence and papers a part of the record that is disclosed in the order of the trial judge in this case, we cannot say that it does not serve the purpose. Old forms, however, have arguments in their favor.

The controversy arises from the terms of the deed by which plaintiff conveyed standing timber on his land to one Arbogast. The timber conveyed to Arbogast, by intermediate conveyances, became vested in defendants. Plaintiff claims that his deed did not convey the chestnut and maple timber. Defendants insist that it conveyed timber of all kinds, and that the timber for which plaintiff claims damages was their own. So the case turns on a construction of the deed.

[2] The granting clause of the deed, omitting the statement of consideration, is as follows: " * * * The parties of the first part sell and convey with general warranty unto the said Arbogast all the oak timber of all kinds, all the spruce and hemlock, the ash and poplar, the hickory, except for farm use, and the white and yellow lynn, timber on a tract of 196 acres lying on both sides of Deer Creek, a tributary of Brush run, adjoining the lands of Peter Yeager and others, and bounded as follows, to wit." The bounds of the tract are set forth by definite calls and distances. Following these there is a stipulation as to the time "said timber is to stand" on the land. Then comes the last paragraph of the deed—a separate one: "It is the intention of the parties of the first part to convey unto the said Arbogast all the timber included in said bounds and the parties of the first part give a free right of way for cutting and removing said timber or any adjoining timber over their land by tram road or otherwise."

Does the deed convey the maple and chestnut timber? It is not properly susceptible of a construction that makes it say that it does. There is a particular description of the timber meant to be conveyed, in the granting clause of the deed. Was that particularity, in the very clause that was intended to grant the estate, entered into for naught? Why particularize so specifically as to certain kinds of timber, if all this was to be wiped out at the end of the deed? Can we reasonably say that the grantor meant nothing by this definite and carefully stated enumeration of species of timber? His words in this particular must be given effect if it is possible to do so. We cannot erase them from the deed lightly. There must be clear intent expressed by the deed as a whole that the particularization was for no purpose before we can ignore it. Because of the very particularity, and its position in the deed in connection with the words of grant, it is entitled to more consideration than to be lightly annihilated. For what purpose was this particularization entered into? The answer naturally is: To show what kinds of timber the grantor conveyed. Why name specific kinds of timber as carried by this conveyance if it was not to distinguish those named from those not named and not intended to pass by the deed?

It is by no means a new rule to give such a particular description as we have in this deed great weight as indicating the intention of the grantor. "A particular description which is clear and explicit and is a complete identification of the property intended to be conveyed will not be varied or enlarged by a more general and less definite description, as in such a case the former will be considered as expressing the intent of the parties rather than the latter." 13 Cyc. 631. Yet defendants contend that the last paragraph of the deed made by plaintiff, notwithstanding the general terms used therein, strikes down all the defined enumeration and studied identification of the granting clause. It does not do so. If it did the words of identification in the granting clause would be wholly ineffectual. By an admitted rule of construction every part of a deed must be given effect if that can be done. In the deed before us, the general clause can stand and have a purpose consistent with the force of the particular identification in the granting clause, but the words used in the granting clause cannot stand as they do if the general clause is taken as the description of the property conveyed. Therefore we must hold that the particular description of the granting clause is that which names the property passed by the deed. But what office do the words in the general clause perform? In view of the particularity of the granting clause, they must have been intended to refer to the bounds of the land from which the particularly stated timber could be taken. It must be observed that the general clause does not say "all timber on said land." That clause says, "all the timber included in said bounds." The words "included in said bounds" are indeed more full of meaning in the connection in which they are used than the words "all the timber," for the latter words are qualified by the identification of timber in the granting clause. The latter words, "all the timber," are general ones, and apply to things of the same kind as those specifically named. The timber meant in this general clause is timber of the kind specifically named and dealt with in the deed. "General words apply prima facie only to things ejusdem generis with those specifically enumerated." Crompton v. Jarrett, 30 C. H. Div. 298; In the Matter of Wright, 15 Beav. 367.

When the deed was introduced at the trial by defendants, in support of their contention that they owned the chestnut and maple as well as the other timber, plaintiff sought to show that the deed had been altered after its due execution and delivery by an erasure of the words "above named." He claims that these words were interlined immediately after the word "bounds" in the last paragraph of the deed when he and his wife signed and acknowledged the instrument. He introduced evidence tending to show the alleged erasure, and defendants offered some in rebuttal thereof. It seems unnecessary, however, to deal with the matter of this alleged alteration. Since the deed when properly construed means the same without the words alleged to have been erased as it would with them, the whole matter was an immaterial issue in the case. The trial court should have construed the deed and directed the jury accordingly. Instead of so doing, the court improperly submitted to the jury the question as to what the deed meant on its face, allowed improper parol testimony in relation thereto, and, at plaintiff's request, gave an erroneous instruction in the premises. An instruction for plaintiff relative to the alleged alteration was also erroneously given. However, as the finding of the jury is in accord with the true meaning of the deed in any event, all this erroneous procedure is indeed harmless to defendants. Errors committed in relation to the immaterial issue about the alleged alteration, or in relation to the method of interpreting the deed, do not injure defendants, for the same finding that was reached against them irregularly must have been reached by proper procedure. This view eliminates all the assignments of error but the one in relation to the refusal of the instruction which we shall now consider.

[3, 4] Defendants requested an instruction to the jury that the measure of damages plaintiff was entitled to recover, if entitled at all, was the actual market value of the timber on the stump at the time it was cut and removed, and that plaintiff was not entitled to recover punitive or exemplary damages in the case. The court refused so to instruct. The refused instruction correctly propounded law applicable to the case made.

The refusal to give it was error. The market value of the timber was a proper measure of damages under the circumstances appearing as to the trespass and in view of the character of the timber. There is no showing that it was growing timber of peculiar or special value. In this jurisdiction, market value of growing timber destroyed has usually been sanctioned as a measure of the damages suffered by its destruction. Stewart v. Railroad Co., 33 W. Va. 88, 10 S. E. 26. Whether that measure should apply to all cases we need not inquire. The measure of the market value on the stump seems justly applicable to the case at hand. The part of the instruction relating to punitive or exemplary damages was warranted. No wanton or wilful trespass, was proved, and the case was clearly one for compensatory damages only. Plaintiff introduced no evidence in relation to the market value. Defendants proved a sum much less than that which the jury found. So it is evident that the jury either applied an inappropriate measure of damages or awarded exemplary damages. The judgment must be reversed, the verdict set aside, and a new trial awarded.

STATE v. COOK.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 14, 1911.)

1. ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE—REPUTATION OF ACCUSED.

On a trial for murder, is the bad general reputation of deceased, as a man of unchaste and lecherous habits toward women admissible, upon the issue whether the accused believed the information received from his wife and acted thereon? Discussed but not decided.

2. WITNESSES (§ 387*)—EXAMINATION—CROSS-EXAMINATION OF ACCUSED.

Section 20, chapter 152, Code 1906, providing that, "In a criminal prosecution other than for perjury, evidence shall not be given against the accused of any statement made by him as a witness upon a legal examination," does not preclude the state, on cross-examination of the prisoner, for the purpose of impeachment, from showing by him that he testified differently on a former trial of the same indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Dec. Dig. § 387.*]

3. HOMICIDE (§§ 151, 237*)—EVIDENCE—BURDEN OF PROOF—INSANITY.

Where insanity is interposed as a defense to an indictment for murder, the fact of such insanity must, from all the evidence, be proved to the satisfaction of the jury, and the burden is not cast upon the state to prove the prisoner sane beyond a reasonable doubt, immediately that some evidence, however slight, is offered by the accused, tending to rebut the presumption of sanity. The jury before acquitting the prisoner, should be satisfied, from all the evidence in the case, that the prisoner was in fact insane, at the time of the homicide. A reasonable preponderance of the evidence in favor of the insanity of the prisoner ought to acquit him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. § 500; Dec. Dig. §§ 151, 237.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 814*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO CASE.

An instruction propounding the rules respecting circumstantial evidence, as laid down in State v. Flanagan, 26 W. Va. 122, was rightly rejected by the court below, as being inapplicable to any evidence in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1979; Dec. Dig. § 814.*]

5. HOMICIDE (§ 294*)—INSTRUCTIONS—DEFENSES—INSANITY.

An instruction propounding the "right and wrong test," where the defense is insanity, and the rules respecting the defense of "irresistible impulse" was not wholly inapplicable to the evidence, and the court below did not err in giving the same to the jury, at the instance of the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Dec. Dig. § 294.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 485*)—EVIDENCE—EXPERT WITNESSES—HYPOTHETICAL QUESTIONS.

In propounding hypothetical questions to expert witnesses, counsel may without error, assume facts fairly inferable from the evidence, in accordance with their theory of them.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1073, 1074; Dec. Dig. § 485.*]

7. SEPARATION OF JURORS—PREJUDICE TO DEFENDANT.

A case in which the alleged misconduct and separation of the jury was not shown to have been prejudicial to the defendant, justifying a new trial.

(Additional Syllabus by Editorial Staff.)

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 48*)—"INSANITY."

Mere frenzy, or ungovernable passion, however furious, is not "insanity," within the meaning of the criminal law.

Error to Circuit Court, Wyoming County.

Hayes Cook was convicted of voluntary manslaughter, and brings error. Affirmed.

W. R. Thompson, John M. McGrath, and Sanders & Crockett, for plaintiff in error. Wm. G. Conley, Atty. Gen., for the State.

MILLER, J. On an indictment for the murder of Alonzo M. Stewart, the defense was temporary or emotional insanity. The verdict of the jury was, guilty of voluntary manslaughter, acquitting the defendant of murder, as charged in the indictment; and the judgment of the court was that defendant be imprisoned in the penitentiary for the period of three years.

In this court the prisoner relies on numerous assignments of error. Some of the errors assigned in his petition for the writ have apparently been abandoned. We will consider those only which have been argued. We think they are the only points calling for decision.

First, it is claimed the court erred, to the prejudice of the prisoner, (a) in excluding proposed evidence of the general reputation of the deceased, in the county and community in which he lived prior to his death, for lasciviousness, and for making indecent and lascivious proposals to married and unmarried women; and, (b) proposed evidence of numerous witnesses of specific acts of adultery by deceased. On the trial, the theory of the defense was, that the prisoner, on the night of the homicide, on hearing from his wife, her confessions of adultery with deceased, and her account of the manner in which, by his alleged indecent and lascivious proposals, deceased had finally accomplished his purposes with her, became so enraged, and so mentally unhorsed, that he immediately arose from his bed, saddled his horse, and started for the home of deceased in Pineville, some fourteen miles distant, where on arriving about three o'clock in the morning, he called him out of his house, charged him with breaking up his home, and shot him dead. Much evidence, including that of the prisoner and his wife, was admitted, showing how and when she made her alleged confession to him, and her story told him of the conduct of the deceased towards her, and its alleged effect upon the prisoner's mental condition, evidenced by his anger, his conduct in leaving his bed, and his preparations to go after deceased; but it is claimed, nevertheless, that if the proposed evidence of the reputation of deceased for lasciviousness, and of the specific acts of adultery had been admitted, as it is earnestly insisted it should have been, the prisoner would undoubtedly have been wholly acquitted of any crime, wherefore he was greatly prejudiced. It is insisted, particularly with reference to the alleged reputation of deceased for lascivious conduct, that it must be assumed that such reputation was known to the prisoner, and that if the evidence had been admitted it would have strengthened his belief in the story told him by his wife, and which intensified his already inflamed passion and resentment against the deceased; and besides would have corroborated the evidence of both before the jury, that deceased was in fact guilty of the conduct with the wife, as she had confessed.

[1] That evidence of such reputation and conduct of the deceased is admissible, in cases of homicide, upon the issue whether the accused believed the information received from his wife, and acted thereon, the prisoner relies mainly on Jones v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 87, 40 S. W. 807, 41 S. W. 638, 70 Am. St. Rep. 719, Orange v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 337, 83 S. W. 385, and 1 Wigmore on Ev. § 63, citing and quoting from Williams v. Fambro, 30 Ga. 233, 235. In Jones v. State, Jones was convicted of murder in the second degree. In that case the court remarked, that if the jury believed the testimony of Jones and wife, the theory of the defendant that his offense was nothing greater than manslaughter was clearly presented, and if they did not believe this testimony, then manslaughter, so far as the jury was concerned, was not in the case. So we see, that if reputation evidence of this character is admissible, how important it may have been in that case, in aid of the prisoner's defense, in reducing the offense from murder to manslaughter. The Texas Court, in that case, was of opinion that the evidence of specific acts of adultery was rightly rejected by the trial court, that such evidence would involve too many issues, and that the court could not turn aside to try a vast number of such collateral matters; but was of opinion that evidence of the deceased's bad reputation, in the particular mentioned, was admissible for the purpose of determining whether the prisoner believed the story told him by his wife, and to add to the probability that he acted on this belief. According to the Texas cases, the only possible effect of such evidence would have been to reduce the crime from murder to manslaughter, not to wholly acquit the prisoner. In the case at bar, we must conclude the jury believed the prisoner's story, and that of his wife, for the verdict was manslaughter; so that the result of the trial, so far as the prisoner's guilt or innocence was concerned, was the same as if this character evidence had been admitted. Moreover, the prisoner proved by his own evidence confessions by the deceased to him long before the homicide, of his lascivious character, of his ravishings of the wives and daughters of brother Odd Fellows and Masons, so that, if the prisoner is to be believed, he needed no proof of the lascivious character of deceased, and of the probability of his guilt, as confessed by the wife on the night of the homicide; wherefore he could not have been prejudiced before the jury on his trial. We need not decide, therefore, and do not decide, whether this class of character evidence is ever admissible in cases of homicide. The rule of the Texas Court did not receive the sanction of the Supreme Court of Kansas. State v. Murray, 83 Kan. 148, 110 Pac. 103. In that case as in this case, the prisoner had been permitted to testify as to information received from the deceased and others, as to the licentious character of the deceased, and the court observes: "The testimony he was allowed to give accounted fully for the state of his mind, the only matter at issue."

[2] Another point is that the court below, in contravention of section 20, chapter 152, Code 1906, permitted the state, on cross-examination of the prisoner, to interrogate him, for the purpose of impeachment, as to what he had testified on a former trial. State v. May, 62 W. Va. 129, 57 S. E. 366, is relied on. The statute is: "In a criminal prosecution other than for perjury, evidence shall not be given against the accused of any statement made by him as a witness upon a legal examination." Clearly this statute does not apply to a cross-examination of the prisoner, when offered as witness in his own behalf on a subsequent trial. State v. May is inapplicable therefore. The very language of the statute seems to preclude the construction put upon it by prisoner's counsel. The Attorney General argues that our statute applies only to the "statement," which a prisoner was allowed to make, prior to the statute of 1881, which removed his disability to testify in his own behalf. He cites State v. Woodrow, 58 W. Va. 527, 536, 52 S. E. 545, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862, 112 Am. St. Rep. 1001, and State v. Legg, 59 W. Va. 315, 53 S. E. 545, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1152. He also alludes to the fact that the Legislature of Virginia, because of a contrary construction of the same statute in that state, in Kirby v. Com., 77 Va. 681, 689, 46 Am. Rep. 747, was, as he argues, forced to amend the statute. But we need not decide this question. It is not involved. All we do decide is that the statute does not preclude the state on cross-examination of the prisoner, when offered as a witness in his own behalf, for the purpose of impeachment, from showing that on a former trial he told a different story. Moreover, the evidence of the prisoner hardly amounted to proof of what he had testified to on the former trial. In the first instance the court refused to permit him to answer; in the second instance, his answer was not responsive to the question, was for the most part voluntary, and rather unimportant.

[3] The third point made relates to the action of the court below in giving and refusing certain instructions proposed on behalf of the state and the prisoner, relating to the defense of insanity, those particularly relating to the burden of proof, where insanity is interposed as a defense.

In our opinion the evidence was wholly inadequate to even rebut the presumption of sanity, justifying any instructions on the subject. There is no evidence that the frenzy or ungovernable passion, the irresistible impulse of the prisoner, on the night of the homicide, on hearing the confessions of his wife, was the result of mental disease, or distinguished from weakness or passion.

[8] "Mere frenzy, or ungovernable passion, however furious, is not insanity within the meaning of the criminal law." 1 Wharton and Stille's Med. Jur. § 163. This proposition is stated in practically the same language in Buswell on Insanity, section 442. This writer adds: "That although one sane in his normal condition lose, for the moment, his reason, through excess of passion, yet he is responsible for acts committed while his reason is thus in abeyance." The doctrine of Wharton and Buswell is stated in practically the same language in Clark on Criminal Law, at page 68. Such also is the doctrine of our case of State v. Harrison, 36

W. Va. 729, 15 S. E. 982, 18 L. R. A. 224, where the "right and wrong test" is held to be the true test. In the case at bar there is no substantial evidence of any mental disease of the prisoner, before or after the homicide. Days, and even weeks before he determined to slay Stewart, he had what he evidently regarded as proof positive of the adulterous conduct of the deceased with his wife, resulting in an agreement of separation; so that the confession of his wife, on the night of the homicide, could not have been a surprise, however much his passions may have been inflamed thereby. There is nothing in the evidence to establish more than the frenzy of passion, and nothing, in our opinion, justifying the theory of insanity.

But assuming, as counsel, and the court below seem to have done, that there was some evidence justifying the instructions, did the court err in the instructions given and refused? At the instance of the prisoner the court did tell the jury: "That the law presumes that every person is sane, and that in a prosecution for murder, it is not necessary for the State to introduce evidence of the sanity of the prisoner, in the first instance. When, however, any evidence has been introduced which satisfies the jury of the insanity of the prisoner, the burden is then upon the State to establish beyond a reasonable doubt the fact of the guilt of the accused, and if, from all the evidence introduced in this case, you have a reasonable doubt of the sanity of the defendant at the time he committed the act, with which he is charged, then you shall find him not guilty." Objection is made to the words, "which satisfies the jury of the insanity of the prisoner." It is insisted that the burden was not upon the prisoner to satisfy the jury of his sanity, in order to shift the burden of proof to the state, and that he was entitled to have the jury instructed that when "any evidence has been introduced tending to prove insanity," as propounded in instruction number two; or, as proposed by instruction number four, "when any evidence is given which tends to overthrow" the presumption of sanity, the burden is then cast upon the state to prove the sanity of the prisoner, and that if there remains a reasonable doubt of such sanity, the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal; also that he was entitled to have the jury instructed, as proposed in his instruction number fourteen, "that in every prosecution for murder, the state must establish beyond a reasonable doubt, the affirmative facts that the homicide has been committed, that the prisoner did the deed, that he intended to do it, that he was of sound mind, and not afflicted with insanity when the act was done, and that the act was done with malice aforethought, express or implied"; and also to have the jury told, as further proposed by this instruction, that if a reasonable doubt of his sanity remained he should be found not guilty. These three instructions were rejected.

It is conceded that the proposed instructions are opposed to our cases of State v. Strauder, 11 W. Va. 745, 27 Am. Rep. 606; State v. Harrison, 36 W. Va. 729, 15 S. E. 982, 18 L. R. A. 224; and State v. Robinson, 20 W. Va. 740, 43 Am. Rep. 799; and that the state's instruction number five, objected to, to the effect that the presumption of sanity remains until the contrary be proved, and that the defense of insanity must be proven to the satisfaction of the jury to entitle the prisoner to an acquittal on that ground propounds the law of our cases. It is insisted, however, that our decisions do not propound the law respecting the burden of proof correctly, and are opposed to, and do violence to established principles of criminal law. On the authority of Davis v. United States, 160 U. S. 469, 16 Sup. Ct. 353, 40 L. Ed. 499, and we may add decisions of other courts of the same class, it is earnestly insisted, that when any evidence tending in any degree, to prove insanity, and to overthrow the presumption of sanity, is introduced, from that time, the burden is cast upon the state to establish the fact of the sanity of the prisoner beyond a reasonable doubt, as it is required to establish every other fact essential to show the guilt of the accused. Davis v. United States is among that class of cases which has adopted what is called the modern doctrine on this subject. The language of Justice Harlan in that case is: "Strictly speaking, the burden of proof, as those words are understood in criminal law, is never upon the accused to establish his innocence or to disprove the facts necessary to establish the crime for which he is indicted. It is on the prosecution from the beginning to the end of the trial and applies to every element necessary to constitute the crime. Giving to the prosecution, where the defense is insanity, the benefit in the way of proof of the presumption in favor of sanity, the vital question from the time a plea of not guilty is entered until the return of the verdict is whether, upon all the evidence, by whatever side adduced, guilt is established beyond reasonable doubt. If the whole evidence, including that supplied by the presumption of sanity, does not include beyond reasonable doubt the hypothesis of insanity, of which some proof is adduced, the accused is entitled to an acquittal of the specific offense charged." As interpreted by the prisoner's counsel, this decision holds, that any evidence tending to show insanity, however slight, immediately shifts the burden to the state to prove the sanity of the prisoner, as an independent fact, whether or not such evidence be sufficient to overcome, in the minds of the jury, the presumption of sanity. The language of the court may possibly be susceptible of that interpretation. But note the language already quoted; "the vital question from the time a plea of not guilty is entered until the return of the verdict is whether, upon all the evidence, by whatever side adduced, guilt is established beyond reasonable doubt." True this case does hold that if the jury have reasonable doubt of the sanity of the accused he is entitled to an acquittal. Our cases, beginning with State v. Strauder, are opposed to this "reasonable doubt" rule. Our cases say the insanity must be proved to the satisfaction of the jury, looking not alone to the evidence of the prisoner, but to the whole evidence in the case, including that of the state. In the brief of Assistant Attorney General Dickinson, in Davis v. United States, reported in 160 U. S. page 470, 40 Lawyers' Edition, United States Supreme Court Reports, page 500, he has collated practically all of the decisions, English and American, as well as the text writers, on both sides of this question. He there classifies our cases, and the Virginia decisions, along with those adhering to the old and well settled doctrine in England, that the burden is on the defendant to establish his insanity to the reasonable satisfaction of the jury; and concludes, that the preponderance of authority is against the contention that it is only necessary to raise a reasonable doubt. Clark on Criminal Law, page 68, referring to this conflict of authority, says: "They are agreed, however, to this extent, namely, that all men are presumed to be sane until the contrary appears, and that a defendant who sets up the plea of insanity must introduce some evidence to rebut the presumption. When we get to this point, the courts begin to differ." Some courts, as this writer says, hold that the burden is on the defendant to establish his insanity beyond a reasonable doubt; others that the burden is on the defendant to prove insanity by a preponderance of the evidence; still others, that the burden is on the defendant to introduce some evidence to rebut the presumption of sanity, and that if this evidence raises a reasonable doubt, he is entitled to an acquittal. Underhill on Criminal Evidence, discussing the same subject, and the conflict of the authorities, section 157, says: "But the prevailing rule seems to be that an allegation that the defendant is insane is a statement of an independent fact, and is, in its nature, a plea of confession and avoidance. Hence, if insanity is pleaded as a defense, the burden of proof is on the defendant, in conformity with the general rule that he who asserts any affirmative fact has the burden of proof." In the following section this writer says: "If it be granted that the defendant has the burden of proving his insanity, it remains to be considered what amount or degree of proof is sufficient. The safest rule, and one that is sustained by a large majority of the cases, is that a reasonable preponderance of evidence upon this particular point should acquit the defendant." Bishop says: "By all opinions, the defendant must prove the insanity on which he relies,—a proposition not necessarily the same as that the burden of proof shifts to him. The difference, not stated in quite uniform terms in the cases, is, on the whole, this: when the burden is said to shift to the defendant, the meaning is, that he must prove the insanity as an issue distinct from not guilty, and as a separate question; the jury, to acquit, being obliged to find affirmatively that the defendant was insane, though it is admitted the finding need not appear thus formally in the verdict." 2 Bishop, Cr. Proc. 672.

Counsel for the prisoner are therefore clearly in error, in their contention that our decisions do violence to established principles of criminal law. True they are not in harmony with the decisions of some courts, but they are in accord with the weight of authority, in this country and in England. If the question were one of first impression in this state, it is unnecessary for us to say on which side of the controversy we might align ourselves; but we are not disposed at this time to depart from the old rule in whose favor many and strong arguments may be made. That rule, as stated in our decisions, and in the instructions given and objected to by the prisoner, is, that where the defense of insanity is relied upon, the presumption of sanity remains until the jury, from the whole evidence, whether of the state or of the prisoner, is satisfied that the accused, at the time of the homicide, was insane. This, of course, excludes the propositions covered by the prisoner's instructions rejected, and the court committed no error in rejecting them, or in giving the state's instruction number five, or the prisoner's instruction number 2a. Indeed the latter is more favorable to the prisoner than our decisions fairly warrant, for it would seem to warrant a verdict of not guilty if they should have a reasonable doubt of his sanity.

[4] Next, complaint is made of the rejection of prisoner's instruction number sixteen, relating to the degree of proof required, where the evidence is circumstantial. It is not claimed that this instruction was applicable to any evidence of that character, necessary to connect the prisoner with the fact of the killing of the deceased; but it is claimed that it was applicable to the facts and circumstances tending to show insanity. The instruction substantially states the rules, respecting circumstantial evidence, announced in State v. Flanagan, 26 W. Va. 122. As an abstract proposition it no doubt states the law correctly; but we do not see its pertinency to any evidence showing or tending to show insanity of the prisoner. The only facts and circumstances to which it could possibly be said to have any application are those relating to the conduct of the prisoner on the night of the homicide. In our opinion there was nothing in these actions, or the circumstances of them, to show insanity. They did show anger and passion, but they were not such as to indicate a diseased mind, such as would excuse the crime. We perceive no error in rejecting the instruction.

[5] Instruction number three, given for the state, the subject of another point of error, relied on, was approved in State v. Harrison, supra. It simply propounded the "right from wrong test," and told the jury, that mere irresistible impulse would not exempt the accused from criminal responsibility for his act. It is claimed the instruction was irrelevant, because "irresistible impulse" was not relied upon by the defense. We do not agree with counsel on this proposition. We think the instruction was particularly applicable to that part of the prisoner's testimony in which he swore, that after hearing the confession of his wife on the night of the homicide, that there was something in him or around him that said, "Kill Lon Stewart, avenge your family," and that that was the only thought in his mind. This was at least some evidence of irresistible impulse. We see no error in giving the instruction.

[6] The state over the objection of the prisoner was permitted to propound hypothetical questions to Drs. Sparks and Chafin, assuming as proven all the facts shown in the evidence of the state, and of the prisoner, and upon which the prisoner relied to establish his theory of insanity. The particular criticism of these questions is that they assume as facts, matters which were not proven, for example, that the prisoner, because of certain things that were proven, became suspicious and jealous of Stewart and the prisoner's wife. We see little merit, if any, in the criticism. It is conceded, as was held in Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659, 8 S. E. 493, 2 L. R. A. 668, that in propounding hypothetical questions to expert witnesses, counsel may assume the facts, in accordance with their theory of them. The theory of the state was, from the facts proven, that the prisoner had in fact become jealous of Stewart and his wife. Other facts proven certainly tend to establish the fact of jealousy, the theory of the state, in the questions propounded the witnesses.

[7] The last, and only other point relied upon is, alleged misconduct and separation of the jury. We have read and considered the evidence relating to this subject. Measured by the rules of State v. Harrison, supra, and State v. Cottrill, 52 W. Va. 363, 43 S. E. 244, and State v. Cotts, 49 W. Va. 615, 39 S. E. 605, 55 L. R. A. 176, we see nothing in the alleged misconduct or separation of the jury prejudicial to the prisoner, and we must overrule the point.

Upon the whole case we find no substantial error in the trial below, of which the prisoner can reasonably complain. The crime of which he was convicted was slight, considering the nature of the offense. He owes much to the efforts of the able counsel who defended him. If he had been convicted of the graver offense of murder, we do not see upon what principle the verdict could have been disturbed. The judgment below must therefore be affirmed.

DAVIS v. MABSCOT COAL & COKE CO.
(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 14, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 190*)—INJURY TO MINER—NEGLIGENCE OF MINE BOSS.

The principles of nonliability of a mine owner for neglect of the mine boss, laid down in Williams v. Thacker Coal Co., 44 W. Va. 599, 30 S. E. 107, 40 L. R. A. 812, McMillan v. Coal Co., 61 W. Va. 531, 57 S. E. 129, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 840, Squillace v. Coal & Coke Co., 64 W. Va. 337, 62 S. E. 446, and Bralley v. Tidewater Co., 66 W. Va. 278, 66 S. E. 684, approved and applied to this case.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 190*)—INJURY TO MINER—FALLING SLATE.

Though the mine owner have notice of a defect in safety from slate in the roof of a mine, yet if the mine boss inspect it and pronounce it safe, the mine owner is not liable to a worker in the mine for injury to him from slate falling from overhead.

Error to Circuit Court, Raleigh County.

Action by Lucien H. Davis against the Mabscot Coal & Coke Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

W. E. Allen and J. Lewis Bumgardner, for plaintiff in error. McGinnis & Hatcher, for defendant in error.

BRANNON, J. Bowman, an employé of the Mabscot Coal & Coke Company operating a coal mine, was killed while at work laying track by slate falling from the roof of an air course, and Davis, administrator, sued the company for damages, and the court struck out the plaintiff's evidence and directed a verdict for the defendant.

[1] The mine operator employed a competent mine boss as required by our statute, and as the duty of watching overhead slate rests on this boss, the mine owner is not responsible for the negligence of this boss. A number of decisions have established this rule. Williams v. Thacker Coal Co., 44 W. Va. 599, 30 S. E. 107, 40 L. R. A. 812; McMillan v. Coal Co., 61 W. Va. 531, 57 S. E. 129, 11

L. R. A. (N. S.) 840; Bralley v. Tidewater Co., 66 W. Va. 278, 66 S. E. 684; Squillache v. Coal & Coke Co., 64 W. Va. 337, 62 S. E. 446. It is frankly admitted by counsel that unless this case can be differentiated from those cases the plaintiff cannot recover, and to do so the plaintiff alleges that the proof shows that the defendant's superintendent had notice of the unsafety of the roof of the air course a month before the accident, and did not remedy it. We do not say whether, if a mine owner has notice of a defect, he must take steps to render it safe, or may remain inactive, leaving the matter to the mine boss.

[2] In the first place I do not think the evidence adequate to fix notice. A miner simply gave an opinion, in casual conversation with the superintendent, that the roof was in unsafe condition, specifying no particular place or portion of slate, pointing out nothing, a mere accidental remark or opinion. Indeed, hardly that. While one Griffith was driving the air course, one Lewis remarked to the superintendent that Griffith was not paying attention to the roof while at work, and was in danger of being killed. But if this were not so, we say that all that could be required would be that the superintendent call the mine boss to inspect. It is not shown that he did so; but it is shown that the mine boss did go to this particular place, and inspect the roof, and pronounce it safe. As the boss knew all that he would have known had the operator given him notice, no notice was required.

We do not think the facts take this case out of the principles established in the cases cited, and we affirm the judgment.

CARPER v. CHENOWETH.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 14, 1911.)

1. PARTITION (§ 60*)—ACTIONS—AMENDMENT OF PLEADING.

Objection to the filing of an amended bill in a suit for partition, after appearance by the defendant, showing nothing more than a pendent lite purchase of a tract of land adjoining the land involved, retraction of an offer of choice of lots to the defendant, and a proposition to exchange the lots assigned to the plaintiff and a certain sum of money for those assigned to the defendant, should be sustained.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1041*)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—RULINGS ON PLEADING.

Error against the defendant in overruling such objection and allowing the amended bill to be filed is corrected by proceeding with the cause as if it had not been filed, and, as the plaintiff is not prejudiced thereby, he cannot complain.

3. PARTITION (§ 94*)—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—OPINIONS.

A charge of inequality of value in lots assigned by commissioners in a partition suit is not sustained by mere opinions of witnesses based upon no data and contradicted by the opinions of other witnesses equally credible.

4. PARTITION (§ 94*)—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—OFFER OF EXCHANGE.

Nor is such charge sustained by an offer of one of two parties to a partition to exchange a certain sum of money and the land assigned to him, less a cemetery lot and a right of way to it, for the land assigned to the other; the location of the cemetery and right of way and length of the latter not being shown.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Dec. Dig. § 94.*]

5. PARTITION (§ 78*)—ACTIONS—MODE OF DIVISION.

A party to a partition suit in equity has no absolute right to have his share laid off adjacent to other land owned by him in severalty, and the equity arising from proximity of such other land may be denied, if attended by another and opposing equitable consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Cent. Dig. §§ 265-273; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

6. PARTITION (§ 78*)—ACTIONS—MODE OF DIVISION.

Such an equity will not be enforced to the detriment of another party to the partition.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Partition, Cent. Dig. §§ 265-273; Dec. Dig. § 78.*]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Randolph County.

Bill in equity by Abigail Carper against Maggie B. Chenoweth. From a decree for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. B. Maxwell and W. W. Brannon, for appellant. Jared L. Wamsley, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, J. The appellant here, a tenant in common with the appellee, her daughter, in a tract of 600 acres of land, brought this suit for partition thereof, offering the latter her choice of equal lots into which she regarded the land as susceptible of division, but asking an assignment to herself of the part on which an old family cemetery should happen to be.

After an unsuccessful demurrer, the defendant answered, expressing willingness to accept the plaintiff's offer and averring an agreement between the parties that E. E. Taylor, A. J. Long, and M. J. Coberly should be appointed by the court to divide the land and make allotments of equal portions thereof to the parties in the event of failure of a mutual agreement. A decree was thereupon entered, appointing Taylor, Long, and Coberly commissioners, and providing for assignment to the plaintiff of that portion on which the cemetery is located, if consistent with the best interests of both parties. They went upon the land, consisting of a long strip running back into the hills from the Tygart's Valley river, and ran a line through it from one end to the other, so as to give each party a part of the river bottom land, a part of the cleared hill land, if any, a part of the timber, and also water for agricultural and domestic purposes. Back from the river some distance a county road crosses the land, and another line was run along it, making four lots. Two of these on the southern or upper side, containing, respectively, 100.69 acres between the road and the river and 243 acres back of the road, on one of which the cemetery is located, were assigned to the plaintiff, and the other two, containing, respectively, 90.69 acres, lying between the road and the river, and 212 acres, lying back of the road, were assigned to the defendant. One of the commissioners, Long, refused to concur in or sign the report.

The plaintiff excepted to the report, charging discrimination against her in the value of the land amounting to $1,000, and complaining of failure of the commissioners to assign to her the lower part of the land instead of the upper, in view of her having purchased other land adjacent to that portion, while the suit was pending. To sustain this exception, she filed the affidavits of two men who say the lower part is worth more than the upper by at least $800, and the affidavit of Commissioner Long, stating, in his opinion, a difference of $600. The two commissioners who joined in the report deny by their affidavits any inequality of value and assert that the two parts of the land are equal in value. Affidavits of two other persons to the same effect are filed. The exception says failure to assign to the plaintiff the lower tract of land will cut her other land off from access by public road; but this portion of the exception is not sustained by any proof.

At a special term of the court, the parties again appeared, and the plaintiff tendered and asked leave to file an amended bill, to the filing of which the defendant objected; but the court overruled the objection and permitted it to be filed. Then the latter demurred to it, and, the demurrer having been overruled, an answer to the amended bill was immediately filed and replied to generally, and thereupon, over the objection of the plaintiff, the court heard the cause and rendered a final decree, confirming the report of the commissioners and appointing a special commissioner to convey the lots to the parties respectively, in accordance with the report and the decree thereon.

[1] The refusal of the court to allow time to take proof in support of the amended bill is a subject of lengthy and earnest complaint. If the subject-matter of the amended bill bore materially on the main issue, this complaint might be well founded; but we are of the opinion that the matter set up in it amounts to nothing more than evidence which ought to have been presented to the commissioners and passed upon by them, or which it was proper to introduce as evidence to sustain the exception to their report. It says nothing more than that the plaintiff, pending the suit, had purchased a tract of land, adjoining that portion of the land here involved which she now desires the court to assign to her; that, having purchased it and so produced a condition which makes it undesirable to adhere to her offer to the defendant of a choice of lots, she withdraws that offer or declines to be bound by the acceptance thereof; and that she is willing to exchange the part assigned her for the other, provided she is allowed the cemetery with a right of way to it, and pay $500 difference. The newly purchased land is not in any way involved in this suit. No relief is asked respecting it, and none could be, for the defendant has no interest in it. The plaintiff's ownership in that land is a mere circumstance for consideration by the commissioners or the court in connection with the assignment of lots. Nor was a bill necessary to signify her desire to withdraw her offer or repudiation of the agreement made by the acceptance thereof, or to make an offer of exchange. These things could have been done in court in an informal way. In view of the character of the proposed amendment, the court below should have sustained the objection to the filing of the amended bill and proceeded to pass upon the commissioners' report and the exceptions thereto.

[2] The error in permitting this injection into the pleadings of matter already in evidence, and not constituting proper subject-matter for a pleading, did not, however, deprive the court of power to hear and dispose of the cause in the condition in which it then was. The amended bill and answer raised no issue that had not already been raised by the report and the exception thereto. Denial to the plaintiff of time to take proof upon that issue was not prejudicial, because she had already introduced evidence to sustain her contention and did not indicate ability to furnish any additional evidence. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the court erred in permitting the amended bill to be filed, and also that the plaintiff was not prejudiced by the action of the court in hearing the cause as if it had not been filed. By hearing the cause and entering its decree, the court substantially, though informally, corrected its error in permitting the amended bill to be filed.

[3] Upon consideration of all the evidence, we are also of the opinion that the court did not err in confirming the report of the commissioners and decreeing partition in accordance therewith. Upon the question of difference in value, we have nothing against the report except the opinions of three witnesses, controverted by the opinions of four, and the plaintiff's offer to take the lower tract of land and the cemetery with a right of way to it and pay a difference of $500. No fact or circumstance, indicating difference in value, has been stated. We have opinions without data constituting a basis therefor. In the evidence contradicting these opinions, some facts indicating the fairness and equity of the partition are stated, among others, that each party is given a portion of the river bottom land, a portion of the cleared land, a portion of the timbered land, water for agricultural and domestic purposes, and an equal value. The plaintiff gets about 10 acres more of the land between the road and the river than the defendant and about 31 acres more of the land back of the road than the defendant. [4] Fairness of the offer to exchange and pay a difference of $500, as above stated, is not shown. We have no indication of the length or character of the proposed right of way to the cemetery, nor its effect upon the land over which it would have to go. To say this proves a difference in value would be the expression of a mere guess. In this state of the evidence, we are unable to disturb the decree upon the theory of a difference in value between the tracts.

[5] Only one circumstance is shown constituting a plausible claim of an equity ignored by the court, namely, ownership of land adjacent to the part assigned to the defendant. There is no absolute right in a party to a partition of land to have his share so laid off as to adjoin his other lands. Ownership of adjacent land is a mere circumstance to be considered and may be counteracted by other considerations. The authorities relied upon (Hall v. Piddock, 21 N. J. Eq. 311, Cox v. McMullin, 14 Grat. [Va.] 82, and 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. p. 1158) treat it as only an equitable circumstance, not as an absolute right. In this instance, the plaintiff tenaciously holds to her desire to have the cemetery assigned to her. At the same time, she wants her portion of the land laid off next to her other land. It does not appear that she can obtain these two objects without detriment to the defendant. If the land should be so divided as to accomplish both results, the plaintiff would probably get all of the improved land. The form of her demand indicates impracticability of accomplishing the two results without giving a right of way over defendant's land to the cemetery and the right to forever maintain a cemetery within the midst of the defendant's land, or division in a manner different from that adopted by the commissioners. [6] We think the impossibility of laying off the plaintiff's share of this land so as to adjoin her other land and give her the cemetery, without imposing the burden of a road to it upon the lands of the defendant, amply justifies the court in refusing to do so. The right here claimed is given only when it can be done without injustice to the other party. The principle is stated in Hall v. Piddock in the following terms: "The peculiarities of an equitable partition are that such part of the land as may be more advantageous to any party on account of its proximity to his other land, or for any other reason, will be directed to be set off to him if it can be done without injury to the others." We see nothing in the principle as stated here, or in the other authorities, imposing upon the court or the commissioners duty to recognize and enforce inconsistent claims by one of the parties to a partition to the extent of working injury to another. In other words, we are unable to see any equity in a claim of two advantages by one party which cannot be allowed without detriment to the other.

For the reasons stated, we affirm the decree.

Affirmed.

Original proceeding by Fred O. Blue, State Tax Commissioner, for mandamus to W. Guy Tetrick, Clerk of the County Court of Harrison County. Motion to quash and demurrer to alternative writ overruled.

L. S. Echols, E. R. Kingsley, and Fred O. Blue, for petitioner. Philip P. Steptoe, for respondent.

BRANNON, J. Fred O. Blue, State Tax Commissioner, and as such chief inspector of public offices, filed in this court a petition, alleging that W. Guy Tetrick, clerk of the county court of Harrison county, had failed to keep his accounts conformably to the system of accounting by public officers prescribed by chapter 33 of the Acts of the Extra Session of the Legislature in 1908 (Supplement Code of 1906, c. 10b), and praying for a mandamus to compel said clerk to so keep his accounts. The defendant moved the court to quash the alternative writ and demurrer to it, and we hear the case on that motion and demurrer, not on any facts not in that writ stated.

[1] One defense against the issuance of the mandamus is that the act found in Code of 1906, ch. 29, creating the office of tax commissioner is unconstitutional, and that in law there is no such office as tax commissionership, and that the plaintiff is no officer at all, and has no power as such. This position rests on the theory that the act establishes another executive officer in addition to those specified in the Constitution; indeed, that the act creates another executive department. The provision of the Constitution relied upon for this contention is section 1, art. 7 (Code 1906, p. lxxiv), reading as follows: "The executive department shall consist of a governor, secretary of state, state superintendent of free schools, auditor, treasurer and attorney general." The claim is that the Tax Commissioner is a state officer, of the same nature and character as the Governor and other officers named in the clause of the Constitution just quoted, and that that clause contains all the executive officers to fill and execute the duties of the state executive department, and no more can be added. We cannot concur in this contention. In the first place, we must remember the well-known rule that, as the Legislature is the supreme lawmaking power, it can enact any law, where it is not prohibited by state or federal Constitution. 3 Encyclo. Digest, 161. Our Constitution has no prohibition in this matter.

[2] We cannot think that it was the intention of the framers of the Constitution to limit the power of the Legislature, so as to prohibit it from creating new offices to aid in state executive administration. It was not the intention to say that the Legislature, the lawmaking power, should be restrained from doing this, however necessary, as population and business has increased in future. We must not give such a construction to the Constitution as would so far militate against the public welfare and necessity. The Constitution of the United States provides that: "The executive power shall be vested in a president of the United States of America." It cannot be possible that it was intended that all the multifarious executive duties should rest on the President alone, without power in Congress to create offices and officers of great power, to carry on executive administrations. Congress has never taken that view, as it has created, during the whole history of the government, numerous officers to carry on high functions of government, cabinet officers, and others of high dignity and great powers. If that proposition be true, we have been a long time finding it out. To so hold would turn back the tide of time. And we may say the same as to state. We cannot think that the statutes establishing a state board of health, commissioner of banking, chief inspector of mines, state board of control, state archivist, board of pharmacy, and state game and fish warden, besides others, are unconstitutional and void. All along the road during the life of this state and the life of Virginia the Legislature has provided additional offices and officers to perform executive functions. In Colorado was the same provision as that in our Constitution. The court said that: "In declaring that offices should constitute the executive department, it was not intended that the Legislature should not create new executive offices. Such a presumption would do violence to the intelligence of the framers of that instrument. It is, we think, the purpose of this section to provide for such offices of the executive department as the members of the constitutional convention deemed absolutely indispensable, leaving it to the Legislature to create new offices as the growth of the state and experience might suggest, and to abolish the same, but without authority to abolish any of those enumerated. The Constitution of the United States provides that the executive power of the nation shall be vested in the President; but it will certainly not be contended that it was intended by this that the President was to be the sole and exclusive executive officer of the nation."

State v. Womack, 4 Wash. 19, 29 Pac. 939, also so holds. The text of 36 Cyc. p. 854, reads thus: "The enumeration by the Constitution of certain officers as constituting the executive department of the state does not necessarily deprive the Legislature of the power of creating other executive offices, although it cannot abolish any of those created by the Constitution." The same rule is found in 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 328. Such, I would say, would be the true construction of the above-quoted extract from article 7, § 1, of the Constitution, if the case rested upon that alone. But there are other clauses in the Constitution which clearly contemplate power in the Legislature to create additional offices, and authorize it to do so. Take section 8, article 7 (Code 1906, p. lxxv). It says the Governor shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appoint, all officers whose offices are established by the Constitution, "or shall be created by law, and whose appointment or election is not otherwise provided for." Section 8, art. 4 (Code 1906, p. liv) says: "The Legislature, in cases not provided for in this Constitution, shall prescribe by general laws the terms of offices, powers, duties and compensation of all public officers and agents, and the manner in which they shall be elected, appointed and removed." These sections clearly recognize the power of the Legislature to create additional offices in the executive department. I do not say that the Legislature could create an office with power in it incumbent to oust the Governor of his constitutional functions, though I think it could deprive him of powers given by statute, and transfer them to another officer; but I do say that it is very clear that the Legislature may create an additional office, and provide for filling it, as an auxiliary or aid in the executive department. It cannot be said that chapter 33, Acts of 1906 (extra session), makes the Tax Commissioner coequal with the Governor, since it provides that the Governor shall appoint him, and may remove him, and the Tax Commissioner shall report to the Governor. The Tax Commissioner is thus not the coequal of the Governor, but is a subordinate in the executive department.

[4, 5] It is virtually contended that the power to create additional officers applies only to subordinates, to employés, or inferior officers, but not to an officer like that of the Tax Commissioner, vested, as he is, with great and important supervision over the conduct of officers as to monetary matters; but the language of the Constitution above quoted is, "officers whose offices are established by this Constitution, or shall be created by law." The word "create" means to bring into existence that which did not exist. It gives to the Legislature power to originate an office. And it uses the word "office." Its legal signification is different from "employé." An employé is a mere agent. In Hartigan v. Board of Regents, 49 W. Va. 14, 38 S. E. 698, we discuss this difference, and under principles there stated it is clear that a tax commissioner holds an office, and the Constitution authorizes the Legislature to create an office. The Constitution goes further than merely to authorize the Legislature to create an employment; it authorizes it to create an office. The Tax Commissioner is an officer, paid out of the public treasury, and exercises some great powers pertaining to sovereignty, and is therefore an officer, not an employé. Under principles stated in that case, and in full note to Shelby v. Alcorn, 72 Am. Dec. 169, he is an officer. Though he is an officer, the Constitution authorizes the Legislature to create "officers"; the Constitution must mean this, as there would be no need of a provision in it to authorize the Legislature to provide for mere employment.

[3] Another defense against the award of a mandamus is that chapter 33, Acts of 1906, is unconstitutional, because it deprives the county court of superintendence and administration of the fiscal affairs of the county, contrary to section 24 of article 8 of the Constitution (Code 1906, p. lxxiv), giving such jurisdiction to the county court. The act provides that the State Tax Commissioner shall be ex officio the chief inspector and supervisor of public offices, and he shall have power to perform the duties specified in the act. It provides that he shall formulate, prescribe, and install a system of accounting and reporting in conformity with the provision of the act, which shall be uniform for all public offices and to all public accounts of the same class, which system shall exhibit true accounts and statements of all public funds collected, received, and expended for any purpose by all public officers, employés or other persons. The accounts must show the receipts, use, and disposition of all money and public property, the income therefrom, and of all sources of public income, and the amounts received and due from each source. The act provides that separate accounts be kept for every appropriation or fund made or levied by a taxing body, and payments made thereout, and various other provisions, calculated to show and account for all public moneys in the hands of public officers, and exhibit the state of the various funds. We do not realize how it can be said that the keeping of such accounts takes away the jurisdiction or superintendence of the county court over the fiscal affairs of the county. The act does not make such account conclusive either on the county or the officer. They are only exhibits or statements of the public money, and, instead of taking away the superintendence of the county court, are helpful to it as basis, guide, or light, helpful to the county court in its regulation or administration of such affairs. It is an aid to the county court; it is to further the exercise of its jurisdiction. But, aside from this, the Constitution, whilst it gives the county court superintendence and administration of the fiscal affairs of the county, yet gives it "under such regulation as may be prescribed by law," thus giving the Legislature large power to direct, regulate, and control the exercise of the jurisdiction of the county court. It is quite difficult to say what is the limit of the legislative power herein, and yet more difficult to say that an act of the Legislature, simply providing a system of book-keeping by the public officers handling public money, in order to show the receipts and disbursement thereof, deprives the county court of its lawful jurisdiction in the matter. This act is only in furtherance of the Constitution, art. 6, § 27 (Code 1906, p. lx), which requires the Legislature to enact and enforce laws requiring sheriffs and other officers collecting or receiving public money to make accounts and settlements therefor. That is the mandate of the Constitution. What does this act do but provide for systematic accounts for public money? This act answers a great public need, and is of vital importance to the people to secure accountability for, and the lawful disposition of, public money. We can hardly conceive of any legislation in this line more salutary in the interest of the public. We can hardly conceive of functions more valuable and necessary and prudent than those of the Tax Commissioner under this act. We can hardly conceive of an officer whose services, well performed, will more redound to the public benefit. It will save to the people thousands and thousands of dollars of their money from misappropriation and embezzlement.

Further, as to the claim that the mandamus asked by the Tax Commissioner invades the jurisdiction of the county court, I remark that this mandamus is asked under sections 2 and 5 of chapter 33; that is, to require officers to keep accounts according to the system and forms presented by the Tax Commissioner under section 2. It is not under section 7, which authorizes the Commissioner to require an audit or investigation of the financial affairs of public office. We express no opinion as to such audit. Martin v. Tyler, 4 N. D. 278, 60 N. W. 392, 25 L. R. A. 833, and Bryant v. Robbins, 70 Wis. 259, 35 N. W. 545, are cited by Tetrick's counsel. So far as they go, they sustain the position above taken; but I confess they are not authority for us. But they are not authority against us. They hold that acts establishing a county board of drainage were not repugnant to the Constitution, giving county commissioners superintendence of the fiscal county affairs. They so hold because drainage was held not a fiscal matter. The court did not decide the acts void. It is said that if the acts had concerned fiscal affairs the court would have held them void. How do we know? The cases are not in point here. No pointed authority is shown to uphold the position that chapter 33 takes from the county court its powers. We do not think so, at least as to this mandamus.

It is argued that chapter 33 is unconstitutional, as delegating to the Tax Commissioner and the board of public works legislative power, and thus violates that well-known principle of law that the Legislature alone can enact laws, and cannot refer it to any officer to do so. In the first place, I will say that it is useless in this case to enter upon a discussion of the intricate question of when an act is open to this objection, for the reason is plain that this act is clearly not within that principle. The argument of counsel is that this act does not take effect without the action of the Tax Commissioner and board of public works. This argument rests on the fact that the act directs the Tax Commissioner, called "Chief Inspector," to formulate, prescribe, and install a system of accounting and reporting in conformity with the provisions of the act as to public funds in the hands of officers, and provides that the system formulated by the inspector, before it becomes effective, must be approved by the board of public works. From that provision is built the argument of invalidity of the act. It is at once sufficient to reply that the act by no means depends on the assent or discretion of the inspector or board of public works. On the contrary, the chapter is a positive enactment that its provisions, directions, and requirements shall be executed, shall be law. There is no shadow to justify the claim that the operation of the law shall be dependent on the will of the inspector or board. Under its own provisions, it went into effect January 1, 1909, without any reservation or condition that the inspector or board should approve or put it in force. It is true that it provides that the inspector shall make forms of accounting with the approval of the board of public works; but it leaves no discretion with them to say whether they will or will not make those forms, or adopt the system of accounting prescribed by the act, but, on the contrary, commands them to do so. If they do not do so, they disobey the command of the act, and I doubt not that the Governor, or some one, could compel the inspector to comply with the act.

Is it possible to say that when an act fixes duties to be performed by public officers it is unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative power? If so, how many laws would fall? That is all that is contained in the question. So the question of when an act is void, because it refers its going into effect to some other officer or body, really does not arise in this case.

If the taking effect of this act were dependent on the volition or action of the inspector, then such question would arise, and then we would meet with a legion of decisions "every which way." It is not always the case that such a provision makes the act void. Each instance stands on its own legs. In State v. Butler, 105 Me. 91, 73 Atl. 560, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 744, 18 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 484, and note, 489, will be found the cases on this subject. In Haigh v. Bell, 41 W. Va. 19, 23 S. E. 666, 31 L. R. A. 131, was involved an act, authorizing the county court, upon petition of voters, to put in operation in its county an act to prevent hogs from running at large. The act was held constitutional. In Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 294, was presented an act of Congress, providing that upon the ascertainment by the President that certain articles exported from the United States were charged by another country tariff, not reciprocal, but unequal, he could suspend a provision of the tariff act, allowing articles from that country to come in free. The provision of the act was held not void as delegating legislative power to the President. We have a later case in that eminent court, the United States Supreme Court—Union Bridge Co. v. United States, 204 U. S. 364, 27 Sup. Ct. 367, 51 L. Ed. 523. The act involved conferred on the Secretary of War power to say when a bridge over a navigable stream constituted an obstruction, and the question was whether that feature of the act made it obnoxious to the claim that it delegated legislative function to the President, and it was held that it did not do so. The court said that: "The true distinction is between the delegation of power to make the law, which involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised in a pursuance of the law. The first cannot be done; to the latter there can be no objections." The court said that half the statutes on our books are in the alternative, depending on discretion of some person or persons to whom is confided the duty of determining whether the proper occasion exists for executing them; but that it would not be said that the exercise of such discretion is the making of the law. That is going much further than we have to go in this case, because there is not a shade of discretion left by this act in the inspector to say whether or not the act shall operate; but he is commanded to execute it. Are the various acts creating railroad commissions to fix rates, or enforce rates fixed by law, unconstitutional? In fact, as I have said above, the contention in this case would almost nullify the Code, on the ground that it commits duties to be performed by officers. That is all this act does as to the inspector and board of public works. It simply directs them to execute it. I refer here to the well-considered case of State v. Railway Co., 76 Kan. 467, 92 Pac. 606. There we find it laid down that the power of a Legislature to delegate merely administrative functions is thoroughly established, citing Atlantic Coast Line v. N. Car. Corp., 206 U. S. 1, 27 Sup. Ct. 585, 51 L. Ed. 933. There we find it laid down under a host of authorities that the Legislature may not delegate its strictly legislative powers, but it may delegate authority to perform certain functions which are administrative in character, and cannot well be performed by the Legislature itself. Our act simply leaves it to those officers to execute the act, as many other statutes do. If they do not perform the functions which the act prescribes, the act is a dead letter until compliance with it shall be enforced; but they must execute it; the act gives them no discretion; the act is a law, no matter what they do. But I need not have gone outside of our own authority. I have just met with the cases of Rutter v. Sullivan, 25 W. Va. 427, and Bull v. Read, 13 Grat. (Va.) 78. In the former case, an act, creating a municipal court for Huntington, and providing that the act should be suspended until approved by the voters, was not invalid as delegating legislative power. In the second case, it was held likewise as to an act establishing a system of free schools in a district, not to be carried into effect until the people should approve it.

The Constitution (article 6, § 27) requires the Legislature to enact laws requiring officers receiving public money to make annual accounts and settlements. Laws have always existed to that end. The Code 1906, § 33, c. 39, has long provided that clerks of the county court shall keep proper accounts to show the money and claims due to the county, which are to be accounted for to the court, showing all claims placed in the hands of an officer. It requires him to keep a record touching the money of a county. For what purpose? In order that the county may be able to make settlements, and get its dues from sheriff and other officers. The clerk is the keeper of the books and accounts of the county, to show its right. The Code, in section 32a, III, provides that when any money is paid to the treasurer, except taxes, the treasurer shall give to the person paying duplicate receipts, one of which shall be deposited with the clerk, who shall, in a well-bound book, charge the treasurer therewith, and file the receipts in his office. This new act (chapter 33) is nothing more, in substance, than an act to carry out more effectually that old legislation. It is only an act to assure the accounting for public money. The statutes always made provisions for settlement and accounting for public money. This is only another act to more efficiently effectuate that end. It goes along with the old legislation. It contains no new idea. It simply provides new means to secure accountability in the fact that it sets up a new officer, and directs him to prescribe a system of accounts, to ascertain the public right as to money in the hands of officers. It simply directs a certain officer to act in the matter to attain the end sought by the statute. It cannot be said that it does more than simply authorize a public officer to perform certain duties to carry this and other statutes in pari materia into execution. The Legislature could not formulate a system of accounts, and of necessity had to commit it to a public officer. That is all the act does, so far as it is involved in this case.

Chapter 33 is attacked as unconstitutional, on the theory that it lessens the salary of the clerk during his term of office. We do not deem it requisite to discuss this matter. We simply say that the act does not pretend to deal in any wise with salary. It may be said to impose more duties on the clerk; but the Legislature often does that, and surely can do so. But I do not say that it does impose additional duties, since the old law required him to keep practically the same accounts required by the new act. Doubtless the system directed by this act is more methodical than the former process, and is less laborious, and surely will facilitate settlement. If kept as the inspector directs it, there will per se be settlement.

Counsel for Tetrick says that this suit cannot be sustained, as there is no warrant for it. He says that the Tax Commissioner cannot sue to enforce the act until audit of an office has been made, and a report of the investigation has been filed with the Commissioner and the taxing body; and that only when such reports shall show misfeasance, malfeasance, or nonfeasance, and only when the proper legal authority of the court, the prosecuting attorney, fails to take steps to enforce the public right, can the Tax Commissioner sue to do so. That provision is found in section 7; that applies to an audit of the office. We are not dealing with that section or that audit. The plaintiff in this case does not allege anything crooked in the discharge of duty by the clerk, save his failure to keep his accounts according to the formula prescribed and sent to him by the Tax Commissioner. Section 7 provides a suit by the Commissioner after an audit. But we have the case before us of a failure to keep the accounts according to the system which the Commissioner prescribes. Suppose an officer refuses to conform to the system dictated by the Tax Commissioner under the act. Is there no remedy? We cannot think that. We cannot think that the high purpose of this enactment is to be thus frustrated. Who is to exert the remedy? We think it is the Tax Commissioner. We deduce this from a reading of the act, evidently intending to vest its execution in that officer. The act says he shall be chief inspector and supervisor of public offices, and have power and authority set forth in the act; and section 2 commands him to prescribe the system of accounting. Does it impose this duty, and yet give no authority to enforce it? He has implied authority to enforce compliance by officers with the duties which the Commissioner shall prescribe. The act gives no suit, in the case supposed, to any other officer. Public rights must be enforced by public agents. The Tax Commissioner is the public agent in such case as we have in hand. We think he has such an interest officially as enables him to ask the writ of mandamus.

Is it necessary to invoke that worn principle of law that a court approaches such a question with timidity, and must take a statute as constitutional, unless it is very plainly repugnant to the Constitution?

But for the fact that the act in question is, in all its parts, a very important one, and new, and the elaborate briefs of counsel, which, on both sides, evince thought and labor and ability, and have been very helpful to the court, I would not have written so much. I have not found the case to involve difficulty in decision.

We overrule the motion to quash the alternative writ and the demurrer to it, and retain the case for further proceeding.

BLUE, State Tax Com'r, v. SMITH, Sheriff.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
Nov. 14, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. STATES (§ 44*)—CREATION OF OFFICES—CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The Legislature had the power to create the office of State Tax Commissioner, and said office is not in violation of the state Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Dec. Dig. § 44.*]

2. STATES (§ 68*)—CREATION OF OFFICES—CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Said office is subordinate in the executive department of the state, and the power and duties thereof do not conflict with those of any office created by the state Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see States, Dec. Dig. § 68.*]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 62*)—DISTRIBUTION OF GOVERNMENTAL POWER—DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER.

Chapter 33 of Acts Ex. Sess. 1908 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 10b), providing for an uniform system of public accounting, and appointing the State Tax Commissioner chief inspector and supervisor of public offices, and authorizing him to prescribe forms for the keeping of accounts of public funds, and, after having such forms approved by the board of public works, making it the duty of every public officer and employé to keep the accounts of his office according to such prescribed form, does not empower such chief inspector to perform a legislative function. Said act is not in conflict with either the letter or the spirit of the Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 94-102; Dec. Dig. § 62.*]

Original proceeding by Fred O. Blue, State Tax Commissioner, for mandamus to S. P. Smith, Sheriff of Kanawha County. Peremptory writ awarded.

L. S. Echols, E. R. Kingsley, and Fred O. Blue, for petitioner. W. G. Mathews, for respondent.

WILLIAMS, P. This is an original mandamus proceeding by Fred O. Blue, State Tax Commissioner, and ex officio chief inspector and supervisor of public offices, against S. P. Smith, sheriff of Kanawha county, to compel him to keep his accounts of the public funds according to certain forms of public accounting, prescribed by said chief inspector for the use of the sheriffs of all the counties of the state, and approved by the board of public works on the 27th of May, and on the 8th of July, 1910.

On the filing of the petition, an alternative writ was issued, to which respondent appeared and demurred. He also moved to quash said writ, and at the same time made return thereto. To sustain the demurrer, and motion to quash, it is insisted that the office of State Tax Commissioner was created in violation of the state Constitution, and is therefore not a lawful office, and confers no power on the incumbent.

[1] The Legislature has the inherent power to create the office, in our opinion, unless there is an express or a necessarily implied prohibition upon it to do so, contained in the Constitution. Counsel for respondent concedes this to be the law. Looking to that solemn document, we find that there is certainly no such inhibition expressed, and instead of finding any implied restriction upon the power of the Legislature to create offices, we find that section 8 of article 4 (Code 1906, p. lix), expressly authorizes that body, even if such authorization were thought to be necessary, to prescribe by general law the terms of office, powers, duties, and compensation of all public officers and agents, and the manner in which they shall be elected, appointed, and removed, "in cases not provided for in this Constitution." Section 8 of article 7 (Code 1906, p. lxxv) prohibits the Legislature from appointing or electing any officers (but not from creating offices), and confers upon the Governor the right to nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint, not only officers mentioned in the Constitution, the manner of whose election is not therein provided for, but also such officers as "shall be created by law." This is certainly as clear an express recognition of the right of the Legislature to create, by law, other officers than those named in the Constitution, as it is a vesting of power in the Governor, acting with the advice of the Senate to fill such offices by appointment, after they are created.

[2] The Legislature, of course, cannot create offices which will conflict with or curtail the constitutional powers of any of the offices provided for by the Constitution. But the office of State Tax Commissioner does not do so. That office was created as an aid to the executive department in the administration of the laws respecting the state's revenues. The Governor has the power, together with the Senate, to fill it, and the Governor alone has power to declare it vacant. The State Tax Commissioner is a subordinate office in the executive department; the incumbent may be removed by the chief executive at his will. His powers and duties are purely ministerial, and do not in any manner conflict with those of any other office created by the Constitution. Our conclusion is that the Legislature had the power to create the office of State Tax Commissioner, and that the office is lawfully constituted.

It is not necessary that I should enter upon an extended discussion of this question, because we have to-day decided the same point, raised in the case of Blue, State Tax Commissioner, v. Tetrick, Clerk, 72 S. E. 1033, and I am content to refer to the very able discussion of the subject in the opinion prepared by Judge Brannon in that case. The reasons which he there assigns for holding the office to be lawfully created apply with equal force here. We are too much burdened with work, and too much pressed for time, to justify a repetition of reasons for repeated decisions of the same questions, especially when made at the same time, and so well considered as in the opinion in that case.

[3] The unconstitutionality of chapter 33, Acts 1908 (Code Supp. 1909, c. 10b), was not discussed by counsel in this case; still it may be regarded as having been raised by the demurrer. But we have no doubt concerning the constitutionality of that act, and hold it constitutional and valid, and I again refer to the opinion prepared by Judge Brannon, in the case above cited, for the reasons in support of our opinion sustaining the act.

By that act, the Legislature made the State Tax Commissioner ex officio chief inspector and supervisor over public offices, and imposed upon him duties, power, and authority, in addition to those conferred upon him by chapter 4, Acts 1904 (Code 1906, c. 29), which was the act creating the office of State Tax Commissioner. Chapter 33, Acts 1908, was enacted for the purpose of securing a uniform system of keeping the accounts of public funds of the state and its political subdivisions. It authorizes the chief inspector to prescribe and install a system of accounting and reporting which shall be uniform for all public offices and for all public accounts of the same class. It provides that when such system is formulated by him it shall then be submitted to the board of public works for its inspection and approval before it becomes operative. The act itself became effective on the 1st of January, 1909. The chief inspector did prescribe forms for the keeping of accounts of all public moneys, for the use of the sheriffs of the various counties of the state. On the forms there are columns for keeping the accounts of the various funds which the sheriff receives from all the different sources provided for by law, and also columns for noting the time it was received, and columns for noting the times and purposes for which it was disbursed. Said form was submitted to the board of public works, and was approved by it on the 27th of May, and on the 8th of July, 1910. At the same time, the chief inspector also submitted to the board of public works printed instructions and explanations, intended to guide the sheriffs in the use of said prescribed forms and they were also approved.

The alternative writ charges that respondent has not kept, and that he is not now keeping, his public accounts in the manner which he was required to do according to the aforesaid forms and instructions. Respondent does not deny this charge; but he insists in his return that the system prescribed is complicated and difficult to understand and to follow. We do not think so; neither would it furnish a good excuse for noncompliance, if it were so. True there are many different accounts for the sheriff to keep; but there are also many different purposes for which the public funds, handled by him, are to be used. It may be true that the system imposes some extra labor upon the sheriff, and perhaps may require some additional clerical assistance in his office, not necessary under the old law. But the law was passed in February, 1908, and was to take effect the 1st of January, 1909, and respondent must have known of the law before he was elected. Hence it cannot be said to have the effect to decrease the emoluments of his office during his term, by making it necessary for him to employ additional clerks, because the law took effect at the same time he took office. The system prescribed may require the keeping of more separate accounts of the receipts and disbursements of the several public funds which are handled by the sheriff than he has heretofore been accustomed to keep, but the system is not complicated; neither does it seem to us difficult to understand. It is useful and valuable, in that it furnishes daily balances of each particular fund which he collects and disburses, and operates automatically as a settlement of his accounts of all the various funds. The new system may occasion a little more trouble and labor to keep the accounts, but it will occasion vastly less in making the sheriff's annual settlements.

It is true that at the time the application was made for the alternative writ property taxes, assessed for the fiscal year 1911, were not due and payable, and none had been collected. It would be expected that respondent's accounts would be blank as to such taxes. But liquor license taxes are payable, under the law, the 1st of July of each year, and respondent admits that he has collected many thousands of dollars of liquor license taxes, and that he has not kept an account of them in the form prescribed and furnished him by the chief inspector; but he avers that he has kept a separate and distinct record of such taxes in a ledger, or cashbook, which he keeps for that purpose.

He also admits that he has not kept fines received by him from justices of the peace in the manner provided by the prescribed form, but avers that he has kept an account of said fines in a separate ledger. He makes the same admission and allegation with respect to his accounts of fines received by him, which have been imposed upon offenders against the law by the criminal and the circuit courts. These admissions show a noncompliance with the law relating to the uniform keeping of public accounts, and justify the awarding of the peremptory writ, which will be awarded.

STATE v. FRANCIS.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1911.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 970*)—ARREST OF JUDGMENT—DEFECTIVE INDICTMENT.

To arrest a judgment after verdict of guilty, the indictment must be so defective that judgment cannot be pronounced on it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2445-2462; Dec. Dig. § 970.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 970*)—ARREST OF JUDGMENT—DEFECTIVE INDICTMENT.

The caption of an indictment is no part of it, and the omission in the caption of the county in which the indictment was found is not ground for arrest of judgment.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 970*)—ARREST OF JUDGMENT—DEFECTIVE INDICTMENT.

The failure to insert in the caption of the indictment the term of court at which it was returned is not ground for arrest of judgment, especially where the record shows that the indictment was returned at a specified term.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 970.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 970*)—ARREST OF JUDGMENT—INDICTMENT—REQUISITES.

Time is not of the essence of the offense of unlawfully manufacturing spirituous liquor, and, under Revisal 1905, § 3255, providing that no judgment shall be stayed for the failure of the indictment to state the time of the commission of the offense, an indictment need not state the time of the commission of the offense to support it against a motion in arrest.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 970.*]

5. INTOXICATING LIQUORS (§ 224*)—UNLAWFULLY MANUFACTURING SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS—PROSECUTION—EVIDENCE.

The state on a trial for the unlawful manufacture of spirituous liquor must show that the offense was committed within two years.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Intoxicating Liquors, Dec. Dig. § 224.*]

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 968*)—ARREST OF JUDGMENT—EVIDENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

The failure of the state to show that the offense of unlawfully manufacturing spirituous liquors was committed within two years should be taken advantage of by accused by a requested instruction, and is not available in arrest of judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 2437; Dec. Dig. § 968.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, McDowell County; Long, Judge.

James Francis was convicted of unlawfully manufacturing spirituous liquors, and he appeals. Affirmed.

After verdict defendants moved in arrest of judgment. The bill is as follows:

"State of North Carolina, ——— County. Superior Court, ——— Term, 191—. The jurors for the state, upon their oaths, do present that Jim Francis, Loge Francis, Ben Francis, late of the county of ——— on the ——— day of ———, with force and arms, at and in the county aforesaid, unlawfully and wilfully manufacture and make spirituous liquors, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided and against the peace and dignity of the state. Johnson, Solicitor. No. 70. State v. Jim Francis, Loge Francis, Ben Francis. Indictment, making liquor. Witnesses: Alexander Crawley,* J. A. Lughridge,* J. P. Ray.* Those marked * sworn by the undersigned, foreman, and examined before the grand jury, and this bill found 'A true bill.' C. C. Burgin, Foreman of the Grand Jury.

"This bill was returned into open court at February term, 1911, by C. C. Burgin, foreman of the grand jury. Thos. Morris, C. S. C."

The court overruled the motion, and pronounced judgment.

D. F. Morrow, for appellant. T. W. Bickett, Atty. Gen., and Geo. L. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

BROWN, J. It is much the best that solicitors should fill in the blanks in the printed forms of indictment. It expedites the administration of the criminal law, and prevents such appeals as this. Had the defendant moved to quash this bill or for a bill of particulars to supply him with any needed information, it is probable the one motion or the other would have been allowed. The defendant has not been taken at any disadvantage, for he allowed the trial to proceed and attacked the bill only after he had been convicted.

[1] To arrest the judgment, it must appear that the bill is so defective that judgment cannot be pronounced upon it.

[2] The fact that the county in which the bill of indictment was found does not appear in the caption of the indictment does not constitute ground for arresting the judgment. State v. Wasden, 4 N. C. 596; State v. Brickell, 8 N. C. 354; State v. Lane, 26 N. C. 121; State v. Dula, 61 N. C. 441; State v. Sprinkle, 65 N. C. 463; State v. Williamson, 81 N. C. 541; State v. Arnold, 107 N. C. 864, 11 S. E. 990. The caption is no part of the indictment, and its omission is no ground for arresting judgment. State v. Arnold, 107 N. C. 864, 11 S. E. 990, and cases cited.

[3] The term of the court being a part of the caption of the bill, the failure to insert it is no ground for arresting judgment. Besides, the records of the superior court of McDowell county embodied in the transcript of appeal sent to this court show that the bill was returned a true bill at February term, 1911.

[4] Time is not of the essence of the offense charged in the bill, and it was not necessary to allege the time at which the offense was committed. Revisal, 3255; State v. Caudle, 63 N. C. 30; State v. Taylor, 83 N. C. 601; State v. Peters, 107 N. C. 876, 12 S. E. 74.

[5, 6] The burden of proof is on the state to show that the offense was committed within two years, and a failure to make such proof should be taken advantage of by the defendant by a request to instruct the jury. State v. Carpenter, 74 N. C. 230; State v. Nolder, 133 N. C. 709, 45 S. E. 862.

The bill, while defective in form, is sufficient to sustain the judgment of the court.

Affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; Whedbee, Judge.

Action by George M. Harden against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Civil action to recover for damages to live stock, shipped by plaintiff over the lines of defendant companies. On the trial, it appeared that plaintiffs, having purchased a number of standard bred horses, in February, 1910, shipped same over lines of defendant companies from Lexington, Ky., over the Chesapeake & Ohio Road, to Lynchburg, Va., and from that point over the Southern to Greensboro, N. C. There was evidence, on the part of plaintiff, tending to show that plaintiff, during the negotiations for shipment, informed the agent of the Chesapeake & Ohio Road that the horses were a high-priced lot, and that one was a stallion, about three years old; that the natural propensities of a stallion of that age, and of this one, were such that it was dangerous to turn him in with the other stock, and that defendant (the Chesapeake & Ohio Road), on being informed that such an animal was in the lot, undertook and agreed to have him securely boxed off from the others; that this was done in such a negligent manner that when the car reached Lynchburg this partition or stall was entirely down, allowing all the stock to mingle together. The agent of the Chesapeake & Ohio, describing the manner in which it had been first constructed, spoke of it as a "sorry job," and, owing to this fact and the condition of the car, the Southern Railroad refused to receive the stock at Lynchburg until the car was repaired and the conditions corrected; that this was done by the agent of the Chesapeake & Ohio, and the stall securely built, but, in replacing the horses in the car, said agent put in the box stall one of them which had already been hurt, and turned the stallion in with the others, and with the result that, when the stock arrived at Greensboro, they were bitten and kicked until one of them died of his injuries, and others badly damaged to the amount of $1,160; that of this damage $450 was done to the horses of another shipper, and the damage done to plaintiff's horses, attributable to defendant's negligence, amounted to $710. There was allegation with evidence on part of defendant, tending to show that defendant, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, had only made a rate as far as Lynchburg, the shipment from that point being over the lines of the Southern Railway; that the defendant, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, had not undertaken to box off the stallion, and was guilty of no negligence in that respect. Defendant further introduced and relied upon the written contract of shipment, or bill of lading, in which it was stipulated, in effect, and as relevant to the inquiry, that, in consideration of a reduced freight rate, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad was only to be chargeable for injuries arising from its gross negligence, and, on the question of value, that in case of any injuries to the stock, for which said company was responsible, under the contract, the amount of recovery should in no case exceed $75 for each horse, mule, stallion, or jack, $30 for each cow, steer, or bull, and $5 for each other animal; and the agent testified that this was an old printed form, and the value ($75) having been changed to $100 by subsequent regulations of the company, he inserted the $100 in lieu of the $75, and that by this classification and rating the plaintiff saved several hundred dollars in freight charges. There was testimony, also, for defendant that the classification and freight rate in this instance was in accord with a regulation made and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The judge charged the jury, and on issues submitted they rendered the following verdict:

"(1) Was the plaintiff's property injured by the negligence of the defendant, the Southern Railway Company as alleged in the complaint? Answer: No.

"(2) Was the plaintiff's property injured by the negligence of the defendant, the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(3) What damages is plaintiff entitled to recover from the Southern Railway Company? Answer: None.

"(4) What damages is plaintiff entitled to recover from the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company? Answer: $710."

Judgment on verdict for plaintiff, and defendant Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad excepted and appealed.

Aycock & Winston, for appellant. Armistead, Jones & Son, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1, 2] It is very generally held that railroad companies receiving live stock for shipment take and hold them as common carriers, and, as a rule, are chargeable with the duties of such carriers concerning them. There is a recognized limitation on the obligations of common carriers, in reference to live stock, to the effect that they are not considered as insurers of such property against injuries arising from the natural or proper vices or the inherent nature and propensities of the animals themselves, or from the "vitality of the freight," as it is sometimes expressed, unless the injuries from such source are attributable, in whole or in part, to the carrier's negligence. The general principle, with its recognized modifications, is very well stated in Moore on Carriers, p. 486, as follows: "Carriers of live stock are common carriers, subject to all the duties, responsibilities, and liabilities, and entitled to all the rights and privileges, of a common carrier of merchandise or other inanimate property, save in one important respect. While common carriers are insurers of inanimate property against all loss and damage, except such as is inevitable or attributable to the act of God, or caused by public enemies, and except that they are not held liable for losses which result from the inherent and intrinsic qualities of the goods carried by them, as carriers of live stock, they are not insurers of animals against injuries arising from or attributable to the natural or proper vices, or the inherent nature, propensities, and habits, of the animals themselves, and which could not be prevented by foresight, vigilance, and care;" and in Hale on Bailments and Carriers, it is said: "Carriers of live stock are common carriers wherever carriers of other goods would be; but they are not liable, in the absence of negligence, for such injuries as occur in consequence of the vitality of the freight," and these statements will be found to accord with the great weight of authority. Selby v. Railroad Co., 113 N. C. 592, 18 S. E. 88, 37 Am. St. Rep. 635; Covington Stock Goods v. Keith, 139 U. S. 128, 11 Sup. Ct. 469, 35 L. Ed. 73; McCune v. Railroad Co., 52 Iowa, 600, 3 N. W. 615; Clark v. Railroad Co., 14 N. Y. 570, 67 Am. Dec. 205; Elliott on Railroads, § 1548; Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) § 339.

[3] Accordingly, carriers, in the proper performance of their duties, are required to provide suitable and adequate cars for the care and preservation of live stock during their carriage, and to afford proper facilities for having them watered and attended to, and to make proper provision for them in reference to peculiar traits or conditions of which they have notice, and especially when the carrier makes stipulations in reference to such conditions. Kinnick Bros. v. Railroad Co., 69 Iowa, 665, 29 N. W. 772; Haynes v. Railroad Co., 54 Mo. App. 582; Sturgeon v. Railroad Co., 65 Mo. 569; Indianapolis & C. R. R. v. Allen, 31 Ind. 394; Smith v. New Haven, etc., Railroad, 12 Allen (Mass.) 531, 90 Am. Dec. 166; Shaw v. Great Southern R. R. Co., L. R. 1, vol. 8, p. 10 (1881-82); Hutchinson on Carriers (3d Ed.) §§ 342, 343, and 636; Moore on Carriers, p. 498, § 8.

[4, 5] There was ample evidence on part of plaintiff tending to establish a breach of duty on the part of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company, and justifying the verdict that the stock was injured by the negligence of said company. The agent of that road, testifying for defendant in reference to the original construction of the stall, said it was "a sorry job," and when he had caused it to be rebuilt at Lynchburg, he put the wrong horse into it, and turned the stallion in with the other horses. This being true, it is well established with us that "a common carrier, in its contract of shipment, cannot stipulate against recovery for loss or damage occasioned by its own negligence, and it can make no such stipulation against total or partial loss." Stringfield v. Railroad Co., 152 N. C. 128, 67 S. E. 333, citing McConnell v. Railroad Co., 144 N. C. 90, 56 S. E. 559; Everett v. Railroad Co., 138 N. C. 71, 50 S.

There are cases which hold that the act of defendant, in turning the stallion in with the other stock, would be an act of gross negligence, and so expressly within the terms of the agreement, but, without reference to this aspect of the evidence, under the doctrine as it prevails in this jurisdiction, this stipulation is entirely void as against public policy, or in any event can only operate to relieve them from liability as insurers, which is perhaps the correct interpretation of the words. And on the facts in evidence this same principle, which avoids stipulations against recovery for negligence on the part of the carrier, should obtain in reference to the clause in the bill of lading, restricting the amount, where the recovery is had on that ground. Speaking of this question in Everett's Case, the court said: "It would be an idle thing for the courts to declare the principle that contracts for total exemption from such loss are subversive of public policy and void, and, at the same time permit and uphold a partial limitation which could avail to prevent anything like adequate or substantial recovery by the shipper."

In the present case it appears that this was a high-priced lot of horses, and the agent of the initial carrier was informed of this fact; that the value was inserted by the agent in a printed formula according to a predetermined, inadequate valuation, and that there was no intent or effort to fix upon the true value of the shipment, or to approximate it under any conditions sanctioned or permitted by the law; and it further appears by the uncontradicted testimony that the fair average value of the stock was between two or three hundred dollars per head.

In the Stringfield Case, supra, on facts very similar, the court held that a restrictive stipulation of this kind, as to recoveries for negligence on the part of carriers, was in contravention of public policy, and void. The ruling in Stringfield's Case and others of like purport was not made to depend upon whether there was one or more horses in the shipment (a view presented on the argument here), but on the position that there had been no bona fide effort to arrive at the true value of the shipment, or to approximate it, and to allow an arbitrary, predetermined valuation to stand, far below the actual value, would in actions of that character be in effect to uphold a stipulation against recovery for negligence—a stipulation, as stated, forbidden by our law. In Stringfield's Case, attention was called to the fact that the principle we are discussing, "when properly understood and applied, did not prevent the parties from agreeing upon the valuation of a given shipment which should form the basis of adjustment in case of loss or damage; and where this was done in the bona fide effort to fix upon the true value, and was made the basis of a fair and reasonable shipping rate, the parties would be held to the agreed valuation, though the loss should occur by reason of the carrier's negligence." And it was said, too, that an agreed valuation might be in rare instances allowed to stand for the purpose indicated, where it appeared that the agent of the carrier, being without knowledge or notice of the true value of the property, and without opportunity to inform himself, so as to make intelligent estimate concerning it, the parties, in the bona fide effort to put a correct valuation upon it, fixed upon a fair average value of property of the kind constituting the proposed shipment, and made the same, as stated, the basis of a fair and reasonable shipping rate—an instance afforded in the case of Jones v. Railroad Co., 148 N. C. 581, 62 S. E. 701. Such an agreement, and a valuation so established, may not be allowed to prevail, simply because the minds of the parties have met and agreed upon the amount, but in actions for injuries, caused by negligence of the carrier, it must have been agreed upon in the bona fide effort to fix upon a true valuation of the stock; and as an aid to the correct solution it may at times be well to submit an issue as to the true value or the average valuation of the property of the kind constituting the shipment, where such a view of the question is permissible.

There is no allegation or evidence of any fraud or concealment as to value on the part of the shipper, a principle sometimes present in such cases; nor can the doctrine of estoppel be invoked for defendant's relief on the facts presented in the testimony. The plaintiff, on this question, testified that he simply asked for the shipping rate, and it was given him without more. The agent of defendant testified that all that was said on the subject was that he asked if the horses were to be shipped at the usual valuation, and, on being answered, "Yes," he wrote that valuation in the bill of lading. And further as follows: "Q. Did he say anything about the value of the horses? A. No; I do not recall that he did. I asked him the question if they were to be shipped at that valuation, and he said, 'Yes.' Q. He did not say anything about the value himself? A. No. Q. He did not suggest it to you? A. No. Q. He did not read the contract? It was all done in about two minutes? A. Yes; it would take a long time to read it. Q. You did not read it to him? A. No. Q. He said nothing as to the value of the horses? A. He only answered my question, when I asked if they were to be shipped on the $100 valuation. He answered my question."

Speaking to this subject in Springfield's Case, the court said: "Nor do we think that the doctrine of estoppel, as applied in many of the cases relied upon, should avail defendant here. Some of these decisions could be reconciled, on the ground that if the disproportion between the actual and the stipulated values is so great as to give clear indication that there was no effort made to fix upon or approximate the true value, as in this case, it could be properly held that such a contract would be neither fair nor reasonable; but in many of them we think the doctrine of estoppel is too broadly stated; for, if a contract like the one we are considering is such as to deny substantial recovery for loss occasioned by the carrier's negligence, it is void, as against public policy, and it is not permissible to uphold such an agreement on the principle of estoppel. Such a position, carried to its logical conclusion, would enable individuals, as to their personal contracts and conduct towards each other, to set at naught both the public statutes and police regulations of the state. Accordingly, we find that, except in cases of positive fraud, which, in whole or in part, may operate to set aside the contract relation, the doctrine of estoppel, as ordinarily applied, is only available in aid or extension of valid contracts. Bigelow on Estoppel (5th Ed.), citing Brightman v. Hicks, 108 Mass. 246; Langan v. Sankey, 55 Iowa, 52 [7 N. W. 393]; Shorman v. Eakin, 47 Ark. 351 [1 S. W. 559]; Klenk v. Knable, 37 Ark. 304—authorities which fully support the text."

It was further insisted that the recovery should not be sustained, because the classification and rate made in the bill of lading had the sanction and approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission. We have not the ruling of the Commission before us, but, in our opinion, it cannot for a moment be sustained that a ruling of the Commission, designed and intended simply as a regulation establishing a reasonable and proper freight rate without more, should have the effect of altering a principle of public policy long prevailing in the state, as said in Everett's Case, supra—a principle established and adhered to for grave and weighty reasons, and considered necessary for the protection of the great body of shippers. Replying to a suggestion somewhat similar, the court, in Kissenger v. Fitzgerald, 152 N. C. 252, 67 S. E. 590, said: "It is the settled policy of this state that common carriers may not contract against loss or damage occasioned by their negligence; and it has been held by the Supreme Court of the United States that, unless and until there is some valid regulation by Congress of the Interstate Commerce Commission directly affecting the matter, a state has the right to establish such a policy and enforce it in reference to

[8] We are not inadvertent to the fact that the contract of shipment was made in Kentucky, and there is no evidence before us to the rules prevailing in that state concerning it. The doctrine referred to, and which we hold to be controlling on the facts presented, was established and has come down to us from the principles and policy of the common law in reference to public carriers, and the same is presumed to obtain in a sister state, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Roberts v. Pratt, 152 N. C. 731, 68 S. E. 24. On investigation, however, it seems that like doctrine prevails in full force in the state of Kentucky, and has been made a part of the organic law of that state. Lewis v. Louisville & Nashville R. R., 135 Ky. 362, 122 S. W. 184, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 938. On the whole matter, we find no reversible error in the record, and the judgment in plaintiff's favor is affirmed.

No error.

CLARK, C. J. (concurring). For reasons of the soundest public policy, it has always been settled law that a common carrier cannot contract for either total or partial exemption from loss occasioned by its own negligence. The shipper and the common carrier are not on equal terms. The shipper must send his freight by the common carrier, or not at all. He is therefore entirely at the mercy of the carrier, unless protected by the higher power of the law against being forced into contracts limiting the carrier's liability.

In this case the evidence of negligence of the carrier is abundant, and has been found by the jury. Therefore the carrier could not by any alleged contract relieve itself from liability for any part of the damages caused by its own negligence. The fact that it offered to carry the stock on the common-law basis of liability for its own negligence, if the shipper would pay $650 extra, but would take off the $650, provided it was relieved against liability for its own negligence for all above $100 per animal, should not be seriously considered in the light of the decisions and of the "reason of the thing." In the language of the great dramatist (Henry VIII, act 5, scene 3), the device is "too thin and bare to hide the offense."

The shipper was entitled to have his stock carried at the rate at which they were actually carried, which is evidently the current rate fixed by competition, and with the common-law liability on the carrier to pay the full extent of any damages caused by its own negligence. The carrier had no right to require $650 additional freight by way of insurance to shipper against its own negligence, since that is a liability which is assumed by the very nature of the contract of carriage.

A provision, limiting liability to an agreed amount, is invalid, if the injury was caused by the carrier's negligence. Everett v. Railroad, 138 N. C. 71, 50 S. E. 557, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 985; Capehart v. Railroad, 81 N. C. 438, 31 Am. Rep. 505; Gardner v. Railroad, 127 N. C. 293, 37 S. E. 328; McConnell v. Railroad, 144 N. C. 90, 58 S. E. 559. This has also been held in England, Alabama, California, Colorado, District of Columbia, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, and Texas. See cases collected in 12 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 1131-1134.

It is true that in Hart v. Railroad, 112 U. S. 331, 5 Sup. Ct. 151, 28 L. Ed. 717, that court was led away by some means to disregard this principle which has been so long and so uniformly held, and the maintenance of which in its integrity is so necessary to the business interests of this country, which are largely dependent upon fair treatment by the great common carriers. To cure this aberration of the court, Congress passed what is known as the Hepburn amendment to section 20 of the interstate commerce act (U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1907, p. 906; Supp. 1909, p. 1164) which provides that the initial carrier is liable for any loss, damage, or injury to the goods caused by it or any connecting carrier, and makes void any contract, receipt, rule, or regulation which attempts to exempt the carrier from this liability. 12 Am. & Eng. Ann. Cas. 1133, and cases cited.

In Railroad v. Orenshaw, 5 Ga. App. 675, 63 S. E. 865, it is held that the state courts have jurisdiction of an action arising under the Hepburn act, and that any limitation of value or preadjustment of damages by a stipulation, restricting the recovery of damages to an amount less than the actual loss caused by the carrier's negligence, is void under this act. To same effect, Latta v. Railroad, 172 Fed. 850, 97 C. C. A. 198. Under these decisions, the doctrine laid down in Hart v. Railroad, 112 U. S. 331, 5 Sup. Ct. 151, 28 L. Ed. 717, is reversed by the Hepburn act, which restores in its integrity the common-law rule that a common carrier cannot contract to be relieved in whole or in part from liability for damages caused by its negligence. The Pennsylvania court, in Grogan v. Express Co., 114 Pa. 523, 7 Atl. 134, 60 Am. Rep. 360, even prior to the Hepburn act, refused to follow the decision in Hart v. Railroad, supra, and many other courts of repute did the same; and it may be said with some confidence that the best legal thought of the country sustained them. The effect of the Hart Case, supra, if unreversed, would have been to place the business interests of the country in the power of the common carriers, for no shipper can contract on equal terms with them. I agree with Mr. Justice ALLEN that Jones v. Railroad, 148 N. C. 580, 62 S. E. 701, and Winslow v. Rail- road, 151 N. C. 250, 65 S. E. 965, should be overruled.

ALLEN, J. (concurring). I think the authorities establish the following principles, which are based on a sound public policy and on reason: (1) That a common carrier is an insurer, and without proof of negligence is liable for all injuries to goods being transported, unless the injury is caused by the act of God, the public enemy, the negligence of the shipper, or by the inherent qualities of the goods. (2) That the natural propensities of live stock are included in the term "inherent qualities." (3) That a private carrier for hire is not an insurer, but is a bailee, and is only liable for negligence. (4) That the common carrier may limit its common-law liability as an insurer by contract, which is reasonable and based on a valuable consideration, and when so limited it becomes a bailee for hire, and liable for negligence. (5) That it cannot limit its liability for negligence. The cases in our reports uniformly hold this doctrine, except Winslow v. Railroad, 151 N. C. 250, 65 S. E. 965, which follows Jones v. Railroad, 148 N. C. 580, 62 S. E. 701.

I do not think the Jones Case was correctly decided, and believe it is wise to overrule it and the Winslow Case. The learned judge who wrote the opinion in the Jones Case, cites, in support of the decision, four North Carolina cases: Selby v. Railroad, 113 N. C. 588, 18 S. E. 88, 37 Am. St. Rep. 635; Mitchell v. Railroad, 124 N. C. 246, 32 S. E. 671, 44 L. R. A. 515; Gardner v. Railroad, 127 N. C. 293, 37 S. E. 328; and Everett v. Railroad, 138 N. C. 74, 50 S. E. 557, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 985; and quotes from the Gardner Case as follows: "In the Gardner Case, the law is summarized as follows: 'A common carrier can make a valid agreement, fixing the value of shipments in case of loss by its negligence, if such agreement be reasonable or based upon a valuable consideration, and it must clearly appear that such was the intention of the parties.'" I do not think these authorities sustain the decision.

In the Selby Case, the valuation clause in a bill of lading was not involved, and the only question raised was the reasonableness of a stipulation requiring the owner to give notice of injury to his stock before removal from possession of the carrier.

In the Mitchell Case, the bill of lading exempted the carrier from risks "not arising from negligence," and the single question decided was whether, under such a bill of lading, the burden was on the plaintiff to prove negligence, or that a presumption of negligence arose from proof of injury while in possession of the carrier.

In the Gardner and Everett Cases, it was expressly held that the valuation clauses in those cases were not valid, and the owners were allowed to recover the amount of their losses. The quotation from the Gardner Case was taken from a headnote, and is not, I think, supported by the opinion. It is said in that case: "It is a well-settled rule of law, practically of universal acceptance, that for reasons of public policy a common carrier is not permitted, even by express stipulation, to exempt itself from loss occasioned by its negligence."

In the Everett Case, this is quoted with approval, as is the following from Hutchinson on Carriers: "A majority of the authorities in the United States hold that it is contrary to public policy to permit the carrier to stipulate for exemption from the effects of the negligence of himself or his servants, and it is also held by a majority of the courts that a contract, limiting the liability of the carrier to a certain sum in case of loss—that is, contracts designed to secure a partial exemption from liability—while valid and conclusive where the loss is occasioned by something other than the carrier's negligence, cannot be allowed where the loss was occasioned by the negligence of himself or his servant, but that in such case the owner may recover the full value of the goods."

I do not think Judge Ashe has been excelled for accuracy and clearness by any judge who has been a member of this court, and in Capehart v. Railroad, 81 N. C. 443, 31 Am. Rep. 505, speaking of the effect of stipulations in bills of lading limiting liability, he says: "Public policy demands that the right of the owner to absolute security against the negligence of the carrier and all persons engaged in performing his duty shall not be taken away by any reservation in his receipt, or by any arrangement between them and the performing company. * * * From an examination of the authorities on this subject, we conclude that a common carrier cannot, by special notice brought home to the knowledge of the owner of the goods, much less by general notice, nor by contract even, exonerate himself from the duty to exercise ordinary care and prudence in the transportation of goods; and we deduce from the principles enunciated by them, the following propositions: (1) That a common carrier, being an insurer against all losses and damages, except those occurring from the act of God or the public enemy, may by special notice brought to the knowledge of the owner of goods delivered for transportation, or by contract, restrict his liability as an insurer, where there is no negligence on his part. (2) That he cannot, by contract even, limit his responsibility for loss or damage resulting from his want of the due exercise of ordinary care."

In Cyc. vol. 6, 391, the author says: "The attempt on the part of carriers to limit their liability as against their own negligence, or that of their servants, has been particularly persistent where the contract of transportation is with reference to live stock, but such limitations have been uniformly held ineffectual."

In this case the jury has found as a fact that the stock of the plaintiff was injured by the negligence of the defendant, under instructions to which there is no exception, and I therefore concur in the opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the damages he sustained, notwithstanding the valuation clause in the bill of lading.

ABERDEEN & A. R. CO. v. SEABOARD
AIR LINE RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 6, 1911.)

1. RAILROADS (§ 287*)—APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1066*)—HARMLESS ERROR.

A train of plaintiff railroad company, permitted to remain on the main line of defendant railroad company for 10 minutes, was run into by a train of defendant. The track was straight for a mile, affording opportunity for defendant's trainmen to discover the presence of plaintiff's train; but they ran their train at 25 miles an hour. The evidence was conflicting on the issue whether the time limit had expired at the time of the collision. Held that, if the collision occurred, during the 10 minutes, defendant was guilty of actionable negligence, authorizing a recovery, unless plaintiff was negligent in failing to get its train out of the way, in view of the facts; but the doctrine of last clear chance was inapplicable, and an instruction submitting that issue was reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 925-927; Dec. Dig. § 287; * Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 4220; Dec. Dig. § 1066.*]

2. RAILROADS (§ 287*)—COLLISIONS BETWEEN TRAINS OF DIFFERENT COMPANIES—NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

If the collision occurred after the expiration of the 10 minutes, plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. §§ 925-927; Dec. Dig. § 287.*]

3. RAILROADS (§ 287*)—COLLISIONS BETWEEN TRAINS OF DIFFERENT RAILROAD COMPANIES—NEGLIGENCE—LIABILITY.

Whether the collision occurred before or after the expiration of the time limit, defendant could not recover damages to its train, since the circumstances showed that its trainmen had ample opportunity to observe plaintiff's train in time to avoid the collision.

On issues submitted, the jury rendered the following verdict:

"(1) Was the property of the plaintiff injured by the negligence of the defendant, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Did the plaintiff by its own negligence contribute to the injury of its property, as alleged in the answer? Answer: No.

"(3) Notwithstanding the negligence of the plaintiff, could the defendant, by the exercise of ordinary care, have avoided the injury to plaintiff's property? Answer: Yes.

"(4) What damage, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover of the defendant? Answer: $8,000.

"(5) Was the defendant's property injured by the negligence of the plaintiff, as alleged and set out in the counterclaim pleaded by the defendant? Answer: No."

Walter H. Neal and Murray Allen, for appellant. R. L. Burns, Douglass, Lyon & Douglass, and Jerome & Price, for appellee.

HOKE, J. [1, 2] After full and careful consideration, the court is of opinion that the cause should again be submitted to the jury. There was evidence to the effect that on the 19th of February, 1910, a train of plaintiff company was on the main line of defendant's track at Aberdeen, N. C., with a permit to remain there for 10 minutes; the evidence tending to show that the time would expire at 8:46 p. m. It was about the schedule time for a passenger train of defendant (No. 43) to arrive at Aberdeen, and plaintiff's conductor was at first refused permission, but, on the necessity for it being urged, and No. 43 being reported late after consulting the train dispatcher at Hamlet, permission was given, and the train entered on the track as stated; the purpose being to back the train and leave three sleepers on a siding, that they might be attached to a train of defendant company going north. While standing on the track and just as it was being signaled to back for the purpose indicated, the train was run into by the passenger train of defendant company (No. 43), causing great damage to plaintiff's engine and several of the cars composing the train. The testimony showed that the track of defendant road towards the north was practically straight for a mile, affording ample opportunity for employes of defendant operating its train to observe and note the present placing of plaintiff's train, and that 43 approached the station at about 20 to 25 miles per hour. The evidence of plaintiff tended to show that the time limit of its permit had not expired at the time of the collision, and there was evidence on part of defendant tending to show that same occurred after the time limit had expired. Upon this statement, sufficient to present the case in its general aspects, we are of opinion that the cause should be tried and determined on the three issues of negligence on part of defendant, contributory negligence on part of plaintiff, and the third issue as to damages in case the answer on the first and second require that the third issue should be determined. If the collision occurred before the time limit expired, the first issue should be answered in favor of plaintiff; and, if before such time plaintiff was negligent in failing to get its train out of the way under the rules of law properly applicable, the second issue should be answered for defendant, this to be determined on the entire facts relevant to the inquiry, including the fact that it was there by permit from defendant company, and with the purpose at the time of backing its train onto a siding. If the collision occurred after the time limit expired, then, in view of all the facts in evidence, the obligation on the part of plaintiff's agents and employes to keep vigilant and continuous outlook and remove the train in time to avoid a collision was so insistent that a breach of duty in this respect would amount, as a conclusion of law, to contributory negligence, continuing to the time of impact, and no recovery by plaintiff should be allowed. In this view, there is no place for the doctrine of the last clear chance, for all the controlling facts as to defendant's liability may, and in this case should, be determined on the first and second issues. In the charge on the first issue and on the third, as to the existence of the last clear chance, and on the fifth issue, that as to the responsibility of plaintiff, the court in various ways submitted the question of whether the remaining on the track by plaintiff's train after the time limit had expired was or was not the proximate cause of the injury, and in our view, and considering the difficulty in obtaining the permit to enter on the track and the imminence of the arrival of No. 43, and the other facts relevant to the inquiry, we think this was prejudicial error which entitles defendant to a new trial.

[3] Whether the collision occurred before or after the time limit expired, the defendant may not be allowed to recover, for the entry on the track was by its permission, and on all the evidence, if the placing of plaintiff's train constituted an obstruction on the main line in the direction defendant's passenger train was moving, the attendant circumstances showed that the defendant's employes had ample opportunity to have observed this and stopped its train in time to have avoided a collision. The view presented is in accord with the general principles applicable, as shown in Exum v. Railroad, 154 N. C. 418, 70 S. E. 845; Edge v. Railroad, 153 N. C. 212, 69 S. E. 74, and other cases.

For the error indicated, we are of opinion that a new trial should be awarded.

New trial.

Habeas corpus by S. S. Watson to obtain the discharge of his son Richard Watson from the Stonewall Jackson Manual Training and Industrial School. From an order on the petition, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

This proceeding was commenced by a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, by S. S. Watson, in behalf of his minor son, Richard Watson, restrained in the Stonewall Jackson Manual Training and Industrial School since August 27, 1909, by virtue of a conviction on that date in the recorder's court of the city of Charlotte for the crime of vagrancy; said petition being also made by S. S. Watson on his own behalf to regain the custody and care of his son. The petition was addressed to Mr. Justice Walker, under date of July 27, 1911. The writ was issued addressed to Walter Thompson, superintendent of the Stonewall Jackson Manual Training and Industrial School in Cabarrus county, returnable at Charlotte, August 8, 1911. On the return thereto the hearing was held in chambers on said date at said place.

In the return to the writ the respondent justified the detention of Richard Watson by virtue of two commitments, one issued by the recorder of Charlotte, dated August 27, 1909, and set forth above under heading "Original Commitment," and another issued nunc pro tunc, dated July 25, 1911, as of August 27, 1909, and set forth above under heading "Commitment Nunc Pro Tunc, No. 1," said commitment issued by the same authority as the original. Petitioner, through his attorney, objected to the introduction or consideration by the court of "Commitment Nunc Pro Tunc, No. 1," on the ground that the recorder had no authority to amend same from memory, and that the records of the court nowhere showed that at the time of the trial said Richard Watson was under 16 years of age. Objection overruled. Petitioner excepted, which was petitioner's first exception.

Petitioner then objected to its introduction or consideration by the court, on the ground that the Commitment Nunc Pro Tunc, No. 1, was addressed to the superintendent or keeper of the Stonewall Jackson Manual Training and Industrial School, whereas the original commitment was addressed to the keeper of the common jail of Mecklenburg county, and that the recorder was without authority to make such amendment. Objection overruled. Petitioner excepted, and this was petitioner's second exception.

Petitioner then moved the court to discharge Richard Watson from the custody of the respondent, in that in neither of the commitments did it appear what the age of the petitioner's son, Richard Watson, was at the time of the commitment, nor did such appear in any other records in the case, and that therefore there was nothing in the commitments or other records from which either the respondent or the petitioner's son, Richard Watson, could ascertain when the period of confinement would come to an end, and that each and both of said commitments were therefore void. Motion overruled. Petitioner excepted, and this was petitioner's third exception.

The petitioner then offered witnesses to prove that S. S. Watson, the father of the minor, Richard Watson, was at the date of the hearing a fit and proper person to have the custody of his son, and to prove the other allegations of paragraph 5 of the petition. Respondent's attorney, in open court, thereupon stated that they did not controvert the allegations of paragraph five of the petition. Whereupon petitioner, through his attorney, moved the court to order that S. S. Watson have the care and custody of his minor son, Richard Watson, and that the respondent deliver Richard Watson to him for said purpose. Motion overruled. Petitioner, S. S. Watson, excepted. This was petitioner's fourth exception.

The petitioner then moved the court to order the discharge of the said Richard Watson from the custody of the respondent on the ground that Richard Watson had only been convicted of the crime of vagrancy, the punishment for which is fixed by law at 30 days' imprisonment, and that Richard Watson had already been confined by virtue of the conviction for the crime of vagrancy nearly two years, and that any act of the Legislature purporting to authorize his detention for a period exceeding 30 days and extending over a period of at least 5 years for the conviction of the crime of vagrancy is unconstitutional and void, in that, in attempting to so authorize, it deprives him of the rights guaranteed to him as a citizen of this state and the United States contained in sections 1, 14, and 33, article 1, of the Constitution of North Carolina, and articles 13 and 14 of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and deprives him of his constitutional and natural rights in other particulars, all of which points are set forth in paragraph 4 of the petition. Motion denied. Petitioner excepted, and this was petitioner's fifth exception.

The court then, of its own motion, called to the stand S. S. Watson, and questioned him as to the age of Richard Watson, and as to what his age was at the date of the trial of said Richard Watson for vagrancy. Petitioner through his attorney objected on the ground that it was too late, at the hearing on the return to the writ of habeas corpus, to take testimony which should have been taken at the trial in the recorder's court, and which was not, and which finding of fact was necessary to have been ascertained and incorporated in the judgment and commitment to make the restraint of the petitioner's son legal. Objection overruled. Petitioner excepted, and this was petitioner's sixth exception.

Said S. S. Watson then testified as follows: "Richard Watson, my son, as nearly as I can remember, was born about the 29th day of November, 1894." The court then, of its own motion, called D. B. Smith, who was recorder of the city of Charlotte, August 27, 1909, and who is now recorder, to the stand, and asked him whether or not he found as a fact at the trial of the said Richard Watson that he was under the age of 16 years. The recorder, Hon. D. B. Smith, testified as follows: "I took testimony at the trial and found that Richard Watson was at that time under the age of 16 years." The court then stated that the recorder might incorporate into the commitments and other records of the court the true age of Richard Watson at the time of said trial in the recorder's court, and also might correct the records in such other particulars as might be necessary. Petitioner objected on the ground that the court's power and authority on the return to the writ of habeas corpus was limited to the right to ascertain and judicially decree whether or not the petitioner's son was illegally restrained of his liberty at that time, and did not extend to taking testimony that should have been taken at the trial of the case in the recorder's court, which testimony was not taken, and did not extend to so adding to the records of the court as to make his detention, after such addition to the records, legal, where before taking such testimony after the return to the writ, and additions to the records, the restraint was illegal. Objection overruled, and this was petitioner's seventh exception.

In compliance with this action of the court, an additional commitment was issued by said recorder, and is found in the records under the head "Commitment Nunc Pro Tunc, No. 2." The court then rendered judgment as appears in the record, and the petitioner and the said Richard Watson duly excepted, and this was the petitioner's eighth exception. And thereupon the petitioner and the said Richard Watson appealed to the Supreme Court.

Commitment Nunc Pro Tunc, No. 1.

"State of North Carolina, County of Mecklenburg. Before the Recorder of the City of Charlotte. State and City of Charlotte v. Richard Watson. Commitment. To the Superintendent or Keeper of the Stonewall Jackson Manual Training and Industrial School—Greeting: Whereas, Richard Watson was, on the 27th day of August, 1909, convicted before the recorder of the city of Charlotte on the charge of vagrancy and was ordered committed to your institution by the said recorder; and whereas, doubts have arisen as to the proper form of the said commitment; and whereas, it appears to the court that the said Richard Watson is less than 16 years of age, and the court is of the opinion that it would be best for the said Richard Watson and the community that the said Richard Watson should be sentenced to your institution to keep, restrain and control him during his minority or until such time as you shall deem proper for his discharge, under such proper and humane rules and regulations as may be adopted by the governing board of your institution as provided by the statute: You are, therefore, hereby authorized and empowered to receive the said Richard Watson unto the said Stonewall Jackson Manual Training and Industrial School, there to remain until he is discharged according to law and the rules and regulations of the said institution. #### Commitment Nunc Pro Tunc, No. 2.

The following commitment was issued and filed after judgment and bears date of the return day to the writ.

"State of North Carolina, Mecklenburg County. Before D. B. Smith, Recorder of the City of Charlotte. State v. Richard Watson. The above-mentioned case coming on to be heard on the 27th day of August, 1909, before the recorder of the city of Charlotte, upon a warrant duly issued charging Richard Watson with being a vagrant, and having been heard, and it appearing to the court, and the court having found the following facts: That the said Richard Watson is under the age of 16 years, having been born on the 29th day of November, 1894, and that his father, with whom he has been residing, is being detained in the Mecklenburg county jail and is a confirmed dope fiend, and that his mother is dead and his grandmother, with whom he has been living, is an inmate of the Mecklenburg county home, and that the said Richard Watson has been loitering and sauntering about the streets of Charlotte, without any fixed place of abode and without any occupation or visible means of support. It is, therefore, adjudged and found as a fact that the said Richard Watson is a vagrant and under 16 years of age; and the said recorder of the city of Charlotte, being of the opinion that it would be best for the said Richard Watson and this community in which he has been so convicted, that he should be sentenced to the Stonewall Jackson Manual Training and Industrial School. It is also ordered and decreed that the said Richard Watson be committed to the Stonewall Jackson Manual Training and Industrial School, to the end that the trustees or other governing agencies thereof may keep, restrain and control him during his minority, or until such time as they shall deem proper for his discharge, under such proper and humane rules and regulations as may be adopted by the said trustees, in accordance with the provisions of chapters 509 and 956 of the Public Laws of 1907. This the 8th day of August, 1911, as of the 27th day of August, 1909. [Signed] D. B. Smith, Recorder of the City of Charlotte."

It was not denied that, at the time of the arrest and trial of Richard Watson, for vagrancy, his father, the petitioner, was in jail and was then an unfit person to have the custody of his child.

Wm. M. Wilson, for appellant. L. T. Hartsell and Shannonhouse & Jones, for respondent.

ALLEN, J. The principal questions considered in the able and carefully prepared brief of counsel for the petitioner are that the detention of Richard Watson is illegal, for that: The act establishing the Stonewall Jackson Training School is unconstitutional because (1) it provides for imprisonment as a punishment for crime, and in excess of that fixed by statute for vagrancy, and for such a length of time that it is cruel or unusual; (2) under it he is deprived of his liberty without due process of law; (3) that his detention, under the statute, amounts to involuntary servitude.

[1] The duty is imposed on the courts of passing on the constitutionality of an act of the Legislature when the question is presented, and this duty arises from the obligation to declare what the law is. The courts recognize the principles declared in the Constitution that it is "ordained and established" by the people of the state, and "that all political power is vested in and derived from the people," and when a statute, which is the work of legislators, who are agents of the people, is contrary to its provisions, they sustain the will of the people as expressed in the Constitution, and not the will of their agents. Respectful regard, however, for a co-ordinate department of the government, demands that the duty shall not be lightly undertaken, and that in its performance all reasonable doubts shall be resolved in favor of the legality of legislation. The principle is so declared by Chief Justice Clark in Sutton v. Phillips, 116 N. C. 504, 21 S. E. 968, in which he says: "While the courts have the power, and it is their duty, in proper cases, to declare an act of the Legislature unconstitutional, it is a well-recognized principle that the courts will not declare that this co-ordinate branch of the government has exceeded the powers vested in it unless it is plainly and clearly the case. If there is any reasonable doubt, it will be resolved in favor of the lawful exercise of their powers by the representatives of the people." And by Justice Hoke in State v. Baskerville, 141 N. C. 818, 53 S. E. 744, that: "It is well established that an act of the Legislature will never be declared unconstitutional unless it plainly and clearly appears that the General Assembly has exceeded its powers." Applying these rules of construction, can it be said that the act is unconstitutional?

[2] In determining this question, we must consider the purpose for which the act was passed, and the grounds upon which the state can rightfully exercise the power to detain minor children. It is not an unlimited and arbitrary power, and is justified only upon the idea that the child is without parental care, and that his environment is such that he may reach manhood without restraint or training and under corrupting influences, unless the state, as parens patriæ, performs the duty which devolves primarily on the parent. Outside of the humanitarian idea, which properly has its influence on courts and Legislatures, and considered solely from the materialistic view, each citizen is interested in having men and women honest and law-abiding, because this conduces to the safety of his person and property, and a system which does no more than measure the days and years, which must be paid by him who has violated law, "to satisfy justice," is a survival of the days when the only object of punishment was vengeance. Under this system, society receives no protection, except as the example deters others from the commission of crime; no hope is held out to the convict, and he is imprisoned with other criminals with the knowledge that, in all probability, at the end of his term, he will be turned loose upon society, an expert in crime. It has always been a perplexing question how far society has the right to demand a day or an hour of his life as an example, when he has been permitted to live amid surroundings that nourish and stimulate the criminal tendency. The purpose of the act before us is to meet, in some measure, the duty imposed upon society, for its own protection and for the good of the child.

[3, 4] When we turn to the Constitution, we find that the establishment of a reformatory is not only not prohibited, but that it is expressly authorized by article 11, § 4, which says: "The General Assembly may provide for the erection of a house of correction, where vagrants and persons guilty of misdemeanors shall be restrained and usefully employed." And a house of correction, "as its name indicates, is designed for the reformation of youthful criminals, those who have not yet become hardened in crime." Ex parte Moon Fook, 72 Cal. 11, 12 Pac. 803. We are also of opinion that the power would exist without this provision of the Constitution, in the absence of a prohibition in that instrument. If, then, the Legislature has the power to establish a reformatory, has it rightfully exercised this power, or has it, under the guise of reformation, made it possible to imprison, as a punishment for crime? If the latter construction is adopted, the restraint of the son of the petitioner is illegal, because the punishment for vagrancy, the charge made against the son, cannot exceed imprisonment for 30 days, under the statute now in force, and the act under which a child might be held 5 years for that offense would be violative of section 14 of the Bill of Rights, which prohibits "cruel or unusual punishment."

[5, 6] The question as to the extent to which a child's constitutional rights are impaired by a restraint upon its freedom has arisen many times with reference to statutes authorizing the commitment of dependent, incorrigible, or delinquent children to the custody of some institution, and the decisions appear to warrant the statement as a general rule that, where the investigation is into the status and needs of the child, and the institution to which he or she is committed is not of a penal character, such investigation is not one to which the constitutional guaranty of a right to trial by jury extends, nor does the restraint put upon the child amount to a deprivation of liberty within the meaning of the Declaration of Rights, nor is it a punishment for crime.

In McLean County v. Humphreys, 104 Ill. 378, it is said: "It is the unquestioned right and imperative duty of every enlightened government, in its character of parens patriæ, to protect and provide for the comfort and well-being of such of its citizens, as, by reason of infancy, defective understanding, or other misfortune or infirmity, are unable to take care of themselves. The performance of this duty is justly regarded as one of the most important of governmental functions, and all constitutional limitations must be so understood and construed as not to interfere with its proper and legitimate exercise."

And in Jarrard v. State, 116 Ind. 98, 17 N. E. 912: "We think it settled, in accordance with principle, that the Legislature has power to provide for the reformation of boys who are entering upon a career of wickedness, by prescribing measures for committing them to a reformatory institution."

In Ex parte Ah Peen, 51 Cal. 280, it was held that proceedings resulting in the committing of a minor child to an industrial school did not deprive such child of his liberty without due process of law, such proceedings not amounting to a criminal prosecution, the court saying: "The purpose in view is not punishment for offenses done, but reformation and training of the child to habits of industry, with a view to his future usefulness when he shall have been reclaimed to society, or shall have attained his majority. Having been abandoned by his parents, the state, as parens patriæ, has succeeded to his control and stands in loco parentis to him. The restraint imposed upon him by public authority is in its nature and purpose the same which, under other conditions, is habitually imposed by parents, guardians of the person, and others exercising supervision and control over the conduct of those who are, by reason of infancy, lunacy, or otherwise, incapable of properly controlling themselves."

In Reynolds v. Howe, 51 Conn. 472, it was held that a statute providing that justices of the peace may commit to the State Reform School any boy under the age of 16 who is in danger of being brought up, or who is being brought up, to lead an idle or vicious life, does not deprive such minor of his liberty without due process of law; the court saying: "But, as we have shown, the boy is not proceeded against as a criminal. Nor is confinement in the State Reform School a punishment, nor in any proper sense imprisonment. It is in the nature of a parental restraint. It is a mode of education to usefulness; compulsory, but not for that reason improper; and the restraint is a necessary incident of the compulsory education. It is all made necessary by the corrupting influences that surround and are likely to control the boy, and by the need of society for protection, and that necessity justifies the proceeding. To make the restraint and instruction of any permanent value, they must be continued for a long time. Habits are not changed in a month, not often in a year. This is specially true of bad habits. The attempt to reform viciously inclined boys would be an utter failure if limited to a few months."

In Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 640, 29 Pac. 253, the court says: "There can be no question as to the power of the Legislature to provide for the detention and education of juvenile offenders, as it has done in this act, and the provisions of the act are not obnoxious to the criticism that it prescribes unjust or unequal penalties. It is true the term of detention at the reform school may be made greater by the judgment of the court than the term of imprisonment in the county jail or in the state prison for the same offense would be, but it cannot be said that the punishment inflicted is greater than could be put upon an adult for the same offense. The object of the act is not punishment, but reformation, discipline, and education. While detained for a longer period, perhaps, than he would be if sent to the state prison or the county jail, the conditions surrounding the child are vastly different. He is given the opportunity and instruction to learn a trade and qualify himself for the duties of citizenship, so that at the end of his term he will go out prepared to take care of himself, and those dependent upon him, without the odium which attaches to an ex-convict. There is no doubt of the power of the state to make and enforce provisions for the compulsory education of all children within the state; and it is equally clear that the state may arrest the downward tendency of those who have offended against its laws, and manifested a disposition to follow a criminal career, by placing them in an institution where they will receive the care, education, and discipline necessary to prepare them for honorable citizenship. The records of the penal institutions of this state show that a large majority of their inmates are young men—many of them juveniles. The Legislature in its wisdom has endeavored to provide a place for children manifesting criminal traits, where they can be cared for without being thrown under the baneful influence of veterans in crime. We think the policy of the act a wise one, and we see no constitutional ground for declaring it invalid."

In Ex parte Crouse, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 11, which was approved in Roth v. House of Refuge, 31 Md. 334, and in Jarrard v. State, 116 Ind. 98, 17 N. E. 12, the court says: "The House of Refuge is not a prison, but a school. Where reformation, and not punishment, is the end, it may indeed be used as a prison for juvenile convicts who would else be committed to a common gaol; and in respect to these the constitutionality of the act which incorporated it stands clear of controversy. * * * The object of the charity is reformation, by training its inmates to industry; by imbuing their minds with principles of morality and religion; by furnishing them with means to earn a living, and, above all, by separating them from the corrupting influence of improper associates. To this end, may not the natural parent, when unequal to the task of education, or unworthy of it, be superseded by the parens patriæ, or common guardian of the community? It is to be remembered that the public has a paramount interest in the virtue and knowledge of its members, and that, of strict right, the business of education belongs to it. That parents are ordinarily intrusted with it is because it can seldom be put into better hands; but, where they are incompetent or corrupt, what is there to prevent the public from withdrawing their faculties, held, as they obviously are, at its sufferance? The right of parental control is a natural, but not an inalienable, one. It is not excepted by the declaration of rights out of the subjects of ordinary legislation; and it consequently remains subject to the ordinary legislative power, which, if wantonly or inconveniently used, would soon be constitutionally restricted, but the competency of which, as the government is constituted, cannot be doubted. As to abridgment of infeasible rights by confinement of the person, it is no more than what is borne, to a greater or less extent, in every school; and we know of no natural right to exemption from restraints which conduce to an infant's welfare." There are many others to the same effect. Ex parte Ferrier, 103 Ill. 372, 43 Am. Rep. 10; Refuge v. Ryan, 37 Ohio St. 203; Farnham v. Pierce, 141 Mass. 204, 6 N. E. 830, 55 Am. Rep. 452.

In some of the statutes on this subject, provision is made for the detention of the child, when the parent is unworthy, although no charge of crime is preferred, while in others the basis of the order of commitment is a verdict of guilty, and in all the principle on which the authority for legislative interference rests is that the child may be saved, and that society may be protected.

It is also usual to require notice to issue to the parent, and to give him an opportunity to be heard, and, when this is not done, the parent may have the legality of the detention of the child inquired into, upon a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. Upon the hearing of such petition, he will be required to show that he has applied to the authorities in charge of his child for his release; that he was a fit and proper person to have care of the child at the time of his commitment, and is still such. When it is remembered that, if he was an unworthy parent when his child was taken charge of by the state, he had abdicated his parental authority, it is not unreasonable to say to him that the interests of the child and of society have become paramount, and that these must be considered in passing upon his application for the custody of the child. Let us then consider the terms of the statute.

The counsel for the petitioner contends that because only persons under the age of 16, who have been convicted of a criminal offense, can be admitted to the training school, and that the judicial officer is required to sentence such person, are conclusive evidences that the institution is penal and the object punishment.

The word "convicted" is sometimes used to embrace the judgment upon a verdict of guilty, but usually it refers to the verdict itself, and it is in this sense it is used in the statute. Bugbee v. Boyce, 68 Vt. 311, 35 Atl. 330. That it does not include the judgment is made clear by the fact that after conviction the officer must "sentence."

"Sentence," in its ordinary acceptation, refers to a judgment of imprisonment; but it means more than this, and describes any judgment of a criminal court. Allen v. Delaware, 161 Pa. 550, 29 Atl. 288; Wright v. Donaldson, 158 Pa. 88, 27 Atl. 867; People v. Adams, 95 Mich. 541, 55 N. W. 461; Com. v. Lockwood, 109 Mass. 323, 12 Am. Rep. 699.

If, therefore, these words stood alone, the contention of the petitioner could be sustained; but imprisonment or a punishment for crime is not necessarily inferred from their use and, when considered in connection with other parts of the statute, it is a reasonable construction that conviction is merely an evidence that the child needs the care and nurture of the state, and that the sentence is an order of detention.

The act (chapter 116a, Pell's Revision) is entitled "Stonewall Jackson Manual Training and Industrial School," and it is "for the training and moral development of the criminally delinquent children of the state"; the superintendent is "intrusted with the authority for correcting and punishing any inmate thereof to the same extent as a parent may, under the law, impose upon his own child"; the judicial officer is not authorized to commit a child, under 16, because he has been convicted, but only in the event that, after conviction, he "shall be of the opinion that it would be best for such person, and the community in which such person may be convicted, that such person should be so sentenced"; and it is made the duty of the officers in charge of the school to see that the children committed to it are instructed "in such rudimentary branches of useful knowledge as may be suited to their various ages and capacities," to teach them useful trades and give them manual training, and also to teach "the precepts of the Holy Bible, good moral conduct, how to work, and to be industrious." These are the obligations of the benign Christian parent, who does not punish or restrain the child except for its good.

We conclude, therefore, that when the act is considered as a whole, detention under its provisions is not imprisonment as a punishment for crime, and that it is constitutional.

[7] If constitutional, the order of detention was authorized, and the courts would not discharge the child because of irregularities in the order or in the commitment.

"The writ of habeas corpus is not designed to fulfill the functions of an appeal or a writ of error. It is not intended to bring into review mere errors or irregularities, whether relating to substantive rights or to the law of procedure, committed by a court having jurisdiction over person and subject-matter." 21 Cyc. 285.

In State v. Armistead, 106 N. C. 643, 10 S. E. 873, there was an irregular mittimus, and in discussing the effect of it the court says: "The jailer, it may be, would have been authorized to refuse the prisoner until a fuller and more perfect mittimus was sent. The defendant certainly, if he chose, could have inquired into the legality of his detention in jail under it, by a writ of habeas corpus. The latter course, in this particular instance, would have availed little, however, as the judge, upon production of the justice's judgment, must have remanded the prisoner." This clearly recognizes the principle that, if one is restrained of his liberty under a judgment authorizing his detention, he will not be discharged upon a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, because the commitment or mittimus is irregular.

[8] The age of the child was a material inquiry upon the hearing, and it was proper for the court to hear evidence upon it.

It is advisable for notice to be given to the parent before an order of detention is made, when this can be done, and for the order to include a finding as to notice and of the age of the child, and that it is made after investigation and because it is for the best interests of the child and of the community in which he is convicted.

We find no error, and the judgment of Mr. Justice Walker is affirmed.

Affirmed.

1. EVIDENCE (§ 244*)—DECLARATIONS OF OFFICERS OF CORPORATIONS—ADMISSIBILITY.

Declarations of an officer of a corporation made to an employé of the corporation who had previously sustained a personal injury that he expected the employé to sue and recover large damages, which would have to be paid by insurance people, are inadmissible as hearsay, in an action by the employé against the corporation, under the rule that declarations of officers of a corporation are competent only when made in the line of official duty and in discharge thereof in a transaction for the corporation.

In an action for injuries to a servant, evidence that the master is insured in a casualty company is incompetent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rutherford County; Long, Judge.

Action by J. W. Lytton against the Marion Manufacturing Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, and new trial granted.

Ryburn & Hoey, for appellant. Solomon Gallert, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The plaintiff was a machinist in the employment of defendant, and alleges that he was injured while operating a machine lathe by some defect in the mandrel furnished him.

[1] The admission of the following evidence over the defendant's objection is assigned as error. On his redirect examination the plaintiff was asked the following question by his counsel: "Q. You testified, Mr. Lytton, in response to Mr. Ryburn's question that you were still in the employ of the Marion Manufacturing Company, notwithstanding the fact that you met with this accident and are suing them, and I wish you would tell the court and the jury how it happens that you are still in the employ of that company?" To this question he replied: "A. Well, when I came back from the hospital, Mr. D. D. Little, the president of the mill, come to me, and said, 'Mr. Lytton, I want to know how you feel about this matter;' and I said, 'Mr. Little, I feel like I am injured for life, and that the company is responsible for not furnishing me the proper material.' He said, 'Yes, Mr. Lytton; I expect you will have to sue, and you ought to have big damage,' and I said, 'Mr. Little, I want you to do something for me.' And I said: 'Mr. Little, I want you to do something for me. I think the company is due me something. If they had furnished me the proper stuff, I would not have been hurt. I would have two eyes now if they had give me the right steel in there and tools.' And he said: 'I am awfully sorry you are injured, and I can't do nothing for you myself, but don't be afraid to sue. It don't come off me. I would like to do something for you, but it's got to come off the insurance people, and it shan't have anything to do with your job. If you have to sue, go ahead. I hope you get something.'" This evidence was incompetent, and should have been excluded. It is well settled that the declarations of officers of a corporation are competent only when made in the line of official duty and while the officer is discharging it in reference to a transaction for the corporation. Younce v. Lumber Co., 155 N. C. 241, 71 S. E. 329, and cases cited; Rumbough v. Imp. Co., 112 N. C. 751, 17 S. E. 536, 34 Am. St. Rep. 528. In addition to the incompetency of Little's declarations as mere hearsay, the subject-matter of the declaration is universally held to be incompetent and disconnected with the inquiry before the court.

[2] Evidence that the defendant in an action for damages arising from an injury is insured in a casualty company is entirely foreign to the issues raised by the pleadings and is incompetent. By some courts it is held to be so dangerous as to justify another trial even when the trial judge strikes it from the record. Cosselmon v. Dunfee, 172 N. Y. 509, 65 N. E. 494; Loughlin v. Bras-sil, 187 N. Y. 128, 135, 79 N. E. 854; Horden v. Salvation Army, 124 App. Div. 674, 676, 109 N. Y. Supp. 131; Haigh v. Edelmeyer & M. H. Elevator Co., 123 App. Div. 376, 380, 107 N. Y. Appeal from Superior Court, Rutherford County; Lane, Judge.

Action by H. B. Morse and another against J. B. Freeman and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This is an action to recover possession of a tract of land, which was commenced on the 30th day of December, 1909. The defendant denies the plaintiff's title, but admits that he is in possession of a part of the land described in the complaint. Both parties claim under deeds from J. B. Freeman, the deed under which the defendant claims being senior in date and registration. The deed to the plaintiff is dated the 12th day of December, 1902, and it is admitted that it covers the land in controversy. The plaintiff offered evidence that he had used the property (a part of the Chimney Rock property) for scenic purposes since the date of his deed, and that he had kept men on it as watchmen and tollkeepers all the year. The principal contention between the parties is as to the location of the last call in the defendant's deed, "thence along the upper edge of the cliff, above Chimney Rock, in a westerly direction to the beginning"; the defendant contending that there was a line of cliffs which the call in the deed would follow, and the plaintiff that there were no cliffs, and that the last line would go straight to the beginning. If the line is run straight to the beginning, it does not cover the land in controversy, and the evidence was conflicting as to whether there was a line of cliffs. There was no evidence when the defendant entered into possession. The jury answered the issues in favor of the plaintiff, and from a judgment entered thereon defendant appealed.

McBrayer, McBrayer & McRorie, for appellants. Smith & Shipman, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. [1] The motion to nonsuit was properly overruled. As both parties claimed title under a common source, the decision of the controversy between the parties depended upon two facts: (1) Did the deed of the defendant cover the land? (2) If so, had the plaintiff held the land adversely for seven years under his deed? If the deed of the defendant did not cover the land, the plaintiff was the owner, because both claimed under Freeman, and it was admitted that the land was included in the deed of the plaintiff. If the deed of the defendant did include the dispute, the plaintiff was the owner if he had held possession adversely for seven years under his deed. Evidence was offered to sustain both contentions of the plaintiff, and therefore a judgment of nonsuit could not have been entered.

[2] During the trial, the surveyor was allowed to post up in sight of the court and jury a map made on a large scale, purporting to be a copy of the court map, and the witness was allowed to refer to said map as a matter of demonstration, after the surveyor had stated that it was a fac simile or reproduction on a large scale of the court map. The use of this map by the witness and by the attorneys in the examination of the witness was objected to by defendant's counsel.

It does not appear that any exception was entered by the defendant to the use of the map; but, if it had been done, we think no error was committed. An unofficial map may be used by a witness to illustrate his testimony, and it can make no difference that it is posted on a wall; but in this instance the map was simply an enlargement of the one made under order of the court, and there is no suggestion that it was not correct.

The defendant also excepts to the following parts of the charge, which, in our opinion, are well supported by the authorities:

[3] 1. "But if you find from the greater weight of the evidence that there are no natural boundaries, or, in other words, cliffs, or no such cliffs in no such place as are called for, and you, calling to your aid all the evidence in the case, are unable to locate the objects, and you find further that the last call in the deed is a straight line from the stake at figure 5 on the map to the beginning, you will answer the first issue, 'Yes,' since where the natural objects or boundaries have not been fixed and ascertained, then course and distance must govern the jury in fixing the line; therefore, if you locate the line by course and distance, you will find for the plaintiff."

[4] 2. "That if the jury should find for defendant on the location of his deed, shall if the jury shall find from the evidence that the plaintiffs have, claiming under their deed, been in the possession of the lap, or interference, or any part thereof, continuously, adversely notoriously, and exclusive for seven years before the suit was brought, December 30, 1909, no other person being seated on the lap, this would ripen the plaintiff's title, and he should recover."

[5] There is one other assignment of error, but it is not based on any exception appearing in the record, and therefore cannot be considered. Thompson v. Railroad, 147 N. C. 412, 61 S. E. 286.

The assignments of error are for the purpose of grouping exceptions already taken, and not to introduce new exceptions.

Upon an examination of the whole record, we find no error.

No error.

Action by Henry Johnson against the Carolina, Clinchfield & Ohio Railroad Company

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. Dig. & Am. Dig. Key No. Series & Rep'r indexes and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant railroad company appeals. Affirmed.

There was evidence tending to show that, on or about July 15, 1908, plaintiff was injured while at work as an employé of defendant company, by reason of a defective car, being then used for hauling dirt in the construction of defendant road, and that the injury was attributable to the negligence of defendant. There was evidence tending to show that there was no negligence; that plaintiff was, at the time, an employé of Propts & Co., an independent contractor; and, further, that plaintiff had executed a receipt in full discharge for the liability. The following verdict was rendered:

"(1) Was plaintiff injured by the negligence of the defendant? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Did the plaintiff by his own negligence contribute to his own injury? Answer: No.

"(3) Did the plaintiff release any cause of action he had against defendant on account of such injury? Answer: No.

"(4) What injury, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: Two hundred dollars."

Judgment on verdict for plaintiff, and defendant excepted and appealed.

Hudgins & Watson and A. Hall Johnston, for appellant. Spainhour & Mull and S. J. Ervin, for appellee.

HOKE, J. [1] It was chiefly objected to the validity of this recovery that plaintiff was, at the time, the employé of an independent contractor (Propts & Co.), and that, on the facts in evidence, there had been no breach of duty towards plaintiff on the part of the railroad company. This doctrine of independent contractor and its effect on the rights of parties have been the subject-matter of discussion in several recent decisions of the court, as in Hopper v. Ordway, 72 S. E. 839, at the present term; Denny v. Burlington, 155 N. C. 33, 70 S. E. 1085; Beal v. Fiber Co., 154 N. C. 147, 69 S. E. 834; Thomas v. Lumber Co., 153 N. C. 351, 69 S. E. 275, 32 L. R. A. (N. Fiber Co.*, the following, as general definitions, are referred to with approval: "An independent contractor has also been defined to be one who, exercising an independent employment, contracts to do a piece of work according to his own methods, and without being subject to the control of his employer, except as to the result of his work." Lurton, J., in Powell v. Construction Co., 88 Tenn. 692, 13 S. W. 691, 17 Am. St. Rep. 925, and from Smith v. Simmons, 103 Pa. 32, 49 Am. Rep.

113: "Where one who contracts to perform a lawful service for another is independent of his employer in all that pertains to the execution of the work, and is subordinate only in effecting a result in accordance with the employer's design, he is an independent contractor, and in such case the contractor alone, and not the employer, is liable for damages caused by the contractor's negligence in the execution of the work."

[2] Hopper v. Ordway, at the present term, and Denny v. Burlington support the proposition that, when a contractor has undertaken to do a piece of work according to plans and specifications furnished, and within the meaning of the definitions referred to, this relationship of independent contractor is not affected or changed, because the right is reserved for the engineer, architect, or other agent of the owner or proprietor to supervise the work to the extent of seeing that the same is done pursuant to the terms of the contract. The position is carefully stated in Denny's Case, as follows: "When the relation of independent contractor has been established, and the work is to be done according to plans and specifications furnished, the mere fact that a supervisor of the contractee is present for the purpose of seeing that the work is being done according to the contract, at the time the tort complained of is committed, does not render the contractee liable therefor." And Hopper's Case, supra, is in full approval of this statement. Again, in Beal's Case, citation is made from Thompson on Negligence, as follows: "If the proprietor retains for himself or for his agent [e. g., architect and superintendent] a general control over the work, not only with reference to results, but also with reference to methods of procedure, then the contractor is deemed the mere agent or servant of the proprietor, and the rule of respondent superior operates to make the proprietor liable for his wrongful acts or those of his servants, whether the proprietor directly interfered with the work and authorized and commanded the doing of such acts, or not. It is not necessary, in such a case, that the employer should actually guide and control the contractor. It is enough that the contract vests him with the right of guidance and control."

[3] On the facts of this case, and on the various contracts presented for consideration, the rights of supervision and control reserved to the engineer of the railroad company are so extensive and all-pervading that we incline to the opinion that these operators may not maintain the position of independent contractors, but are themselves only representatives and agents of the company, for whose acts the company is, in the main, responsible. It is not necessary to decide the question, however, as the jury, under a correct charge, have found as a fact that the plaintiff's immediate employer, at the time of the injury and in reference thereto, was not acting bona fide under the terms of the contracts, but was, in fact, only the agent of the company in the work that plaintiff was engaged in doing. The position was recognized in Young v. Lumber Co., supra, and, in our opinion, there was evidence in the present case permitting its consideration. There is no error, and the judgment below is affirmed.

No error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Daniels, Judge.

Action by Joseph L. May and wife against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

King & Kimball, for appellant. R. C. Strudwick and F. P. Hobgood, Jr., for appellees.

WALKER, J. This action was brought to recover damages for a trespass on land. The plaintiffs, husband and wife, alleged that the servants of the defendant entered upon the land of John May, where they were living, for the purpose of removing telegraph poles, and while so engaged in their employer's business unlawfully and wrongfully violated the rights of the plaintiffs, as occupants of the land, by entering their home, and accompanied their act of trespass by menaces of violence and the use of profane and vulgar words, and by other conduct and acts, which were unprovoked and nothing less than inexcusable, if not wanton. The defendants justify upon the ground that they had the right to enter in order to remove certain telegraph poles within the right of way of the North Carolina Railroad Company, or its lessee, the Southern Railway Company, and that John May, the owner of the land, licensed them to enter, and that, if they did not enter lawfully by his permission, they had the lawful right to enter and remove the poles by reason of the permission of the railway company to the telegraph company to do so; the locus in quo being within the right of way of the railway company.

We will assume, for the sake of the discussion, that the defendant by its servants entered lawfully upon the land, and yet this did not excuse them for what was done after their entry was made. The servants of the defendant were about their master's business when they committed the act of trespass, and they apparently did it for the purpose of advancing his interests, while doing the work assigned to them by him, in the prosecution of that work, and within the scope of their authority. There were many exceptions taken to matters of evidence, and others were addressed to collateral questions, and all of them subsidiary to the main point. (1) Was the defendant, by its servants, guilty of a trespass upon the plaintiff's premises? (2) If so, were the plaintiffs entitled to recover punitive damages in addition to those which are compensatory.

[1] The defendant's lawful right of entry upon the land did not authorize it, or its servants, to do so in a violent and insulting manner, regardless of the rights of others. We do not think that we venture anything in asserting this to be a general statement of the law. There was evidence in the case to the following effect: That the servants of the defendant during the day in question, and while on the premises of John May, engaged in the work already described, indulged in loud, profane, and boisterous language, and sang lewd and vulgar songs, to the terror of the feme plaintiff and others; that they yelled at the feme plaintiff and others in the house; that they invaded the house, and at one time seized a guitar which was there, and played on it, and sang ribald songs; that Stern, defendant's principal foreman in charge of said crews, went to the well near by, and, facing the open door of the feme plaintiff's bedroom, yelled at her and sang lewd and vulgar songs in her immediate presence and hearing; and that the noise and tumult, the profanity and vulgar songs of defendant's servants throughout the day, and while engaged in moving the poles in question were so great, loud, and boisterous as to be heard by many people in the neighborhood; that in the morning, standing on the railroad tracks, Jno. L. May, one of the plaintiffs, told Stern and May, the two foremen of defendant in charge of said crews, of the bad and precarious health of his wife, and that she was in the house, and asked them not to go upon the property of his father; that Stern replied that he had orders from the defendant to set the poles on John May's land, and that he would set them there regardless of witness' or any other man's wife, and that he did not "give a damn." There was further evidence as to the injury suffered by the feme plaintiff, resulting in a state of unconsciousness followed by great suffering and permanently impaired health, and as to the damage suffered by the male plaintiff in consequence of the defendant's wrong. The defendants entered at first lawfully, but afterwards abused their right of entry while in the prosecution of their work by acts and conduct which were plainly in violation of the rights of the plaintiffs, who were then in the lawful and peaceable possession of the premises. Conduct more reprehensible, under the circumstances, could not well be imagined. The feme plaintiff was in a delicate condition, and, in consequence of the violent and insulting manner in which the defendants invaded her home and even her private apartments, her health was greatly impaired. Defendant answers that its servants did not know of her physical condition, but this is no excuse. Their tortious acts were the immediate, natural, and proximate cause of her injuries. So far as the liability of the defendant for this wrong is concerned, it is not necessary that it should have contemplated the particular injury which the wrongful act produced, but it is liable if the wrong was of such a character as to be injurious in its natural and proximate consequences. It can make no difference in the view of the law whether it hurts one part or another of the person who is injured. The law will not excuse a defendant if in committing the wrongful act he aimed at the foot to wound, and killed by striking the head or the heart. His wrong is the same in law, and is actionable, though he may have missed his mark. He is in such a case presumed to have intended the natural and probable consequences of his act. Drum v. Miller, 135 N. C. 204, 47 S. E. 421, 65 L. R. A. 890, 102 Am. St. Rep. 528. In that case, distinguishing negligent from willful torts, we said: "In the case of willful or intentional wrongdoing, we have an act intended to do harm, and harm done by it, and the inference of liability from such an act may seem a plain matter, under the general rule of liability, and, assuming that no just cause of exception to it is present, 'it is clear law that the wrongdoer is liable to make good the consequences, and it is likewise obvious to common sense that he ought to be. He went about to do harm, and, having begun an act of wrongful mischief, he cannot stop the risk at his pleasure nor confine it to the precise objects he laid out, but must abide it fully and to the end.' The principle is commonly expressed in the maxim that a man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts." It will be seen from this quotation that in the case of a willful tort the wrongdoer is responsible for the direct and proximate consequences of his act, without regard to his intention to produce the particular injury. But the matter is made clearer, and the ruling in that case more pertinent to the question now under consideration, by what the court said later, at page 214 of 135 N. C., page 424 of 47 S. E. (65 L. R. A. 890, 102 Am. St. Rep. 528): "It may be stated as a general rule that when one does an illegal or mischievous act, which is likely to prove injurious to another, or when he does a legal act in such a careless and improper manner that he should foresee, in the light of attending circumstances, that injury to a third person may naturally and probably ensue, he is answerable in some form of action for all of the consequences which may directly and naturally result from his conduct. It is not necessary that he should actually intend to do the particular injury which follows, nor, indeed, any injury at all, because the law in such cases will presume that he intended to do that which is the natural result of his conduct in the one case, and in the other he will be presumed to intend that which, in the exercise of the care of a prudent man, he should see will be followed by injurious consequences."

But it seems to us that this case in all of its essential features is like that of Jackson v. Telegraph Co., 139 N. C. 347, 51 S. E. 1015, 70 L. R. A. 738, and must be governed by it. The language there used is so directly applicable to the facts disclosed by the evidence in this case that we cannot more clearly state the law, which we think should determine the question now presented, than by repeating what we then said: "The jury have found that the defendant by its servant caused the plaintiff to be unlawfully arrested for the purpose of putting him out of the way, so that its agents and servants might erect telephone and telegraph poles on his land. If this is not an act done in the course of the employment and in furtherance of the master's business for his benefit and advantage, it would be hard to conceive of one that would come under that class. The case is in principle like that of Railroad v. Harris, 122 U. S. 597, 7 Sup. Ct. 1286, 30 L. Ed. 1146, which has, at least twice, been approved by this court. Hussey v. Railroad, 98 N. C. 34, 3 S. E. 923, 2 Am. St. Rep. 312; Redditt v. Mfg. Co., 124 N. C. 100, 32 S. E. 392. In Harris's Case the defendants by their servants committed, it is true, a direct and violent trespass upon lands in order to carry on their master's work, and in doing so shot and injured the plaintiff; but is there any difference in law between the two cases? It is not the quality of the act that determines the master's liability, but the fact that it is done by his implied direction; that is, within the scope of the servant's authority, in the course of his employment and in furtherance of his master's interests. Daniel v. Railroad, supra [136 N. C. 517, 48 S. E. 816, 67 L. R. A. 455]; Daniel v. Railroad, 117 N. C. 592, 23 S. E. 327; Kelly v. Traction Co., 133 N. C. 418, 45 S. E. 826; Lovick v. Railroad, 129 N. C. 427, 40 S. E. 191; Williams v. Gill, 122 N. C. 967, 29 S. E. 879; Pierce v. Railroad [124 N. C. 83, 32 S. E. 399, 44 L. R. A. 316]; and Cook v. Railroad, supra [128 N. C. 333, 38 S. E. 925]. It was in this case a question for the jury under proper instructions from the court, whether McManus in arresting the plaintiff was performing his master's business, or was engaged in some pursuit of his own. Hussey v. Railroad [98 N. C. 34, 3 S. E. 923, 2 Am. St. Rep. 312], and Daniel v. Railroad, supra; Tiffany on Agency, 271. The court charged fully and correctly in respect to this matter." And so in the case at bar the court instructed the jury fully upon the facts and the law, in a clear and able charge, which surely could have left no doubt in the minds of the jurors as to what the rights of the parties were under the law and upon the facts as they might find them to be.

[3] The fact that the defendant's servants did not commit an assault or a battery upon the plaintiffs cannot change the result. They unlawfully trespassed upon their property, and, if their other acts did not, by themselves, constitute an actionable wrong, the jury could at least consider them in aggravation of damages. We held in Kimberly v. Howland, 143 N. C. 398, 55 S. E. 778, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 545, that the general principles of the law of torts support a right of action for physical injuries resulting from either a willful or a negligent act, none the less strongly because the physical injury consists of a wrecked nervous system instead of wounded or lacerated limbs, as those of the former class are frequently much more painful and enduring than those of the latter. Approving what is said in the text-books, Justice Brown, who wrote an able and learned opinion for the court in that leading case, thus summarized the result of our investigations: "A recent writer on the subject trenchantly says: 'To deny recovery against one whose willful or negligent tort has so terribly frightened a person as to cause his death, or leave him through life a suffering and helpless wreck, and permit a recovery for exactly the same wrong which results, instead, in a broken finger, is a travesty upon justice. The reasoning which can lead to such a result must be cogent, indeed, if it should be entitled to respect.' Case and Comment, August, 1906. A text-writer of repute says: 'The preferable rule on this subject is, in our opinion, that if a nervous shock is a natural and proximate consequence of a negligent act, and physical injuries result directly from mental disturbance, there should be a recovery for the anguish of mind and the consequent physical loss, irrespective of contam-poraneous bodily hurt.' Watson on Damages for Personal Injuries, § 405." This is a sufficient answer to the contention that there must have been some direct physical injury to the plaintiffs, in order to render the acts of the defendant's servants tortious, in a legal sense, and consequently actionable.

[4] The Howland Case also answers another position of the defendant, that the husband of the feme plaintiff cannot recover for the wrong done to his wife, and in these words: "It is contended that the husband has sustained no injury, and as to him the motion to nonsuit should have been allowed. It seems to be well settled that where the injury to the wife is such that the husband receives a separate loss or damage, as where he is put to expense or is deprived of the society or services of his wife, he is entitled to recover therefor, and he may sue in his own name. 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 861, and cases cited. In this case there is no evidence of an outlay of money in medical bills and other actual expenses, and the court so charged the jury, and directed them to allow nothing on that account. His honor correctly instructed the jury to allow nothing because of any mental suffering upon the part of the husband. There was, however, evidence as to the loss of the services of the wife, and that the injury inflicted was of such a character as to deprive the husband of her society, services, aid, and comfort. The court further charged that, if the injuries are permanent, the husband could also recover such sum as will be a fair compensation for the future diminished capacity to labor on the part of the wife. This instruction we think is correct and supported by authority. 6 Thompson's Negligence, §§ 7341, 7342. It is impossible to lay down a rule by which the value of her services and the loss of the wife's society can be exactly measured in dollars and cents. All the judge can do is to direct the jury to allow such reasonable sum as will fairly compensate the husband therefor under all the circumstances of the case." It may be added that in this case defendant's servants trespassed upon the husband's property—his home. He had possession, and they entered after being forbidden to do so.

[5] As to punitive damages, the rule is well settled that when the wrong is willful or wanton or done maliciously, or accompanied by acts of oppression, insult, or brutality, exemplary damages may be added by the jury to punish the offender, as an example to others and to vindicate justice. Hale on Damages, p. 200. The subject is fully considered in the recent case of Saunders v. Gilbert (at this term) 156 N. C. —, 72 S. E. 610; the facts being substantially like those in this case, and we refer to that decision without further discussion of this exception as to the correctness of the court's ruling that the jury could in their discretion allow punitive damages.

We have considered the case as if the defendant's right to enter upon the land as part of the right of way of the North Carolina Railroad Company by its permission was clear, though the concession was made only for the sake of argument. It had no right, by itself or its servants, to abuse the license or privilege by grossly violating the rights of others in peaceable possession of the land, and especially it may be said the defendant by its servants did not have the lawful right to enter the home of plaintiffs in the manner adopted by them. The other exceptions require no special consideration. No error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Rowan County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by T. C. Earnhardt and another against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

This is an action to recover the possession of a lot of land and damages for the wrongful entry thereon by the defendants. The entry was made by the Southern Railway Company for the purpose of laying a double track. It is not denied by the defendants that the plaintiffs are the owners of the land subject to the easement and right of way of the North Carolina Railroad. The land was originally a part of the Robards land, and the house now occupied by the plaintiffs has been built within six or seven years. The plaintiff offered evidence tending to prove that at the time of the entry a dwelling house was situate on said land about 55 feet from the center of the main line of the North Carolina Railroad Company; that in front of the house there is a yard, and between the yard and the railroad a roadway; and that by the entry of the Southern Railway to build the double track there is an interference with a part of said roadway, leaving a walkway outside of the plaintiffs' yard; also, that plaintiffs and those under whom they claim have been in possession of the land for about 70 years. There was also evidence that in 1850 or 1851 there was a house on the Robards land, but the witnesses do not state where the house was located, nor is there any evidence that the double track, as now constructed, would interfere with any dwelling or yard in existence in 1850 or 1851. The evidence as to the house tends to prove that a blacksmith shop or some temporary structure was on the land, and not a permanent house. The defendant offered evidence tending to prove that on account of increased business a double track was necessary, and that the Southern Railway had so determined, and that in its construction the right of way in use did not approach the dwelling house of the plaintiffs nearer than 25 feet, and that the yard was not interfered with; also, that there was no house within 100 feet of the main line in 1850 or 1851. The North Carolina Railroad was completed about 1854.

Section 27 of its charter provides for the condemnation of a right of way, and at the end of said section there is the following proviso: "Provided further, that the right of condemnation herein granted shall not authorize the said company to invade the dwelling house, yard, garden or burial ground of any individual without his consent." Section 29 of said charter is as follows: "Sec. 29. That in the absence of any contract or contracts with said company, in relation to lands through which the said road or its branches may pass, signed by the owner thereof or his agent, or any claimant or person in possession thereof, which may be confirmed by the owner thereof, it shall be presumed that the land upon which the said road or any of its branches may be constructed, together with the space of one hundred feet on each side of the center of the said road, has been granted to the said company by the owner or owners thereof, and the said company shall have good right and title thereto, and shall have, hold and enjoy the same as long as the same be used for the purposes of said road, and no longer, unless the person or persons owning the said land at the time that part of the said road was finished, or those claiming under him, her or them, shall apply for an assessment of value of said lands, as hereinbefore directed, within two years next after that part of the said road which may be on said lands was finished; and in case the said owner or owners, or those claiming under him, her or them, shall not apply within two years after the said part was finished, he, she or they shall be forever barred from recovering said land or having any assessment or compensation thereof: Provided, nothing herein contained shall forfeit the rights of femes covert or infants until two years after the removal of their respective disabilities." No question is raised as to the proviso in section 29. On the 16th day of August, 1895, the North Carolina Railroad Company leased to the Southern Railroad Company, for a term of 99 years, its entire railroad, with all its franchises, rights of transportation, works and property, and said lease is now in force.

At the conclusion of the plaintiffs' evidence, there was a motion to nonsuit, which was overruled, and, after the introduction of evidence by the defendant, the case was submitted to the jury, and pending its consideration his honor granted the motion to nonsuit, and the plaintiffs excepted and appealed.

The plaintiffs' counsel contends in his brief:

(1) That there is evidence that a dwelling house was situate on the land in controversy at the time of the construction of the North Carolina Railway, and therefore that said company could not acquire a right of way which would interfere with the house or yard.

(2) That, if the North Carolina Railroad Company did not acquire a right of way, the Southern Railway Company has none, as it derives its powers and rights under its lease from the North Carolina Railroad Company.

(3) That, if the North Carolina Railroad Company has a right of way, it is only to the extent that may be necessary to transact the business of the company, and does not include such as may be needed by the business of the Southern Railway Company, much of which is the transportation of interstate passengers and freight.

(4) That laying the double track is an additional burden on the property of the plaintiffs, for which they are entitled to recover damages.

Geo. W. Garland, for appellants. Linn & Linn, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. [1-3] The first question to be settled is whether the North Carolina Railroad Company has acquired a right of way 100 feet wide on each side of its main track over the land in controversy, because, if it has not done so, the Southern Railway Company, which derives its powers under a lease from the North Carolina Company, has no such right of way. It must be remembered, in the consideration of this question, that there is no evidence that the double track, as now laid, invades any house or yard as it existed in 1850 to 1851, nor that it invades the dwelling or yard of the plaintiff. Section 27 of the charter of the North Carolina Company relates wholly to the acquisition of a right of way by condemnation proceedings, and, of course, a right of way could be acquired by deed or contract from the owners. By section 29 it is intended to provide for cases where there has been no condemnation proceeding, and evidence of the consent of the owner has been lost or cannot be produced, and it says that, in the absence of contract, there arises a presumption of a grant from the owner for the land on which the road is located, together with a space of 100 feet on each side of the center of the track, and, if the owner fails to claim compensation for such right of way within two years after the road is finished over his land, he is barred.

Provisions like these cannot be construed in the light of conditions as they exist today, but as they were when the charters were granted. As was well said by Justice Connor in Railroad v. Olive, 142 N. C. 273, 55 S. E. 268: "The point of view from which charters for railroads were drawn in this state 50 years ago must not be lost sight of in construing them in the light of present conditions. If, to induce the investment of capital in the construction of railroads and development of the country, large privileges were conferred, not inconsistent with the exercise of the sovereign power of the state in controlling them, we may not construe them away without doing violence to sound principle and fair dealing. When these rights of way were granted, or statutes enacted permitting their acquisition in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, it was contemplated that they should be of sufficient width to enable the company to safely operate the road and protect the adjoining lands from fire communicated by sparks emitted by the engines. Land was cheap and population sparse. The railroads, as the charters show, were to be built by the citizens of the state, the capital stock to be subscribed by large numbers of people. Legislatures were ready to make broad concessions to these domestic corporations, and, as shown by the record in this and other cases in this court, the owners of lands, because the benefits which will arise from the building of said railroads to the owners of the land over which the same may be constructed will greatly exceed the loss which may be sustained by them,' were desirous to promote the building thereof, and to that end to give them rights of way over their lands. When the road has been constructed and the benefits enjoyed, although new and unexpected conditions have arisen, the rights granted may not be withdrawn, although the long-deferred assertion of their full extent may work hardship." The effect of inaction on the part of the owner for a period of two years after the completion of the road has been considered in several cases in this court under charters similar to the one before us, and, without difference of opinion, it has been held that under such circumstances, a presumption of a grant from the owner arises for the land on which the road is located and for the right of way provided for in the charter.

In Railroad v. McCaskill, 94 N. C. 751, Chief Justice Smith, discussing this question, says: "In whomsoever the estate was vested, there being no suggestion that they were under disabilities, it was, under the statute, as soon as the road was constructed and toties quoties as it progressed towards conclusion, transferred to the corporation, of the required width of 100 feet on either side, to be paid for as directed, when no written contract has been entered into for the purchase. In such case the inaction of the owner in enforcing his demand for compensation for land taken and appropriated after the finishing of the construction of the road thereon for the space of two years thereafter raises, under the statute, a presumption of a conveyance and of satisfaction, and hence becomes a bar to an assertion by legal process, of such claim. * * * The presumption of the conveyance arises from the company's act in taking possession and building the railway, when, in the absence of a contract, the owner fails to take steps for two years after it has been completed for recovering compensation. It springs out of these concurring facts, and is independent of inferences which a jury may draw from them. If the grant issued, it would not be more effective in passing the owner's title and estate. Thus vesting, it remains in the company as long as the road is operated, of the specific breadth, unaffected by the ordinary rules in reference to repelling presumptions." This statement of the law, as modified by Railroad v. Sturgeon, 120 N. C. 225, 26 S. E. 779, has been approved in Railroad v. Olive, 142 N. C. 272, 55 S. E. 263, Parks v. Railroad, 143 N. C. 293, 55 S. E. 701, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 680, Railroad v. New Bern, 147 N. C. 168, 60 S. E. 925, Muse v. Railroad, 149 N. C. 446, 63 S. E. 102, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 453, and in other cases. Speaking of the effect of the Sturgeon Case, Justice Connor said in Barker v. Railroad, 137 N. C. 220, 49 S. E. 117: "It is there held that under similar conditions, construing the same language, the road acquired, not a title to the land, but an easement which entitles it to possession of the whole right of way only when it shall appear that it is necessary for its purposes in the conduct of its business. We do not understand that in any of the decisions of this court the doctrine of McCaskill's Case [94 N. C. 746], has been otherwise modified."

It will be noted that the presumption does not arise except in the absence of a contract, and it may be that where permanent structures have been erected by the owner of the land within 100 feet of the main line, and have been used for a long time without objection, and also in localities where it is customary to acquire rights of way by purchase, less in width than 100 feet, that the presumption would not arise, when neither party introduces any evidence that there was no contract. It is also intimated in McCaskill's Case and in Gudger v. Railroad, 106 N. C. 484, 11 S. E. 515, that there may be a recovery for permanent improvements, made without objection, and in good faith, in the event the right of way is taken for the use of the railroad. These questions are not, however, before us on this appeal. It follows, therefore, that there is a presumption that the then owner of the land granted to the North Carolina Railroad a right of way over the land in controversy, and, if so, the subsequent use of the land by the owner or by those who claim under him, as shown by the evidence in this case, could not affect the right. Rev. § 388; Railroad v. McCaskill, 94 N. C. 746; Muse v. Railroad, 149 N. C. 446, 63 S. E. 102.

[4] It is also well settled that, if the North Carolina Railroad acquired the right of way over the land, it was not required to use all of it, but could use such parts of it from time to time, as the development of its business demanded. In Thomason v. Railroad, 142 N. C. 322, 55 S. E. 206, the court so holds, and it is there said: "It would seem that upon the reason of the thing and from the nature of and the purpose for which the powers are granted, when the company acquired the right of way, in the absence of any restrictions, either in the charter or the grant, if one was made, it became invested with the power to use it, not only to the extent necessary to meet the then present demands, but such further demands as arose from the increase of its business and the proper discharge of its duty to the public. Any other construction of its charter in this respect would defeat the very purpose for which it was created—the growth and development of the resources of the country through which it was constructed. It would seriously interfere with railroads in the discharge of their duty to the public in a country the population and business of which are rapidly increasing, if because, to meet and encourage these conditions, they doubled their tracks, erected larger depots, made connections with branch lines, etc., new rights of action accrued against them in regard to the use of their right of way." And it is also held that: "As the company is held accountable for the condition of its right of way, and may be compelled to build side tracks and other structures necessary for the discharge of its duties to the public, it must have the correlative right to be the judge of the necessity and extent of such use." Railroad v. Olive, supra.

[5] If the North Carolina Company has the right of way over the land in controversy, and has the right to lay a double track thereon, the question remaining is, Can the Southern Railway Company do so? The North Carolina Company has leased to the Southern Railway Company its road, franchises, and rights of property, and this lease is valid (Hill v. Railroad, 143 N. C. 539, 55 S. E. 854, 9 L. R. A. [N. S.] 606), and in passing on this same lease Chief Justice Clark said in McCulloch v. Railroad, 146 N. C. 317, 59 S. E. 882: "The Southern Railway Company, the defendant, as lessee of the North Carolina Railroad Company, is entitled to use said lot as fully as its lessor could have done (so far as this action is concerned), including any increased burden on the lot by reason of the increased business of said North Carolina Railroad Company's part of the business of the 'Southern,' whether the said business originates along the line of the North Carolina Railroad Company, or, originating elsewhere, is shipped to any point over the line of the North Carolina Railroad." These authorities seem to answer the contentions of the plaintiffs, and to sustain fully the ruling of his honor.

No error.

CARRICK v. SOUTHERN POWER CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 6, 1911.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 750*)—TORTS—OMISSIONS OF OFFICERS AND AGENTS—INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

Governing authorities of a town cannot absolve themselves of the duty of proper care as to the condition of its streets and sidewalks; and when they authorize work to be done on them which is essentially dangerous, or which will create a nuisance, unless special care is taken, they are chargeable with a breach of duty, whether the work is being done by a licensee or by an independent contractor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 1579; Dec. Dig. § 750.*]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 317*)—INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS—ACT OF INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

Where a town has given permission to a power company to construct its line through the town, the company cannot relieve itself from the duty of properly safeguarding work that is liable to create a nuisance, even though the work is delegated to an independent contractor, and is liable for an injury caused by leaving a sidewalk in a dangerous condition, after making excavations for its improvements.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 821*)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Whether a person, injured by falling into a hole left in a sidewalk by a public service company, was guilty of contributory negligence is properly a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 821.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Davidson County; Daniels, Judge.

Action by Vangy Carrick against the Southern Power Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

On January 27, 1910, plaintiff, a fireman in a cotton mill, was going to his work along Salisbury street, in the town of Lexington, N. C., his usual route, and fell into a hole near the edge of the sidewalk and partly on the sidewalk, and was seriously injured. The hole was about 2 feet square at the top and 4 to 5 feet deep; about one-half of the opening being on the sidewalk and 3 to 5 feet from the inside fence, and the hole was left without covering, or without lights or warning of any kind, and was dug by procurement of defendant company, which was constructing its line through the town, under permission of the municipal government, evidenced by an ordinance granting defendant a license for the purpose. Defendant denied there was negligence in leaving the hole uncovered; alleged that the work was being done by an independent contractor, for whose conduct defendant was in no way responsible; and, further, that plaintiff was well aware of the existence and placing of the hole, and was guilty of contributory negligence at the time, and offered evidence in support of these positions. The jury rendered the following verdict:

"(1) Was the plaintiff injured by and through the negligence of the defendant? Answer: Yes.

"(2) Did the plaintiff contribute to his own injury by his negligence? Answer: No.

"(3) What damage, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: $1,200."

Walser & Walser and Osborne, Lucas & Cocke, for appellant. McCrary & McCrary and Phillips & Bower, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above).

[1] The governing authorities of a town may not absolve themselves of the duty of proper care and supervision as to the condition of its streets and sidewalks; and when they authorize work to be done on them which is essentially dangerous, or which will create a nuisance, unless special care and precaution is taken, they are chargeable with a breach of duty in this respect, whether the work is being done by a licensee or by an independent contractor. Bailey v. Winston, 72 S. E. 986, at present term and authorities cited, more especially Bennett v. Mt. Vernon, 124 Iowa, 537, 100 N. W. 349; Brusso v. City of Buffalo, 90 N. Y. 697. And see an instructive case on this subject, City of Baltimore v. O'Donnell, 53 Md. 110, 36 Am. Rep. 395.

[2] The same principle holds as to the obligations of licensees and independent contractors doing work of the kind suggested; that is, when the work that is being done for their benefit or by their procurement is of a kind to create a nuisance, unless special care is taken, they are charged with the duty of properly safeguarding it, and may not relieve themselves by delegating the duty to others. Bridge Company v. Steinbrock, 61 Ohio St. 215, 55 N. E. 618, reported, also, in 76 Am. St. Rep. 375; City of Anderson v. Fleming, 160 Ind. 597, 67 N. E. 443, 66 L. R. A. 119; Spence v. Schultz, 103 Cal. 208, 37 Pac. 220; Curtis v. Kiley, 153 Mass. 123, 26 N. E. 421; Village of Jefferson v. Chapman, 127 Ill. 438, 20 N. E. 33, 11 Am. St. Rep. 136; Cameron Mill Co. v. Anderson, 98 Tex. 156, 81 S. W. 232, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 198; Rock v. Construction Co., 120 Ia. 831, 45 South. 741, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 653; McCarrier v. Hollister, 15 S. D. 366, 89 N. W. 862, 91 Am. St. Rep. 695; Moll on Independent Contractors, § 75. In Rock v. Construction Co., supra, the court held as follows: "As a municipal corporation would itself be liable to a citizen for injury sustained by reason of its reducing a sidewalk to a dangerous condition, it is evident that the privilege granted by it to a public utility company of making excavations therein cannot authorize such company to leave the excavations so made unguarded, and to dispense with all precautions, whereby those who are rightfully using the sidewalk may be warned of their existence. Nor can the company in such case escape liability on the plea that an excavation, made under the authority conferred on it and for its account and benefit, has been made by an independent contractor." In Bridge Co. v. Steinbrock, supra, Marshall, J., delivering the opinion, said: "The weight of reason and authority is to the effect that where a party is under a duty to the public or third person to see that work that he is about to do or have done is carefully performed, so as to avoid injury to others, he cannot, by letting it to a contractor, avoid his liability in case it is negligently done to another's injury; and, in the citation to Moll, supra, the author, in reference to street excavations, says correctly, we think, that "digging trenches in highways or across footpaths has been considered by many, if not most, courts so dangerous as not to be assignable, so far as liability is concerned. An incorporated company undertaking to lower the grade of its road while in the receipt of tolls, and while the road is open for travelers, is bound to guard that part retained for public use, to warn travelers of danger threatened by obstructions, and by suitable devices to direct them in the proper route; of which duties it may not divest itself by shifting the responsibility to others." A contrary doctrine which seems to have prevailed in certain cases relied upon by defendant, as in Hackett v. Telegraph Co., 80 Wis. 187, 49 N. W. 822, Smith v. Simmons, 103 Pa. 32, 49 Am. Rep. 113, are expressly disapproved in some of the decisions to which we have referred, and are, we think, contrary to the great weight of authority. The position chiefly relied upon by defendant that it is relieved of responsibility, if any existed, because the work was being done by an independent contractor may not therefore be sustained. The hole, two feet square at the opening and four or five feet deep, on the edge of a sidewalk, extending partly in and leaving only a space of from three to five feet for pedestrians to pass, going to or from their work along an unlighted street, comes well within the principle stated, and defendant has been properly held responsible for the neglect established and its consequences.

[3] The evidence hardly presents the question of contributory negligence; for the only testimony we find, on the part of defendant, tending to fix knowledge of the existence of the hole on plaintiff, also tends to show that the hole was being covered over; but if it were otherwise the question was submitted under the principles recognized as sound in Russell v. Monroe, 116 N. C. 721, 21 S. E. 550, 47 Am. St. Rep. 823, and there is no error to defendant's prejudice in having referred the matter to the jury's decision. In Neal v. Marion, 126 N. C. 412, 35 S. E. 812, the claimant, with full knowledge of conditions and contrary to the general custom, had voluntarily chosen to go along an abandoned and neglected walkway, when there was a good, safe way provided on the opposite side of the road, and the case has no proper application to the facts presented here. There is no error, and the judgment on the verdict is affirmed.

No error.

DOVER v. MAYES MFG. CO.

1. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 302*)—TORTS OF SERVANT—SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT—MASTER'S LIABILITY.

Defendant's driver, who was shown to have the duties of an ordinary driver, invited a boy to ride on a lumber wagon, and while he was on the load the team ran away, and he was killed. Held, in an action for the alleged negligent killing of the boy, that defendant's driver had no implied authority to permit boys to ride on his wagon, and in so doing acted beyond the scope of his authority.

2. NEGLIGENCE (§ 22*)—"DANGEROUS INSTRUMENTALITY"—TEAM OF MULES.

A team of mules, drawing a wagon partially loaded with lumber, and driven by a negro boy 17 years old, is not a "dangerous instrumentality," so as to render the owner of the team liable for the death of a boy 10 years old, riding in the wagon at the invitation of the driver, caused by the running away of the team, irrespective of whether the invitation of the driver was within the scope of his employment.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 81, 82; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

3. NEGLIGENCE (§ 56*)—PROXIMATE CAUSE OF INJURY.

Where defendant's servant, driving a team of mules attached to a wagon partially loaded with lumber, invited plaintiff's intestate, a boy 10 years old, to ride with him in the wagon, and the boy was killed by the running away of the team, the character of the mules was not the proximate cause of plaintiff's death; the accident being the result of the unauthorized act of the driver in inviting intestate to ride.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Negligence, Cent. Dig. §§ 69, 70; Dec. Dig. § 56.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; Biggs, Judge.

Action by D. T. Dover, administrator of William Dover, deceased, against the Mayes Manufacturing Company. Judgment for defendant and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Burwell & Cansler, for appellant. A. G. Mangum and Osborne, Lucas & Cocke, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The plaintiff's intestate, a boy 10 years old, was killed by the running away of a team of mules belonging to the defendant, Mayes Manufacturing Company, and in charge of one of its servants. The evidence offered by the plaintiff shows that the team was being driven by a negro boy 17 years old, and was at the time pulling a wagon partially loaded with lumber, which was being moved for the defendant. After the lumber was loaded, the plaintiff's intestate and two other small boys climbed on the wagon. There was also on the wagon with the driver another negro boy, 18 or 19 years old. When the wagon was approaching a hill on a street in the village of Mayesworth, and just before starting up the hill, the negro driver made two of the white boys on the wagon get off, but let the Dover boy, plaintiff's intestate, remain on the wagon, and permitted him to drive the mules; and while the boy was driving the negro boy stood up behind him, and whipped the mules, so that they trotted up the hill, and he continued to whip them until they passed over the top of the hill and out of sight of the witness. Another witness for the plaintiff testified that when he saw the mules they were running down the hill on the opposite side; that one of the negro boys had the reins, and the Dover boy was sitting on the wagon in front of him; and that presently the negro boys jumped or fell from the wagon.

This witness then gives the following description of the manner in which the Dover boy was killed: "They ran on about 20 feet, and the lumber got to jogging, and he got on his feet in some way and leaned over, and the lumber carried him over, and as he went over the hind wheel struck him right across the head." There was evidence that the mules had run away several times before this accident; the runaways being attributed by the witnesses to several causes. Once the lumber was "punching" the mules, and in another instance a table, which was being placed on the wagon, fell on the mules; and one witness said he had seen them run away and did not know the cause.

Augustus Lay, a witness for the plaintiff, testified that he was manager of the defendant's store, and had charge of the teams and farms; that these mules "would run off if a man is not there sufficient to hold them, if lumber jumps up and strikes them, or if a table or box strikes them;" that the boys in the village were in the habit of riding on the wagons, and he would run them off three or four times a day.

At the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence, the court overruled defendant's motion for judgment of nonsuit, and the defendant introduced a number of witnesses, whose testimony was directly opposed to that of the plaintiff. At the conclusion of all the evidence, upon an intimation of the court that he would charge the jury that, if they believed the evidence, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, the plaintiff submitted to a judgment of nonsuit. The correctness of this ruling is the sole question presented for our determination.

[1] At the very threshold of this case, we are confronted with a state of facts which compels us to sustain the judgment of his honor, Judge Biggs. Construed in the light most favorable to the plaintiff, the evidence establishes the fact his intestate was invited by the defendant's servant to ride on the wagon. It is not alleged, nor does it appear in evidence, that the servant had express authority to invite or permit boys to ride on the defendant's wagons. It was shown that the servant's duties were those of an ordinary driver of a team of mules; and that at the time of the accident he was engaged in the performance of such duties. We must hold upon this state of facts that he had no implied authority to permit boys to ride on his wagon; and that in doing so he acted beyond the scope of his employment. As authority for this conclusion, we have only to repeat well-settled principles in the law of master and servant. "In an action for tort, in the nature of an action on the case, the master is not responsible if the wrong done by the servant is done without his authority, and not for the purpose of executing his orders or doing his work. So that, if the servant, wholly for a purpose of his own, disregarding the object for which he is employed, and not intending by his act to execute it, does an injury to another, not within the scope of his employment, the master is not liable." Howe v. Newmarch, 12 Allen (Mass.) 49; Fleischner v. Durgin, 207 Mass. 435, 93 N. E. 801, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 79. This doctrine, so well expressed by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, has found ready acceptance and frequent application by our court. Roberts v. Railroad, 143 N. C. 178, 55 S. E. 509, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 798; Sawyer v. Railroad, 142 N. C. 1, 54 S. E. 793, 115 Am. St. Rep. 716; Vassor v. Railroad, 142 N. C. 68, 54 S. E. 849, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 950; Hayes v. Railroad, 141 N. C. 195, 53 S. E. 847; Jackson v. Telephone Co., 139 N. C. 347, 51 S. E. 1015, 70 L. R. A. 738; Palmer v. Street Railway Co., 131 N. C. 250, 42 S. E. 604; Cook v. Railroad, 128 N. C. 333, 38 S. E. 925; Pierce v. Railroad, 124 N. C. 83, 32 S. E. 399, 44 L. R. A. 316; Willis v. Railroad, 120 N. C. 508, 26 S. E. 784; Waters v. Lumber Co., 115 N. C. 648, 20 S. E. 718.

The recent case of Marlowe v. Bland, 151 N. C. 140, 69 S. E. 752, presents an interesting application of this principle. In that case a farm hand was directed to cut and pile certain cornstalks and, without being directed to do so, he set fire to the pile, from which sparks were blown by the wind to defendant's woods, causing a fire and doing two or three hundred dollars of damage. Upon these facts, we sustained a judgment of nonsuit, and in the opinion of the court, written by Mr. Justice Hoke, will be found frequent quotations from the very thorough discussions of this question by Mr. Justice Walker, in Jackson v. Telephone Co., supra, and in Daniel v. Railroad, 136 N. C. 517, 48 S. E. 816, 67 L. R. A. 455. In the latter case, the learned justice says: "It is not intended to assert that a principal cannot be held responsible for the willful or malicious acts of the agent, when done within the scope of his authority, but that he is not liable for such acts, unless previously and expressly authorized or subsequently ratified, when they are done outside of the course of the agent's employment, and beyond the scope of his authority, as, when the agent steps aside from the duties assigned to him by the principal to gratify some personal animosity, to give vent to some private feeling of his own (McManus v. Crickett, 1 East, 106); and, as is forcibly stated by Lord Kenyon in the case cited, quoting in part from Lord Holt: 'No master is chargeable with the acts of his servant but when he acts in the execution of the authority given him.' Now, when a servant quits sight of the object for which he is employed, and, without having in view his master's orders, pursues that which his own malice suggests he no longer acts in pursuant of the authority given him, and his master will not be answerable for his acts."

In his learned opinion in Stewart v. Lumber Co., 146 N. C. 112, 59 S. E. 568, Mr. Justice Walker quotes this language from his opinion in the Daniel Case, and well says: "What better authority can we invoke in support of our position than the opinions of the Court of King's Bench as delivered by Lord Holt and Lord Kenyon?"

"The test of liability in all the cases," says Mr. Justice Hoke, in Sawyer v. Railroad, 141 N. C. 1, 54 S. E. 793, 115 Am. St. Rep. 716, "depends upon the question whether the injury was committed by the authority of the master, expressly conferred, or fairly implied from the nature of the employment and the duties incident to it."

This doctrine of respondeat superior, as it is now established, is a just but a hard rule. The master exercises care in the selection of his servant and retains in his service only such servants as are prudent and trustworthy; the servant, in the prosecution of the master's business, must of necessity pass beyond his sight and out of his control, and yet the law makes the master liable for the conduct of the servant. The application of this principle, without working the greatest injustice to every employer of a servant, is made possible only by the limitation, established by the courts, that when the servant does an act which is not within the scope of his employment the master is not liable. "Beyond the scope of his employment, the servant is as much a stranger to the master as any third person, and his act in that case cannot be regarded as the act of the master. The rule as it is now established by the later judicial declarations should be strictly held within its defined limits. It is a rule, capable of great abuse and much hardship, and the courts should guard against its extension or misapplication." Holler v. Ross, 68 N. J. Law, 324, 53 Atl. 472, 59 L. R. A. 943, 96 Am. St. Rep. 546.

The authorities on this question from other courts are collected and fully discussed in the opinion of Mr. Justice Connor, in Stewart v. Lumber Co., 146 N. C. 85, 59 S. E. 545. The principal opinion in that case was not in conflict with the views expressed in the dissenting opinion upon the general principle of the liability of the master for the conduct of his servant, when acting beyond the scope of his employment. The conflict arose upon the application of this principle to the willful and wanton conduct of an engineer in blowing his whistle for the purpose of frightening plaintiff's horses. We said, in the opinion of the court: "This immunity from liability for tort referred to is not generally extended to railroads, whose servants are intrusted with such dangerous instrumentalities, and have thereby such unusual and extensive means of doing mischief." Mr. Justice Walker and Mr. Justice Connor entered vigorous dissents to this exception to the general rule, and maintained that the rule should be applied to railroads, as well as to other employers, exempting them from liability for the wanton and malicious acts of their servants when beyond the scope of their employment.

We have a number of cases from other courts which directly sustain the position that the defendant's driver was not acting for his master when he permitted plaintiff's intestate to ride on the wagon. In the leading case of Bowler v. O'Connell, 162 Mass. 319, 38 N. E. 498, 27 L. R. A. 173, 44 Am. St. Rep. 359, the servant of the defendant, a boy 13 years old, was leading a colt belonging to the defendant from the stables to defendant's yard, and invited the plaintiff, a boy between 5 and 6 years of age, to ride, and the plaintiff was kicked by the colt while going forward to accept the invitation. The court, denying defendant's liability, says: "The true test of liability on the part of the defendant is this: Was the invitation given in the course of doing this work, or for the purpose of accomplishing it? Was the act done for the purpose, or as a means of doing what Frank [the servant] was employed to do? If not, then in respect to that act he was not in the course of the defendant's business. An act done by a servant while engaged in his master's work, but not done as a means or for the purpose of performing that work, is not to be deemed the work of the master. And under this rule, in view of the testimony, the defendants were not responsible for the consequences of Frank's invitation to the plaintiff to ride upon the colt." This case was followed in Driscoll v. Scanlon, 165 Mass. 348, 43 N. E. 100, 52 Am. St. Rep. 523, in which it is held: "If a driver of a cart invites an infant to drive with him, either for pleasure or to take his place in driving while he sleeps, and the infant falls from the cart and is run over by it, the act is outside the driver's authority, and his master is not liable to the infant."

"The owner of the wagon in charge of a skillful driver is not liable for the death of a child fatally injured in attempting to alight from the wagon, after having climbed thereon at the invitation of the driver, who was neither expressly or by implication authorized to invite children to get upon the wagon, and whose act in doing so was in no sense within the scope of his employment, or in furtherance of the master's business." Stone Co. v. Pugh, 115 Tenn. 688, 91 S. W. 199.

In Kiernan v. Ice Co., 74 N. J. Law, 175, 63 Atl. 998, it appeared from the testimony that the plaintiff, a boy of 15 years, was invited by the defendant's servant, engaged at the time in driving an ice wagon, to take a piece of ice from the wagon, and while he was in the act of doing so he was assaulted by the servant. In denying plaintiff's right to recover, the court says: "There is nothing to show that Lahey [the driver] had any express or implied authority from the defendant to permit any one to take ice gratuitously from the wagon. Therefore, when Lahey gave such permission, he did it on his own responsibility, and not as a servant of the defendant."

The Supreme Court of Michigan, in Schulwitz v. Lumber Co., 126 Mich. 559, 85 N. W. 1075, had occasion to apply this principle to a state of facts very similar to that presented in this case, and held that: "A master is not liable for the negligence of his servant in permitting a boy, contrary to the master's orders, to ride upon a wagon provided for the servant's use in hauling lumber; such act not being within the scope of the servant's employment." Mahler v. Scott, 129 Mich. 614, 89 N. W. 340; Corrigan v. Hunter, 139 Ky. 315, 122 S. W. 131, 130 S. W. 798; Sweedeen v. Improvement Co., 93 Ark. 397, 125 S. W. 439, 27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 124.

[2, 3] We cannot hold that a team of mules and wagon is a "dangerous instrumentality," and that the defendant should be made liable for the death of plaintiff's intestate, without regard to whether the servant was acting beyond the scope of his employment. Pollock on Torts, 480. But, if we should so hold, it would not change our decision, because the character of the mules was not the cause of the death of plaintiff's intestate. The accident was the result of the conduct of the defendant's servant, for which the defendant is not liable. Dougherty v. Railway Co., 137 Iowa, 257, 114 N. W. 902, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 590, 126 Am. St. Rep. 282.

The judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

McBRAYER v. BLANTON et al.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1911.)

EJECTMENT (§ 86*)—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden was on defendant in an action to recover land to locate a deed constituting a part of his chain of title, and to show that it covered the property in controversy.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Ejectment, Cent. Dig. §§ 238-245; Dec. Dig. § 86.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Rutherford County; Lane, Judge.

Action by T. C. McBrayer against Franklin Blanton and others. From the judgment finding in part for plaintiff, he appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

These issues were submitted to the jury:

"(1) Is the plaintiff the owner in fee, and entitled to the possession, of the land described in the complaint? Answer: No.

"(2) Are the defendants, or any of them, in possession of the land described in the complaint, or any part of it? Answer: Yes.

"(3) What damages, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover of the defendants? Answer: —."

Tillett & Guthrie and Robert S. Eaves, for appellant. McBrayer, McBrayer & McRorie, for appellees.

BROWN, J. In order to show title out of the state, plaintiff introduced grant to Thomas Whitesides, dated November 28, 1792, admitted to cover the land in controversy. Plaintiff then introduced (1) allotment to Sarah Gettys in partition proceedings of Alpha Sweezy Estate, covering land in controversy; (2) deed of Sarah Gettys and husband, Smith Gettys, to Augustus Surratt for same; (3) deed of Surratt to plaintiff for said land; (4) evidence showing adverse possession in Surratt for more than 15 years prior to 1904 and up to that year. Present possession by defendant was admitted. The defendants introduced (1) deed from Franklin Whitesides, administrator of Thomas Whitesides, to James Chitwood, dated April 19, 1796; (2) deed from James Chitwood to Jesse Chitwood; (3) will of Jesse Chitwood, dated January 8, 1856, devising the land to Sarah Blanton, subject to life estate of Sarah Chitwood; (4) deed from James Chitwood to Elijah Sweezy dated August 16, 1824, offered for purpose of estoppel. We find nothing in the record connecting plaintiff with Elijah Sweezy, or tending to prove that plaintiff claimed the land under him, or that his deed covers the land in controversy. Therefore the attempt to connect plaintiff with James Chitwood and to show that plaintiff claims under him has failed.

The plaintiffs contend that the deed introduced by the defendant from James Chitwood to Jesse Chitwood is void for insufficient description, and cannot be located. The description is as follows: Also a part of another tract of land containing 300 acres, granted to Thomas Whitesides, and by him conveyed to the said James Chitwood, and by him now conveyed to Jesse Chitwood, beginning at a post oak, corner of said tract; thence the line running east, 187 poles, to a black oak; thence south a certain distance, to a black oak on the middle of the road; thence with said road a certain distance, to a stake in Morrell's west line; thence with said line north, the line of the 300-acre survey; thence with said line a certain distance, to a stake; thence a conditional line northwest to a tree on the south side of the branch, to range with one on the north side of the said branch; thence N. 70° E., to the beginning, containing 100 acres, be the same more or less. In reference to the location of this deed the surveyor testified: "I do not think the deed could be surveyed. The first call, if you begin at the post oak on the northern line of the grant, would have to be shortened from 187 to 157 poles. This would put you at the corner at the end of this line. The next call could not be run, nor the next. What I say with reference to the location of the boundaries of this deed is simply my opinion as a surveyor, and is not based on any effort to run the deed or to locate the corners called for in it."

The burden of proof was on the defendant to locate this deed, as it constituted a link in defendant's claim of title, and to establish that it covered the locus in quo, and his honor should have so instructed the jury. Bailey's Onus Probandi, 113; Collins v. Swanson, 121 N. C. 67, 28 S. E. 65.

As this case is to be tried again, we will not discuss the deed from William Franklin Whitesides, administrator of Thomas Whitesides. It is an essential part of the defendant's claim of title, and we note that the description of the land is full, but there is no evidence of any authority upon the part of the administrator to sell the land, and no recitals whatever in the deed which would in an ancient deed be evidence of such authority.

New trial.

STATE v. CORBIN.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1911.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 110*)—REQUISITES—LANGUAGE OF STATUTE.

An indictment in the language of the statute punishing the pollution of any source of public water supply used for drinking purposes is sufficient.

2. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 121*)—BILL OF PARTICULARS.

Where an indictment in the language of the statute for polluting a public water supply does not inform accused as to what stream he is charged with polluting or the manner of pollution, he can obtain a bill of particulars under Revisal 1905, § 3244.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 316-320; Dec. Dig. § 121;* Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 1378.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 970*)—TRIAL—ARREST OF JUDGMENT.

Where an indictment, otherwise unobjectionable, fails to give sufficient specific information, and accused fails to inquire at the trial for a bill of particulars, he cannot obtain an arrest of judgment after verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 2445-2462; Dec. Dig. § 970.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Henderson County; Long, Judge.

M. N. Corbin was convicted of crime, and he appeals. Affirmed.

The defendant was convicted upon the following bill of indictment: "The jurors for the state upon their oaths do present: That M. N. Corbin, late of the county of Henderson, on the 10th day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eleven, with force and arms at and in the county aforesaid, unlawfully and willfully did defile, corrupt, or pollute a creek, the source of a public water supply used for drinking purposes in the vicinity of Tuxedo in said county, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state. Johnston, Solicitor." After conviction he moved in arrest of judgment, for that the indictment did not show what public water supply was polluted, and in what manner. The motion was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

Stanton & Rector, for appellant. Attorney General Bickett and Geo. L. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

ALLEN, J. [1] The indictment follows the words of the statute (Revisal 1905, § 3862) which is as follows: "If any person shall defile, corrupt or pollute any well, spring, drain, branch, brook or creek, or other source of public water supply used for drinking purposes, in any manner, or deposit the body of any dead animal on the watershed of any such water supply, or allow the same to remain thereon, unless the same is buried with at least two feet cover, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined and imprisoned in the discretion of the court." And it has been held repeatedly that it is sufficient for the indictment to follow the language of the statute. State v. Stanton, 23 N. C. 430; State v. Roberson, 136 N. C. 587, 48 S. E. 595; State v. Harrison, 145 N. C. 408, 59 S. E. 867; State v. Leeper, 146 N. C. 655, 61 S. E. 585.

[2, 3] If the defendant did not know which stream he was charged with polluting, or the means alleged to have been used, he could have obtained specific information by asking for a bill of particulars under section 3244 of the Revisal. Speaking of this question in State v. Shade, 115 N. C. 757, 20 S. E. 537, Mr. Justice Avery says: "The trend of judicial decision and the tendency of legislation is towards the practical view that objections founded upon mere matter of form should not be considered by the court unless there is reason to believe that a defendant has been misled by the form of the charge, or was not apprised by its terms of the nature of the offense which he was held to answer. Where the defendant thinks that an indictment, otherwise unobjectionable in form, fails to impart information sufficiently specific as to the nature of the charge, he may before trial move the court to order that a bill of particulars be filed, and the court will not arrest the judgment after verdict where he attempts to reserve his fire until he takes first the chance of acquittal." The motion was properly overruled.

No error.

In re JENKINS' WILL

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1911.)

1. WILLS (§ 131*)—HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION—"AND."
 Though Rev. Code, c. 119, § 1, now Revisal 1905, § 3127, providing that a holographic will must be found among the valuable papers and effects of the deceased, changed the prior law by substituting "and" for "or," the word "and" should still be construed as "or," since otherwise a person owning effects of ever so much value, without any valuable papers, could not execute a holographic will; it being improbable that the Legislature intended such a radical change in the law by the alteration of a single word.
 [Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 385-394; vol. 8, p. 7575.]

2. WILLS (§ 135*)—HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS—STATUTES—"EFFECTS."

Under Revisal 1905, § 3127, providing that to be probated a holographic will must be found among the valuable papers and effects of decedent, the word "effects" is broad enough to include policies of insurance, which are both valuable papers and effects.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 346; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2320-2323.]

3. WILLS (§ 131*)—EXECUTION—FORMALITIES.

Statutes, relating to the execution of wills, are for the protection of the heirs at law and the next of kin of a decedent, and when relating to holographic wills should be strictly and reasonably construed so as to protect such persons, but at the same time so as to give effect to their purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

4. WILLS (§ 131*)—HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS—STATUTES.

Statutes, relating to the execution and formalities necessary to give effect to holographic wills, are mandatory, and not directory.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 131.*]

5. WILLS (§ 135*)—HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS—STATUTES—MOST VALUABLE PAPERS.

Revisal 1905, § 3127, providing that a holographic will shall be admitted to probate, if found among valuable papers and effects, does not require that the will should be found among the most valuable papers of a decedent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 346; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

6. WILLS (§ 288*)—HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS—VALUABLE PAPERS—PRESUMPTION.

The finding of a holographic will among the valuable papers and effects of a decedent raises the presumption that it was placed there by him, with the intent that it should operate as a will.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 662; Dec. Dig. § 288.*]

7. WILLS (§ 302*)—HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS—STATUTES.

Under Revisal 1905, § 3127, providing that a holographic will should be given effect, if found among the valuable papers and effects of decedent, proof that the instrument was placed there by the decedent is unnecessary, in the first instance, when there is no countervailing proof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 302.*]

8. WILLS (§ 135*)—HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS—"VALUABLE PAPERS."

Under Revisal 1905, § 3127, providing that a holographic will shall be given effect, if found among the valuable papers of decedent, the term "valuable papers" means such papers as are kept and are considered by the decedent worthy of being taken care of.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Cent. Dig. § 346; Dec. Dig. § 135.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, p. 7274.]

9. WILLS (§ 324*)—HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS—JURY QUESTION.

Upon a caveat to test the validity of an alleged holographic will, held, that whether the will was found in a proper place of deposit, as required by Revisal 1905, § 3127, was, under the evidence, a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Wills, Dec. Dig. § 324.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Halifax County; J. S. Adams, Judge.

Application for the probate of the will of W. T. Jenkins, contested by Dollsca Jenkins and others. From a decree sustaining the will, contestants appeal. Affirmed.

This is a caveat to a paper writing, which purports to be the last will and testament of W. T. Jenkins. Upon issues submitted to them, the jury found that the script and every part thereof is in the handwriting of the said Jenkins. It was unattested. The jury also found that the paper writing, which had been proved in common form, is the will of W. T. Jenkins.

The evidence tended to show that Jenkins died in May, 1909, and after his death a search was made for a will by Levi Browning, who married his niece, and had lived in the house with him three years; his wife having lived there practically all her life. The witness Browning testified that they searched the clothes of the deceased, and looked over the papers and his house and his room. On direct examination, he said there were no papers in the house, but on cross-examination corrected that statement, and said that there were some papers in W. T. Jenkins' bedroom, in a bureau. They did not find a will in the house, according to Browning, and proceeded to examine the papers at W. T. Jenkins' store. The witness was asked: "Q. W. T. Jenkins was a business man, was he not? A. Yes, sir; so far as I know. Q. He did have some papers that you found at the store? A. Yes, sir. Q. Valuable papers—notes and mortgages, were they not? A. I don't know that they were so valuable; didn't seem to be kept up. Of course, there were some valuable papers in them—some deeds and things."

According to the evidence of Browning and other witnesses, Capt. Jenkins was a man of good business judgment, and a great many of the people in the neighborhood would come and get him to write papers for them. The paper writing was dated April, 9, 1909, and the witness testified that W. T.

Jenkins' mind was sound at that time. Browning further testified that after N. E. Jenkins, a brother of the deceased, had qualified as administrator, which was 12 or 15 days after the death of Capt. Jenkins, he renewed the search for a will, and found the paper writing offered for probate in a table drawer in the hall of Capt. Jenkins' house. The paper was in an envelope with some insurance papers—insurance on his gin and dwelling—only one of which was then in force. After finding this paper, the witness, according to his own admission, did not tell any one connected with the estate or with Capt. Jenkins about finding this paper until it was offered for probate, and he refused to let anybody compare the handwriting. Carrie E. Browning, who will take one-half of the estate of Capt. Jenkins if this will is sustained, and who is the wife of Levi Browning, testified that it was two or three weeks after the death of Capt. Jenkins before the will was found. She describes the finding of it as follows: "Well, as there had not been one found, of course, we were on the lookout for one. We were hunting for some medicine my husband was taking. There was a person in the neighborhood who wanted some poison, and he wanted to send him some sugar of lead, and he, with the object in view of finding a will, if there was one, and to get this medicine, happened to think of this drawer, and went in there and found this paper." Mrs. Browning was asked why the table was not examined earlier. She answered: "Because we did not think of papers being in there, as it was used for this poison medicine generally, as well as other kinds." The witness also said that she had turned the drawer to the wall, to keep the children from going in where this medicine was. She further said: "I knew what was in the drawer, but it was a drawer not used much—in everyday use, I should have said." Asked, "How long, Mrs. Browning, before the death of Capt. Jenkins did you go in the drawer?" she answered, "Well it probably might have been several months since we needed an article in that drawer. Q. During his sickness, you kept his medicines in that drawer? A. No, no; did not keep them in there. We had them fresh from the doctor; kept them right on his table, and administered them from his table."

Levi Browning was recalled, and testified that he found the paper in an envelope, which was offered in evidence, and that insurance policies were also in the envelope. There was evidence that the will was found in an envelope, on which was written, in the handwriting of W. T. Jenkins, the word "Important." Much testimony was introduced by the propounders to prove that the script was in the handwriting of W. T. Jenkins, and by the caveators to show the contrary. Evidence was also offered by the caveators as to the circumstances under which the paper was found in the drawer.

N. E. Jenkins, a witness for the caveators and a brother of the deceased, testified that he examined all the papers of W. T. Jenkins, both at his house and store, but could not find a will. About 15 days after his brother's death, he qualified as administrator, and several days later, about the 18th or 19th of May, he received notice of the existence of this paper, but was not notified by Browning.

At the close of the caveators' evidence, Levi Browning was again recalled, and testified that there was another policy in the envelope that had expired. At the close of the evidence, the caveators requested the court to instruct the jury that, upon the evidence, they should answer the issue, "No," thereby finding that the paper writing exhibited by the propounders is not the last will and testament of W. T. Jenkins; and they also asked for special instructions, based upon the insufficiency of the evidence to establish the will, all of which were refused, and caveators excepted, and from the judgment against them appealed to this court.

Murray Allen, Jos. P. Pippen, and Geo. C. Green, for appellants. W. E. Daniel and R. C. Dunn, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). There was sufficient evidence in the case to prove that the script was found in the drawer with policies of insurance, some of which had expired, and that it had been placed there by W. T. Jenkins, in an envelope, upon which he had written the word "Important," and that Levi Browning, when he found it, immediately took it from the envelope and read it to his wife, and the next morning she read it. In the paper the testator devised and bequeathed his property to his nieces, Bessie M. Liles and Carrie E. Browning, wife of Levi Browning, who seems to have had the best claim upon his bounty, and appointed as his executor Hon. E. L. Travis, who had been his attorney and legal adviser.

[1, 2] The formal execution of the script was sufficiently proved before the clerk, and at the trial of the issue devisavit vel non, but the contention of the caveators is that the paper was not found "among the valuable papers and effects" of the deceased, as required by statute. Revisal, § 3127. Prior to the enactment of the Revised Code, the language of the statute (Laws 1784, c. 10, § 5) was "that such will was found among the valuable papers or effects of the deceased." We do not think the substitution of the copulative for the disjunctive conjunction was intended to make any substantial change in the law, and the word "and" should be construed as "or." Otherwise a person owning effects of ever so much value, but not having any valuable papers, or a person having valuable papers, but no valuable effects, could not execute a valid holographic will.

We cannot believe that the Legislature contemplated such a radical change in the law, and that any such result should follow the change of a single word, and it has been so held, with good reason. Hughes v. Smith, 64 N. C. 493; Winstead v. Bowman, 68 N. C. 170. In the last case, Justice Rodman said: "We do not think this substitution ('and' for 'or') was intended to make any change in the meaning of the statute. At all events, it made none to affect the present case. We only notice it to put it out of the way." Besides, the word "effects" is comprehensive in meaning, and is broad enough to include policies of insurance, which will answer both descriptions—valuable papers and effects. Brown v. Eaton, 91 N. C. 26.

[3, 4] We will now proceed to consider the other question, whether the paper was found in a proper place of deposit. "The statute of frauds in England, in relation to wills, and our act upon the same subject, have in view the same object, namely, the protection of the heirs at law, and next of kin of a decedent, from the effect of a forged or false paper as a will. For that purpose, many forms and ceremonies are required to be observed in the execution of such instruments. With regard to attested wills, the requisites of the English, and our statute, except as to the number of witnesses, are substantially the same. It is well known to the profession how strictly—we may say, sternly—the courts in both countries have demanded a compliance with these provisions of the law. The same policy must govern us when we come to decide whether the requisitions of our statute have been complied with in the execution of a paper writing, propounded as a holograph will. One alternative requisition of the statute is that it must be 'found among the valuable papers or effects' of the alleged testator." Little v. Lockman, 49 N. C. 495. The provisions of the statute are, of course, mandatory and not directory, and therefore there must be a strict compliance with them before there can be a valid execution and probate of a holograph script as a will; but this does not mean that the construction of the statute should be so rigid and binding as to defeat its clearly expressed purpose. It must be construed and enforced strictly, but at the same time reasonably.

[5] "The requirements of the statute are sufficiently complied with if the script is found among the valuable papers and effects, under such circumstances as that the deceased regarded it as an valuable paper, worthy of preservation, and desired it to take effect as his will." Hughes v. Smith, supra. This court said, in Winstead v. Bowman, 68 N. C. 170: "We are led to conclude that the phrase 'among the valuable papers and effects' cannot, necessarily and without exception, mean 'among the most valuable,' etc. If that were required, it might be difficult for one who had two or more places for keeping his valuable papers to know in which he could safely place his will. The values in cash would be liable to change more or less frequently. It might well happen that a bond or a large sum might be paid off, and the money deposited in bank or invested in real estate, so that the place which contained the most valuable papers to-day might to-morrow contain only those of comparatively insignificant value. The phrase cannot have a fixed and unvarying meaning, to be applied under all circumstances. It can only mean that the script must be found among such papers and effects as show that the deceased considered it a paper of value—one deliberately made and to be preserved, and intended to have effect as a will. This would depend greatly upon the condition, and business and habits of the deceased in respect to keeping valuable papers, and the place and circumstances under which the script was executed, viz., whether at home or on a journey, etc. It was not the intention of the Legislature to destroy or unreasonably restrict the power of making a holograph will, but simply to assure that the writing offered as a will was really and deliberately intended as such. The place in which it is found, supposing it to be found among valuable papers and effects, is but one circumstance in evidence upon that issue." Referring to this passage in Judge Rodman's opinion, the present Chief Justice said, in Re Sheppard's Will, 128 N. C. 54, 38 S. E. 27: "In Winstead v. Bowman, 68 N. C. 170, that court criticised, if it does not overrule, the narrow rule which had been laid down in Little v. Lockman, 49 N. C. 494"—citing with approval Tate v. Tate, 30 Tenn. (11 Humph.) 466, to this effect: "The intention of the statute is that it shall appear to be a will, whose existence and place of deposit were known to the testator, and that he had it in his care and protection, preserving it as his will." And also Reagan v. Stanley, 79 Tenn. (11 Lea) 316, to this effect: "In a diary was found, imbedded among other entries, a disposition of property, written and signed. This diary was found among his books of account, and the will therein written was [held to have been properly] admitted to probate." Substantially to the same effect is Harper v. Harper, 148 N. C. 453, 62 S. E. 553.

[6, 7] The fact that it is found among the writer's valuable papers and effects implies that it must have been placed there by him, or with his knowledge and consent or approval, with the intent that it should operate as his will, and not that it was deposited surreptitiously by another person, for the purpose of defeating, instead of executing, his will. If the paper is so found, it will be presumed that the deposit of it in the place was made by him, or with his assent; and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, or of suspicious circumstances, no proof of the fact is required. Pritchard on Wills, § 236; Hooper v. McQuary, 5 Cold.

(Tenn.) 136. The statute does not demand proof that the author of the paper made the deposit, but only that it was found among his valuable papers and effects, and proof of this fact is quite sufficient, at least in the first instance, and when there is no countervailing proof.

[8] "Valuable papers," within the meaning of the statute, are such papers as are kept and considered worthy of being taken care of by the particular person, having regard to his condition, business, and habits of preserving papers. They do not necessarily mean the most valuable papers of the decedent even, and are not confined to papers having a money value, or to deeds for land, obligations for the payment of money, or certificates of stock. The requirement is only intended as an indication on the part of the writer that it is his intention to preserve and perpetuate the paper as a disposition of his property, and that he regards it as valuable; consequently the sufficiency of the place of deposit to meet the requirement of the statute will depend largely upon the condition and arrangements of the testator." Pritchard on Wills, § 237; Winstead v. Bowman, 68 N. C. 170; Marr v. Marr, 2 Head (Tenn.) 808; Id., 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 385; Allen v. Jeter, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 672; Reagan v. Stanley, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 316.

[9] Applying these principles to the facts of our case, it would seem that there had been such a full compliance with the provisions of the statute as to constitute the paper writing, found in the drawer of the table, the will of the writer. He appears not to have been very careful in handling his papers. There were these places of deposit: His desk in the store, his bureau in his home, his bookcase, and the drawer of the table in the hall of his house. It would appear that of the four he regarded the drawer of the table as the most important place of deposit; for he not only placed in it his policies of insurance, but the script was found in an envelope, on which he had written the word "Important." Nothing could be more indicative of his desire that the paper should take effect as his will, and of the fact that he considered the place as one for the deposit of his valuable papers, than his words that the papers inclosed in the envelope were "important." But, aside from this fact, a policy of insurance is a valuable paper (Harper v. Harper, supra; Hooper v. McQuary, supra), within the meaning of the statute, and it was evidently so considered by him. As testified by one of the witnesses, the papers in the other places of deposit were not so kept as to show that he regarded them as of any great value; nor, under the circumstances, would it be any more likely that his will should have been found there than in the drawer of the table at his home. The court left it to the jury to say whether, under all the facts and circumstances, W. T. Jenkins had placed the paper in the drawer with the intention to preserve and take care of it as his will, telling them that, within the meaning of the law, a policy of insurance is a valuable paper. The jury were properly instructed as to how they should consider and apply the evidence in the case. We do not see why this was not a proper instruction, and as much so as similar ones which were given in the cases we have cited. Whether the table drawer was a proper place of deposit under the statute, was a question to be determined largely by the jury upon the particular facts of the case. It was certainly not error to submit the question to the jury instead of deciding it as matter of law. In re Sheppard's Will, supra. If the jury found that W. T. Jenkins placed the paper in the envelope, with the policies of insurance, and deposited them in the drawer, intending that it should be his will, the requirements of the statute were fully observed, and their verdict, declaring the paper to be his last will and testament, was warranted in law.

The case of Brogan v. Barnard, 115 Tenn. 260, 90 S. W. 858, 112 Am. St. Rep. 822, cited by appellants' counsel, is not in point. It was decided upon the ground that the stamps and stationery were not valuable papers, as they did not record anything; and, besides, they did not belong to the writer of the script, but to the United States.

We find no error in the rulings or charge of the court.

No error.

STATE v. MURPHY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1911.)

1. HOMICIDE (§ 313*)—VERDICT—DEGREE OF OFFENSE.

In view of Revisal 1905, § 3271, providing that the jury shall determine in their verdict whether the crime is murder in the first or second degree, their determination of guilt in the first degree being necessary to imposition of the death sentence, trial courts should always require juries in such cases to definitely and expressly say in their verdict of what degree of murder they convict.

2. HOMICIDE (§ 28*)—INTOXICATION AS AFFECTING DEGREE OF OFFENSE.

While voluntary drunkenness is no excuse for crime, yet drunkenness so great as to prevent a killing being "deliberate and premeditated," necessary for murder in the first degree, and embodying a specific, definite intent, will reduce the degree of the offense, unless, while the killing was during such drunkenness, the purpose to kill was deliberately formed when defendant was sober.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Homicide, Cent. Dig. §§ 45, 46, 133 Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Yancey County; Lane, Judge.

Charles Murphy was convicted of murder, and appeals. Reversed, and new trial ordered.

There was evidence tending to show that on the 21st of December, 1910, the prisoner, openly and in the presence of several witnesses, shot John Simmons, the deceased, in the back with a pistol, and killed him, and that the killing was deliberate and premeditated. There was evidence on the part of the prisoner tending to show that the killing was not deliberate, of premeditated purpose; (2) that the mind of the prisoner was at the time so affected by disease that he was incapable of committing crime; (3) that the mind of the prisoner was so affected at the time by voluntary drunkenness that he was incapable of committing murder in the first degree. The court charged the jury as to the degrees of crime embraced in the bill of indictment and on different phases of the evidence elaborately as to nonresponsibility for crime in case of insanity, and in closing, the charge said: "Take the case, give it the consideration that its importance merits, and make up your verdict. If you find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, your verdict will be 'Guilty' simply. If you find him guilty of murder in the second degree, your verdict will be 'Guilty of murder in the second degree.' If you find him guilty of manslaughter, your verdict will be 'Guilty of manslaughter.' If acquitted, you will say 'Not guilty,' and no more." The jury rendered a verdict of "Guilty," and, the same being so recorded, there was sentence of death, and the prisoner excepted and appealed, assigning for error (1) that the court failed and refused to charge, as requested, that if the mind of the prisoner at the time of the killing was so affected by drunkenness, though voluntary, as to be incapable of forming or entertaining a deliberate, premeditated purpose to take the life of the deceased, he could not be convicted of murder in the first degree; (2) that the verdict, as rendered, did not justify the court in pronouncing sentence of death.

Gardner & Gardner and Justice & Broadhurst, for appellant. T. W. Bickett, Atty. Gen., and Geo. L. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). [1] Our statute, dividing the crime of murder into two degrees, concluded with the direction that the jury before whom an offender is tried "shall determine, in their verdict, whether the crime is murder in the first or second degree." This portion of the law now appears in Revisal, § 3271, and contains peremptory requirement that, before sentence of death may be pronounced, the trial jury shall determine in their verdict that the prisoner is guilty of murder in the first degree. We have held in several cases that although a verdict, as expressed, may not be sufficiently determinative, it may become so by reference to the pleadings or the charge of the court or even to the evidence, when the same all appears of record. An instance of the verdict cured by reference to the charge of the trial judge is afforded in Richardson v. Edwards, 72 S. E. 482, at the present term. Under this principle and owing to the very definite and precise instructions of the court as to the terms of the verdict, in case the jury should find the prisoner guilty of murder in the first degree, we might not feel constrained to disturb the judgment of the court, but we deem it proper to say that, having regard for the language of the statute and the supreme importance of the issue, our trial courts should always require that juries in capital cases should definitely and expressly say of what degree of murder they convict the prisoner and the verdict should be recorded as rendered. In a case of this kind there should be no room for doubt or mistake.

[2] Without definite ruling as to the form and sufficiency of the verdict when considered in reference to the charge of the lower court, we are of opinion that the prisoner is entitled to a new trial by reason of the failure to present the view arising on the testimony and embodied in his prayers for instructions as to the effect of "voluntary drunkenness." It is very generally understood that voluntary drunkenness is no legal excuse for crime, and the position has been applied as controlling in many causes in this state and on indictments for homicide, as in State v. Wilson, 104 N. C. 868, 10 S. E. 315; State v. Potts, 100 N. C. 457, 6 S. E. 657. The principle, however, is not allowed to prevail where, in addition to the overt act, it is required that a definite, specific intent be established as an essential feature of the crime. In Clark's Criminal Law, p. 72, this limitation on the more general principle is thus succinctly stated: "Where a specific intent is essential to constitute crime, the fact of intoxication may negative its existence." Accordingly, since the statute dividing the crime of murder into two degrees and in cases where it becomes necessary, in order to convict an offender of murder in the first degree, to establish that the "killing was deliberate and premeditated," these terms contain as an essential element of the crime of murder "a purpose to kill previously formed after weighing the matter" (State v. Banks, 143 N. C. 658, 57 S. E. 174; State v. Dowden, 118 N. C. 1146, 24 S. E. 722), a mental process, embodying a specific, definite intent; and, if it is shown that an offender charged with such crime is so drunk that he is utterly unable to form or entertain this essential purpose, he should not be convicted of the higher offense. It is said in some of the cases, and the statement has our unqualified approval, that the doctrine in question should be applied with great caution. It does not exist in reference to murder in the second degree nor as to manslaughter. Wharton on Homicide (3d Ed.) p. 810. It has been excluded in well-considered decisions where the facts show that the purpose to kill was deliberately formed when sober, though it was executed when drunk, a position presented in State v. Kale, 124 N. C. 816, 32 S. E. 892, and approved and recognized in Aszman v. State, 123 Ind. 347, 24 N. E. 123, 8 L. R. A. 33, and it does not avail from the fact that an offender is at the time under the influence of intoxicants, unless, as heretofore stated, his mind is so affected that he is unable to form or entertain the specified purpose referred to. In illustration of the principles stated in People v. Vincent, 95 Cal. 425, 30 Pac. 581, it was held "that upon a prosecution for murder an instruction to the jury that evidence of drunkenness can only be considered by them for the purpose of determining the degree of crime, and for such purpose it should be received with great caution." In Commonwealth v. Cleary, 148 Pa. 27, 23 Atl. 1110, the following instructions were fully approved: "If, however, you find that the intoxication of the prisoner was so great as to render it impossible for him to form the willful, deliberate, and premeditated intent to take the life of the deceased, the law reduces the grade of the homicide from murder in the first degree to murder in the second degree. The mere intoxication of the prisoner will not excuse or palliate his offense, unless he was in such a state of intoxication as to be incapable of forming this deliberate and premeditated attempt. If he was, the grade of offense is reduced to murder in the second degree." In Wharton on Homicide (3d Ed.) p. 811, the author referring to this subject says generally: "Intoxication, though voluntary, is to be considered by the jury in a prosecution for murder in the first degree, in which a premeditated design to effect death is essential, with reference to its effect upon the ability of the accused at the time to form and entertain such a design, not because per se it either excuses or mitigates the crime, but because, in connection with other facts, an absence of malice or premeditation may appear. Drunkenness as evidence of want of premeditation or deliberation is not within the rule which excludes it as an excuse for crime. And a person who commits a crime while so drunk as to be incapable of forming a deliberate and premeditated design to kill is not guilty of murder in the first degree. The influence of intoxication upon the question of the existence of premeditation, however, depends upon its degree and its effect on the mind and passions. No inference of the absence of deliberation and premeditation arises from intoxication as a matter of law. And intoxication cannot serve as an excuse for the offender; and it should be received with great caution, even for the purpose of reducing the crime to a lower degree." Applying the principle, the court is of opinion that there was error committed in failing to present the view embodied in the prisoner's prayer for instructions, and he is entitled to have his cause tried before another jury, and it is so ordered.

HAMMETT v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

1. RAILROADS (§ 400*)—INJURIES TO PERSON ON TRACK—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

A person walking on a path by the side of a railroad track commonly used by the public for many years with the knowledge of the railroad company was struck by the tender of a switch engine going backwards. There was no light on the tender. It was very dark. He was walking about two feet from the end of the cross-ties. Held, that he was not as a matter of law guilty of contributory negligence.

2. RAILROADS (§ 362*)—INJURIES TO PERSON ON TRACK—NEGLIGENCE.

It is negligence for a railroad company to back an engine on a dark night without a light on the tender, where a path along the track has been used by the public for many years to the company's knowledge.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Railroads, Cent. Dig. § 1249; Dec. Dig. § 362.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Buncombe County; Lane, Judge.

Action by Gus Hammett against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and new trial granted.

Civil action for damages for personal injury. At conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence, his honor sustained motion to nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed.

Craig, Martin & Thomason, for appellant. Moore & Rollins and Julius C. Martin, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The following résumé of plaintiff's evidence is taken from the brief of the counsel for defendant: "The plaintiff testified that he was working at a tannery, some distance south of the public bridge across the French Broad river which leads from Asheville to West Asheville, where plaintiff lived; that the tannery was in Asheville, and on the morning of the injury he came from West Asheville to Asheville, crossed the public bridge, and walked along a street to the railroad, and then started and walked south along the railroad, between the tracks, until he was struck by the engine. He testified that there was a path along on the right-hand side of the railroad track, in which he was walking, about two feet from the end of the cross ties, and that many people walked that way; that there were several tracks there, and he was going along the way he usually went, when a switch engine struck him and dragged him from 15 to 20 feet; that the engine was going backwards, and that it was the tender that struck him; that the end that struck him had no light on it; that the train was not running fast; that it knocked him down, and the engine ran two or three feet after they shut the steam off; that the accident happened 20 minutes past 6 in the morning." The evidence further tends to prove that it was very dark and cold and a strong wind blowing; that the pathway had been used by the public for 10 years to defendant's knowledge.

[1] It is unnecessary to quote further from the evidence. It is possible that the plaintiff's injury may have resulted from his own negligence in walking too near the track or attempting to cross it without looking and listening, but this is not so apparent from the evidence that it must be inferred as matter of law.

[2] We have said repeatedly that it is negligence to back an engine or train in the dark without a light on the tender or on the forward car. It may be there was a light on the end of the tender, but plaintiff testifies there was none. Had there been a light, it might have given timely notice of the approach of the tender and engine, and thus warned and saved the plaintiff. We think the case comes within the principles laid down in Heavener v. Railroad Co., 141 N. C. 245, 53 S. E. 513; Purnell v. Railroad Co., 122 N. C. 832, 29 S. E. 953; Stanly v. Railroad Co., 120 N. C. 514, 27 S. E. 27.

HAYES et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 6, 1911.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 130*)—TIME FOR SUIT AFTER NONSUIT.

Revisal 1905, § 370, permitting a new suit within 12 months after nonsuit, does not abridge the statutes of limitation, and hence a suit for trespass to land is properly brought within three years from the date thereof, though more than one year after nonsuit on the same cause of action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Caldwell County; Long, Judge.

Consolidated action by the Caldwell Land & Lumber Company against J. C. L. Hayes and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Hayes appeals. Modified and affirmed.

The plaintiff instituted two actions against the defendant. In the complaint in the first, it alleges that it is the owner in fee of a certain tract of land; that the defendant has unlawfully entered on a part thereof, under some pretended claim of title, which is void, and has cut timber thereon to its damage, $300, and it demands that it be declared the owner of the land and recover $300 damages and costs. In the second, the allegations are in substance as those contained in the first complaint, except another entry and trespass are alleged and the damage is laid at $1,500. These actions were consolidated by consent.

The material allegations of the complaint were denied by the defendant. On the trial, the plaintiff introduced grant No. 951, from the state to G. N. Folk, dated December, 1874, calling for 640 acres of land, more or less, which grant was duly recorded in the register's office in Caldwell county, and then introduced a regular chain of title from this grant down to the plaintiff; there being no exception to plaintiff's title papers. Plaintiff also introduced evidence locating the land covered by its grant and other title papers and evidence as to the defendant's cutting timber within the boundaries of plaintiff's title, claiming that in 1906 defendant cut about 26,000 feet of timber, and in 1907 about 48,000 feet, and in 1910 and 1911 about 51,340 feet, the total of the timber so cut amounting to about 125,340 feet, and that the damage was about $700 or $800.

The defendant introduced a grant from the state to himself, dated August 30, 1905, and registered in Caldwell county, in Book 43, p. 59, said grant being for 50 acres of land, and evidence locating said grant, which location showed that it was within the boundary of plaintiff's grant and title. Defendant also introduced evidence tending to show that the amount of timber cut by him from the land within the boundary of his grant, which was within the boundaries of plaintiff's title, was less than as claimed by plaintiff, and that the damage to plaintiff, if plaintiff was entitled to recover, would not exceed from $130 to $150. Defendant further introduced in evidence the entire record in the case of the Caldwell Land & Lumber Company v. J. C. L. Hayes, consisting of the summons, prosecution bond thereon, together with the service and return thereon, the complaint and answer filed in the case, and the judgment of nonsuit taken by plaintiff in this case, the summons being dated May 22, 1906, and the judgment of nonsuit taken at January special term of the superior court of Caldwell county, 1907, and then introduced the summons for relief, the basis of this action, together with the bond attached thereto, the service and return thereon, said summons being dated November 13, 1908, and then introduced the complaint and answer in this case, showing that the causes of action were substantially the same in the several actions.

The defendant, at the conclusion of the evidence, moved the court to dismiss the plaintiff's cause of action, upon the ground that the same could not be maintained for that the plaintiff began an action on May 22, 1906, in which it filed a complaint for the same cause of action now sued upon, and that at January special term, 1907, of Caldwell superior court, said plaintiff took a voluntary nonsuit as appears from the judgment rendered in said cause; that in the complaints filed in the respective actions the same land is described and set forth and the same relief is asked; that as more than 12 months have elapsed since the nonsuit was entered in the first-mentioned action up to the time the present action was begun, to wit, about 22 months, all of which is shown by the records offered in evidence, that the present action is barred by the statute limiting the time in which a new action may be begun after a nonsuit has been entered; and that therefore the court should so hold and dismiss plaintiff's action.

The court denied the defendant's motion and held that the present action was not barred by the statute of limitations referred to, and declined to dismiss plaintiff's action, and defendant excepted. The defendant then, through his attorney, stated in open court that, under his honor's ruling declining to hold that plaintiff's action was barred and dismiss the same, defendant would not contest before the jury the first and second issues submitted, as defendant, since plaintiff had introduced its title and evidence of location of the land, would not ask the jury to find that plaintiff has not located the land as claimed, but that defendant up to the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence of location had in good faith contested such, and that the only issue defendant desired to be heard upon was that as to damage. All of the trespasses complained of occurred within three years prior to the commencement of this action.

His honor, in his charge on the issue of damage, among other things, said: "That after you determine what amount of damage the plaintiff has sustained, if you find that the plaintiff has sustained damage, by reason of the timber cutting of the defendants prior to the 23d day of February, 1907 (the date of the ratification of chapter 320, Public Laws of 1907), then you will proceed to determine what actual damages the plaintiff has sustained by the cutting of timber since that date, if you find that it has sustained any. If you shall find that the defendant has cut, felled, or removed any timber trees growing upon lands that you find to be plaintiff's, without the consent of the plaintiff and with the intent to convert the same to their own use, then you will double the actual damage which you find that plaintiff has sustained, if any, by cutting of timber since February 23, 1907, by defendant, and such sum added to the amount of actual damage sustained by plaintiff by reason of timber cutting by defendants prior to the said 23d day of February, 1907, if you find that plaintiff sustained such damage prior to that date, will be your answer to the issue." And the defendant excepted.

The jury rendered the following verdict:

(1) Is the plaintiff the owner of the lands described in the complaint? Answer: Yes.

(2) Has the defendant trespassed upon the said lands by cutting and removing timber therefrom? Answer: Yes.

(3) What damage, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover? Answer: $353.36.

51,240 feet at $4.00 double damage.....	$205 36
28,000 feet at $2.00.....	52 00
48,000 left in woods at two dollars.....	96 00
	<hr/> $353 36

Judgment was rendered thereon, adjudging that the plaintiff was the owner of the land in grant No. 951 to G. N. Folk, and that it recover $353.36 damages and costs. The defendant excepted and appealed.

M. N. Harshaw and Councill & Yount, for appellant. W. O. Newland and Mark Squires, for appellee.

ALLEN, J. [1] It is admitted that the trespasses complained of occurred within three years prior to the commencement of this action, and that the plaintiff may recover damages therefor, unless a recovery is prevented by the fact that this action was not instituted within 12 months after a judgment of nonsuit in another action between the same parties, on the same cause of action.

The defendant relies on section 370 of the Revisal, providing that a new action may be commenced within 12 months after judgment of nonsuit, and insists that it is a limitation on the right of action, but it was expressly held otherwise in Keener v. Goodson, 89 N. C. 279; the court there saying: "The statute allowing actions to be brought within a year after judgment of nonsuit was intended to extend the period of limitations, but not to abridge it."

It is true that expressions may be found in Meekins v. Railroad, 131 N. C. 1, 42 S. E. 333, and in Trull v. Railroad, 151 N. C. 547, 66 S. E. 586, which, if considered without reference to the facts, might be understood to recognize a different rule; but there is no conflict between the cases. In the Meekins and Trull Cases, the actions were brought to recover damages for the death of one alleged to have been killed negligently, and the defendant was contending that the right to bring such an action was conferred by statute; that it could only be brought within 12 months from death; that this was not a statute of limitations, but a condition affecting the cause of action itself, and therefore the section allowing a new action to be brought within 12 months after judgment of nonsuit did not apply to such action, and it was held that it applied to all actions.

There was no error in refusing to dismiss the action.

[2] The second exception is to the charge of his honor on the issue of damages.

The charge, if justified by the allegations of the complaint and the evidence, is authorized under chapter 320, Laws of 1907, which is applicable only to the counties of Caldwell, Wilkes, Watauga, Burke, McDowell, Yadkin, Cherokee, and Mitchell, and in which it is provided: "Sec. 2. That in all cases where any person, firm, or corporation, their agents or employes, shall cut, fell or remove any timber trees growing upon the lands of another without the consent of the owner thereof, with intent to convert to his own use, he, she or they so offending, shall be liable to pay to such owner double the value of such timber trees so cut down or felled, to be recovered in civil action to be brought therefor."

We do not think, however, that the complaint was framed under this statute, or that there was evidence which entitled the plaintiff to recover double damages. We do not hold that it is necessary to refer to the statute in the complaint, or that the relief demanded controls the amount of the recovery; but we cannot treat as meaningless the words "without the consent of the owner thereof, with intent to convert to his own use," upon which rests the right to recover double damages. In the absence of the statute, the plaintiff was entitled to recover actual damages for an unlawful entry and trespass, and it must have been intended that something more than this should be alleged and proven to entitle one to double damages. The language approaches closely to the definition of felonious intent in larceny, which is the intent to deprive the owner of the use, and to appropriate to the use of the taker, and was intended to cover a trespass where there is no bona fide claim of right, committed under circumstances indicating a purpose to prevent the true owner from asserting his right. The complaint alleges no more than an unlawful entry and trespass, and the evidence goes no further than the allegations of the complaint, and there was evidence that the defendant claimed under a grant from the state. This being our construction of the statute, we must hold that neither the cause of action set out in the complaint, nor the evidence introduced to support it, entitled the plaintiff to recover double damages, and that the charge was therefore erroneous.

[3] This would entitle the defendant to a new trial, if the answer to the issue was not so framed that the amount of the double damages may be eliminated, and the plaintiff's counsel requested that this be done, if it should be held that there was error in the charge. The amount is ascertained by deducting from the total of damages $353.38, one-half of the first item of $205.36, which will leave a balance of $250.68, upon which the plaintiff will be entitled to interest from the first day of May term, 1911, of the superior court of Caldwell county.

The judgment rendered will be modified in accordance with this opinion, and, as modified, is affirmed. Cost to be divided.

Modified and affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Henderson County; Long, Judge.

A. S. Blake was convicted of an offense, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Bartlett Shipp, for appellant. T. W. Bickett, Atty. Gen., and Geo. L. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the State.

CLARK, C. J. [1] Chapter 184, Public Local Laws 1911, makes it "unlawful for any one to permit his, or her, setter, or pointer, dog to run at large during the closed season for quail" in Henderson county. This statute was enacted to protect game birds and is a valid exercise of the police power of the state. Lawton v. Steel, 152 U. S. 133, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385; Geer v. Conn., 161 U. S. 519, 16 Sup. Ct. 600, 40 L. Ed. 793; State v. Gallop, 126 N. C. 979, 35 S. E. 180; Daniels v. Homer, 139 N. C. 222, 51 S. E. 992, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 997.

[2] Public local acts, passed in the exercise of the police power which apply only to certain localities, are valid. Such legislation has always been held to be within the powers of the Legislature both as to criminal and civil matters: As to local liquor prohibition (State v. Barringer, 110 N. C. 625, 14 S. E. 781); fence laws (State v. Snow, 117 N. C. 774, 23 S. E. 322); restricting sale of seed cotton (State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 714, 10 S. E. 143, 17 Am. St. Rep. 696, where the subject is fully discussed); cattle running at large (Broadfoot v. Fayetteville, 121 N. C. 418, 28 S. E. 515, 39 L. R. A. 245, 61 Am. St. Rep. 668); method of electing municipal commissioners (Harries v. Wright, 121 N. C. 172, 28 S. E. 269); method of electing county commissioners (Lyon v. Commissioners, 120 N. C. 237, 26 S. E. 929); public schools (McCormac v. Com'rs, 80 N. C. 441); dispensaries (Guy v. Com'rs, 122 N. C. 471, 29 S. E. 771); working public roads (Tate v. Com'rs, 122 N. C. 812, 30 S. E. 352); and other matters (Intendant v. Sorrell, 46 N. C. 49). Double damages for willfully cutting timber in certain counties. Land Co. v. Hayes, 72 S. E. 1078, at this term, and many other cases cited; State v. Sharp, 125 N. C. 633, 34 S. E. 264, 74 Am. St. Rep. 663; Brooks v. Tripp, 135 N. C. 159, 47 S. E. 401.

In State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 719, 10 S. E. 145, 17 Am. St. Rep. 696, the court, speaking of laws that apply only to particular localities or particular classes, quotes Cooley, Constitutional Limitations (7th Ed.) 556, as follows: "If the laws be otherwise unobjectionable, all that can be required in these cases is that they be general in their application to the class or locality to which they apply and that they are public in their character, and of their propriety and policy the Legislature must judge." Judge Cooley further says (Const. Lim. [7th Ed.] 555): "The authority that legislates for the state at large must determine whether particular rules shall extend to the whole state and all its citizens, or on the other hand to a subdivision of the state, or a single class of its citizens only. The circumstances of a particular locality, or the prevailing public sentiment in that section of the state, may require or make acceptable different police regulations from those demanded in another."

As is concisely said in Black, Const. Law, § 136: "The rightful power of the Legislature of a state extends to every subject of legislation, unless in the particular instance its exercise is forbidden expressly, or by necessary implication by the Constitution of the United States and laws passed in pursuance thereof or by the Constitution of the state." It is further pointed out that under the Constitution of a state the executive and judicial departments are grants of power, whereas the Legislature exercises all power which is not forbidden.

[3] The contention that this statute is obnoxious to the eighth amendment to the federal Constitution, which forbids "cruel and unusual punishment," cannot be sustained, for it is well settled that the first ten amendments are restrictions upon the federal government only. Pervear v. Com., 72 U. S. 475, 18 L. Ed. 608; McDonald v. Com., 173 Mass. 322, 53 N. E. 874, 73 Am. St. Rep. 293; State v. Patterson, 134 N. C. 617, 47 S. E. 808; and cases there cited. In Weems v. United States, 217 U. S. 349, 30 Sup. Ct. 544, 54 L. Ed. 793, there is an interesting historical review of the origin and adoption of the eighth amendment.

[4] Neither is this statute in violation of the similar provision in section 14, art. 1, of our state Constitution. That section is a restriction upon the judiciary to impose excessive punishment where the Legislature has not prescribed a fixed maximum, but is not a restriction upon the legislative power. As Mr. Justice Gaston well says in State v. Manuel, 20 N. C. 162: "When the Legislature, acting upon their oaths, declare the amount of bail to be required or specify the fines to be imposed, or prescribe the punishments to be inflicted in case of crime as the reasonableness or excess, the justice or cruelty, of these, are necessarily questions of discretion, it is not easy to see how this discretion can be supervised by a co-ordinate branch of the government." When the punishment imposed is within the limit fixed by law, it cannot be excessive. State v. Capps, 134 N. C. 622, 46 S. E. 730.

[§] The statute provides that a violation of its terms may be punished by "fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court." We do not agree with the defendant that the sentence is illegal because the court imposed only a fine. When the punishment authorized is "by fine or imprisonment," only one can be imposed. State v. Walters, 97 N. C. 489, 2 S. E. 539, 2 Am. St. Rep. 310. But when, as here, the judge has authority to impose a sentence of "fine and imprisonment," he may impose either punishment or both.

[§] If it were otherwise, the defendant cannot appeal from a leniency which is in his favor, for he has suffered no wrong at common law. The punishment for a misdemeanor was "fine and imprisonment," and the courts, in their discretion, imposed both or either.

No error.

Appeal from Superior Court, McDowell County; Long, Judge.

Action by Elliott Simmons and others against Thomas J. Fleming. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

This is an action brought by the legatees of John Simmons, deceased, for the recovery of land alleged to have been purchased with money which the said Simmons bequeathed to his wife, Jane Simmons, for life, with remainder to the legatees named in his will. The plaintiffs offered evidence tending to show that the money with which the land in question was purchased was money belonging to the estate of John Simmons, deceased, and bequeathed by him to his wife, Jane Simmons, for life, with remainder to the legatees named in his will, and tending, also, to show that the defendant took title to the land in controversy under a contract and deed from Jane Simmons in consideration of an obligation upon the part of the defendant, Thomas Fleming, to maintain and support the said Jane Simmons at his home so long as she should desire to stay there, with knowledge at the time of the taking of such deed that the land was purchased with money belonging to the estate of the said John Simmons. The land bought with the money was conveyed to Jane Simmons, and she afterwards conveyed the same to the defendant.

In the will of John Simmons the testator bequeaths and devises all his "personal and real property, money, notes and accounts," etc., to his wife, Jane Simmons, to have full control, use, and benefit of it during her life, and at her death to the plaintiffs, and it is provided therein that none of the real estate or personal property be sold or transferred until after the death of his wife. The defendant has executed a deed to his son, conveying the land to him, but it was not registered until after the complaint in this action was filed.

James Morris and W. T. Morgan, for appellant. Pless & Winborne, for appellees.

ALLEN, J. The controversy between the plaintiffs and defendant is almost entirely one of fact, and the jury has found adversely to the defendant.

The defendant, who was 79 years of age, was examined as a witness, and upon cross-examination made confusing and contradictory statements as to the time when he executed the deed to his son.

[1] The defendant then offered the deed to the son for the purpose of showing its date, and, upon objection, it was excluded. The date of the deed was an immaterial inquiry, as it was admitted that it was registered after the filing of the complaint in this action. In Collingwood v. Brown, 106 N. C. 364, 10 S. E. 868, it is held that in actions to recover land the filing of the complaint, in which the property is described and the purpose of the action stated, operates as a lis pendens, and that, as against the plaintiffs, the title of a purchaser from the defendant begins from the date of the registration of his deed.

[2] If, however, the date of the deed was material, the defendant had the full benefit of the evidence. The son of the defendant was a witness, and testified that the deed was made the 23d day of July, 1909, and there was no evidence to the contrary.

[3] The question asked this witness on cross-examination as to whether he was willing to stand or fall with his father in the suit was for the purpose of showing his interest, but in any event his answer, "I don't know whether I understand you," could not have affected the verdict.

[4] The defendant offered evidence to show that the land was bought with the money of Jane Simmons, and that she made the deed to him in consideration of his promise to support her, and that he had complied with his agreement. In reply the plaintiffs were permitted to prove, over the objection of the defendant, that he had cut the larger part of the timber on the land. No damages were recovered, but we think the evidence competent as a circumstance corroborative of the evidence of the plaintiff that the defendant accepted his deed with knowledge that the land had been bought with the money of the testator. If he was stripping the land of its timber, it might well be argued that he was doing so because he knew he had no just claim, and that he might make what he could before being held to account.

[5] The remaining exception is to the modification of the following instruction by striking out the word "money": "Property, the use of which naturally consumes it, such, for instance, as wine, corn, sheep, cattle, and money, when conveyed by will to the use of one for life, passes to the life tenant the right to consume such property absolutely." If the instruction contained a correct statement of the law, it had no application to the evidence, which did not tend to prove that the money had been consumed, but that it had been invested in the land.

[6] The rule seems to be that whenever personal property is given in terms amounting to a residuary bequest, to be enjoyed by persons in succession, the interpretation the court puts upon the bequest is that the persons indicated are to enjoy the same in succession; and, in order to give effect to its interpretation, the court as a general rule will direct so much of it as is of a perishable nature to be converted into money by the executor, and the interest paid to the legatee for life, and the principal to the person in remainder (Ritch v. Morris, 78 N. C. 377), but, when the bequest is specific and is not of the residuum, the executor should deliver the property to the one to whom it is given for life, taking an inventory and receipt for the benefit of the remainderman. Britt v. Smith, 86 N. C. 308.

We conclude that there is no error.
No error.

MORGANTON GRADED SCHOOL et al. v.
McDOWELL.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Dec. 13, 1911.)

1. TAXATION (§ 567*)—COLLECTION OF TAXES
—COUNTERCLAIM.

A sheriff cannot, when sued to recover the amount of taxes collected by him, set up a counterclaim against the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. §§ 1100; Dec. Dig. § 567.*]

2. TAXATION (§ 567*)—COLLECTION OF TAXES
—COUNTERCLAIM.

Where a sheriff was wrongfully deprived of the right to collect school taxes for a year, and failed to seek relief, under Revisal 1905, §§ 833, 835, 844, against the usurpers of his office, he could not set up loss of such compensation as a counterclaim against an action for taxes collected by him, for the taxpayers cannot be made to pay salary to different persons occupying the same office.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Cent. Dig. § 1100; Dec. Dig. § 567.*]

3. TAXATION (§ 567*)—COLLECTION.

Where the county commissioners appointed persons other than the sheriff to collect school taxes, the sheriff could not, in an action by the county to recover other taxes collected by him, set up as counterclaim the loss of compensation for collecting the school taxes, for that would in effect be bringing a cross-action against the county commissioners for their wrongful act in their official capacity.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Taxation, Dec. Dig. § 567.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Burke County; Long, Judge.

Action by the State, on the relation of the Morganton Graded School and others, against G. Manly McDowell. From a judgment for defendant on his counterclaim, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

S. J. Ervin, for appellants. Avery & Avery, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This was an action against defendant, the former sheriff of Burke, upon his official bond to recover a balance due for taxes collected by him for the Morganton graded school for 1905 and 1906 under Laws 1903, c. 455. The defendant set up as a counterclaim that he was illegally and wrongfully deprived by the board of county commissioners of the right to collect taxes for said graded school for the years of 1903 and 1904; the county commissioners having appointed John B. Holloway and F. C. Berry to collect the taxes for the said graded school for said years 1903 and 1904, and had allowed them the commission for collecting the same amounting to $295, which sum he asked that he be allowed "as a set-off and counterclaim" on the taxes due by him for the years 1905 and 1906.

[1] Such counterclaim cannot be sustained for three reasons:

(1) As against the balance due by the defendant as sheriff for taxes in his hands collected for the years 1905 and 1906 no counterclaim or debt of any kind, however valid, can be sustained. This has been so fully discussed that it is only necessary to cite a few of the cases. Wilmington v. Bryan, 141 N. C. 679, 54 S. E. 543; Gulford v. Georgia Co., 112 N. C. 37, 17 S. E. 10, 19 L. R. A. 485; Gatling v. Com'rs, 92 N. C. 536, 53 Am. Rep. 432; Cobb v. Elizabeth City, 75 N. C. 1; Battle v. Thompson, 65 N. C. 406. In Wilmington v. Bryan, 141 N. C. 675, 54 S. E. 546, Brown, J., says: "No counterclaim is valid against a demand for taxes"—citing Gatling v. Com'rs, supra. In same case Walker, J., in his dissenting opinion (as to other points), concurs as to this proposition, and says: "Neither a taxpayer nor a sheriff can plead a set-off in a suit against him for taxes due and owing. * * * This is so upon the ground of public policy. To permit a taxpayer or an officer charged with the collection of taxes to set up an opposing claim against the state or the city might seriously embarrass the government in its financial operations by delaying the collection of taxes to pay current expenses"—citing the cases above quoted.

[2] (2) The defendant is not entitled to be allowed the counterclaim for the further reason that, if he was wrongfully deprived of the right to collect the graded school taxes for 1903-04, it was his duty to have taken proper proceedings for a mandamus to have the tax list placed in his hands by the county commissioners and have asked for an injunction to prevent the payment of commissions thereon to Holloway and Berry until his right to the same had been decided. If he did not choose this remedy, his recourse was to sue Holloway and Berry for the commissions which he alleges had been wrongfully paid to them. Revisal, § 833, expedites the trial of actions of this nature by giving them precedence over all other actions civil and criminal and by requiring trial at the return term of the summons if 30 days off, and Revisal, § 835, requires the defendant before answering or demurring to file an undertaking in an amount to be fixed by the judge, not less than $200, to secure the fees and emoluments if the plaintiff shall recover the office. In this case the defendant sheriff did not bring such action, but asserts his rights to the fees for duty which was performed, not by himself, but by Holloway and Berry, without legal objection by him, and this after having slept on his rights for four years. The taxpayers are never required to pay two salaries, or two sets of commissions, because the wrong party discharges the duties of an office. Any other rule would be open to grave abuse, and has never been recognized in a single instance in this state. Indeed, Revisal, § 844, provides that the claimant of an office should recover compensation in damages for the loss of the fees and emoluments of the office from the intruder who has received the same in an action for money had and received to the relator's use (McCall v. Webb, 135 N. C. 361, 47 S. E. 802), and his failure to do so in the action to recover the office is a bar to an independent action.

[3] (3) The defendant in setting up this "new matter and by way of counterclaim," as he says in his answer, is in effect bringing a cross-action against the plaintiffs for their wrongful act as county commissioners in their official capacity, which he could not maintain if brought directly, and therefore he cannot bring it by way of counterclaim. Hull v. Roxboro, 142 N. C. 455, 55 S. E. 351, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 638; Fisher v. New Bern, 140 N. C. 510, 53 S. E. 342, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 542, 111 Am. St. Rep. 857; Barger v. Hick- ory, 130 N. C. 550, 41 S. E. 708; Jones v. Com'rs, 130 N. C. 451, 42 S. E. 144; Prichard v. Com'rs, 126 N. C. 912, 36 S. E. 353, 78 Am. St. Rep. 679; Moffitt v. Asheville, 103 N. C. 237, 9 S. If, as was pointed out by Pearson, C. J., in Battle v. Thompson, 85 N. C. 406 (quoted by Walker, J., in Wilmington v. Bryan, 141 N. C. 680, 54 S. E. 543), the defendant had actually collected the taxes for the graded school for 1903-04, and was being sued for the balance of the uncollected taxes for those years, it may be that his claim for such commissions might "be allowed in diminution of the amount to be recovered, * * * but it would be on the ground that the claim was in the nature of a payment or a credit, to which the defendant is entitled, and the demand of the state is in fact only for the balance." But here this is a counterclaim, and is properly so styled in the defendant's answer, for it is not a claim for commissions on the taxes collected by the defendant for the years 1905 and 1906, nor, indeed, is it a claim for services actually rendered, but is for commissions which he claims the county owes him constructively because the county commissioners wrongfully placed the collection of the tax list for the graded schools for the years 1903-04 in the hands of another.

The court below erred in overruling the exceptions of the plaintiffs for the allowance of said $295 in reduction of the balance due by the defendant, and the judgment must be reformed accordingly. This renders it unnecessary to consider the plaintiffs' exceptions for overruling the plea of the statute of limitations, and the other exceptions made by them.

Reversed.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Berkeley County; R. W. Memminger, Judge.

Action by J. K. Hill against the E. P. Burton Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Nathans & Sinkler, for appellant. E. J. Dennis and W. A. Holman, for respondent.

JONES, C. J. The plaintiff brought this action for injunction and damages for unlawful trespass by cutting down and preparing to remove all the pine timber from his land. The defendant claimed the right to cut and remove all the pine timber under deeds of plaintiff granting same. The case was tried before Judge Memminger and a jury, which resulted in a verdict for $25 damages in favor of plaintiff and a perpetual injunction against defendant from entering the premises, cutting and removing the timber. The defendant appeals upon exceptions, which in all material particulars are controlled by the construction to be placed upon the deeds under which it claimed the right to remove the timber.

[1] It appears that on the 29th day of June, 1890, the plaintiff, being owner in fee of a tract of land in Berkeley county, S. C., known as Irishtown, containing 2,000 acres, executed his deed, in consideration of $960, to certain named copartners as E. P. Burton & Co., conveying "all of the pine, oak and poplar timber" on said tract, except on 200 acres thereof, "with the right and privilege for and during the period of 10 years from this date through their agents and servants to enter upon said land or any other lands owned by me the said J. K. Hill and to pass and repass over the same at will on foot or with teams and conveyances to cut and remove the said timber herein conveyed, to have and to hold the said pine, oak and poplar timber unto the said Edward F. Henson, Elliott H. Burton, and Maurice C. Burton, copartners as E. P. Burton & Co., their heirs and assigns in fee and the said rights and privileges for and during the periods of the time above named." By deed dated November 26, 1904, E. P. Burton & Co. conveyed all their interest under the above deed to the plaintiff E. P. Burton Lumber Company, a corporation under the laws of this state. We construe the deed of June 29, 1899, as granting a fee in the timber defeasible upon failure to remove the same within 10 years. The intention to limit the right to cut and remove the timber to 10 years from the date of the deed is so clearly expressed that there is no room for doubt.

The contention of appellant that the deed conveys a fee-simple title to all of the timber described with right of removal at the pleasure of the grantees is opposed to the principle of construction applied in the recent case of Flagler v. A. C. Lumber Corporation, 89 S. C. 328, 71 S. E. 849, and is not supported by the cases of Knotts v. Hydrick, 12 Rich. 314, and Wilson Lumber Co. v. Alderman Sons Co., 80 S. C. 106, 61 S. E. 217, 128 Am. St. Rep. 865, in which there were no words in the deed limiting the time within which to remove the timber. "The authorities are practically uniform in holding that an instrument granting standing timber and containing a clause requiring or permitting it to be removed within a specified time from the date of the grant gives no absolute and unconditional title to the property. Some courts hold the right of the grantee to be a license, others a lease, and others a defeasible title to the timber. By the great weight of authority it is determined that no right or title exists in the grantee after the expiration of the time specified in the deed or contract." Adkins v. Huff, 58 W. Va. 645, 52 S. E. 773, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 649, citing numerous authorities in the case and case note. See, also, McRae v. Stillwell, 111 Ga. 65, 36 S. E. 604, 55 L. R. A. 513, and case note at page 526, and Lumber Co. v. Carey, 140 N. C. 462, 53 S. E. 300, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 469, and case note. As the 10-year limit for removal of timber under the above deed of June 29, 1899, expired June 28, 1909, it is clear that such deed affords no warrant for the acts of alleged trespass charged and admitted to have been committed on January 8, 1910.

[2] It appears, further, that on September 14, 1907, the plaintiff, in consideration of $250 to be paid annually in advance, commencing on June 28, 1907, for the term of five years, executed another conveyance to the defendant of all the timber on said tract excepting 100 acres of specified dimension with rights of way, to have and to hold the timber and rights of way for the full term of five years from the 28th day of June, 1909. This deed recites that it was provided in the deed of June 29, 1899, that said timber should be cut and removed within 10 years from the date thereof, and said rights of way should cease at the end of 10 years from the date of the deed, and further states that this agreement is supplementary to the agreement of June 29, 1899, which is to remain in force until the termination of the 10 years therein set forth. The deed of September 14, 1907, contains this important provision: "Provided, however, that if at the expiration of any year during the five years as aforesaid the said E. P. Burton Lumber Co. or its successors shall desire to surrender its or their rights hereunder, it or they shall have the right so to do, and a failure to pay the two hundred and fifty dollars per annum as above provided shall be deemed such surrender, and the rights of the grantee herein shall at once cease and determine."

It is not disputed that the testimony showed that on the 28th day of June, 1909, the date of the first payment, the defendant failed to pay the $250, but on October 11, 1909, this sum was tendered to plaintiff, with interest, which tender was refused, and again on June 11, 1910, tender was again made of $280, including interest and the further sum of $250, which would become due on June 28, 1910, which amounts were refused. Judge Memminger, construing this deed of September 14th, held that the payment of $250 was to be made in advance beginning June 28, 1909, and that a failure to make such payment would forfeit or terminate the contract. The appellant contends that a payment at any time before the expiration of the year beginning June 28, 1909, would be within time. We think the circuit court was correct. The express stipulation is that payment shall be made annually in advance beginning June 28, 1910, and that a failure to so pay works a surrender and terminates the rights of the grantee.

These views practically dispose of all material questions raised by the exceptions.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

CRIMINAL LAW (§ 250*)—SUMMARY TRIAL—JURISDICTION—MAGISTRATES.

Under Cr. Code 1902, § 13, giving magistrates jurisdiction of assaults and batteries when the offense is not of a high and aggravated nature, requiring, in their judgment, greater punishment than permitted by the section, a magistrate properly retained jurisdiction where the circumstances did not require a sentence beyond his jurisdiction.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Charleston County; Geo. W. Gage, Judge.

Peter Glover was convicted of assault and battery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

E. F. Smith, for appellant. John H. Peurifoy, Sol., for the State.

JONES, C. J. The defendant was tried before Magistrate W. D. Hamlin without a jury, and was found guilty on a warrant charging that defendant did assault and strike Sam Green with a brickbat. The defendant appealed to the circuit court mainly on the ground that the magistrate had no jurisdiction of the case, an assault and battery of a high and aggravated nature. Judge Gage sustained the jurisdiction of the magistrate, and affirmed the judgment and sentence, which was a fine of $25 or 30 days at hard labor on the public works of the county. The appeal relates only to the question of jurisdiction.

Section 13 of the Criminal Code, relating to magistrates, provides: "They may punish by fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment in the jail or house of correction not exceeding thirty days, all assaults and batteries, and other breach of the peace, when the offense is not of a high and aggravated nature, requiring in their judgment, greater punishment." The case of State v. McKettrick, 14 S. C. 354, approved in State v. Burch, 43 S. C. 3, 20 S. E. 758, in construing this statute, held that it leaves it to the magistrate in the first instance to determine whether he will take jurisdiction to try a case of assault and battery where circumstances of aggravation are alleged, but that such determination is not conclusive, and is reviewable in the circuit court.

We are bound to assume that the circuit court concurred with the magistrate in the view that the circumstances of the case did not require a sentence beyond the jurisdiction of the magistrate to impose. We cannot say that there was error of law or abuse of discretion in the judgment of the circuit court.

Judgment affirmed.

1. DAMAGES (§ 158*)—DECLARATION—AD DAMNUM CLAUSE.

A declaration in an action, even though sounding in damages, is not demurrable because it does not state the amount of damages claimed in the form of an averment. It is sufficient if it appear in any part of the declaration. The ad damnum clause, while consistent with good form in pleading, is not indispensable.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 808*)—TORTS—DEFECTS IN STREETS—LIABILITY OF ADJUTING OWNER.

The opening of a ditch in a public street for the purpose of laying a pipe to connect a dwelling house with the water main is not per se a nuisance, and does not make the owner of the house liable to a person injured by falling into the ditch, unless such owner has been guilty of negligence.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT (§ 322*)—LIABILITIES TO THIRD PERSONS—WORK OF INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS—UNGUARDED EXCAVATION.

If the owner of a house let the work of opening the ditch and laying the pipe to an independent contractor, and such contractor cause the ditch to be dug, and to be left open and unguarded, and a traveler upon the street fall into it in the nighttime and is injured, without fault on his part, such independent contractor is liable.

5. TRIAL (§ 296*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION TOGETHER.

An instruction which deals only with matters relating to the quantum of damages is not erroneous because it assumes right of recovery, provided another instruction has been given properly instructing the jury in regard to the essential facts constituting such right of recovery. In such case it is proper to consider the two instructions together.

Poffenbarger, J., dissenting.

Error to Circuit Court, Fayette County.

Action by Kate Jenkins against J. W. Montgomery. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Modified and affirmed.

V. C. Champe and Osenton, McPeak & Horan, for plaintiff in error. Love & Anderson, for defendant in error.

WILLIAMS, P. Kate Jenkins was injured by falling into an open ditch in the nighttime, which she alleges had been dug partially across one of the public streets in the town of Montgomery by J. W. Montgomery, and negligently left without covering, or any sign to warn the public of danger. She brought an action of trespass on the case in the circuit court of Fayette county against said J. W. Montgomery, and recovered a judgment for $875. Montgomery has brought the case here on writ of error.

[1] It is insisted that the demurrer to the declaration should have been sustained because it omits the usual ad damnum clause. The following statement, however, does appear at the beginning of the declaration, viz.: "Kate Jenkins, a seamstress and dressmaker, complains of J. W. Montgomery, who has been duly summoned to answer the plaintiff of a plea of trespass on the case, to recover against him the sum of ten thousand dollars ($10,000.00) damages."

It is insisted that that statement is simply a recital of the contents of the summons, and is not an averment of damages. But whether it should be regarded as an averment, or as a recital, is not material, because, in our opinion, it is a sufficient compliance with the rules of pleading. It informs defendant of the amount of damages claimed. The purpose of the ad damnum clause is to inform defendant of the amount of damages demanded, and that is accomplished by the statement above quoted. The more orderly arrangement in pleading is to state the amount of damages at the conclusion, but that is only matter of form. It is immaterial in what part of the declaration the quantum of damages may appear. The amount of damages is not a traversable fact necessary to be averred like other facts which constitute the very gist of the action. General damages is a conclusion of law to be drawn from facts, averred and proven, which constitute the cause of action. The jury, of course, determine the amount, but they do so from proof of other facts, and not because the declaration lays any particular sum. Says Chitty, in volume 1 (16th Ed.) p. 411: "General damages are such as the law implies or presumes to have accrued from the wrong complained of." And again, on the same page, he says: "It does not appear necessary to state the formal description of damages in the declaration, because presumptions of law are not in general to be pleaded or averred as facts." See, also, Hogg's Pl. § 133. It is well settled that, after verdict, reference may be made to the writ to supply the failure to lay damages in the declaration. Hook v. Turnbull, 6 Call (Va.) 85; Digges v. Norris, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 268; Palmer et al. v. Mill, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 502. See, also, opinion of Judge Brannon in Clarke v. Railroad Co., 39 W. Va. 739, 20 S. E. 696. In Palmer et al. v. Mill, supra, the verdict was for more damage than was laid in the declaration, but less than the writ demanded, and the court read the writ to support the verdict. Now, if after verdict the writ is properly regarded as a part of the record, to support the verdict, why may it not be so regarded on demurrer to sustain the declaration? Is not the laying of damages in the declaration mere formal matter? Is it not a statement of a legal conclusion, and not, therefore, an indispensable averment? Our conclusion is that it is sufficient if it appear in the declaration in any form. It can serve to give defendant no information not furnished by the writ itself, and need not be stated in the form of an averment. The cases of Lomax v. Hord, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 272, Moore's Adm'r v. Dawney, 3 Hen. & M. (Va.) 127, Donaghe v. Rankin, 4 Munf. (Va.) 261, and Spiker v. Bohrer, 37 W. Va. 258, 16 S. E. 575, to which our attention has been called, do not govern this case. The decisions in those cases involved the question of pleading as it relates to matters of fact constituting the very gist of the action, while the present case involves only the manner of pleading damage, a conclusion of law, and not a fact essential to the cause of action. The declaration is also good in other respects. It avers facts which, if true, give plaintiff right of action.

Plaintiff's theory of her case is that defendant, who was in the plumbing business, contracted with one Pickney to put the plumbing in a certain house which Pickney was having built in the town of Montgomery, and also to lay the pipe connecting the same with the water main in the street; that a ditch to receive the pipe was dug across one of the public streets, by defendant's employé, acting under express or implied directions, and was left open, with no sign of warning for a number of days; and that plaintiff, without negligence, was going along the street in the nighttime, and fell into it and was injured. It is sufficient to say that plaintiff's evidence supports this theory, and, notwithstanding the testimony of defendant and some of his witnesses conflicts with portions of plaintiff's evidence, the jury are the judges as to the credibility of witnesses and the weight and importance to be given to their testimony, and the law justified their verdict.

[4] It is well-settled law that if one is injured as the direct result of the negligence of a servant or agent in the performance of an act within line of his duty, and the scope of his employment, the master, or principal, is liable. Defendant did the work for Pickney by contract which included the digging of the ditch. Pickney paid defendant for the entire job, and defendant paid Brown for digging the ditch. From these facts the jury had the right to infer that Brown dug the ditch under the implied directions of defendant. Brown had been working for defendant by the day for a number of years, and had done similar work without express directions from defendant, when he knew it was to be done. That Pickney may have told Brown where to dig the ditch, in order to connect the water pipe with the main in the street, cannot affect the case. Brown was not the servant of Pickney. Pickney did not employ him, and, of course, could not discharge him, and he had no right to control his actions. These are the principal tests to determine whether or not the relation of master and servant exists. Defendant did employ Brown, paid him for the work, had the power to direct his actions, and could have discharged him.

[6] A number of instructions were given for plaintiff which are objected to. It is useless to discuss them seriatim, as their propriety is shown by the law which we have above said is applicable to the case. Particular objection is made to instruction No. 10, which deals with the facts which the jury may consider in determining the quantum of damages. It is insisted that it is erroneous, because it assumes that plaintiff is entitled to recover damage in any event. This objection would be well founded, if the jury had not been otherwise instructed concerning the facts necessary to be proven in order to give plaintiff a right to recover at all. No 10 deals with the single matter of the measure of damages, and it is not proper to segregate it from other instructions, and read it as if it stood alone. Plaintiff's No. 6 clearly propounds to the jury the state of facts which it is necessary that they must believe to be supported by evidence before they can find a verdict in favor of plaintiff for any amount. The two instructions, 6 and 10, should be read together. So read, they correctly state the law applicable to the case.

[2] The court refused to give instructions Nos. 3, 4, and 5, for defendant, and that ruling by the court is the subject of complaint. Those instructions would have told the jury that Pickney was liable, because he owned the property for the improvement of which the ditch was dug; that it was Pickney's duty to keep the ditch covered, or guarded. That is not the law of this case. As the town was supplied with a water system, and one of the water mains ran through the street opposite the house, it must be presumed that the opening of a ditch in the street to connect the piping from his house with the water main was the exercise of a lawful right. The execution of a lawful right in a reasonably safe and proper manner cannot be regarded as a nuisance. The digging of the ditch in itself was not an unlawful act, and therefore the opening of the ditch was not per se a nuisance.

[3] If the work is lawful, and injury results from the negligent manner of its performance, liability rests upon him who has charge of the work and the right to direct the manner in which it shall be performed. That person in the present case the jury must have believed, as they had a right to do from the evidence, was defendant. His servant was negligent in not keeping the ditch covered, or in not keeping the public warned of its danger by some proper signal, and the law attributes his negligence to his employer. That he covered the ditch with boards, as soon as he finished digging it, is not sufficient to relieve from liability. He should have kept it covered, or properly guarded, until the earth was replaced. It was not covered or guarded when plaintiff fell into it.

There is an error in the amount of the judgment. It exceeds the verdict by $25. That being below the appealable amount, it does not call for a reversal, but the error appearing by the record, and this court having jurisdiction of the cause on writ of error granted upon other assignments of error, we will correct the judgment so as to make it conform to the verdict, and it will then read $850, instead of $875. The statute authorizing the correction of such error by the court below upon application to it does not deny jurisdiction to this court to correct it, when the cause is properly before us on other assignments of error.

As so modified and corrected, the judgment will be affirmed.

POFFENBARGER, J. (dissenting). Regarding the declaration as fatally defective on demurrer, I dissent. What is treated as an ad damnum clause is plainly only an introductory recital, descriptive of the action and the parties. It is not an averment of damages at all, and does not purport to be.

As damages constitute the very gist of the action in trespass on the case, I think the ad damnum clause is indispensable, unless waived by failure to demur. It is like the promise in assumpsit. Although the declaration states facts from which the law raises a promise, the allegation of the promise cannot be omitted. Grover v. Railroad Co., 53 W. Va. 103, 44 S. E. 147; 4 Min. Inst. 697. "It is true that in evidence the law in many cases implies from certain facts that a promise has been made; but in pleading the supposed promise itself should be alleged." 1 Chitty, Pl. (11th Am. Ed.) 301. Similarly, though damages will be implied from certain facts as matter of evidence, it must be alleged as a fact in pleading.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Cabell County. Bill by W. C. Mullen against the E. A. Searls Company and others. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants E. A. Searls and Elliott Northcott appeal. Reversed, and decree for defendants.

Joseph P. Douglass and Holt & Duncan, for appellants. W. R. Thompson and Geo. J. McComas, for appellee.

BRANNON, J. A corporation existing under the name of Searls & Mullen, later called the E. A. Searls Company, was in the business of selling furniture. E. A. Searls, W. C. Mullen, Elliott Northcott, and others held stock in it. After a time question arose as to the conduct of the business. It seemed to be in bad condition. Mullen was treasurer and bookkeeper. Searls and Northcott were dissatisfied with Mullen's action as treasurer and bookkeeper. Searls demanded that the books be gone over by himself and daughter and Mullen. This inspection was begun. It revealed that Mullen had drawn and appropriated from the corporate money about $4,000. This is not denied. The examination was not carried further. Disagreement between Searls and Mullen existed. Searls offered to sell his interest to Mullen, or to give Mullen a certain sum for his interest. Mullen refused the offer of Searls. Searls brought a suit to settle and wind up the affairs of the company, or, rather, filed a bill in the clerk's office. In the bill charges of conversion of corporate money were made against Mullen as treasurer. Shortly after the filing of this bill, negotiations were carried on between Mullen and Searls and Northcott, which resulted in a sale and transfer by Mullen to Searls of the stock and interest of Mullen in the corporation. The suit was then dismissed. About four months thereafter Mullen sued Searls to cancel the transfer of stock from Mullen to Searls, charging that that transfer had been procured by fraud by Searls and Northcott and by duress. A great mass of evidence was taken, and a decree was rendered canceling the said transfer, from which decree Searls and Northcott have appealed.

Take up first the charge of fraud. At the threshold of this case we must never forget a well-known rule as a guiding star in it. To rescind for fraud, proof of it must be very clear and full. Whittaker v. Improvement Co., 34 W. Va. 217, 12 S. E. 507; Greer v. O'Brien, 36 W. Va. 277, 15 S. E. 74. It may be stated that the bill is likely not good in this respect, because it shows on its face that, when Mullen made the transfer of stock to Searls, he was in possession of the facts upon which he predicates the charge of fraud. He claimed in his bill that the charge of misappropriation of money was set up against him, that certain credits against such money in fact existed fully equal to the sum so charged against him, but that the books showing such credits for advancements made by him had been taken by Searls and secreted so that he could not have access to them and show by the books and other papers that he was not really in debt to the company. The bill states that, when Searls and Mullen and Miss Searls went over the books, the right-hand pages of the book showing withdrawal of money by Mullen were examined and footed up, but that Searls broke off the examination, and refused to inspect the left-hand pages, showing advancements made by Mullen (not plausible). The bill showed that Mullen was treasurer and bookkeeper, and had, therefore, over anybody else minute knowledge as to the money transactions of the corporation. If he did not know all the details, he knew the substantial facts as to his credits, and yet with this knowledge he made the transfer. So the bill and the evidence show that Mullen acted with a full knowledge of the facts. Who better than he knew of his advancements or credits? He was bookkeeper and keeper of papers. He surely knew of his large items going to his credit, if any existed. Thus with the knowledge of the facts he made the sale and transfer. It will not do for him to say that he did not have means of showing his credits. He alleges that he gave Searls the key to the safe in which the books and papers were. Could he not call upon Searls in court to produce them if he had them? Could he make this compromise with his father-in-law, Searls, with knowledge of the facts and recant? I would not say that, if Searls had secreted the books, it would not be an element of fraud; but that fact is not proven. The evidence conflicts as to which one purloined the books, and the burden is on him who charges fraud to prove it. It is not proven that Searls secreted the books. I repeat, that the bill and the evidence show that when Mullen agreed to sell his stock to Searls and retire from the corporation, which was in complication and disagreement among its owners, he did so with full knowledge of the facts, and cannot set up this alleged fraud. Where a party makes a false representation to another, but that other has knowledge of the facts, he cannot rely upon the fraud. In 20 Cyc. 32, we find this law: "It is essential, of course, that the party to whom the representation is made should be ignorant of the matter represented. If before he acts he has knowledge of the truth, and thus knows that the statement is false, it cannot be said that he is deceived." If a false statement is made, to allow the other party to rely upon it, he must act in ignorance of its falsity. Houston v. McNeer, 40 W. Va. 365, 22 S. E. 80. The party must rely upon the statement and act on the faith of its truth. It is a fundamental principle that the false statement "must be believed by the party to whom it is addressed, otherwise, however false or however fraudulent the intent, the false statement does not constitute any grounds for rescission of a contract." Pennybacker v. Laidley, 33 W. Va. 624, 11 S. E. 39. Thus, when Searls claimed that Mullen was indebted to the company a certain sum for money of the company converted to his own use, Mullen knew it to be false, if false it was. He had kept the books and papers, and knew what they would reveal better than any other man. He knew the facts. He could not say that because the books were not obtainable just then he could surrender without further effort for the truth. He says he gave the key of the safe and store containing the books and papers to Searls. Thus he knew where they were. He is a business man competent to take care of himself, and we must say that he knew that he could demand those books, if they contained evidence for him, and that a court would compel their production in the suit brought by Searls against him for settlement of the business of the corporation. The law does not let a man make a contract, especially a compromise contract to close pending litigation, and then get out of it by saying that evidence existing in the hands of another party would vindicate his cause. He must defend himself. "If a person to whom false statements are made could, by such further investigation for himself as a prudent man would make, discover their falsity, he is negligent to some extent if he omits to investigate." Here in this case evidence known to Mullen was in existence and he knew of its substance. Page on Contracts, § 119. The same author tells us (section 117) that if the party alleging fraud disbelieves the statements, and knows that they are false, he cannot rescind; and, further, that "a false statement as to the condition of a business made to one who is familiar therewith cannot be fraud." Several times before the suit brought to settle the business of the corporation Mullen indignantly rejected the price for his stock offered by Searls. This shows that he then knew his rights. But a little later, after the suit to settle, he accepted that price. It was that suit that caused the settlement. He concluded, for compromise and peace, to accept the same sum. I repeat that the only ground upon which, with any color, Mullen rests his charge of fraud, is that Searls secreted the books and papers; but that is not proven. It depends upon conflicting evidence with preponderant evidence against the charge. Mullen did not hastily make the sale. He says that, after he had a copy of the bill of Searls for settlement of the affairs of the corporation, he took it to his counsel and sedately advised with that counsel, and pursuant to his advice made the sale and compromise. Thus as to fraud Mullen's case fails.

As to duress: Mullen rests his case also upon the charge of duress. There was no warrant sworn out, there was no arrest; but it is claimed that Searls threatened criminal prosecution. It is only necessary to say that the burden to show such duress is upon Mullen, and his evidence utterly fails to do so. It rests only on his own evidence and his wife's, and is contradicted by Searls and Northcott and others confirmatory of them. On this duress matter the evidence decidedly preponderates against Mullen. The case shows that it was that suit brought by Searls to settle the corporation business that induced the compromise and sale. Mullen did not hastily make the sale. He says that he took a copy of the bill in that suit and notice of motion for a receiver to his counsel, and sedately advised with that counsel as to what he would do, and pursuant to his advice, he made that sale. This counsel so states. It was the civil suit that caused Mullen to accept the price which before he had refused. A civil suit is not legal duress. Whittaker v. Improvement Co., 34 W. Va. 217, 12 S. E. 507. The authorities differ as to whether a threat of a prosecution is duress. Clafin v. McDonough, 33 Mo. 412, 84 Am. Dec. 54, says not. I would think that a threat of prosecution which would result in imprisonment would be duress. Page on Contracts, § 251. But there is no proof of duress. After threat, as Mullen says, he rejected Searls' offer to buy. Threat had not then influenced him. If there was fraud, if there was duress, why did Mullen on January 18, 1909, sign a formal written contract by which he purchased from Searls and Northcott the entire corporate stock in the corporation, but with which he did not comply? Was this not ratification of his sale? Was it not an admission that there was no fraud or duress? This was a few days only before Mullen's suit, when he must have known of any fraud or duress and had set intention to sue; or, if after the suit, that contract would tell still stronger against him. The writ does not give the day of the suit.

For these reasons, we reverse the decree, and dismiss the bill.

In an action by an administrator for the recovery of assets on behalf of the decedent's estate, if the widow testifies to personal transactions and communications between the defendant and the decedent, the defendant may as a witness in his own behalf speak fully of the same.

When an issue has been determined by a jury on conflicting evidence, the appellate court cannot undertake to say that the result would have been the same if material and competent evidence excluded at the trial had been admitted.

Error to Circuit Court, Fayette County.

Action by M. L. Painter, administrator, against James L. Long and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant E. N. Case brings error. Reversed and remanded.

Dillon & Nuckolls, for plaintiff in error.
Payne & Hamilton and J. F. Bouchelle, for defendant in error.

ROBINSON, J. The action is prosecuted by the administrator of an estate against one who is alleged to have signed as surety a note made to the decedent, on which recovery is sought. Defense at the trial was based on a duly verified plea denying the alleged signature. A jury found the issue against defendant.

Various assignments of error are presented against the judgment. We shall now consider the most material of these assignments.

[1] The objection to the introduction of the note as evidence was properly overruled. Defendant based this objection on the fact that the note was not appraised, and endorsement of appraisal was not entered on it by the appraisers, until after the action was instituted. We do not interpret the statute, Code Supp. 1909, c. 85, § 12, as requiring a note belonging to the estate of a decedent to be appraised before it can form the basis of an action. That statute only says that no judgment shall be rendered on a note that has not been appraised. It is enough if a note is appraised and properly endorsed by the appraisers before the note is offered as evidence. An appraisal made at any time before the use of the note at the trial is all that the terms of the statute, as well as its spirit and purpose, demand. Nor does the fact that the appraisers made one appraisal omitting the note invalidate their subsequent appraisal of it, so that it cannot be used as evidence. If duly appointed appraisers of a decedent's estate omit to appraise any property belonging to the estate, we can conceive no reason why they should not make up and return a subsequent list. In fact, it is their duty so to do.

The admission of certain papers which purported to bear signatures of defendant, for the purpose of a comparison with the disputed signature on the note, was excepted to because the introduction of these papers was not accompanied by proof to the court that they were genuine. The statute permitting the use of writings for comparison in proving a disputed signature gives the trial judge discretion which he must not abuse. Any writing may be used for this purpose if proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine. Code Supp. 1909, c. 130, § 21a (section 3943a1). In this instance, the court allowed the papers to go to the jury without any inquiry at the time they were offered as to their genuineness. To do so was by no means proper. However, later in the trial, defendant admitted the genuineness of his signature to each of the papers. So the omission was supplied.

[2] True, the order of procedure was not what it should have been in the regular and cautious presentation of evidence; but, since defendant admitted that his signatures placed before the jury for comparison were genuine, he could not be prejudiced by their use. Then, it is argued that it was error to allow this admission of genuineness to be drawn from defendant on cross-examination. We do not think so. The cross-examination in this particular properly related to his evidence in chief to the effect that he did not sign the note. Moreover, plaintiff could call defendant as plaintiff's own witness.

The widow of the decedent was introduced as a witness for plaintiff, the administrator. She testified as to personal transactions and communications between defendant and the decedent at the time of the making of the note. Her testimony along this line tends to establish that defendant placed his signature to the note. The introduction of her testimony as to these personal transactions and communications raised the prohibition against defendant's testifying as to the same personal transactions and communications. Code, 1906, c. 130, § 23. The widow is a distributee, for whose benefit the suit by the administrator is pending. She is next of kin to the decedent. Seabright v. Seabright, 28 W. Va. 412. When she testifies against defendant as to his personal transactions and communications with the decedent, the door is then opened, by the terms of the statute, for defendant to speak of the same personal transactions and communications. Relevant testimony by defendant which would have rebutted the testimony of the widow in this regard, and the inferences to be drawn therefrom, was excluded at the trial, over defendant's objection. He had the right to give his version of the transactions and communications about which the widow testified. This right, the record shows clearly, was denied him. The fact that he was permitted to testify that he did not agree with the decedent to sign the note, and that he did not sign it, is not sufficient to excuse the closing of his mouth as to other doings and words with the decedent, about which the widow testified. Defendant had the right to deny or to explain the acts and communications mentioned by her. He should have been permitted to give his version of the same and to narrate other acts and words connected therewith. He was improperly cut off from doing so.

[3] Then again, Long, who was introduced as a witness by defendant, was not permitted to state the conversation which took place between defendant and the decedent in regard to the note and security therefor. The widow had testified as to this same conversation. Her testimony in relation thereto tends to establish the fact that defendant signed the note as alleged, and that it was not to be secured solely by deed of trust as defendant claims. Long was present at the time of which she speaks. On the stand, he was asked a question the answer to which would have tended to contradict the strength of her testimony in this regard, as well as other testimony introduced for plaintiff. Why rule that he could not speak? He was not a party interested in the event of the suit. Though he was the principal obligor in the note and originally a party to the action, yet he had made no defense and before this trial had suffered judgment to be taken against him. It could mean nothing to him if judgment was established against the alleged surety also. The relationship by marriage between him and defendant did not make him a party interested in the result of the suit within the meaning of the statute. Sayre v. Woodyard, 66 W. Va. 288, 66

S. E. 320, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 388. Even if he were still interested in the event of the action, he had been made competent to speak of the matters excluded, by the testimony of the widow as to the same matters. If he were interested in the suit, all that which we have said in relation to the opened door for defendant to speak of the transactions and communications with the decedent applies to this witness also.

[4] Plainly was it error not to allow defendant by his own testimony and by that of his proposed witness to refute the testimony of the widow relative to what was said and done between defendant and the decedent at the time the note was made. We cannot say, as we are asked to do, that a refutation of this testimony would not have changed the result. The evidence submitted to the jury is conflicting. Defendant was entitled to have all material and competent evidence heard. It may be that the result would have been the same if the excluded testimony had been admitted. It is for a jury alone to say that it would. We cannot take the conflicting evidence introduced and the evidence that should have been admitted and now pass on the whole as jurors. That course would be virtually a denial of trial by jury. We reverse the judgment, set aside the verdict, and award a new trial.

SMITH v. BAKER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 15, 1911.)

1. EVIDENCE (§ 441*)—PAROL EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

A written contract, apparently containing the entire agreement of the parties, and disclosing no incompleteness, cannot be enlarged by parol, so as to include additional terms and stipulations, in the absence of fraud.

2. BILLS AND NOTES (§ 534*)—ATTORNEY'S FEES—COLLECTION OF NOTE.

Since the act of 1900 (Acts 1900, p. 53), codified in Civil Code 1910, § 4252, the holder of a note providing for the payment of attorney's fees in an action thereon may recover attorney's fees upon giving the statutory notice. If the notice is duly given, the plaintiff may recover attorney's fees upon whatever portion of the total amount which is found to be due on the note.

3. DIRECTING VERDICT.

There was no error in directing a verdict.

Error from Superior Court, Colquitt County; W. E. Thomas, Judge.

Action by T. N. Baker against G. E. Smith. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

J. W. Walters and Shipp & Kline, for plaintiff in error. Hardeman, Jones, Callaway & Johnston, for defendant in error.

EVANS, P. J. This case was before the court on the grant of a nonsuit and the overruling of a demurrer to a plea. 135 Ga. 628, 70 S. E. 239. The report in that case fully discloses the nature of the action, and contains a full statement of the pleadings. On the remand of the case the defendant offered to amend his plea, by alleging that the contract therein referred to did not contain the entire stipulations of the parties, and omitted certain agreements set out in the amendment. The amendment was disallowed, and on the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence a verdict was directed.

[1] 1. The amendment was properly refused. The written contract referred to in the plea purported to embrace the entire agreement of the parties. The amendment was not directed to any reformation of the written contract because of fraud, accident, or mistake, but its purpose was to add other and contradictory terms to it by parol. This cannot be done. Forsyth Mfg. Co. v. Castlen, 112 Ga. 199, 37 S. E. 485, 81 Am. St. Rep. 28.

[2] 2. On the trial it appeared that the defendant was entitled to a small credit on the note. The court directed a verdict for the amount appearing to be due, with attorney's fees calculated on the amount which was due according to the provisions of the note. The statutory notice to claim attorney's fees was given; but the defendant contends that, unless the plaintiff recovers the full amount sued for, he is not entitled to recover attorney's fees in any amount. Since the act of 1900, codified in Civil Code 1910, § 4252, a plaintiff in a suit on a note stipulating for attorney's fees, who has duly given to the defendant the statutory notice of his intention to bring suit, is entitled to recover attorney's fees on the amount recovered, notwithstanding such recovery may be less than the amount claimed to be due in the suit. Harris v. Powers, 129 Ga. 87, 58 S. E. 1038; Livingston v. Salter, 6 Ga. App. 377, 65 S. E. 60.

[3] 3. The evidence was without conflict, and the court properly directed a verdict for the amount shown to be due on the note. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

POWER et al. v. J. S. SHINGLER & BROS. (Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 12, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 363*)—SALE OF DECEDENT'S LAND—VALIDITY.

An administrator's sale, made under the usual order as to the manner and place of sale, granted under the provisions of section 4028 of the Civil Code, but held at public outcry in a county other than that which had jurisdiction of the administration or in which the land was situated, was not sufficient to pass title to the land to the purchaser at such sale through a deed executed by the administrator, or his attorney in fact, recting the provisions of the order above referred to.

2. TRIAL (§ 159*)—NONSUIT—FAILURE OF EVIDENCE.

The court did not err in granting a nonsuit.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 341, 359-366; Dec. Dig. § 159.*]

Error from Superior Court, Miller County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

Action by K. A. Power and others against J. S. Shingler & Bros. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

P. D. Rich and A. E. Thornton, for plaintiffs in error. Donalson & Donalson, for defendants in error.

BECK, J. This was an action for injunction and for damages from trespass. After introducing in evidence an original plat and grant from the state to one Michael Shehan, covering the lot of land in question, which is in Miller county, and a certified copy of an order of the ordinary of Chatham county appointing an administrator of the estate of Shehan, and a certified copy of an order of said ordinary, authorizing the administrator to sell the land in controversy at public outcry, the plaintiff offered in evidence, as muniments of title, a certified copy of a power of attorney executed by the administrator, which purported to authorize Hines and Hobbs, as his attorneys in fact, to sell at public sale before the courthouse door of Dougherty county the lot of land in Miller county, and offered in evidence an administrator's deed executed by Hines and Hobbs in pursuance of said power of attorney. The court excluded from evidence the power of attorney and the deed. Whereupon the plaintiff's counsel stated that without such evidence he could not proceed. The court then granted a nonsuit, and the plaintiff excepted.

[1] The court below did not err in granting a nonsuit in this case. The order of the ordinary of the county having jurisdiction of the administration was the usual order authorizing the sale of lands by an administrator, and under that order the sale should have taken place, as provided in section 4028 of the Civil Code, "at the place of public sales in the county having jurisdiction of the administration." Heard v. Sheffield, 136 Ga. 730, 71 S. E. 1118. It is not necessary to consider the question as to whether or not the lands in question were wild lands, as was recited in the power of attorney; because, even if they were wild lands, no order appears to have been taken, in accordance with the provisions of section 4024 of the Civil Code, for the sale of wild lands. The only order for the sale of the land from which the plaintiff in this case could have derived title was the order referred to above. Even if it had been competent for the ordinary of Chatham county to grant a special order authorizing a sale in the manner in which the alleged sale was conducted, there was no evidence that any such special order was in fact granted; and the granting of such special order will not be presumed. If the granting of any order which could be relied upon as a basis for the administrator's sale could be presumed in favor of purchasers at the sale, it would not be a special order, but one authorizing the sale in the usual manner and at the usual place.

[2] 2. In view of the character of the order of the court of ordinary introduced in evidence by the plaintiff and referred to in the deed tendered by the plaintiff, the court did not err in excluding both the administrator's deed and the power of attorney; and counsel for plaintiff having announced, upon the exclusion of these papers offered as muniments of title, that they could not proceed further, a nonsuit necessarily followed.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except HILL, J., not presiding.

MAYOR AND ALDERMEN OF CITY OF SAVANNAH v. BARTOW INV. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Dec. 13, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

DEDICATION (§§ 31, 63*)—ACCEPTANCE—NON-USER—OPENING STREETS.

Under the evidence contained in the agreed statement of facts, tending to show that the public authorities had never expressly or impliedly accepted the dedication of certain streets surveyed in the subdivision of a tract of land, and that, if any easement of way in the platted streets now in controversy ever existed in the purchaser of lots in another division of such tract, there had been an abandonment or forfeiture by nonuser, there was no error in granting an interlocutory injunction, restraining the municipal authorities from opening streets or parts of streets through the land occupied by the plaintiff.

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; W. G. Charlton, Judge.

Action by the Bartow Investment Company against the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Savannah. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

In 1866 Barrington King died seised and possessed of a tract of land containing about 50 acres, located in Chatham county, and at that time some distance from the corporate limits of the city of Savannah. In order to make a division among his heirs, the northern part of the tract was divided into nine portions of nearly equal size, numbered from the north toward the south, and with streets between the alternate tracts for the general benefit. Lot 6 came into the possession of the plaintiff in 1891 under a chain of conveyances, and lots 7, 8, and 9, came into their possession under a chain of conveyances in 1889. The conveyance of lots 8 and 9 made no mention of a street. From 1889 to 1898 lots 7, 8, and 9 were used as pasture lands; and 6, 7, 8, and 9 were under fence from 1891 to 1903, and were cultivated from time to time. From 1903 to 1909 the land was not under fence, except for parts of the old fence remaining. The fence inclosed the streets which had been surveyed in the original plat, and included those now in controversy. What is called Nephew street was not laid out in the original survey. Its status will be seen from the opinion of the judge of the superior court. Neither the county of Chatham prior to 1901, nor the city of Savannah since 1901, has done any work of any kind on the streets in controversy, nor has either of them done any act of acceptance in reference to such streets, or any part thereof, or exercised any control over them. In December, 1901, the corporate limits of the city of Savannah were extended so as to include these lots. The lot lying northward from this property, and numbered 5 in the subdivision, was divided into smaller lots and sold. Two of these smaller lots, fronting on the north side of Nephew street, passed to the city of Savannah in 1906, under a chain of conveyances from the original purchaser. In May, 1911, the plaintiff filed the present equitable petition alleging that the city of Savannah claimed the right to open streets through the property which would occupy part of the streets surveyed in the original subdivision, asserting its right to such streets both by reason of its governmental control of streets, and also by reason of its purchase of the two small lots fronting on Nephew street. Upon the hearing of the application for an interlocutory injunction, an agreed statement of facts was made, and it was agreed that if the city, as representing the public, or as an owner of the two small lots mentioned above, had no right to X, Y, or Z streets, or the land over which they were platted, or an easement therein, the injunction should be granted; otherwise, refused. The presiding judge granted the interlocutory injunction, and in doing so filed an opinion, which is published herewith as showing other facts in addition to those above mentioned, and also the grounds on which he based his action. The defendant excepted. This opinion is as follows:

"After a careful study of the pleadings, evidence, and authorities submitted, I have concluded that, notwithstanding the varied contentions made and the hopeless conflict of decisions by the courts of other states, the statutes of Georgia and the adjudications of our Supreme Court are decisive of all the issues made. To enter into a minute consideration of all of these questions would result in the necessary production of an opinion more formidable in extent than all of the record combined. Strictly speaking, there is no such thing as a dedication without an acceptance. No individual can force upon a resisting or reluctant public the existence of a street. There must be the intention to give plus the intention to receive. Once these have been manifested by writing, by acts, by conduct, the dedication is complete. Even then it can be abandoned or forfeited by nonuser an implied forfeiture if the nonuser has persisted a time long enough to force that conclusion. One cannot abandon what he has never taken, although he may forfeit an easement by failure to use it, which he could have enjoyed had he once used it. To say that a dedication is irrevocable, without more, is misleading. A dedication accepted is irrevocable, so far as the dedicatory act is concerned. But a dedicatory act on the part of an owner of land, unaccepted, is not a complete dedication, and is not irrevocable. Leaving out for the moment X or Nephew street, whichever it may be called, the streets dedicated, so far as the owner was concerned, south of the dividing line between sections 5 and 6, and known on the map or plat as Y and Z, have never been accepted by any authority. From the dedicatory act 39 years ago until the present year, when occurred the demonstration on the part of the defendant which resulted in this proceeding, no public authority, no member of the public, no lot owner, has so much as expressed a desire to walk on Y or Z streets. They have figured in several deeds as boundary streets, but since 1891, a period of 20 years, the entire tract from the center of Nephew street to the southern boundary of No. 9 has been in one ownership, treated as an entire tract, no reference made to streets, and no use or attempted use of streets by any one or any authority. The city of Savannah never had any original right to Y and Z. What right it may have as a municipality it gets as successor to the public of 1872, at which date Savannah was a mile or more away from the tract. It has accepted the dedication of certain streets in the section north of No. 6, and some it has ignored; but it not only never accepted these, in the southern part, but studiously avoided doing so. It is fair to assume, from the evidence submitted, that if the courts were to declare that Y and Z were dedicated streets of the city of Savannah, that municipality would abandon them so speedily as it could. With the extension of the city limits south, its plan has been projected over this tract and the neighboring holdings to the east. Across Bull street (formerly the White Bluff road), Forty-Ninth and Fiftieth streets have been opened. The tract involved here is on the western side of Bull street. Forty-Ninth projected, according to the city map published in 1910, would be coincident with Y street for only about 10 or 15 feet, whilst Fiftieth street would touch Z street at no point; and the remarkable spectacle would result, if both Fiftieth and Z are to be opened, of two streets of equal width running parallel within a dozen feet of each other. Evidently the defendant has also in contemplation the opening of Barnard street from north to south; and its crossings at X, Y, and Z (upon the theory that these are streets) would save condemnation of that much land, although in the dedicatory plan there is no provision for north and south streets.

"But it is urged, even if this be sound doctrine as to Y and Z, it cannot apply to X, or Nephew street, a 40-foot street dedicated on December 13, 1873, by the separate owners of 5 and 6, in a joint instrument, to the perpetual use of the public, 20 feet from each section. If there had been any acceptance of this dedication, under the authorities, it would seem that the entire 40 feet would have become a way, even if the acceptance of it was delayed, not unreasonably. It is to be noted that, whilst the street is named as 40 feet, the dedicators are distinct. The owner of No. 5 had no right to dedicate the 20 feet from No. 6, nor the owner of the latter that from No. 5. So it was entirely within the power of the public to accept the northern or southern half of the dedicated street and ignore the remainder, whether such acceptance was evidenced by express action or user. In this instance there was no express acceptance. The public to a necessarily limited extent used the northern half of Nephew street, or that appurtenant to No. 5; but the evidence does not disclose that, in all of the 38 years intervening, a single member of the public ever used the No. 6 half, or so much as desired to do so. On the contrary, it was for a long while under fence, under cultivation, and a ditch several feet wide cut it off from the northern portion of the street. Whilst it is referred to as a boundary in deeds from the owner of No. 5, the boundary in deeds from the owners of No. 6 give the southern line of No. 5 as the northern boundary of No. 6. Moreover, more suggestive than deeds, or even fencing or ditches, is the fact that over half of said street appurtenant to No. 6 is a growth of trees, from 12 to 20 years of age and of considerable dimensions, absolutely precluding the use of the land as a street. On the map of 1910 it is coincident with no street to the east, and on the west the fenced right of way of the railroad makes it a cul-de-sac. As the public have never used, nor shown the slightest desire to use, the southern half of this street, I must conclude, the evidence being rather stronger than weaker in regard to nonuser, if there can be a difference, than in the case of Y and Z, that it never became a street, and so far as the public or its present representative, the defendant, is concerned, no street or way exists as to such southern half.

"Does the lot owner in any of the sections north of No. 5 stand in a better attitude than the municipality? The city of Savannah bought lots 15 and 16 of section 5 in 1906. Why it purchased them, save to become a lot owner in that particular place, does not appear. But it is here as one, and whatever rights other lot owners have it should enjoy. If an owner plats his holdings into lots and streets, and sells with reference to such map, he is bound, so far as the purchaser of a lot is concerned, to the street platted, even though it would be a cul-de-sac and actually existed only on paper. Even in that event, the doctrine of abandonment and forfeiture from nonuser would apply. Under the evidence in this case, if there was ever a street to the south of the southern line of No. 5, it has never been used, has been in a condition of nonuser for 38 years, is not in a condition to be used as a street, but has persistently been used for antagonistic purposes, such as cultivation, the growth of trees, and the like. The intervening ditch, ten [two] feet wide and four feet deep, was itself notice of adverse occupation. During all that time there has been no recognition by the owners of No. 6 of the lot owner's easement, no lots sold from the sections south of the dividing line between 5 and 6, no act following up the projected dedication of the street. This is not precisely the case discussed in the authorities of other states. There was no contract between the owners of individual lots in No. 5 and the owner of No. 6 as a tract. No consideration passed. It is stretching precedent to the breaking point to hold that, because two owners of separate tracts 30 years ago undertook to dedicate a street to the public, which the public has never accepted, therefore a lot owner in No. 5 can hold No. 6 to a bargain with a third party, after a period of acquiescence in the adverse acts of the owner extending over one prescriptive period, and nearly three times that of another. Whilst prescription does not run against the municipality as representing the state, it does run against the mayor and aldermen of Savannah as a lot owner.

"What has been written with X or Nephew street in view applies with still more force to Y and Z, so far as the lot owners in 5, 3, 2, and 1 are concerned, there being none in 4. As to the two streets last named, there has been no acceptance, no user. The use has been persistently adverse, and the possession for 20 years has been under the rule of unity, and the unused or abandoned street is extinguished, and reverts to the owner of abutting land. The Georgia authorities relied upon are: Code, §§ 4171, 3644; Parsons v. Trustees, 44 Ga. 529; Windham v. McGuire, 51 Ga. 578 (3); Bayard v. Hargrove, 45 Ga. 342; *Harrison v. H. E. Wilson and David C. Barrow, for plaintiff in error. Edward S. Elliott, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). The mayor and aldermen of the city of Savannah claimed that it had a right to open certain streets through a tract of land held by the Bartow Investment Company. The latter filed an equitable petition to enjoin the municipal authorities from doing so. An interlocutory injunction was granted, and the defendant excepted. The city claimed the right to utilize certain parts of the land as streets, first, as a representative of the public; and, second, on the ground that it was entitled to an easement in certain streets which had been platted in a former division of the land, because it had purchased two small lots lying in another part of the tract originally divided.

In this court counsel discussed with much ability and citation of authority the conflicting views of the different courts as to the right of a purchaser of a subdivision of a tract of land, under what is sometimes called the "unity theory," and under the contrary theory, and also questions of dedication, acceptance, abandonment, and prescription. An examination of the opinion of the presiding judge, which is published in connection with the statement of facts, will show that he did not deal with the conflicting views of other courts, but confined himself to the law as announced in the Code and in the decisions of this court, and held that, under the evidence tending to show that there was no acceptance by the public, and touching abandonment or forfeiture of any easement of way arising by virtue of purchasing in reference to a plat, an injunction should be granted. It is declared by Civil Code 1910, § 3644, that "an easement may be lost, by abandonment, or forfeited by nonuser, if the abandonment or nonuser continued for a term sufficient to raise the presumption of release or abandonment." This has been held to apply to a municipal corporation as well as to an individual. Kelsoe v. Town of Oglethorpe, 120 Ga. 951, 48 S. E. 366, 102 Am. St. Rep. 138. Abandonment is a mixed question of law and fact. Gaston v. Gainesville, etc., R. Co., 120 Ga. 516, 48 S. E. 188.

Under the agreed statement of facts, there was ample evidence tending to show an absence of acceptance by the public authorities and an abandonment or forfeiture of any easement in owners of other lots, created by virtue of the original division of the land and the platting of streets, to authorize the grant of the interlocutory injunction. Whether such grant was erroneous is the only question before us; and we do not deem it proper to go further, and to discuss the numerous and interesting questions of law, which were argued by counsel for the respective parties, touching the question of the rights acquired by one who purchases a part of a subdivision of land under a plat. See, on the subject, Ford v. Harris, 95 Ga. 97, 22 S. E. 144; Schreck v. Blun, 131 Ga. 489, 62 S. E. 705.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except HILL, J., not presiding.

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 627*)—WRIT OF ERROR—DISMISSAL.

The explicit requirements of the statute imperatively demand that, to give this court jurisdiction, the bill of exceptions must be filed in the clerk's office within 15 days from the date of the certificate of the judge to the bill of exceptions. Here the certificate is dated March 14, 1911, and it was filed March 30, 1911. The writ of error must be dismissed. Civil Code 1910, § 6167; Jones v. State, 7 Ga. App. 694, 67 S. This was a foreclosure of a laborer's lien claimed under section 2792 of the Civil Code of 1895, now section 3334 of the Civil Code of 1910; and, the evidence of the alleged "laborer" clearly showing that he was not a "laborer," in the sense in which that word is used in the statute, there was no error in sustaining the certiorari and in entering final judgment against him. The case is fully controlled by the decision in Howell v. Atkinson, 3 Ga. App. 58, 59 S. E. 316.

PLEADING (§ 237*)—AMENDMENT—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

The amendment did not set forth a new cause of action, but merely corrected and Error from City Court of Floyd County; John H. Reece, Judge.

Action by E. A. Heard and others, executors, for use of the Fidelity & Casualty Company, against C. W. Camp. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

The Fidelity & Casualty Company insured for the owner the plate glass windows in a building described in the policy as "premises Nos. 7, 9, 11, 13, Second avenue, city of Rome, and state of Georgia, occupied as office building." The policy provided that the insurer should be subrogated to all the rights of the owner against any person causing damage or loss to the property covered thereby. A window in the building was broken, and was replaced by the insurance company, which then instituted suit in the name of the owner, for its use, alleging that the defendant had negligently broken the window. The petition described the window broken as being in No. 11 Second avenue. At the trial the evidence tended to show that the window broken was in No. 9 Second avenue, whereupon the plaintiff offered to amend the petition by striking the words "No. 11" from the petition and describing the window as follows: "Said plate glass window being located in the room in said W. J. West Office Building which, at the time said glass was broken, was occupied by the Rome Industrial Life Insurance Company; said W. J. West Office Building being designated as Nos. 7, 9, 11, 13, Second avenue, at the time said glass was broken." The refusal to allow the amendment is assigned as error.

Maddox & Doyal, for plaintiffs in error.
M. B. Eubanks, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. It is insisted that the amendment sought to set up a new and distinct cause of action. The cause of action was the damage caused through the negligence of the defendant in breaking a window in the office building covered by the policy of insurance. The negligence alleged was that the defendant threw an iron horseshoe at a dog, and thus broke the window. In our opinion the amendment did not change the cause of action, but merely described more accurately and more in detail the window which was broken in the same building. If the brick had hit a man and broken his rib, and the petition had alleged that the rib broken was on his left side, it would hardly be contended that an amendment changing it to the right side would be the assertion of a new cause of action. How, then, can the substitution of another window in the same building, owned by the same person and covered by the same policy, be said to be the substitution of a new cause of action? The designation of the broken glass by the wrong number was a clerical error, and the amendment merely sought to correct the error. Civil Code 1910, § 5682; Lanier v. Kelly, 6 Ga. App. 738, 65 S. E. 692; Wall v. Schwarz, 72 S. E. 434.

This material error rendered subsequent proceedings nugatory, and requires a reversal of the judgment; and therefore it is unnecessary to consider the assignments of error based on the sustaining of the motion to nonsuit the case.

FLANNIGAN v. CITY OF ROME.

(No. 3,801.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Dec. 19, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (§ 641*)—VIOLATION OF CITY ORDINANCE—CONVICTION.

Where a city council tries a person for the violation of a municipal ordinance, a judgment of guilty may be rendered by a mere majority vote, unless the charter of the city otherwise provides.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 641.*]

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; J. W. Maddox, Judge.

Hattle Flannigan was convicted of violating a city ordinance, and brings error. Affirmed.

Eubanks & Mebane, for plaintiff in error.
Max Meyerhardt, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. The plaintiff in error, having been convicted in the recorder's court of Rome for the violation of a city ordinance, entered an appeal to the mayor and council, as is provided for by the charter of that city. Before that body the case was heard de novo. Nine members constituted the body; and, at the conclusion of the trial, five voted guilty and four not guilty. Thereupon judgment of guilty was entered up and sentence imposed.

The point here presented is that, by analogy to jury trial, a unanimous vote of the members of the council was essential to a lawful judgment convicting and sentencing the accused. The council was not sitting as a jury, but as a court. A person accused of a municipal offense is not entitled to trial by jury, but to trial by a court. Loeb v. Jennings, 133 Ga. 796, 67 S. E. 101. There are many differences between a court and a jury; but one cardinal and very important difference is that, unless the law expressly provides to the contrary, a jury can render no finding except by the unanimous assent of all of its members, while, unless the law expressly provides to the contrary, a court adjudges and acts according to the vote of a majority. The point presented is therefore not well taken.

Judgment affirmed.

GAINOUS v. MARTIN. (No. 3,565.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Dec. 19, 1911.)

(Syllabus by the Court.)

POSSESSORY WARRANT (§ 2*)—LANDLORD AND TENANT—GROWING CROPS—"PERSONAL PROPERTY."

Possessory warrant lies only for the recovery of personal property. Immature growing crops are not "personal property," but are realty; hence, possessory warrant is not one of the remedies allowed to the landlord against his cropper, under the provisions of Civil Code 1910, § 3706, so far as such crops are concerned.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Possessory Warrant, Cent. Dig. § 2; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

Error from City Court of Cairo; J. R. Singletary, Judge.

Action by B. B. Martin against W. A. Gainous. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

R. C. Bell and Ira Carlisle, for plaintiff in error. W. J. Willie, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Gainous was a cropper on Martin's farm. They had a controversy about the use of a well near the house occupied by Gainous; Gainous having forbidden Martin and his family to use the well. This was in early June, before the maturity of the crops. Martin swore out a possessory warrant for the crops, and to an unfavorable judgment thereon Gainous excepts.

Our statutes relating to the reciprocal rights and duties of landlord and cropper (Civil Code 1910, §§ 3705-3707, inclusive) are as follows: "Whenever the relation of landlord and cropper exists, the title to and right to control and possess the crops grown and raised upon the lands of the landlord by the cropper shall be vested in the landlord until he has received his part of the crops so raised, and is fully paid for all advances made to the cropper in the year said crops were raised to aid in making said crops. In all cases where a cropper shall unlawfully sell or otherwise dispose of any part of a crop, or where the cropper seeks to take possession of such crops, or to exclude the landlord from the possession of said crops, while the title thereto remains in the landlord, the landlord shall have the right to repossess said crops by possessory warrant, or by any other process of law by which the owner of property can recover it under the laws of this state. Where one is employed to work for part of the crop, the relation of landlord and tenant does not arise. The title to the crop, subject to the interest of the cropper therein, and the possession of the land remain in the owner."

The right to pursue possessory warrant under the circumstances of the present case is asserted under that provision of section 3706 wherein it is stated that the landlord "shall have the right to repossess said crops by possessory warrant, or by any other process of law by which the owner of property can recover it under the laws of this state." This provision, however, must be read in light of the general law. Possessory warrant is essentially a remedy for the recovery of the possession of personal property—property capable of corporeal seizure and actual or constructive delivery into physical possession. Growing crops prior to maturity are realty. Bagley v. Columbus Sou. Ry. Co., 98 Ga. 626, 25 S. E. 638, 34 L. R. A. 286, 58 Am. St. Rep. 325. Possessory warrant does not lie for the recovery of realty. Hence the plaintiff mistook his remedy, even if he had a cause of action under the circumstances of the case.

Judgment reversed.

MEMORANDUM DECISIONS

DAIL v. TAYLOR. (Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 27, 1911.) Appeal from Superior Court, Pamlico County; Ferguson, Judge. Action by E. M. Dail against Lee J. Taylor. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant excepted and appealed. Affirmed. M. H. Allen and Simmons & Ward, for appellant. D. L. Ward, T. W. Davis, H. L. Gibbs, and Z. V. Rawls, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. The principles applicable to this case were fully considered and stated on a former appeal, as reported in 151 N. C. 284, 66 S. E. 135, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 949. There is no substantial difference in the facts as they now appear, except that the testimony tending to show negligence on the part of the defendant has been greatly strengthened. The court has carefully examined the record, and is of opinion that the cause has been tried in accordance with the former decision referred to, and that no reversible error appears. The judgment is therefore affirmed. No error.

DEPPE v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO. (Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 27, 1911.) Appeal from Superior Court, Craven County; Ferguson, Judge. Action by N. R. Deppe against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed. Moore & Dunn, for appellant. D. L. Ward, D. E. Henderson, E. M. Green, and Rodman Guion, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This case was before us in 152 N. C. 79-83, 67 S. E. 262, where the facts are fully set out, and again in 154 N. C. 523, 70 S. E. 622. On this last trial the case was tried in accordance with the principles of law laid down in the two former appeals. The evidence was substantially the same as on the former trials, with the addition of other witnesses whose evidence was largely cumulative. Numerous exceptions were taken, but we do not think that discussion of them is necessary. The learned and impartial judge ruled out much of the plaintiff's testimony, and evidently labored to bring the case strictly within the former decisions of this court in this case. We think he has done so, at least to the extent that no substantial error has been committed which entitles the defendant to still another trial of the case before a jury. No error.

GROVES v. LIFE INS. CO. OF VIRGINIA (three cases.). (Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 27, 1911.) Appeal from Superior Court, Mecklenburg County; W. J. Adams, Judge. Actions by Harriet J. Groves, by H. L. Groves, and by A. M. Groves against the Life Insurance Company of Virginia. From judgments for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed. These issues were submitted: "(1) Was the application for the policy of insurance on the life of Harriet Groves, wife of Henry Groves, procured by the false and fraudulent representations of the defendant's agent, as represented. Answer. Yes. (2) Did the plaintiff waive her right to rely upon said fraudulent representations? Answer. No. (3) In what amount, if any, is the defendant indebted to the plaintiff? Answer. $26.00, with interest at 4 per cent. from maturity."

From the judgment rendered, defendant appealed. Cameron Morrison and J. H. McLain, for appellant. F. M. Redd and Thos. W. Alexander, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. We have examined with care the record, the evidence, and the assignments of error in this case, also in case of H. L. Groves v. Same Defendant, in which a judgment for $52 was rendered, and also in case of Addie May Groves against Same Defendant, in which judgment was rendered for $26. As stated upon the argument, the three appeals present the same controversy. We have examined with especial care the brief of the learned counsel for defendant. We are unable to differentiate in any way these appeals from the other cases against same defendant. In trying the case, we think his honor followed the adjudications we have heretofore made. Caldwell v. Ins. Co. of Va., 140 N. C. 100, 52 S. E. 252; McGowan v. Ins. Co. of Va., 141 N. C. 367, 54 S. E. 287; Austin v. Ins. Co. of Va., 148 N. C. 24, 61 S. E. 614; Jones v. Ins. Co. of Va., 153 N. C. 388, 69 S. E. 266; Wilson v. Ins. Co. of Va., 155 N. C. 173, 71 S. E. 79. No error.

HUGHES et ux. v. LIFE INS. CO. OF VIRGINIA. (Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 9, 1911.) Appeal from Superior Court, Alamance County; Daniel, Judge. Action by George W. Hughes and wife against the Life Insurance Company of Virginia. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed. These issues were submitted to the jury: "(1) Did the defendant, through its agents, represent to plaintiffs, that it could, and would, issue to said plaintiffs insurance policies on their lives, and upon the lives of their children, with provisions, therein stipulated, that at the end of 10 years from dates thereof the plaintiffs might withdraw the whole amount of premiums paid in, with 4 per cent. interest thereon? Answer. Yes. (2) If so, was such representations false? Answer. Yes. (3) If so, were such representations relied upon by the plaintiffs? Answer. Yes. (4) If so, were the plaintiffs induced thereby to enter into said contracts of insurance? Answer. Yes. (5) Did the plaintiffs waive their rights to rely upon said false representations? Answer. No. (6) What amount are plaintiffs entitled to recover of the defendants? Answer. The whole amount paid in, with 6 per cent. interest from the beginning of policy to the last payment." W. H. Carroll, for appellant. Dameron & Long, and John H. Vernon, for appellees.

PER CURIAM. A careful examination of the record in reference to the 20 assignments of error discloses no substantial error committed upon the trial. There is no material respect in which this case differs from the several cases brought by this defendant to this court heretofore. Caldwell v. Insurance Co., 140 N. C. 100, 52 S. E. 252; Sykes v. Insurance Co., 148 N. C. 13, 61 S. E. 610; Stroud v. Insurance Co., 148 N. C. 54, 61 S. E. 623; Whitehurst v. Insurance Co., 149 N. C. 273, 62 S. E. 1067; Jones v. Insurance Co., 151 N. C. 54, 65 S. E. 602; Jones v. Insurance Co., 153 N. C. 388, 69 S. E. 266; Briggs v. Insurance Co., 70 S. E. 1068. We do not think the subject needs further discussion. No error.

JEFFRESS v. NORFOLK & S. R. CO. (Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 4, 1911.) Appeal from Superior Court, Pitt County; Ferguson, Judge. Action by R. O. Jeffress against the Norfolk & Southern Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff for less than the relief demanded, he appeals. Affirmed. Harry Skinner, for appellant. Moore & Long, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. We have examined the several assignments of error, and the record in this appeal. The only issue related to the question of damage, and we find no error in the record which in our opinion necessitates another trial. No error.

THOMPSON v. REVOLUTION COTTON MILLS. (Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 15, 1911.) Appeal from Superior Court, Guilford County; Allen, Judge. Action by Lee Thompson against the Revolution Cotton Mills. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed. King & Kimball and Thos. S. Beall, for appellant. E. D. Kuykendall and Sapp & Williams, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. It was chiefly urged for error that the court refused to nonsuit plaintiff on motion duly entered, but the court is of opinion that the motion was properly overruled. On the trial it appeared that plaintiff, an employé of defendant company, was engaged at the time in running a lapper, and in the operation of the machine the cotton would "at times get lumpy," and it would become necessary for plaintiff to put his hand in the machine to remove the lumps, or it would result in "thin-ended lap." There was testimony, on part of plaintiff, tending to show that the boss of the lapper room, who stood towards plaintiff in the position of vice principal of defendant company, had given plaintiff special directions that, "if anything got in the beater box, he was to lay the belt on the loose pulley and stop the machine, but, if any lumps," etc., got at the doors, to remove them without stopping the machine. He said: "You would lose time in stopping the belt; that you could make a lap while you stopped the machine and started up again. The evidence, further, tended to show that this was an unsafe method of doing the work; that defendant company was guilty of negligence in giving directions of the kind indicated; and that, on the occasion in question, the plaintiff, in endeavoring to follow them out, had his hand seriously injured. As the court understands it, the testimony of plaintiff tended to show, further, that certain wires, placed in the machine with the purpose of keeping the cotton from becoming lumpy, had been permitted, by defendant, to "become crooked and out of line, and in such a negligent condition as to unnecessarily cause the cotton therein to become lumpy, and thereby rendered the machine defective and more dangerous to operate," and that plaintiff had, several times, given notice of the improper condition of the wires, and the employé charged with the duty had failed to have them fixed. There was much evidence on the part of defendant company to the effect that the machine was in good condition; that no such instruction as claimed by him had been given plaintiff, but that he had, both by general rules and repeated and special instructions, directed plaintiff never to put his hand in the machine when in motion. In this conflict of evidence, under a fair and comprehensive charge, in which the principles of negligence and contributory negligence, as applicable to the facts, were correctly stated, the jury have accepted the plaintiff's version of the occurrence; and, this being true, an actionable wrong has been established. After careful consideration, the court finds no reversible error, and the judgment in plaintiff's favor must be affirmed. No error.

TWIDDY v. DARE LUMBER CO. (Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 27, 1911.) Appeal from Superior Court, Dare County; O. H. Allen, Judge. Action by J. W. Twiddy against the Dare Lumber Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed. B. G. Crisp and Winston & Matthews, for appellant. D. M. Stringfield and Ward & Grimes, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. This is a second appeal in the case of Twiddy v. Lumber Company, 154 N. C. 237, 70 S. E. 282, and the evidence is substantially as it was on the former appeal. We see no reason for changing our opinion, and the judgment is affirmed. Affirmed.

WEST v. WILKINSON. (Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 20, 1911.) Appeal from Superior Court, Pitt County; Ferguson, Judge. Action by C. B. West against C. L. Wilkinson for balance due on a building contract. The issue submitted to the jury, Was the building completed according to contract? was answered in the affirmative, and there was a verdict and judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed. Julius Brown, for appellant. S. J. Everett, for appellee.

PER CURIAM. Upon an examination of the record, we are of opinion that the issue submitted presented the real controversy between the parties, and upon the finding in response thereto the plaintiff is entitled to the judgment rendered. We think the controversy almost exclusively one of fact, and we find no error in the record which, we think, necessitates another trial. No error.

WRIGHT v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO. (Supreme Court of North Carolina. Nov. 27, 1911.) Appeal from Superior Court, Sampson County; Cline, Judge. Action by W. J. Wright against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, both parties appeal. Affirmed. These issues were answered by the jury: "(1) Did the defendant wrongfully fail and refuse to furnish the cars ordered by him to move his cordwood from the siding between Mints and Parkerburg, as alleged? Answer. Yes. (2) What damage, if any, has plaintiff thereby sustained? Answer. $250.00—two hundred and fifty dollars." From the judgment rendered, the plaintiff and defendant both appealed. Faison & Wright, for plaintiff. Junius Davis, for defendant.

PER CURIAM. Upon an examination of the record and assignments of error of both plaintiff and defendant in this case, we are of opinion that the court below committed no substantial error, and that the case has been fairly and correctly tried. No error. Same case, defendant's appeal, we find no error.

CAROLINA GLASS CO. v. STACKHOUSE et al. (Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 16, 1911.) Proceedings by the Carolina Glass Company against James Stackhouse and others. On motion for leave to discontinue. Motion granted. Lyles & Lyles, John T. Seibels, and D. W. Robinson, for petitioner. J. Fraser Lyon, Atty. Gen., for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Motion for leave to discontinue the within entitled proceeding is hereby granted, upon payment of costs.

STATE v. HENAGHAN. (Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Oct. 31, 1911.) Error to Circuit Court, Tyler County. James Henaghan was convicted of keeping a slot machine, and brings error. Reversed and remanded. Neal & Strickling and Handlan & Reymann, for plaintiff in error. Wm. G. Conley, Atty. Gen., for the State.

BRANNON, J. The indictment in this case is good. James Henaghan was convicted by a jury of keeping a slot machine, and sentenced to pay a fine of $200 and be imprisoned in jail four months. It is assigned as error that the court overruled a motion to quash the indictment. It charges that the defendant "did knowingly and unlawfully keep and exhibit a certain gaming table, commonly called a slot machine, being a table and machine of like kind to A. B. C. and E. O. tables, and faro bank, and keno table, which machine is played by dropping a coin or coins into a slot or slots, as indicated by said slot machine, the coin or coins used being a nickel or nickels, and the games played on said slot machine are games in which the chances are unequal, all other things being equal, and these unequal chances are in favor of the exhibitor, the said James Henaghan, of the said gaming table, the said slot machine, against the peace and dignity of the state." We think the indictment good. State v. Gaughan, 55 W. Va. 692, 48 S. E. 210. For the reason that we hold that the evidence is clearly not sufficient to prove the state's case beyond reasonable doubt, we reverse the judgment, set aside the verdict, and grant a new trial, and remand the case to the circuit court.
